■ Your cover story was a brilliant study of the dying stars of the Congress(I). Kerala has turned left again. And this was not surprising, considering the controversies surrounding the Congress(I)-led ministry. The subversion of educational institutions, the economic reservation policy, the mass rape of women by policemen in Thankamany village, and the notorious pipe scandal, all contributed to its downfall.

Trivandrum — P. MOHANDAS

SHOCKING FARCE

Your article of the Jammu & Kashmir elections ("A Tarnished Triumph", April 15) reveals only half the truth of the large-scale rigging indulged in by the Congress-National Conference alliance. Still, the impartial report has acted as a balm on the injured sentiments of Kashmiris and has helped towards strengthening their confidence in Indian democracy.

Handwara — MAJID BANDAY

■ Your article comes as a shock to all those who want democracy to flourish in India. Farooq Abdullah threw democratic proprieties to the winds for his personal gains. Now he is pointing accusing fingers at fundamentalism in an effort to hide his own skeletons. Inconsistency is the hallmark of his political career. After the elections, one thing is clear: Farooq's credibility has received a jolt.

Srinagar — B.K. BHAN, M.S. ISMAIL

VITAL LIBERTY

Your editorial comment ("Squeezing the Press", April 15) is commendable. The actions of the Tamil Nadu Assembly towards the editor of the Ananda Vikatan definitely go against the tenets of the democratic freedom of expression promised to us in our Constitution. And the villains in the piece are the self-serving politicians who want to protect their reputations at all possible costs.

Kamakashipuram — R. SRINIVASAN

BEST SELLING PLOT

Your special report ("Pandora's Box", April 15) gave an accurate analysis of facts of the Fairfax case. The scandal certainly has all the ingredients of a best seller.

Nagpur — MANISHA PATANKAR

CALCULATING MOVES

In your report ("PM-President Meeting: Unresolved Controversy", April 15) I was shocked to read from your opinion poll results that 72 per cent of the respondents did not want the prime minister to resign even if he had lied to Parliament. Profumo had to resign from the British Government not because of his involvement with Christine Keeler but because of his wrongful denial of such an involvement. In Britain, the gravest error an MP could make is to lie to Parliament. In India, no questions are ever asked.

London — K. NATHAN

POOR PERFORMANCE

Your article ("Hard Lessons", April 15) effectively brought out the sorry state of Indian cricket today. Kapil's poor captaincy was one of the major reasons for India's poor showing. Kapil lacked imagination, often judged wrongly and at times, cracked under pressure. With the World Cup just round the corner, it is time something positive was done, so that we don't get to repeat the debacle of "Imrangate".

Jamshedpur — CHERYL CRUZE

■ Your evaluation of Kapil's captaincy was forthright and brilliant. However, there is a minor factual inaccuracy—after Gavaskar, G.R. Vishwanath is still the second highest run-getter (6080), and not Vengsarkar.

New Delhi — ANSHUMAN TIWARI

AD LINE

Your latest issue (April 30) carried a full page colour advertisement of Vichitra Sarees whose creative work was done by The Creative Cell. However, the ad inadvertently carried the key number of FSA. The error is regretted.

New Delhi — Frank Simoes Advertising Pvt Ltd

ILLEGAL SIGNALS

With reference to your report ("Cable Television: The New Frontier", December 15, 1986) no private sector company is marketing hardware for receiving microwave signals from satellites other than INSAT 1B. Since some companies have attempted to do this, the Government has declared reception of such signals illegal. And the law can take its course.

New Delhi — S.S. PURI, director, Shyam Antenna Electronic Pvt Ltd

INEFFICIENT ENGINE

Your cover story ("Wasteful Government Expenditure: The Dirty Dozen", March 31) used a clear technique in referring to specific government projects while pointing out the misdemeanour of officials. The underlying theme that emerged was that the Government cannot be an efficient actor in carrying out economic activities for society. The size of the administration creates 'noise' in transmitting information and prevents a sense of involvement.

Instead, the Government should give directions and let the price mechanism work out the micro-economic details. This will end the present nefarious nexus between the established private sector and the Government. This neo-classical view might sound heretical in a country where the rhetoric is 'socialism' and the actions are pseudo-capitalistic. But if we are to progress forward, it is time we stopped looking up to the Government as an engine for growth. It is only the efforts of millions of Indians that can take us forward.

Princeton — RAMESH RAMANKUTTY

TRUE SPONSOR

Your news item ("Eye-catchers", March 31) featuring television personality Rama Vij wrongly referred to the car rally for the blind as being sponsored by Goodyear. This unique rally was sponsored by Ceat Tyres of India Ltd.

Bombay — RUPA RANGANATHAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

We'll deliver. Wherever on earth. SKYPAK The worldwide couriers.
Skypak House, Off M. Vasanji Road, Marol Naka, Andheri (E), Bombay 400 059.

Avenues SC 361 87

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

India's third largest Industrial Group wants to tell you four things you never knew.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

India's third largest conglomerate be shy? Surprisingly, and as a result we are often asked four questions.

companies constitute The Thapar Group?

five dynamic companies manufacturing and marketing a range of products. The business activities of Jagatjit Cotton Mills, Ballarpur Industries, Crompton Greaves, Greaves Cotton and Karam Chand Thapar & Bros. need no introduction. To the others.

a look at the list on which this advertisement stands. The factor is Leadership.

products does The Thapar Group make?

Thapar Group has often been pioneers with ideas, services and India's largest and most diverse range of paper to semi-ductors. From fashionable textiles to a wide range of synthetic diesel engines to hydel power sets. From engineering and consultancy to R&D. From specialised construction to ment.

India's largest and most diverse range of sophisticated engineering products in the private sector to India's first picture tubes. From basic chemicals to specialities.

list is long. The common factor is Quality.

What technology does The Thapar Group use?

The Thapar Group has created a resource pool of the world's finest technology relevant to India's needs.

This is the result of inhouse development and collaborations with international giants like Du Pont, Hitachi, Mitsubishi, Zimmer AG., Corning, Westinghouse, Owens-Illinois, Westfalia, Oki Electric, Hawker Siddeley and many many more. The common factor is the best Technology.

What are The Thapar Group's plans for the future?

Strategic growth into diverse and familiar industrial areas.

Nylon 6,6 tyre cord with Du Pont. Colour picture tubes with Hitachi for the first time in India. Polyester staple fibre with Zimmer AG. Wire logging and allied services for the oil sector with Dresser Industries. Telecommunications and office automation systems with Oki Electric. Silicon carbide crucibles with Morganite Crucibles. And high value chemicals from castor oil.

Other emerging areas of the economy where new projects are envisaged are chemicals, biotechnology, renewable energy, the oil sector and housing.

A promising future awaits these vast projects. Because, at The Thapar Group, the common factor with new ventures is... Success.

The Thapar Group

Growth From A Position Of Strength

ULKA-D-TG-369/1A

Group Companies ■ Jagatjit Cotton Textile Mills Ltd. ■ Ballarpur Industries Ltd. ■ Crompton Greaves Ltd. ■ Greaves Cotton & Co. Ltd. ■ Karam Chand Thapar & Ltd. ■ JCT Electronics Ltd. ■ Northern Digital Exchanges Ltd. ■ Punjab Polyfibres Ltd. ■ Chitram & Co. Ltd. ■ Greaves Midwest Engg. Co. Ltd. ■ Greaves Foseco Hutton & Hornsby (India) Ltd. ■ Greaves Semiconductors Ltd. ■ Greaves Dresser Atlas Oilfield Ltd. ■ Andhra Pradesh Rayons Ltd. ■ Kerala Electric Lamp Works ■ Jg Bharat Starch & Chemicals Ltd. ■ English India Clays Ltd. ■ David Brown Greaves Ltd. ■ Greaves Morganite Crucibles Ltd. ■ India City Properties Ltd. ■ United Ltd. ■ Himlon Ltd. ■ Karam Chand Thapar & Brothers Ltd. ■ Borosil Glass Works Ltd.

Areas ■ Paper & Pulp ■ Electronics ■ Textiles ■ Man-made Fabrics ■ Electrical Engineering ■ Chemicals ■ Oil Sector ■ Glass ■ Hydro Power ■ Biotechnology Engineering ■ Renewable Energy ■ Construction ■ Food & Allied Industries ■ Mining ■ Investment ■ R & D ■ Consultancy ■ Exports ■ Shipping & Distribution.

Greaves ■ Ballarpur Industries Acrylic Staple Fibre, Nylon 6,6 Tyre Cord & Fabric, Telecommunication and Office Automation Systems Cotton Textile Mills Ltd. Colour Picture Tubes, Polyester Staple Fibre ■ Greaves Cotton Silicon Carbide Crucibles, Drilling Equipment and services to the Industry ■ Crompton Greaves Telephone Instruments, Office Automation Systems, Consumer Durables, Project Eng. ■ KCT (Coal Sales) Chemicals

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Secrecy in Defence

If war is too serious a matter to be left to the generals—as Clemenceau once said—defence spending is much too expensive a business to be left to the Ministry of Defence, or the Government at large. Or, for that matter, law-breaking commission agents. Whether it is the unfolding scandals relating to the acquisition of German submarines and Swedish guns (and who knows how many other skeletons will soon fall out of forgotten cupboards), or the rapidly escalating scale of defence expenditure (over Rs 12,000 crore this year), there is quite evidently a crying need for a more informed debate on defence matters. There is no need to, nor indeed can the country afford to, continue treating defence as a holy cow.

The Government's self-serving attitude—best illustrated by the prime minister's puerile statement in Parliament recently that anyone who questions the need for the present scale of defence spending is anti-national—must be questioned and changed, for obvious reasons. The sums of money involved are enormous, defence all over the world is an area where slush funds tend to operate, and there is little doubt that India's own defence sector is flabby, reeks of corruption, and is often unmindful of cost, to a point of irrationality.

Illustration by AJIT NINAN

Despite all this, there is next to no informed debate on how effectively the country's money is spent on defence, and whether national security can be ensured with smaller amounts of cash. Parliamentary debates on the subject are cursory—often there are only a handful of members present—and the Defence Ministry's annual report has facts but no real information that helps form conclusions. As for the audit scrutiny by the Comptroller and Auditor General as well as by the Public Accounts Committee, this is hopelessly inadequate and quite obviously ineffective. Even such audit as exists, turns up such staggering evidence of financial waste that it begs for a more comprehensive audit function. But this has so far failed to materialise.

To make matters worse, any and everything concerned with defence is treated as secret. Maps of the country's border areas are classified, though anyone can get far better maps from the US National Aeronautics and Space Administration, on payment of a nominal fee. The Defence Ministry's annual reports say less about arms acquisitions than what is routinely reported in the world's armament journals. And the press gets even partially complete information on major issues only when differences within the Government spill over into the newspapers and magazines because of calculated leaks—with their own distortions.

This is not to dispute the obvious, that there is a great deal about defence that should remain a closely guarded secret. Armament strength, troop positions, equipment orders and several other details should certainly remain confidential. But when the Government is habitually as leaky as a sieve, and when satellites circling in space can keep foreign powers informed of even the minutest military positions, the question rightly needs to be asked as to what some of the secrecy is all about. Defence agents working for foreign suppliers, routinely have with them the kind of technical details and specifications that would not be presented to Parliament in a month of Sundays. Those with a long memory will recall how the official review of the 1962 debacle on the Chinese border was made available to a critical British author, while it has still to be presented to the Parliament in India—though more than two decades have elapsed. The point is obvious: the Government must be able to guard its secrets more effectively, and what need not be kept secret should be presented to the Indian public to make possible a more informed debate on a subject that is evidently of vital national interest.

The German submarine and Swedish gun scandals reinforce the conclusion that matters relating to defence acquisitions cannot be left to faceless bureaucrats and governments that may have an eye on the chance to make some money on the side. All the painstaking explanations about how the Government had expressly forbidden payment of commissions on these deals, only serve to underline two things: one, that such payments were routine in other cases, and two that the Government's conditions were flouted with impunity. That only begs the question of how seriously the conditions were meant to be taken in the first place.

If matters are to improve, without defence secrets becoming subjects of street-corner debate, some kind of mechanism must be worked out for ensuring an independent, autonomous check conducted in a confidential manner. Perhaps, the only way out is to establish a standing commission that will report to the Cabinet, and perhaps to leaders of opposition parties, about wrongful or wasteful spending. Jaswant Singh, the BJP member of the Rajya Sabha, has recently pointed to the Packard Commission in the United States, which reported in three months on how it came about that ashtrays and coffee percolators designed for that country's armed forces cost astronomical sums. A similar commission in India would almost certainly unearth even bigger scandals, and should be a worthwhile exercise to undertake. For the simple point is that, far from such scrutiny being an anti-national step, it is the absence of detailed checking and counter-checking when colossal sums are being spent, that goes against the country's interests.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Kirloskar Electric Calibre

Pratibha/KEC/8619

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

In response to the needs of Indian industries Kirloskar Electric has grown to command a unique position in the field. The only Company to offer a comprehensive range of products and services in eight product areas.

Today, the Company's tradition of product excellence and quality standards extends to AC Motors, Geared Motors, DC Machines, AC Generators, Welding Equipment, Transformers, Control Equipment as well as Electronic Equipment and Systems.

The strength of wide product range is backed by expertise and a progressive R&D Division engaged in testing new technologies and processes.

To incorporate the most advanced technology in Kirloskar Electric products, the Company has collaborated with the world's best in their respective fields. Proof of the world-class technology in Kirloskar Electric products is their wide acceptance all over the world.

The total expertise gained by the Company enables it to custom-build any special-purpose systems for any vital, core and auxiliary industry. A capability that has won Kirloskar Electric a reputation for meeting challenges with quality products and services.

Today, Kirloskar Electric is a single source for multi-user needs in total electrics.

Converting energy to serve the millions

Kirloskar

KIRLOSKAR ELECTRIC COMPANY LTD

Regd. Office:
Industrial Suburb, Rajajinagar,
Bangalore – 560 010

For further particulars – please contact,

KIRLOSKAR ELECTRIC COMPANY LTD

UNIT I: P.B. No. 5555, Malleswaram West, BANGALORE 560 055. Tel: 357771

UNIT II: P.B. No. 112, Gokul Road, HUBLI 580 020. Tel: 62381

UNIT III: P.B. No. 4, Peenya Industrial Area, Phase II, BANGALORE 560 058. Tel: 384961

UNIT IV: Belavadi Industrial Area, MYSORE 571 186. Tel: 25222

or our ■ Zonal/Regional/□ Branch Offices:

□ Ahmedabad (406810), ■ Bangalore (223964, 223961), ■ Bombay (4936165, 4936171, 4926105), □ Bhopal (76704), □ Bhubaneshwar (54056, 55656), ■ Calcutta (448808, 434056), □ Coimbatore (35712), □ Durg, □ Ernakulam (360431), □ Jaipur (65003), □ Kanpur (217020), □ Ludhiana, ■ Madras (81425, 89871), ■ New Delhi (6431299, 6436576, 6439357), □ Pune (54606), □ Ranchi (26607), ■ Secunderabad (820274), □ Visakhapatnam (60369 PP).

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SAVE RS. 39/-

Every fortnight INDIA TODAY gives you the complete perspective on subjects determining the nation's destiny.

Can you afford to miss out?

Here is my annual subscription of Rs. 105/- by Cheque/M.O/D.D
No. _____
Please mail my copy to:
Name _____
Address _____
_____
City _____
State _____
Pin Code _____

INDIA TODAY
THE COMPLETE NEWSMAGAZINE

Mail to:
Living Media India Pvt. Ltd.
Subscription Department
Thomson Press Building
P.B. No. 69, Delhi-Mathura Road
Faridabad 121007 (HARYANA)

DU601

The Times of India

• One individual does not matter in the management of a country; my being there or not is not going to make a change. ■ V.P. SINGH in The Telegraph

• Mr Singh has seen himself in the role of a Savonarola who would burn down Rome rather than allow "sin" to prosper. The vengeance with which he went after the tallest men in Indian industry as finance minister spoke for itself.
■ GIRILAL JAIN in The Times of India

• Where Mr Gandhi tripped was in his choice of advisers and his belief that through fiats and an ostentatious display of impatience by transferring officials and demoting them, he could change the face of the country overnight.
■ S. NIHAL SINGH in The Indian Post

• We have been taking a very liberal view in order to promote joint ventures abroad.
■ BRAHM DUTT, minister of state for finance, replying to queries in the Lok Sabha on why no action was taken against Madhavrao Scindia for violating FERA

• If anyone was found guilty of violating any RBI regulations, they would not be allowed to go scot free.
■ RAJIV GANDHI intervening in the Rajya Sabha debate the next day, on the issue of loans raised by Reliance.

• I am not keen on the post (of West Bengal Pradesh Congress(I) chief), but I am not resigning. ■ PRIYA RANJAN DAS MUNSHI in The Telegraph

• The Government seems to think there is instant diplomacy....There is instant coffee but no instant diplomacy. One day you cannot say everything is right with Pakistan and contradict yourself the next day by saying nothing is right with Pakistan. ■ A.P. VENKATESWARAN in Sunday

• There is no demand for Khalistan in Punjab. The militants are the victimised party. I felt the same warmth when they hugged me which I feel when my son does it. ■ SUNIL DUTT in The Sunday Observer

• Amitabh Bachchan went to Allahabad after 30 years to fight an election. I come here (Bihar) 30 times a year. ■ SHATRUGHAN SINHA in The Week

• As for the character of Sham Lal, personally I hate the man. I never watch myself on TV. ■ VINOD NAGPAL, actor, on his villainous Buniyaad role in Imprint

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Hardworking engines select Gulf. The world's first choice.

Sizzling summers to sub-zero temperatures in winter, today's hard-working, long-haul engines around the world demand the finest Multigrade engine oils. And GULF OIL, the universal choice for over eight decades, is the one name which stands out for high-technology, high performance Multigrades. Number one for quality, reliability and engine protection.

GULF engine oils, manufactured by Petrosil in India, give you greater engine power, higher fuel efficiency, longer drain periods. Now, you can stop worrying about that investment in your precious vehicle.

Insist on GULF's genuine engine protection – your engine deserves the hardest-working oil.

Petrosil Oil Co. Ltd. (Licensees of Gulf Oil Corpn., U.S.A.
Jubilee House, 3, Dinsha Wacha Road, Bombay 400 020.
Regional Offices: New Delhi • Ahmedabad • Calcutta • Madras
Petrosil has depots, distributors and stockists all over India. Gulf lubricants are also available with leading Auto spare parts dealers.

Gulf

Engine Oils

World's First Choice. Make it yours.

THE EDGE/87/POC/13

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Safetymoney

Courtesy:
The Comfort Travels & Tours

BOBCARD spells yet another advantage of being a Bank of Baroda account holder.

So much safer than cash... especially when you are travelling – because it's personalised – only you can use it. Honoured at an ever-growing list of establishments, BOBCARD is convenient to carry.

BOBCARD could also enable you to withdraw cash from specified branches of Bank of Baroda in the country.

A further convenience – a large network of identified branches all over India can service your BOBCARD requirements. The Membership fee is extremely nominal.

BOBCARD

Eliminates the risk of cash loss or theft – whether you are in the city or travelling on business or pleasure.

Bank of Baroda
(A Government of India Undertaking)

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Cartoons by AJIT NINAN

DELAYED GOLD

■ Old is usually considered to be gold. But a former anthropology student would obviously beg to differ. Saini, who had topped in his M.Sc Anthropology exams in 1977 from Delhi University—an achievement that qualified him for a gold medal—found it would have been easier to have obtained the medal by prospecting for the gold.

Though he had topped the results, for a whole year he received no intimation about receiving the medal. In 1978, he staked his claim in an official letter to the university authorities only to be told that another student had been awarded the medal of honour as she had secured the highest marks.

In 1983, following media reports that the Academic Council had revised the results of that particular year, Saini, now a bank officer in Chandigarh, again tried tapping the university, but failed to strike a lucky vein. Disgusted, he finally sent his alma mater a legal notice in February 1986. The threat worked. Within two months, the much-fobbed off man received word that the medal would be withdrawn from the earlier awardee and given to him. At this year's convocation, Saini finally got his record-breaking gold, 10 years after it was due.

DEATH WISH

■ Tradition says one must respect the wishes of the departed. One gentleman, who probably had a trace of Irish ancestry in his family tree, decreed that after his death, those who gathered to mourn him should treat the ceremony as an Irish wake. He wanted a cheerful get-together where toasts would be drunk to his departure from this world. Also, he strictly forbade any rituals beyond a quiet cremation and consigning of the ashes to the Ganga. Failure to comply with his wishes, he pledged, would bring forth divine wrath.

Unfortunately, however, his instructions were ignored and all the usual rituals were strictly followed. On the fourth day after his death, a large number of family and friends gathered at his house for the Chautha ceremony. Now, whether or not the wrath was divine as the dead man had promised is unprovable. But when the havan fire was lit, the rising flames brought down a swarm of angry bees—smoked out of their hive by the fumes—upon the hapless congregation. They were all stung into immediate evasive action and pandemonium reigned supreme. Death, does have its sting.

GUN GAFFE

■ The best-laid plans of mice and men, they say, can go astray, and for the unlikeliest reasons. When a gang of five desperados in Bombay toyed with the idea of pulling off a daring robbery, little did they know what trifle would mar their perfect project.

The gang marched into a commission agent's office brandishing knives and revolvers and demanded all available money and valuables. They got more than they had bargained for: to their delight, the loot on the premises came to quite a packet. A heap of diamonds worth around Rs 3.5 lakh.

Four of them pushed off with the sparklers, and one stayed behind with a gun to stand guard over the petrified agent to prevent his raising an alarm. The solitary conspirator was obviously daydreaming of the spoils when an alert neighbour decided to spoil things. Hearing the commotion, he barged in and seeing the armed robber, grabbed him in a bearhug. In the process, however, the robber's pistol fell on the floor—and broke into two, as indeed it would, since it was only a harmless but very realistic-looking toy. The police picked up the rest of the gang with the booty intact. Some diamonds are evidently not forever.

ELECTION SPECIAL

■ Nuptial occasions these days are made all the more extravagant by sending lavishly gilded wedding cards—each designed to outdo the other in marking the solemnity of this rite of passage. But there was one eager bride-groom-to-be who decided to announce the happy day in a rather lighter vein.

Inspired by the ongoing state elections in Kerala, Prasad hit upon an innovative idea. On an elegantly printed card with a logo of the zodiac signs of the bridal pair and a newspaper masthead—'The Ramapuram Express News'—blazed the headline: 'Election results out: Prasad elects Sreeja'. The exclusive was by the groom's sister's agency—the Jayashree News Service.

The story described the details of the new merger. In the Kilimangalthu Madom constituency, Sreeja had been voted to power with a huge majority by the Prasad United Front. She was also nominated the new home minister in the Prasad cabinet. The swearing-in ceremony was scheduled to be held on April 12, 1987, in Ernakulam.

The press snippet added an irreverent detail: any cabinet expansion will be carried out only after 10 months.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INTRODUCING A PROJECT ENGINEERING COMPANY WHICH HAS OVER 15 YEARS OF EXPERIENCE, EVEN BEFORE IT STARTED

Consider a project engineering company launched this very year. But which has one of the most impressive track records in the country.

Jaykay Tech.

Begun over 15 years ago as the projects wing of a major industrial group, Jaykay Tech has already carved itself a niche as one of the country's most renowned project engineering companies.

And which now offers a comprehensive project consultancy and engineering package — in a wide range of fields, including synthetic yarn and fibre, chemicals, petro-chemicals, thermo-plastics, cement, thermal power plants, and non-conventional sources of energy. Jaykay Tech undertakes complete turnkey ventures right from the inception of the idea to the commissioning of the plant.

These services are backed by a vast infrastructure — a team of over a hundred enterprising technical professionals, access to foreign technical know-how and highly advanced designing and fabrication facilities.

That's why the Company now has a unique portfolio of prestigious high tech projects.

For a company that's just begun, Jaykay Tech sure has come a long way!

JAYKAY TECH

SERVICES, CONSULTANTS, ENGINEERS & CONTRACTORS

Jaykaynagar Kota 324 003 (Raj.) INDIA
Phone: 25470-79, 25501-05 Telex: 0305-202 JK-IN Gram: JAYKAY

Ashoka Estate' 24, Barakhamba Road, New Delhi 110 001
Phone: 3312341 (PBX) Telex: 031-62930 JKLN IN 031-66762|JKLN IN Gram: FIBERKING

'Sarnath' 10th Floor, 59B, B. Desai Road Bombay 400 026
Phone: 822 2231 Telex: 011-75910, 011-75035 Gram: TRUELIGHT

JAYKAY

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Crime Fiction

● T.R. Nagrani, known in some circles as the evergreen security buff has bounced back from retirement. And how. The former chief of the National Security Guards—the recently-created black cat commando outfit responsible for the security of VVIPs—retired last year dashing all speculation that he would be continued in that post for an extended period. Now he's surfaced again in the Prime Minister's Secretariat as the head of a new crisis management group whose function is to prepare police and paramilitary forces for the management of security disasters. In one of his first moves Nagrani has assigned several director-generals of police to prepare for him imaginary scenarios involving terrorist attacks, plane and train hijackings, and firebombings, and asked them how they would handle such disasters. The upshot is that the police officers have now turned into fiction writers. Each is vying with the other to produce thriller-scenarios. Some are relying on their own imagination while others have assigned their children to watch the latest adventure movies on video and gobble up mystery novels, in order to come up with exciting plots for Nagrani's bedtime reading.

Advise and Consent

● In the Prime Minister's Secretariat there were parliamentary secretaries. Then there were high-powered politicos—dons who acted as political and administrative shock absorbers. Then there were advisory committees. These set-ups represented several experiments conducted by Rajiv Gandhi on how to make the Government work faster, and effectively implement his decisions. But each fell by the wayside. Then was born the idea of appointing super-secretaries—a brains trust of IAS bureaucrats who could cut through red tape and enforce inter-departmental decisions, answering directly to Rajiv. But the idea never got off the ground because of tremendous resistance from the entrenched bureaucracy. Enter now, advisors. According to plans now under way every ministry and government department will sport an "advisor to the prime minister". The advisors will be chosen from among senior bureaucrats about to retire, and they will be given the rank of ministers of state.

Cartoons by AJIT NINAN

Ascetic Arbiter

● Syed Shahabuddin, the fiery Muslim leader who is associated with the Babri Masjid Action Committee took his case before a most unlikely forum last fortnight—Jagadguru Shankaracharya of Kanchipuram. He went there at the suggestion of Subramanyam Swamy, the Lok Dal MP, who also accompanied Shahabuddin to the Madras ashram of the venerated Hindu leader. As luck would have it, the Shankaracharya was not in one of the periods of his prolonged silences. In any case, it was Shahabuddin who did most of the talking—reverentially and with great emotion, often breaking into tears as he pleaded his version of the Ramjanmabhoomi - Babri Masjid controversy which has once again become a surcharged communal issue. The Shankaracharya and his disciples heard the Muslim leader out patiently as they did another representative who argued on the opposing end of the Ramjanmabhoomi argument and then asked for a detailed report on the controversy, agreeing that communal tensions should not be exacerbated. While the Centre seems lost for an answer to this vexing religious problem, the Shankaracharya might soon emerge as a final arbiter.

Italian Connection

● According to senior army sources, under an agreement that was recently signed with the Italian Government, approximately 100 Indian army officers are being sent to Italy to undergo training in anti-terrorist operations. These officers will then form the nucleus of a SAS-type battalion that will in turn train other army personnel. Italy has been chosen because of its long experience with terrorist groups like the Red Brigades, and because of its success in countering terrorism in the country. At one time, the Indian Government was considering an informal proposal from the Israelis to train army personnel in that country for similar purposes. Israel maintains the most effective anti-terrorism operation in the world. But even though the Government has, in the past, used Israeli advice for anti-hijacking and airport security measures, the concept of a full-fledged Indian force training there would be international political dynamite, capable of blowing Indo-Arab relations through the roof.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Now you can stay in a deluxe Singapore hotel for 4 days and 3 nights at a price you normally pay for 1 day.

At the Imperial Singapore, you can ask for the Imperial Special Package which gives you 4 days and 3 nights at a price you can afford.

Package Rates for 3 Nights
US$95 per person (1 to a Room)
US$70 per person (2 to a Room)
US$55 per person (3 to a Room)

Such savings mean you have more money to shop around in Singapore.

That's not all. You can choose between a free continental, western or Indian vegetarian breakfast.

At the Imperial, our extended check-out facility is specially available upto 6 pm.

There is a daily shuttle bus service to Orchard Road where the major shopping centres are located to give you a wider selection of shops.

Why not take advantage of our Imperial Special Package while planning your next holiday in Singapore? Here's a chance to stay in a deluxe hotel at a price you thought was never possible. And you'll go home with more than just memories.

For instant room reservation and confirmation, please call the Trade-Wings Ltd. offices located all over India, your local travel agent or contact the hotel direct.

Imperial SINGAPORE

1 Jalan Rumbia/Oxley Rise, Singapore 0923 Tel: 7371666 Cable: IMPERHOTEL Telex: IMPHTL RS21654
Facsimile: 7374761 Owning Company: Hind Hotels International Ltd

TRADE-WINGS OFFICES THROUGHOUT INDIA

NEW DELHI
60, Janpath, New Delhi 110 001
Tel: 311822, 321364
Telex: 31 66086 TWND IN

BOMBAY
30 K. Dubash Marg, Fort,
Bombay 400 023
Tel: 244334, 230930
Telex: 11 2494 TWBB IN

BANGALORE
26/1, Lavelle Road, Bangalore 560 001
Tel: 54595/6/7 Telex: 845 232 TWBG IN

HYDERABAD
United House, 101/3 P. Garden Road
Hyderabad 500 001. Tel: 30545
Telex: 1556 272 TWHD IN

MADRAS
752 Anna Salai, Madras 600 002
Tel: 89461, 812951, 88415
Telex: 41 573 TWMS IN

* And also Trade-Wings offices at: Ahmedabad, Cochin, Madurai, Mangalore, Manipal, Nagpur, Panaji, Pune, Srinagar, Varanasi, Vadodara (Baroda), & New York

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

CC-0. Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

LOOK AGAIN !

THE LATEST FROM THE GREATEST

Now! Say hello to the sleek and beautiful ceiling fans from Usha. The rich glowing brown and gold Kohinoor Super Deluxe. The 4-blade premium fan with tastefully decorative flanges.

The latest in looks, in styling, the greatest in quality, in aerodynamics: Senator, Excella, Signet, Pulsar, Prima. The snowy whites, the silver greys, the royal browns in a choice of 3 and 4 sweeps.

Unmatchable Usha!

And the Usha range—Unmatched again! 83 varieties in ceiling, table, pedestal, wall and ventilating fans. The shapes and shades will make you look again, and again!

It's great when beautiful things happen to the best quality.

So look again! And watch Usha perform beautifully for the rest of your life! Get the latest... from the largest ceiling!

USHA

The No. 1 makes them beautiful !

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Contract. JEW. 152/87

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Even if I have served cheese recipes for every single party that I have hosted, it still works as a pleasant surprise.

Maybe it's that special twist it gives to any recipe. Maybe it's the sheer taste. I really don't know.

Whatever it is, Amul Cheese is part of my formula for a successful party.

In fact, I have even gone to the extent of inventing my own recipes. Recipes that ask for an encore!

CHICKEN WITH SOUFFLE TOPPING
(Serves about 5)

1 small chicken — boiled, boned and diced; 2 large capsicums — sliced; 1 medium onion — chopped; 150 gm cabbage — shredded; 6 cloves garlic — crushed; ½ tbsp oil; ½ tsp salt; 150 gm Amul Cheese — grated; 4 large eggs; 1 tbsp green coriander — chopped; 3 green chillies — chopped.

In a large pan saute garlic in oil. Add onions and cook till light brown, add other ingredients except cheese and eggs. Fry till vegetables are cooked but still crisp. Remove to a deep ovenproof dish. Separate the eggs. Lightly beat the yolks. Beat egg whites into stiff peaks with a little salt. Mix yolks with whites. Pour over the chicken vegetable mixture. Sprinkle grated cheese. Bake in a hot oven (200°C, Gas 6) for about half an hour till eggs set. Serve with garlic bread.

AMUL CHEESE MALAI KOFTAS
(Makes 20)

KOFTAS: 4 potatoes — boiled, peeled and mashed; 3 tbsp flour; 100 gm Amul Cheese — grated; 1 onion — chopped and mixed together with 3 green chillies and small bunch coriander; 4 tbsp bread crumbs; fat for deep frying.

GRAVY: 2 onions — grated; 2 red chillies — ground to a paste; 50 gm cashewnuts; 4-6 tbsp malai or cream; 50 gm Amul Butter; 30 gm Amul Cheese — grated.

To make koftas, blend mashed potatoes, cheese and flour till smooth. Take portions of this mixture, the size of a lemon and flatten it on your palm. Place a little of the chopped onion, chilli, coriander mixture and shape into a ball. Repeat with the rest. Roll in bread crumbs and deep-fry till golden brown.

For gravy, melt butter. Fry onion till brown. Add cashewnuts and chilli paste and fry again. Add sufficient water and boil to make a thick gravy. Add cream and koftas at the time of serving. Top with grated Amul Cheese and green coriander. Serve hot with parathas.

Write in for an Amul Cheese Book with 120 mouth-watering cheese recipes to: P.O. Box 10124, Bombay, along with Postal Order of Rs. 15/- in favour of Gujarat Co-op. Milk Marketing Federation Ltd., with your complete address.

Amul cheese

Perks up meals with zest and taste.

Marketed by:
Gujarat Co-operative Milk Marketing Federation Limited, Anand 388 001, Gujarat.

OPERATION FLOOD

In every party that I host, the chief guest is Amul Cheese.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Bofors Blast

THE smoking gun wreathed the fortnight that was in swirling clouds of suspicion. For the Government, the conspiracy of charges was like sleep-walking through a minefield. For the country, the fortnight's happenings raised sudden and serious questions about stability. The Bofors blast was, in essence, a rude realisation that the country had become high on new wine fermented in old bottles, that a mandate was in peril.

The Congress(I) Working Committee (CWC), congregating for the first time in two years, unearthed the ubiquitous foreign hand and termed it a conspiracy. But almost overnight, credibility was commanding a greater price.

In that context, last fortnight resembled nothing more than a loaded gun. The sudden tightening of political reflexes—and the equally sudden closing of ranks in the ruling party—was an indication that the political scenario had undergone a dramatic change. The future seemed to be draped in a nervous question mark.

The Bofors blast wreathed the fortnight in swirling clouds of suspicion.

The CWC meeting termed it a conspiracy.

In direct consequence, other forces were stockpiling their ammunition. For the first time since 1979, questions were raised about the President's constitutional ability to dismiss a government. That the question was being most vociferously asked by ruling party members signified that the threat was not imaginary. Ironically enough, it was during the fortnight that the ruling party and the Opposition started short-listing the names of the next presidential candidate—an issue that President Zail Singh has elevated to a new importance.

On another front, the chief ministers of six Opposition-ruled states met in New Delhi to evolve a joint strategy against the Congress(I) and cobble together an alternative to the Rajiv Gandhi Government. West Bengal Chief Minister Jyoti Basu, fresh from his electoral triumph, lent the conclave an unusually aggressive mien. It was yet another indication that the political winds were starting to blow in an uncertain direction.

The non-Congress(I) chief ministers met to cobble a national alternative.

There were added pressures that appeared on more distant horizons. A bomb blast in Colombo and subsequent reprisals by the Sri Lankan Government seriously impaired India's efforts to broker a negotiated settlement on the ethnic crisis and injected a new hostility into the relationship. Of much greater concern was the sabre-rattling by yet another neighbour as Beijing accused India of aggressive design and both sides moved forces closer to the border. For the second time in three months, the drums of war added an ominous beat to the existing cacophony.

It was pressure of a more localised kind that led Karnataka Chief Minister Ramakrishna Hegde to finally succumb to representational demands and expand his Cabinet to gargantuan proportions, leading the Opposition to quickly label it an "airbus cabinet". Just how many of the ministers would in fact be mere passengers was a wide-bodied question.

The end of Ribeiro's tenure leaves a dangerous vacuum.

In Punjab, the tenure of no-nonsense police chief Julio Ribeiro was coming to an end, leaving a dangerous vacuum that will be almost impossible to fill. The Punjab crisis has also focused national attention on perhaps the most vital state election in recent memory—in Haryana—which will be the key test for the continued survival of the Rajiv Gandhi Government. The sudden switch by master survivor Hardwari Lal from the Congress(I) to one of the Lok Dal factions, ostensibly due to the party's new image, seemed to indicate that the problems of the ruling party may be just beginning.

—DILIP BOBB

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Tanker today.

Freighter tomorrow.

Through years of rugged service in war and peacetime, the C-130 Hercules aircraft has earned the admiration of pilots and mechanics all over the world. It's simply one of the most dependable planes in the air.

But it's also one of the most versatile. It converts from aerial refueling capability to cargo handling in hours, and delivers outstanding performance on either mission.

As a tanker, the Hercules aircraft carries 56,000 pounds of fuel on a typical mission — fast enough for mid air delivery to jets, or slow enough for helicopter refueling.

When the KC-130 is used as a freighter, it can get almost anything almost anywhere. Its 40,000-pound capacity is large enough for tanks and heavy trucks. It can land or take off from runways you wouldn't try with other planes. Even ice and snow.

Best of all, the C-130's impressive performance comes with surprising cost efficiency. That's why you'll find it serving more than 55 governments on every continent, day in and day out, year after year. Getting the job done, no matter what the job may be.

Lockheed-Georgia

Innovation

Giving shape to imagination.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

WE PUT PEOPLE ON TALKING TERMS

CMI have become leaders in the field of dry core telecommunication wires and cables in the country through sheer excellence of products.

Today CMI cables are at work in the heart of industry, Telephone Exchanges, Computer and Control Rooms, Railways, Power Stations, Heavy Vehicles, Defence, Satellite launchings ...you name it.

CMI is on the threshold of launching a range of petroleum jelly filled Cables and Coil Cords for telephone instruments as part of its current expansion programme. It is already manufacturing a variety of screened signal and instrumentation cables for data transmission required in all large industries with a high degree of automation.

In addition to Railway signalling cables, CMI also manufactures specially designed quad cables for axle counters used extensively on railway tracks and a wide range of Copper cables to meet every requirement.

CMI (P) Ltd
602, Ansal Bhawan, Kasturba Gandhi Marg,
New Delhi - 110 001
Ph. 3311984, 3311695, Tlx: 031-61082 CMI-IN

CMI Cables — Making the right connections

APPEAL/CMI 86-14 Creative: Sam Mathews Inc.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

DEFENCE DEALS

BOFORS AND AFTER

THE Bofors blast is destined to echo resoundingly down the darker avenues of contemporary Indian history. Almost as damaging as the allegations themselves, was the inept manner in which the Government bungled its handling of the affair in Parliament. Coming, as it did, on the heels of the Fairfax affair, the submarine scandal and the subsequent resignation of defence minister V.P. Singh, the Bofors issue is a potential time-bomb. Apart from putting in grave jeopardy the credibility of the Government, it has created a palpable feeling of paranoia within the ruling party regarding the intentions of President Zail Singh. That, in turn, threatens to strain the tautly-stretched political fabric of the country. Bofors and after, could prove to be the already crisis-ridden Rajiv Gandhi Government's severest test yet.

The guns spell money's ultimate reason.
—Stephen Spender

If one offers money to a government to influence it, that is corruption. But if someone receives money for services rendered afterwards, that is a commission.
—Adnan Khashoggi (1976)

The catchy advertisement for the Bofors 155mm howitzer calls it "the eternal weapon". For South Block, nothing could have been more ironic. Exactly a year after India signed the Rs 1,705-crore deal for the Swedish Bofors 155 mm FH-77B howitzer, it has literally become a loaded gun, pointed at the heart of the Rajiv Gandhi Government.

Last fortnight's sensational disclosures regarding alleged kickbacks to key people involved in the Bofors deal could not have come at a worse moment for the ruling party. Since the beginning of the year, it has plunged itself into one crisis after another. The forced resignation of a popular foreign secretary, the unnecessary tension on the Pakistan border and the sordid treatment of the President, were all issues that called into serious question the credibility and image of a government that had promised much and seemed to be delivering the opposite.

Then came, in swift succession, the Fairfax issue, followed by V.P. Singh's probe into the submarine deal which ultimately led to the resignation of the star performer in the Rajiv Gandhi Government. And now, just when the fallout from the V.P. Singh affair was showing signs of abating, a besieged government has been hit with the Bofors scandal.

The Bofors disclosures were made by the National Swedish Radio,

The Bofors howitzer: sharp recoil

Digitized by A and eGangotri

RAGHU RAI

which charged that payments worth 33 million Swedish kroner (approximately Rs 6.6 crore) had been made to an Indian source (see box). According to the radio station's current affairs programme Dagens Eko (Daily Echo)—29.5 million kroner was paid in three payments made in November 1986 and a fourth payment of 2.5 million kroner was made in December 1986, into four Swiss bank accounts. The code name for the transfers was "Lotus".

But more damaging than the allegations themselves, was the timing and the inept manner in which the Government handled the entire affair—a repeat of its clumsy and contradictory management of the probe V.P. Singh ordered into the submarine deal which led, ultimately, to his resignation (see box, page 44). After a hastily-summoned, unscheduled meeting of the Cabinet Committee on Political Affairs, the Government issued a statement terming the Bofors allegation as "one more link in the chain of denigration and destabilisation of our political system". The Congress Working Committee dredged up a lengthy and even more convoluted thesis on the "sinister move by the forces of imperialism... through a calculated campaign of calumny", and blamed the ubiquitous "foreign hand" for what it termed a conspiracy against the present government and its leader.

The externalising of the issue found few buyers, mainly because the Government found itself suddenly short of one vital ingredient—credibility. The snowballing effect of the last few weeks has taken a far heavier toll than the leadership's face-saving statements attempt to indicate. Rajiv's most potent public weapon—his reputation of Mr Clean—was in serious jeopardy, if not lost forever. And, the partymen's attempts to rally around their leader only served to emphasise their new-found insecurity—and their paranoia.

Despite the Government's face-saving statements, Rajiv's reputation as Mr Clean is in serious jeopardy.

WHAT was perhaps most damaging was the ruling party's performance in Parliament. There were prolonged populist statements by the leadership. Rajiv himself went out of his way to insist that "nobody would be spared", that the Government would leave no stone unturned in its efforts to unearth any wrongdoing in the Bofors affair. Minister of State for Defence Arun Singh, in a performance worthy of a Mark Antony, declared: "Hang us if we are found guilty, but allow us to work." It was emphasised that Rajiv had extracted a pledge from the late Swedish premier, Olof Palme, that no middlemen would be involved, and that he had tried to place a midnight call to his Swedish counterpart to clear up the charges.

But that call was described by Swedish Prime Minister Ingvar Carlsson as a "courtesy call". Carlsson also clarified that Palme had simply conveyed to Rajiv assurances received from Bofors about no middlemen being involved, and that there were no documents on this. The formal request last fortnight, for a confirmation of the absence of middlemen, went through Bhupatray Oza, the Indian ambassador in Stockholm. Oza told INDIA TODAY at his residence in one of Stockholm's exclusive quarters, Villagatan: "We have had a report from Bofors which I have forwarded to Delhi. That is strictly unofficial. We now await the official response from the Swedish Government which has been requested by the Indian Government. I do not think any names or details are going to be revealed in Delhi, based on the initial Bofors report."

But shortly after this, Rajiv Gandhi told an army commanders' conference that everything was in the clear. According to the official press note, he said: "Sweden has confirmed that there were no middlemen and no money was paid in Swiss banks." When the matter figured in Parliament, Rajiv tied himself further in knots by reiterating that Sweden had recently confirmed the absence of middlemen, but then saying contradictorily: "So far, we have got no specific information from the Swedish Government....We must give them a chance to give us an answer and a response."

Even as Rajiv said this to Parliament, the Swedish Government confirmed that no inquiry had been ordered till then. The inquiry was finally announced a day later, on April 29. Before that, Bofors had declared: "No such bribes or commissions have been paid." Said Director of Information Per Mossberg: "Bofors is fully prepared to offer all clarifications if requested by the Swedish Government, which could then be relayed to the Indian authorities."

Added Lars-Olof Lindgreen, political adviser in the Swedish Trade Department: "It is difficult for us to know all the nuances of the deal and what transpired in the negotiations between Bofors and Indian officials. These are done strictly between Bofors and the Indian Government. We do not come into the picture. But now that the Indian Government has requested clarifications, we have asked Bofors for details." The "clarifications" asked for were presumably the ones requested by Ambassador Oza.

In the heated Parliament debates that followed the revelations, the Government stuck to its guns in insisting that no middlemen had been used. But by not

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SVERIGE RADIO

"We have all the evidence"

IT was a spectacular scoop for a national radio station which, barely a year ago, completely missed Sweden's most sensational story in decades. The gunning down of Olof Palme took place just before midnight. Sverige Radio had closed business for the night at 11 p.m. Today, the station never sleeps. It now broadcasts 24 hours with hourly bulletins and news analyses. A majority of its 90-member editorial team, which includes 13 foreign correspondents, is preoccupied with the Palme murder probe and the ongoing Bofors investigations.

Since the scoop about Bofors' bribes to Indian sources in the billion-dollar artillery deal, life has changed for the reporters at the Dagens Eko programme newsroom. Besieged with calls from the international media and quoted around the world, they now seem to have adapted to their minor celebrity status.

The reporter who broke the story is a regular freelancer. Magnus Nilsson, 32, is an unassuming reporter who specialises in environmental issues. But it was his contacts who provided evidence of transfers from the Bofors' bank—The Skandinvinska Enskilada Banken—to the Suisse Bank Corporation. Much of the initial credit for breaking the story, undeservedly in hindsight, went to the radio's Hong Kong-based correspondent Rolf Proseryd, who had arrived in New Delhi. What Proseryd did was to provide background information on the Fairfax investigations, the HDW submarine contract and defence minister V.P. Singh's resignation. The damaging allegations were broadcast in Stockholm. Besides Nilsson, others who worked on the story included Jan Mosander and Borje Remdahl, specialist on foreign news.

Most people in Stockholm tended to believe the radio station's story, not only because it is respected for its editorial integrity but as Bofors itself is caught in a maze of allegations and is less believable.

The Swedish Broadcasting Group is owned by several trade unions, Swedish press organisations and the Federation of Swedish Employers. It has four wings—one of which is the National Swedish Radio. The others are Swedish Television, Swedish Local Radio and Swedish Educational Radio. The National Radio thus holds a monopoly throughout the land. Its investigative team on Bofors is determined to go ahead with more disclosures, including those relating to the Indian deal. In their bustling editorial office, located in a sprawling building in an eastern suburb of Stockholm, Borje Remdahl and Magnus Nilsson, who triggered off the current controversy, spoke to INDIA TODAY*'s London Correspondent* RAMESH CHANDRAN. Excerpts:

Q. Are you still positive that payments have been made to Indian contacts in Swiss accounts relating to the Bofors 155 mm gun deal?

A. We are absolutely positive—one hundred per cent.

Q. In what form is this evidence?

A. We can assure you it is documentary evidence.

Q. Do you have account numbers, dates and precise amounts involved in these transfers to the Suisse Bank Corporation?

A. Yes. We have all of this.

Q. And they are directly connected to the Indian deal?

A. Absolutely. And we know it was paid to Indian contacts.

Q. But you do not know to whom. Your tracks stop at this Swiss bank.

A. We do not have any names yet. Yes—it is accurate to say for the moment the trail stops in Switzerland.

Q. Why don't you ask this mysterious source to reveal these names to you?

A. We cannot do anything at this stage without seriously compromising our sources. Our main task in these hard times is to protect our sources. They will be most useful in the future.

Q. You have repeatedly mentioned "bribes". These could be commissions to an agent for his support....

A. Our sources insist they are nothing but bribes. In any case, even if they were simple commissions, why pay them into secret Swiss bank accounts? There is a lot of semantics around this—bribes, commissions, provisions.

Q. Bofors denies your allegations. While you insist you have evidence of bribes having been paid to Indians, officials in India say they had been assured by Sweden that no middlemen would be involved in the gun deal.

A. OBJORNSTROM

Borje Remdahl

Magnus Nilsson

"We can't understand why our government is not exerting enough pressure on Bofors about these payments.... Something is very rotten here and in the Indian gun deal. The Government can easily find out."

A. That is precisely what we would like to know. For you in India, the big story is who received the bribes—politicians or agents. For us in Sweden, the crux of the issue is that Olof Palme assured Rajiv Gandhi in the autumn of 1985 that no intermediaries would be involved in this deal. Yet, payments were made to contacts abroad.

Q. Are you implying that someone in your government misled Olof Palme?

A. It is now for all of us to find out if Bofors lied to Mr Palme. Or did Mr Palme give assurances to Rajiv Gandhi which were not true? We believe that Olof Palme carried a certain weight when it came to clinching this deal. He wanted this deal to go through.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Q. Are you suggesting that Palme knew something more than what he submitted?

A. Carl Johan Aberg, the under-secretary of state for foreign trade, has said that he had documented assurances Palme received from Bofors regarding these middlemen, and we want him to produce those documents. Aberg has been consistently refusing to talk to us.

Q. What assurances did Rajiv Gandhi get from Palme?

A. We can't say for sure—they could be verbal, maybe written. The Indian ambassador here has asked for clarifications from the Swedish Government. Why can't these documents which Aberg possesses be produced?

Rolf Proseryd

Q. Swedish officials say they have little knowledge about the precise nature of the deal since much of the negotiations were between Bofors and the Indian Government.

A. Well, that's very convenient. They now don't want to get involved at all. But Mr Palme himself was deeply involved in the Indian deal. He was under pressure to do something regarding unemployment in a very depressed area in Sweden. In the late '70s, Bofors had deep problems. And the huge Indian deal certainly saved the company. "Mr Clean" entered office determined to wipe out corruption. And his good friend Palme decided to help him. But now, perhaps, it seems to have been a disservice.

Q. This code-name "Lotus" referred to one payment. Whose name was it?

A. The code referred to one payment. We believe that "Lotus" was the name given by Bofors. We did not invent it.

Q. What names from the Indian side have figured in the investigations so far?

A. There was Rao, Chadha. Our London correspondent spoke to G.P. Hinduja. He denied all involvement.

Q. The Indian Ambassador B. Oza visited your offices. What transpired?

A. He wanted clarifications if we had mentioned names of Indians or implicated Indian politicians. We denied that we had done so at any stage. We cleared up that misunderstanding.

Q. The editors gave him some sort of protest note regarding your correspondent in New Delhi.

A. Yes. It was the treatment meted out to Rolf Proseryd. He was followed by four policemen all the time. He was summoned several times by the foreign office. Proseryd was asked to provide all documents concerning the Bofors story that he had in his possession. They did not seem to realise that he had nothing to do with our original story.

Q. What puzzles many people is the timing of your story. It seemed to break out precisely when the pressure was maximum on the Rajiv Gandhi Government.

A. We can only assure you that the timing was a pure coincidence. Since the investigations on Bofors began in the Swedish media, we had been planning to take a closer look at the Indian deal. This evidence popped up unexpectedly. It certainly was not part of some overall strategy.

Q. Would you say your radio station is free from outside influence and pressure?

A. We consider ourselves one hundred per cent independent and we enjoy complete editorial freedom. We experience no such outside pressures.

Q. Does Bofors not have the option to sue the National Swedish Radio for defamation and force you to provide your evidence in court?

A. We don't believe they can. First, it is an offence under Swedish law to force a journalist to reveal his source. In any case, we know we are right when we say that middlemen were paid in the Indian deal. What we cannot understand is why the Swedish Government is not exerting enough pressure on Bofors about these payments. The Government can easily find out if these have been paid. For instance, they can order the head of our Central Bank to check with the bank which made these transfers to secret Swiss accounts. Indeed, something is very rotten here and in the Indian gun deal.

ordering a probe immediately—as V.P. Singh had done in the case of the submarine deal—the Government clearly lost the initiative. Nor did it make the obvious and specific request that the Swedish Government inquire from the Central Bank in Stockholm, whether the alleged payments were made to Swiss accounts. Under Swedish law, the Central Bank would have the authority and obligation to confirm or deny the radio station's allegations. Although the Government was keen to give the impression that it was as eager as anyone else to get to the truth of the matter, the effort didn't seem fully convincing. Perhaps the Government did not want to be surprised by embarrassing disclosures from agencies outside its control.

One ostensible reason why the Government has mismanaged the affair, was the initial misunderstanding over the actual words used in the Swedish radio's allegation. The first reports on the radio broadcast were interpreted as the payments having been made to "Indian politicians". The radio emphatically denied having made this allegation. In interviews to INDIA TODAY last week, the journalists involved in the investigation insisted that they had documentary evidence to stand by their story that the money was paid to Indian "contacts", including bank account numbers, dates and the amounts transferred from the Bofors' bank to the Suisse Bank Corporation. They claimed that they were "100 per cent positive that this money was paid as part of the Bofors deal with India". They also insisted that the only reason they were not releasing additional information was because it would endanger their main source for the story. Last week, the station stated that they would be prepared to give the information to a third party acceptable to them as well as the Indian Government, so as to ensure that their sources were protected.

So far, the Indian Government has been given two names by the Swedish journalists who are involved in the story. One is Win Chadha, a Delhi-based arms dealer who represents a number of companies abroad, including Bofors. Chadha has denied that he received any payments (see page 34), and claims he stopped representing Bofors in 1985 after the agreement between Rajiv and the then Swedish premier Olof Palme, that no middlemen would be involved. A photo-

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

WIN CHADHA

"I had no say"

PROBABLY the most harassed man in India after Rajiv Gandhi is Win Chadha, 61, the Bofors consultant named by Swedish Radio as the conduit for commission payments to Indian officials in the billion-dollar gun deal. Chadha denies handling any commission money on behalf of Bofors but that hasn't prevented him from being plagued by phone calls and visits from press reporters. He was even pursued into the sauna room of a five-star hotel health club in New Delhi by a Swedish Radio reporter. The reporter was quietly removed from the hotel where Chadha is a valued customer, the kind to whom hotel general managers send birthday gifts of wine and cakes.

The big, burly Chadha does not suffer from undue modesty. He describes himself as a highly-educated, well-informed, successful businessman who controls six companies and owns two, including Anatronic General Corporation which represented Bofors in India. He lives well, owns a plush, high-walled farm-house on the outskirts of Delhi and at least two gleaming Mercedes cars are always parked in his driveway. He lets it be known that he is a former Fullbright fellow who did his Ph.D. work at Columbia University. But he is cagey about small things. He won't reveal his real age: "You can say I am over 60." An arms dealer who lectures the press about morality, Chadha flinches from any contact with the press. But he agreed to clarify his role in the controversial Bofors deal in a conversation with Special Correspondent RAMINDAR SINGH. Excerpts:

"The gun business started earlier than 1982, but Bofors was not in the running because the gun was considered too sophisticated. Effective negotiations started sometime in 1985 after Bofors agreed to meet three pre-conditions—to reduce the price, remove middlemen and ensure that the gun's capability was adequate. The gun was thoroughly evaluated. The Bofors and French guns met all the parameters. But the Swedish gun is better. This is the report of all committees. It was the only gun which had been in service for seven or eight years. The French gun was then only on the drawing-boards. Then they (Bofors) slashed the price like hell. I don't know the price as I was not involved in the negotiations or discussions. I have not attended any meeting concerning the negotiations. I was not allowed.

"Commander M.R.A. Rao left Bofors in 1979. I was already representing a subsidiary company, Bofors Aerotronics and in 1979, I took over as a representative of Bofors, not as an agent. An agent is a much bigger thing. An agent is

"I have not acted as a middleman either in passing money or bribes. It is against my conscience and principles."

financially involved and has the authority to sign on behalf of the company. I have never been an agent for any foreign company, leave alone Bofors. A representative is only a confidential post box. When the Government wants information or spare parts, they phone the representative to come and discuss matters with them. Like, when the gun had to be proved or demonstrated, the representative had to make arrangements. Consultants are appointed to help (Bofors) personnel here.

"We, as consultants, have nothing to do with sales activity. The Government of India will not deal with us, they don't entertain us because we have no locus standi.

"We act as consultants and not as representatives. Agents get a commission, a percentage of the total sales, but a representative's remuneration is a fixed amount. The Government of India does not differentiate between agents and representatives: all are treated as middlemen."

Had he acted as a middleman in this deal? "Absolutely not. A categorical no. I have not handled any money on Bofors' part. I have not acted as a middleman either in passing money or bribes. It is against my conscience and principles. I have never been and will never be party to such dirty things."

What was the extent of his involvement till 1985, when he was a representative for Bofors? "I was never involved in financial transactions. They made the offers, they fixed and negotiated the price, they signed the contract. I had no say in the bloody thing. What profit they make, how much they sell it at, when they deliver, it's their decision. We had nothing to do with it. I had nothing to do with passing any money.

"I don't expect anything to come out of this Bofors deal. Because nothing exists. To the best of my knowledge no money was passed nor commission paid. I don't know of it."

What about the $5 million (Rs 6.4 crore) mentioned? "That is all bullshit. Ask Swedish Radio, which peddles such lies. They had not given any facts, only vague statements, and till today they have refused to substantiate it. The most painful part is that the whole country is talking about half-facts, uncorroborated statements and that too of a foreigner who is hiding from day to day. To my knowledge, no Bofors representative has said that commissions were paid.

"No raid has ever taken place on me in my whole life: either on my business premises or any establishment or facility owned or connected with me. I have been questioned about details of the Bofors deal by a government agency which I refuse to identify. But I can say that the CBI or IB have never visited or interrogated me. I am proud of the moral status that I have and the clean life that I have led. I never gave any party last year to celebrate the Bofors deal. On April 25, 1986, my wife and son gave a dinner party to celebrate my 60th birthday. It had nothing to do with the Bofors deal, which was signed in end-March, 1986.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"I represented Kockums (the Swedish submarine manufacturer) for a few years, but a few months before the final discussions between them and the Government, I parted company with Kockums in 1979. The submarine decision was taken in 1980. I never represented HDW (the German submarine manufacturer involved in the controversial defence deal)."

Why did he leave Kockums at a time when agents were still allowed? "Kockums decided that they wanted to deal directly with the Government. Only they know what their reasons were."

What would he describe himself as? "An administrative consultant. The Swedes here (three families of Bofors managers in Delhi and two representatives at Jabalpur and Deolali) have needs and problems. We make bookings for them, look after transport, housing and schools for these families. For this we get a monthly remuneration which comes through the RBI.

"I have worked abroad in very senior jobs—my last appointment was director, Far East, for an American billion-dollar multinational company not involved in defence. I set up Johnson and Johnson in India. I came back in 1970 after spending over 10 years abroad, and established Anatronic General Corporation in 1970. (The name Anatronic is derived by combining the first letters of army, navy, air force and the latter half of electronics.) Its business in the beginning was representation and now consultancy. Since I am a very well-informed, highly-educated man, I also dabble in financial matters, leasing. We lease equipment to leading companies in the country like DCM and McDowells. In terms of money it is the larger part of my work. Anatronic and Win Chadha Investments do leasing also. I have six limited companies and two proprietory concerns."

Is he worth Rs 100 crore as rumoured? "There is a famous saying that one's own wisdom and others' wealth always appears bigger. I am not being auctioned that I should put a price (tag) on my head. If I was worth Rs 100 crore, I would not be living in a rented house."

graph published in several Swedish dailies, which elicited amused comment in Stockholm, was that of a jubilant Chadha celebrating with champagne, with Bofors officials, after the contract was clinched. Chadha's "swanky life-style", and his "four Mercedes cars", have provoked intense speculation in Sweden about his role in the deal. The other name given is that of Commander M.R.A. Rao, who used to represent Bofors in the late '70s, but retired from the arms business after Chadha's appointment.

But in New Delhi, it was obvious that the revelations had caused considerable disquiet in the corridors of power and an unusual undercover operation was covertly launched. A series of unpublicised visits were carried out by intelligence sleuths on the premises of 41 key defence agents—including the vacant bungalow owned by the London-based Hinduja family. A highly-respected Swedish newspaper, Dagens Nyheter, in a separate investigation into the deal, has named the Hindujas as being involved in the payments. But, according to Gopichand Hinduja: "Most of these allegations are a figment of somebody's imagination. At no stage were we involved in any of the Indian defence deals."

The curious aspect of last fortnight's "visits", however, was that though intelligence sources admitted that raids had been carried out, the intelligence agencies refused to confirm the fact officially. And newspapers which reported on the 'raids', had to carry denials from arms agents. Equally curious was the case concerning a prominent defence agent, M.K. Jajodia of Roger Enterprises, who had been raided last November by Enforcement Directorate sleuths—during V.P. Singh's tenure as finance minister—and had admitted maintaining an account of Rs 3.5 crore abroad. Jajodia, the biggest FERA offender nabbed by the Enforcement Directorate in recent times, was surprisingly released on parole last fortnight, on the express orders of Minister of State for Finance Brahm Dutt, despite disapproval from the COFEPOSA wing of the Finance Ministry. Officials of the ministry claim that Dutt had ordered the parole to enable Jajodia to make arrangements for repatriating the money to India.

Last fortnight, the CBI also searched the premises of two other Jajodias, K.K. Jajodia and A.K. Jajodia. Both were said to be abroad, but on the basis of papers recovered during the search, the CBI arrested A.K. Jajodia's Personal Secretary K. Venugopalan under the Official Secrets Act. Earlier, the premises of another defence agent, Vinod Khanna—who represents Saab Scania, the Swedish company that has supplied the tow vehicles for the Bofors howitzer—were also visited by sleuths.

Most of the questioning of defence agents and representatives is being done by the counter-intelligence wing of the IB, the special investigation cell of the CBI and RAW. Officials of all agencies, however, deny they are involved. Sources say that the aim of the searches and questioning is damage-control. In other words, to seize any documents and papers that could prove embarrassing or incriminating for the ruling party.

MEANWHILE, as a measure of the current paranoia caused by the Bofors scandal, the telephones of senior Defence Ministry and armed forces officials, defence agents and even journalists investigating the story are believed to have been tapped. Senior army officials approached by INDIA TODAY refused to talk on the phone and would only meet journalists from the magazine elsewhere, for fear that even their offices might be bugged. Delhi's English daily, The Statesman, charged that its team of Insight reporters was shadowed by a carload of IB men.

The panic within the Congress(I) (see following story) is reflected in the fact that senior party functionaries are actually openly expressing the fear that President Zail Singh is collecting evidence on the Bofors deal, in preparation to dismiss the present government. However far-fetched the possibility, it is an indication that the Government is seriously concerned about the deal and its possible fall-out.

In fact, it has been learnt that during one of the searches on defence agents, CBI sleuths seized documents on the Bofors deal highly damaging to the present government. Acting on the information, a team of senior CBI officials further investigated the matter and questioned a large number of people. Their inquiries confirmed what the documents had earlier indicated. The file containing the material was submitted to CBI chief Mohan Katre last week. Rashtrapati Bhawan sources say they are aware of the existence of the file and its contents, and are contemplating asking the Government for more information on the subject.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Meanwhile, the Government is trying hard to contain the possible fall-out of the Bofors affair. If it is proved that the Bofors deal did indeed involve kickbacks, it will tear apart the shroud of secrecy that drapes the holy cow of defence matters. It is, for instance, a well-known fact in political circles that the Congress strategy since Sanjay Gandhi's time has been to eliminate the need for going hat-in-hand to Indian businessmen for donations to the party purse. Businessmen have, in fact, been heard complaining for the last few years that the Congress(I) had stopped coming to them for money at election time. Much of the money now supposedly comes from foreign companies bidding for large contracts in India.

THE security implications of a kickback-influenced deal are that the defence forces' morale would be undermined by fears about the quality of their equipment and weapons. This was spelt out in a hard-hitting article last week by Brigadier N.B. Grant, a former Indian Army officer, who wrote: "With the exception of very few countries, kickbacks and commissions on defence contracts are accepted as being part of the business and are not considered illegal. The main worrying point, however, concerns the role they play in influencing decisions for purchase of substandard equipment or acquisitions of doubtful military value."

The other obvious, and positive, fall-out will be the fact that agents and middlemen will be more cautious and circumspect in their dealings, as will the bureaucrats handling such contracts. There will also be a much closer scrutiny of defence deals in Parliament and by the media, and any government having had its fingers burnt, will be forced to steer clear of the defence pie.

That is perhaps what makes the Bofors deal such a hot potato. The Indian contract for the purchase of the Bofors artillery system FH-77B and its licence production, worth 8.4 billion kroner (Rs 1,705 crore), was not only the largest contract ever signed by Bofors, but also the single largest export order ever awarded to Swedish industry, apart from being the largest signed by the Rajiv Gandhi Government. The Indian howitzer purchase is one of the most fiercely-contested and high-stake deals in recent times. Initial negotiations started in 1977 when the Indian Ministry of Defence, reacting to reports that Pakistan was to acquire American-made 155 mm howitzers, sought information from Bofors and six other manufacturers on 155 mm artillery systems. Indian Defence Ministry sources have confirmed that even the Americans were approached and negotiations started, but were eventually scrapped "due to political reasons".

"We've got an unofficial report from Bofors. We now await the official response from the Swedish Government."

BHUPATRAY OZA
Indian ambassador in Stockholm

By early 1981, the field had been narrowed down to four competitors—the Bofors FH-77B, the British-German-Italian FH-70, the Austrian GH N-45 and the French GIAT 155 TR. Bofors was asked to bring the howitzer to India for field trials in the first half of '81. By '85, the field had been further narrowed to only two systems—the Swedish and the French. In March '86, the contract was awarded to Bofors, two months after the then Swedish premier Olof Palme had visited New Delhi a month before his assassination and made a personal plug for the company. The Bofors contract also benefited a number of other Swedish companies, including Saab-Scania for the tow vehicles, Peab for the sights, Barracuda for the camouflage nets, and Bofors subsidiary Lindesbergs Industri AB and the state-owned FFV for the ammunition. Other arms manufacturers to benefit were Britain's Marconi for fire-control computers, Scotland's Ferranti for navigational systems, Australia's Fairey for muzzle velocity indicators and Switzerland's Wild for survey equipment.

Moreover, a recent article in the authoritative Jane's Defence Weekly states that Bofors has acknowledged that the value of the Indian deal is far above the US $1.8 billion (Rs 2,316 crore) initially quoted by the company. The actual figure given out by Bofors is in excess of $3.5 billion (Rs 4,504 crore), which makes it the largest single order in Indian history. Originally, Bofors and the Indian Government had indicated that the agreement was for the supply of 400 howitzers. But a Bofors spokesman told Jane's that the company will supply India with 1,500 field guns. Bofors intends to set up two manufacturing plants in India where a major part of the order will be produced. Till last month, Bofors had supplied the Indian Army with around 80 FH-77Bs.

Now, having suddenly recoiled into a major controversy, the Bofors deal is even more significant in terms of the

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Understanding a need and making a product to fulfil it always gives Sumit Bose a special thrill. Which is why he appreciates his Diners Club card. It seems designed to meet his needs as a frequent traveller. Accepted by domestic and international airlines and by a variety of hotels, the Diners Club card also makes him feel accepted and welcome wherever he goes.

The marketing man in Sumit Bose loves the extras that go with the package: Free flight insurance, commission-free travellers' cheques, discounts at hotels abroad. Plus other benefits like a generous purchase bonus, personal cheque cashing facility and a consolidated statement of account every month.

In his dynamic career Sumit Bose has learnt one thing that Diners Club fully endorses: You only put your signature on the best.

Marketing Vice President Sumit Bose salutes a product of the times

Diners Club
Welcome to our world

Diners Club India Pvt. Ltd.
Raheja Chambers, 213 Nariman Point,
Bombay 400 021.

For details contact The Sales Division: ☐ Bombay Tel: 244949 ☐ Delhi Tel: 602565 ☐ Madras Tel: 475112 ☐ Bangalore Tel: 563982 ☐ Hyderabad Tel: 822674 ☐ Calcutta Tel: 447280

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"It's a hectic life, but style is still the name of the game"

"They say I am one of the most stylish batsmen to come out of the post-war era. And Sharmila says that image applies to everything I do. Well, that's true I suppose. I like style... whether it's in the sports I play, the cars I drive or the clothes I wear. That's why I feel so confident when I wear Gwalior Suiting and Shirting. I recommend them to everyone who likes to dress well."

M.A.K. PATAUDI

GWALIOR SUITING

IN A CLASS OF ITS OWN

A PRODUCT OF GRASIM INDUSTRIES LTD.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Someday all cameras will be like the Minolta 7000.

MINOLTA

The Minolta 7000 has changed SLR photography forever with an astonishing standard of technical innovation. It gives you Minolta's Hi-Tech autofocus: with computer controlled accuracy, so fast and precise that it becomes an extension of your eye, even in flash photography. Automatic Multi Program Selection so intelligent that it automatically makes all exposure decisions and settings for you, even selecting the right program for the Minolta AF lens you're using. Fully automatic film control that ends film loading, winding and rewinding worries. Touch control operation that assures quick, precise settings for all camera functions. And the world's widest array of AF lenses, from 24mm to 600mm. All in all, the Minolta 7000 lets you capture the split second experiences of life as they happen, instantly, accurately and exactly the way you see them. Someday all cameras will be like the Minolta 7000. But for now, this is the one to own.

The Hi-Tech Autofocus SLR

7000

Minolta Camera Co., Ltd. 30, 2-Chome, Azuchi-Machi, Higashi-Ku, Osaka 541, Japan

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

other major defence contracts the Indian Government is currently negotiating with western manufacturers. Overnight, it has focussed a harsh and glaring spotlight on the entire murky world of defence contracts and ensured that any future deals will be subjected to similar, if not more intense scrutiny.

► An off-shoot of the Bofors order had resulted in renewed negotiations between the Indian Government and the Swedish submarine manufacturer, Kockums. India is believed to be contemplating changing over to the Kockums submarine type and ending its current contract with HDW.

► India is also considering buying self-propelled 155 mm howitzers to supplement the Bofors field guns and bolster its long-range capability. India has been talking to Vickers, the British armaments firm, which already has its GBT 155 mm turret in operation here, mounted on a Vijayanta tank chassis.

► Last September, an Indian delegation also held discussions with the French Defence Ministry and Dassault Bregeut,

ADNAN KHASHOGGI

King Among Middlemen

WHAT Pierre Cardin is to haute couture, Adnan Khashoggi is to the international arms bazaar. In the mid-'60s, when names like Lockheed, Rolls Royce, and Marconi became synonymous with billion-dollar defence deals, Khashoggi, 50—the Saudi Middleman, as he is called—shot into prominence faster than a speeding bullet. It was a period when mountains of petro-dollars had begun to chase sophisticated armaments. And Khashoggi, the American-educated son of a Saudi doctor, found himself a job as agent for Lockheed. He never looked back. He is today the biggest, the most influential and the richest arms dealer in the world, as well as an encyclopaedic repository of every dark secret associated with the trade. A staggering 20 per cent of the international arms sales to non-Communist countries is associated with Khashoggi, who has amassed a fortune which would be the envy of some of the characters in the Arabian Nights. He owns 12 estates across the world, including a 180,000-acre ranch in Kenya, a $30-million (Rs 3.8 crore) apartment in New York, a dozen villas in the south of France, three jets, a fleet of 50 Mercedes Benz and Rolls Royce limousines, and his 282-foot yacht—Nabila. It costs him about $250,000 (Rs 32.2 lakh) a day to maintain his lifestyle.

"Defence deals are dirty words now," he told Senior Editor PRABHU CHAWLA. "In these deals, it is not agents but corrupt government leaders who corrupt their governments." He added: "Most defence companies operate through their market consultants, who are basically spies for their principals. These are the people who alert their companies to upcoming defence orders and give the companies

"In defence deals it is not agents, but corrupt leaders who corrupt their governments.... Companies do not bribe unless asked."

contacts in the buying country." But once the contact is established, the principals take over directly. Says Khashoggi: "A good machine should sell automatically. If it doesn't, that means someone is interested in making money on the deal. Companies don't offer bribes unless asked for."

The clearest signal to arms dealers that a government, politicians, or officials are looking for a bribe is when a government unduly delays a deal, according to Khashoggi. Committees, technical panels and the like, are a handy device for delaying the deal and providing the time necessary for settling the terms of kickbacks. Every manufacturer, he says, makes an inbuilt provision in the cost of equipment for meeting "non-commercial expenses". Khashoggi acknowledges that most governments have banned commissions, but is quick to add that "even where there is an agreement between the Government and the seller, there is no guarantee that no one will make money on it".

Europe has been the major defence supplier to India in the last seven years, Khashoggi observes. In the decade 1976-'86, India bought defence equipment worth over Rs 18,000 crore. What is striking is that close to half of the total amount—Rs 8,000 crore—was for deals signed between '84 and '86. And most of the purchases were from Sweden, France, UK and West Germany. About 180 minor and major defence contracts were concluded in the last two years alone.

Though most of the deals signed by the Indian Government have been made directly with the suppliers, there are indications that agents have been directly or indirectly involved in most of them. The number of agents of arms companies in India shot up from 46 in '80 to over 500 in '86 and just about every defence firm in the West is now represented here.

Taking note of this, Khashoggi adds: "Heads of state like Reagan, Thatcher and Mitterrand are the biggest arms peddlers on behalf of their countries. They use diplomatic channels to influence deals. Still, officials down the line make money because they are the ones who have to prepare the files and release the payments."

—PRABHU CHAWLA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BOFORS

"No bribes were paid"

THE Bofors Company, a ragged ordnance works, acquired by Alfred Nobel in 1894 for a song, is today among the world's most formidable manufacturers of defence equipment. It gained international prestige in 1936 when it unveiled the 40 mm Bofors anti-aircraft gun. Last year was the 50th anniversary of the 40 mm Bofors, whose silhouette and appearance have become familiar to generations of soldiers, sailors and airmen the world over. The 40 mm—known simply as "the Bofors gun", is today one of the most famous and most widely used of all artillery pieces designed and produced during the 20th century. During the mid-60s, India signed an agreement for licence production with Bofors for the 40 mm gun and still manufactures them.

Today, the Bofors weapons repertoire has a striking range of systems and ammunition. The company employs 5,600 people and is part of the Nobel Industries Conglomerate, 75 per cent of whose activity is chemicals, the remaining 25 per cent being termed "hi-tech", which is Bofors.

Company officials, with some reluctance, agreed to meet INDIA TODAY*'s London Correspondent* RAMESH CHANDRAN for an exclusive interview at its Karlskoga headquarters. The Bofors' official who explained the company's position was Bertil Bredin, vice-president of the company and project coordinator for field artillery, who dealt with the Indian contract. Excerpts:

Q. Were bribes or commissions paid to an Indian or Indian sources in a Swiss bank for the 155 mm artillery deal?

A. Our official position has been made clear. A denial has been issued by our communications chief that no such bribes or commissions have been paid.

Q. But the National Swedish Radio insists they have evidence.

A. I cannot tell you if they have this evidence or not. If they do have this evidence, why don't they produce it?

Q. And there will be more revelations in the future.

A. Let us then wait for them. As far as the allegations concerning the Indian contract is concerned, the company has been requested to provide clarifications to the Swedish Government. And I presume these will be offered as soon as possible.

Q. Is there a "deep throat" in the company?

A. I don't know. But we have more than 5,000 employees.

"There were no contacts with the Congress Party. We dealt with personnel from the Defence Ministry."

Q. How does it feel to have one of your employees leaking information about the company?

A. Nothing. I don't even know if such a source exists.

Q. You were part of the negotiating team which visited India several times. Is Win Chadha the agent the Swedish Radio is referring to?

A. I have absolutely no idea.

Q. But you surely know Chadha? He was your agent.

A. I have met Chadha. He was our agent until the Indian Government ordered, in 1985, that no middlemen should be involved in defence contracts. He then became our consultant.

Q. Was Chadha useful in Delhi—in gaining access to government sources, or even the Congress Party?

A. I do not think Chadha was useful on those lines. I do not even think he had such access. After the government order, he was not even allowed to visit these ministries. We did not use him for political contacts.

Q. Then why did you employ him?

A. Well, you always need someone for local support—acquiring telephones, arranging cars, running an office.

Q. Obviously, he has to be paid for services rendered. Where was he paid?

Bredin (left) and company headquarters: eye of the storm

A. I have no information about the financial aspects or where he was paid.

Q. Who were the other Indian sources or agents you dealt with?

A. I can't recall anyone else.

Q. How about the Hindujas? The Dagens Nyheter stated that they had contacts with Bofors.

A. I have not heard of the Hindujas being involved in the Indian deal.

Q. You don't think the Hindujas could have been possible middlemen in fixing this contract?

A. I don't think so.

Q. Why not? They have considerable influence and financial clout.

A. I cannot say anything about this. I have not heard about the Hindujas being involved in this contract. I have not met them at any stage of the negotiations.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Q. Who were the other Indian officials who were part of the negotiating team? Did you meet anyone from the Congress Party?

A. No. There were never any contacts with the Congress Party. We dealt with ministry officials and military personnel from the Ministry of Defence.

Q. Which Indian officials?

A. I am not sure if I should mention any names. But officials like Defence Secretary Bhatnagar, who signed the contract and Finance Secretary P.P. Jain, who signed the licence contract.

Q. We have heard that the first delivery of 60 guns was made in November last year. Have other deliveries been on schedule?

A. We are not authorised to make any mention of numbers or dates relating to deliveries. But deliveries have been on time and, in fact, there have been monthly deliveries.

Q. Can you explain about the financial deal last year.

A. Yes. India has paid 20 per cent of the down payment of the 8.4 billion kronor (Rs 1,705 crore) order in June 1986. The credit agreement between the Indian Government and the Swedish Export Credit Institution gives India credit on the rest of the amount. What happens then is that we supply the order to get paid by Swedish banks.

Q. What is the interest charged on this?

A. I don't have the precise figure, but it is very low. The payment schedule for India runs approximately to 20 years.

Q. There have been reports of problems concerning the 155 mm's range. Has this 24-km range been achieved?

A. I don't know how this rumour cropped up. We have three different grenades for the three ranges—18 km for the short range, 24 km for the standard range and 30 km plus for the long range. There have been no problems with the standard range in India.

Q. Did the Indian Army require the long-range version too?

A. The differences are essentially in the ammunition which operates more like a rocket in the long range. India has been interested in both versions. It depends on what sort of terrain you want to use it.

Q. The licence production appears to be going ahead. How about the self-propelled version?

A. Well, I don't know if we are interested in the vehicles. But we certainly hope when this order is placed, our guns and ammunition would be used.

Q. The Bofors gun was locked in fierce competition with the French Giat 155 mm gun. There were many experts who were of the opinion that the French gun was capable of superior performance and it was even preferred by NATO. What then swung this deal in Bofors' favour?

A. I don't think any other NATO country has opted for the French gun, other than France itself. The Bofors gun is reputed for its all-round performance, its easy handling and the range of ammunition. Our overall package, including financing, was most attractive. There were no other reasons for India to have opted for it. It is simply the best gun of its kind.

Q. Is Bofors happy at the way things have worked out for itself—at least until this current controversy?

A. Of course. We have had long years of cooperation with India and I think the Indian Army is most satisfied with the product.

over possible joint aircraft development for Hindustan Aeronautics Limited's LCA (Light Combat Aircraft) project, for the Indian Air Force. Discussions centred on the development of the French Rafale B high-performance fighter.

► The biggest deal currently being negotiated is the army's requirement for an all-weather, low-level, air defence gun which has been hanging fire since 1980. Initially, the leading contender was the Swiss Oerlikon ADS, thought to be the best. Trials began in '80, but a Greek offer delayed a decision, and then Oerlikon reduced its price two years ago. Now, seven years after the Indian Army requested for an air defence system, it has still to get it, despite three army chiefs having stressed the urgency of its acquisition.

The Government, fortunately, cannot be criticised for the Bofors purchase itself. The weapon system is considered one of the best available, though the French TR version is a later model and compares favourably with the FH-77B. But its explosive potential in the current political context is considerable. The Government has tried to appear open-minded on the issue and claimed that it has nothing to hide. But its current lack of credibility has neutralised that effort. Nor is it likely that the full facts of the Bofors pay-offs will ever come to light. Even if the Swedish radio station reveals the Swiss account numbers it claims to have, the process of investigation could be tied up in legal knots for years, owing to strict Swiss banking laws.

"Banks are very tight about secrecy, and leaking of information is a criminal offence," confirms Jean Cuendet, Swiss ambassador to India. But he adds: "Exceptions can be made, if the Government of India follows the procedure prescribed." According to him, the Indian Government must first launch criminal prosecutions against the individual and then file an application in a Swiss court. If the charges are recognised as a criminal offence under Swiss law, the court can then decree that the particular bank involved can reveal the account-holder and his assets.

But even that is not as easy as it appears. While the Swiss courts consider drug-trafficking, kidnapping, ransom money and embezzlement enough ground to order banks to break their code of secrecy, it does not, for instance,

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PARLIAMENT

Bumbling Through

IF the Rajiv Gandhi Government has acquired a reputation for hamming through one crisis after the other, its performance in crucial debates in Parliament last month did little to improve its public standing. There were contradictions in ministerial pronouncements, differences within the Cabinet were publicly aired, errors admitted on the date and time when files were sent, statements and counter-statements, blunders in strategy, and the strange sight of the treasury benches launching attacks on their own V.P. Singh. If the Government still did not come to grief, it was because the Opposition put up a dismal show.

Fairfax: informer, domestic servant or authorised agent?

"Somnath Chatterjee has asked what are Fairfax's credentials. These questions are asked when we keep someone as a servant in the house. But we haven't retained Fairfax even as a domestic servant."

BRAHM DUTT, minister of state for finance
Lok Sabha, March 31

"The Directorate of Enforcement has authorised the Fairfax Group to collect information in regard to certain FERA violations."

BRAHM DUTT, minister of state for finance
Rajya Sabha, April 15

The ball was set rolling with the debate on Fairfax, on March 31, in the Lok Sabha. Virtually every Congress(I) speaker questioned the wisdom of what the Government and V.P. Singh (as finance minister) had done. Dinesh Singh said that Fairfax might provide "a set of disinformation", and P.R. Kumaramangalam said: "Fairfax is known to be connected with international intelligence agencies."

It was left to Minister of State for Finance Brahm Dutt, to clear V.P. Singh by saying: "The manner in which the former finance minister gave permission to Fairfax to investigate was perfectly in order, there is no problem with that." But then what were the Congress(I) MPs going on about, especially since they had been fully briefed before the debate? And couldn't the matter have been defused at the start by saying that an agency had been engaged, others had been similarly engaged in the past, and the Government would act on the information provided?

If that was an opportunity lost, Brahm Dutt was himself in some trouble with contradictory statements in the two Houses. In the Lok Sabha, he said that Fairfax had practically no locus standi: "Somnath Chatterjee has asked what are Fairfax's credentials, what are its traditions, what is its experience. These questions are asked when we want to keep someone as a servant in the house. But we haven't retained Fairfax even as a domestic servant. We don't ask such questions of any informer. You give information, we pay you."

But two weeks later, speaking in the Rajya Sabha, Brahm Dutt had a slightly different tune: "The Directorate of Enforcement had authorised the Fairfax Group Inc of USA to collect information in regard to investigation of certain cases of violations of the Foreign Exchange Regulations Act." Informers obviously do not need authorisation. So what really was Fairfax's status: informer, domestic servant or authorised agent?

There was one other notable sally. V.P. Singh said that on the question of whether he had consulted the prime minister on Fairfax, he would need the prime minister's permission to reply. The reply never came. Why?

When it came to the debate on the inquiry that Singh ordered into the submarine deal, the treasury benches were once again critical of V.P. Singh. Darbara Singh asked in the Rajya Sabha: "Was it not undue haste to order an open inquiry on the basis of...scanty information? Did you not suspect the information to be a part of a disinformation campaign to launch another destabilisation offensive? (Was it not) intended to expose the entire defence secrets and demoralise the defence forces...to undermine the security of India?"

Others asked why the Cabinet and the prime minister had not been consulted. Once again, despite getting so much flak, V.P. Singh, it seemed, was in the clear. As Minister of State for Defence Arun Singh said: "The then raksha mantri had every right to order (the probe), which he did....The procedures adopted in so far as the inquiry is concerned are in conformity with the rules of business of the Government."

Why did V.P. Singh resign?

"The then raksha mantri had every right to order the probe....The procedures he adopted conform to the Government's rules of business."

ARUN SINGH, minister of state for defence
Rajya Sabha, April 20

"Yes, we have some differences whether the probe should have been made public, but that is not the sort of difference on which I would dismiss a minister."

RAJIV GANDHI, prime minister
Rajya Sabha April 20

"The telex tip-off came from a foreign government. And until such time as the foreign government concurs in the release of that information, it is unethical to make it public."

ARUN SINGH, minister of state for defence
Rajya Sabha, April 20

V.P. Singh told confidants that he had maintained the secrecy of the information as he had not disclosed the country and the equipment involved, nor the date of the contract.

What then was the fuss all about? For hadn't Singh been grilled in the Cabinet Committee on Political Affairs, in the full Cabinet itself, and in the Central Hall of Parliament? The answer came from the prime minister himself. Singh had made the inquiry public knowledge. But even Rajiv said that this was not a serious matter: "Yes, we have some differences whether it should have been made public or it should not have been made public, but that is not the sort of difference on which I would dismiss a minister." Yet Singh resigned.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

What was wrong in publicising the inquiry? The painstaking Arun Singh explained: "It (the telex tip-off) has originated from a foreign government. And until such time as the foreign government concurs in the release of that information publicly, it is totally unethical to (make it public). Not only is it unethical, but it would severely imperil the release of any information of a confidential nature by any foreign government to this country."

V.P. Singh did not respond to this in Parliament, but is believed to have told confidants that he had maintained the secrecy of the information as he had not disclosed the country and the equipment involved, nor the year of the contract.

Jaswant Singh of the BJP also caught the Government flat-footed when he asked the simple question in the Rajya Sabha as to what the Government had done after it got the telex on February 25. "From the original receipt of the telex of February 25 to April 9, in 45 days...did the Government ask the mission (which sent the telex tip-off) to obtain all details? It was incumbent on the Government by a return telex to ask for more details."

Arun Singh's unflattering answer: "I do not have an answer to this."

But V.P. Singh himself did not seem to be fully forthcoming on the movement of the file. The point became relevant following charges that he had carefully timed the announcement of the probe with a political objective. In explanation, Singh told Parliament that the defence secretary's draft letter to the finance secretary came to him for his approval on March 25 and that "I approved the draft in toto as it was only a replica of my orders". That seemed to imply immediate approval. Yet Arun Singh had told the House that the draft was approved only on April 9—15 days later. But Singh in turn has insisted that this is an irrelevant issue ("such things can be found with any file") and that the point to note is the date on which he ordered the inquiry (March 11—before the Fairfax Commission on April 4).

The Government did not appear in a very good light on other matters of detail either. The prime minister first declared in Parliament that he had got the defence probe file only at 9 p.m. on April 9 (after the press note on the subject had been issued), then admitted what V.P. Singh had declared: that it had been sent to him at 2 p.m. (before the press note). But then he added that the file had been sent in a cover that was not marked 'secret', so that it was opened by a chaprasi and eventually put before him only the next morning. None of this invited confidence in the Government.

Finally, there was the question of the Government's attitude to the various controversies. On Fairfax, its attempts to pillory V.P. Singh led to a commission of inquiry that might yet prove embarrassing for the Government. By the time of the Bofors affair, the Government had learnt at least one lesson: not to postpone a Parliament debate, indeed to be done with it quickly. There was also a new openness, with the prime minister saying: "Give us the evidence, and we will produce the proof." But no probe was ordered with the promptness that V.P. Singh showed in the earlier case.

Also, Rajiv spoiled his copy-book by declaring one day (at an army commanders' conference) that Sweden had confirmed to him that there were no middlemen and no payments to Swiss banks, then reiterating in Parliament the next day that, "so far, we have got no specific information from the Swedish Government. We must give them a chance to give us an answer".

The moot point was: how many chances did the Government want to give convincing answers?—T.N. NINAN Bofors: confirmed or not?

"Sweden had confirmed that there were no middlemen and no money was paid in Swiss banks."

Defence Ministry press note on Rajiv Gandhi's speech to army commanders, April 27

"I would like to reiterate that so far, we have got no specific information from the Swedish Government. We must give them a chance to give us an answer."

RAJIV GANDHI, prime minister Rajya Sabha, April 28

recognise the violation of FERA as an offence. And what queers the pitch in the Indian defence deals is that prosecution would have to be launched on the basis of bribery charges—something the Swiss courts have no precedence of in decreeing a break in secrecy.

In any event, Indian investigators would have to first find out who received the bribes and who paid them—something that is not going to be easy without concrete evidence. If the Swedish probe unearths any proof of illegal payments, the sums involved will be crucial. A smallish figure (and Rs 6.6 crore is less than half of 1 per cent of the total sum involved) could mean nothing more than payment to an agent and could be explained away. Something bigger, say 5 per cent or more, would almost certainly mean kickbacks to people in the Indian Government, or their agents. Of course, the amounts would be irrelevant, if the Swedish probe unearths the names behind the Swiss bank accounts.

In that sense, the Bofors claim of its field gun being a highly effective long-range weapon is an ironic truth. The initial trigger was pulled in Stockholm. And with the Government having clamped a tight lid on the issue as far as any revelations from Indian sources are concerned, the next explosion in the series can only emanate from Sweden.

And the potential implications of any further disclosures that directly indict the Rajiv Gandhi Government is enormous. Apart from the loss of its public image, it will weaken the Government even more and put it squarely on the defensive. It will also give an additional lever to the President who seems determined to hit back at Rajiv for what he sees as deliberate humiliation of himself and his office. It will galvanise an opposition already scenting blood, and cause the Government to lose whatever initiative it has left.

In fact, the events of the last few weeks have already entangled the Government in a restrictive web, blunted its developmental thrust and slowed down the workings of the bureaucracy. It will leave the Government with less time for external issues, causing perhaps irreparable harm to its diplomatic efforts. The ruling party has already lost the high ground. And the ground it now occupies is a minefield of dangerous uncertainty.

—DILIP BOBB with RAMINDAR SINGH in New Delhi and RAMESH CHANDRAN in Stockholm

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CONGRESS(I) Paranoia in th

LAST fortnight, as hostile pressure mounted on the prime minister and his party, in Parliament and across the country, the nation watched the drama unfold in the capital with baited breath. The ferocity with which the defence scandals exploded in the press and in Parliament—where opposition members, demanding to know the truth, staged several walkouts—caused observers to wonder whether the crisis, in the end, would bring down the Government. In the aftermath of V.P. Singh's resignation, the capital was bristling with speculation about a major fissure within the ruling party, and equally intense conjecture focused on possible moves from Rashtrapati Bhawan to call the Government to account. Clearly, the focus had shifted to the condition of the ruling party, its leader, and their response to the crisis. In an effort to gauge the mood of the Congress(I) nationwide, and to examine what changes in strategy were occurring within the high command and within the prime minister's advisory set-up, Features Editor INDERJIT BADHWAR, assisted by bureau reports from Lucknow, Patna, Bhopal, Madras, Trivandrum, Bombay and Calcutta, talked to key players in the scenario. A report:

TO MANY veteran Congressmen, the mood within the ruling party, last fortnight, was reminiscent of the surcharged political atmosphere that followed the Allahabad High Court judgement against Indira Gandhi in 1974. A prime minister weakened by a debilitating barrage of public attacks on his government and leadership. The party trying to counter-punch its way out, with roundhouse lefts at the demons of "right reaction" and destabilising agents of "neo-imperialism". Partymen stunned, insecure, uneasy, and paranoiac, and yet responding, as they did during the pre-Emergency period, to calls for rallies at the grassroots, in order to demonstrate total solidarity and support for their beleaguered chief.

This time, the overriding compulsion behind this gung-ho rally around the Congress(I) flag campaign—in which party workers, MLAs and MPs from all over the country attended lunches, tea parties, and dinners to listen to pep talks from Rajiv and high command politicos—was the palpable fear among senior Congressmen and advisers in the Prime Minister's Secretariat, that President Zail Singh was getting ready to topple the Government on the grounds that it had failed to discharge its constitutional responsibilities. As a veteran Congress(I) leader admitted: "The real fear is the President. These solidarity resolutions are not because we sense any internal revolt, but because a message has to be sent to Zail Singh that if the party is solid, he cannot destabilise it."

There was no evidence that Zail Singh's relations with the prime minister, notwithstanding desperate attempts by Rajiv to patch things up, have improved. Near panic broke out among Congress(I) members in Parliament's central hall on April 20, when they heard that former Congress(I) working president Kamalapati Tripathi had written a letter to the President, urging him to ignore "mischievous suggestions", such as dismissing the prime minister or dissolving Parliament. Earlier, the Government had expressed the same fear, but in a more guarded vein. When CPI(M) MP Somnath Chatterji raised questions about the defence scandals in Parliament, H.K.L. Bhagat, parliamentary affairs minister, rose to defend the Government by stating that there appeared to be a conspiracy on for a constitutional coup. Even the treasury benches were stunned at this because, by precedent, ministers only intervene in debates and do not defend the Government without prior notification from the speaker.

The scenarios, about how the President would act, being conjured up within high command circles were endless. Under one, the President would simply recommend the dismissal of the Government, on grounds of constitutional improprieties. Under another, he would reque

the prime mi
rarily, in ord independent fence deals, a interim leade chaotic game word was also been seeking stitutional ex
But Tripa edged sword.
macy to the p his intentions
it also demons war-horse, rem working prest loggerheads w suddenly bou the "old guar and security c
It also sign political equat
Congress(I) s
about the th

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

in the Party

Illustration by AJIT NINAN

With the prime minister weakened by a debilitating barrage of public attacks on his leadership, the partymen are stunned and paranoid, but yet are responding to calls to demonstrate their solidarity.

the prime minister to step down voluntarily, in order to subject himself to an independent inquiry regarding the defence deals, and ask the party to elect an interim leader. And in the midst of these chaotic game plans, real or imaginary, the word was also out that the President had been seeking the advice of several constitutional experts on this subject.

But Tripathi's letter was a double-edged sword. While giving public legitimacy to the powers of the President, and his intentions to dismiss the Government, it also demonstrated that the old Congress war-horse, removed in ignominy from his working president post by Rajiv and at loggerheads with the prime minister, had suddenly bounced back as a member of the "old guard", battling for the health and security of the party.

It also signalled major changes in the political equations around Rajiv. Several Congress(I) stalwarts, while nervous about the threat to the party and its image, were privately gloating over Rajiv's discomfiture. "He is finally coming around to all the people who couldn't get to within five miles of him," said one Uttar Pradesh MLA, who suddenly got an appointment with the prime minister for which he had waited for two years. Added an MP: "Rajiv is like a weakened emperor, and nothing can be better for the old-line power-brokers who were waiting for their chance to control him." One MP even pulled out a cover story that had appeared last year in the Time magazine, entitled: "The Political Education of Rajiv Gandhi." Waving it, he said: "The first two years as prime minister were like the fresher's year in college, when you just hang around enjoying yourself with your pals. Now he has to go through his political graduation and take on some serious political advisers."

There is little doubt that during this crisis, party stalwarts have deluged Rajiv with criticism about the "pals" he has been relying on for advice, and who they believe are political novices. Among those frequently mentioned in this regard are Captain Satish Sharma, Amitabh Bachchan, Mani Shanker Aiyar, and a host of his private circle of friends. Sources say the atmosphere of uncertainty within the party stems in part from the "activities of some of the prime minister's aides, and from his total inaccessibility." Any leader, said one MP who is an ardent Rajiv supporter, differentiates between friends and political advisers. "But here the line of demarcation was blurred. Around any leader, there are friends, sycophants and dissidents. But in the atmosphere that prevailed in the Prime Minister's Secretariat, sycophants were treated as friends, friends as dissidents, and dissidents as enemies," he said.

In the process of opening up and becoming more accessible, Rajiv is now surrounded by a new set of political power-brokers. The caucus to whom he has begun to look for help in mending party fences, consists of Shiv Shankar, M.L. Fotedar, Buta Singh, H.K.L. Bhagat, Sheila Dixit, and Nawal Kishore Sharma. And the one person from within his own secretariat on whom the prime minister has relied most heavily on advice throughout this crisis—and who has grown in importance because of his ability to enunciate clear ideological lines and strategies in crisis management—is Gopi Arora, special secretary to the prime minister. Even though he is a bureaucrat, Arora is credited with an uncanny ability to relate to "old guard" Congress(I) politicians, especially those with leftist views. Some of Arora's thinking was reflected in the prime minister's speech to the Congress Parliamentary Party following the state election debacles, as well as in the populist, left-leaning Congress Working Committee (CWC) resolution following the Bofors' revelations.

The new political caucus now around the prime minister, moreover, has been responsible for most of the parliamentary strategy, the party campaign against V.P. Singh, as well as the nationwide party campaign to rally behind Rajiv. But there is still considerable resentment among the younger MPs in the party. They feel that even with the political sidelining of "friends" and the emergence of the new caucus, Rajiv is replacing one set of advisers with another which is basically associated with old-style manipulations and wheeling and dealing. In the bargain, he is ignoring younger people, who also have political experience.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

In the process of opening up and becoming more accessible, Rajiv is now surrounded by a new set of political advisors.

Gopi Arora

M.L. Fotedar

Sheila Dikshit

Palace politics apart, within the party at least, Rajiv, notwithstanding his government's considerably eroded credibility and public image, seemed safe for the moment. Any smoke signals of revolt were quickly snuffed out by party leaders at the Central, state, and district levels. They started with the marathon April 18 CWC meeting, which was attended by more than 110 Congress(I) leaders, following the defence deals revelations. And then they began fanning out across the country, in loyaler-than-thou demonstrations, and spreading the shop-worn word among the rank and file, that the party was the target of a diabolical conspiracy. The serpent of the piece was cited, inevitably, as western imperialist forces and their Indian agents, who are out to destabilise a legitimately elected government that has pursued an independent foreign policy.

Whether or not the framers of the CWC resolution, let alone Rajiv, believed in the rhetoric or the anachronistic shibboleths—after all, the party and its programmes had come a long way since the days of influential leftists like Krishna Kant, Mohan Dharia, D.P. Dhar, and Mohan Kumaramangalam and their "socialist thinking"—did not matter. What counted was, the importance of having a public relations handle with which to spoon-feed a bewildered public, which having given its overwhelming mandate to the ruling party only two short years ago was now, as several opinion polls showed, mistrustful and ready to believe the worst. And by taking an ostensibly leftward lurch, it was also a time-tested device of gaining the support of the CPI and CPI(M), for the party and the prime minister.

The events that led to the crisis—the leak of the President's March 9 letter to the press, the CBI raid on the Indian Express guest-house, the Fairfax probe, the arming of Pakistan by the US, the increase in terrorist activities in Punjab, the announcement of the defence probe and, overnight, the Swedish radio report on the Bofors deal—were all clubbed together as evidence, to provide perfect grist for the conspiracy mill. It is this scenario, spelled out in painstaking detail, that is now being taken to every block and district by Congress workers and elected officials. Participating in the propaganda effort will be the Youth Congress(I) and the Seva Dal, both of which have already organised several rallies. And during these meetings, leaders have been instructed to "talk freely about Vishwanath Pratap Singh". The line to be taken on V.P. Singh is that he was an ambitious politician who betrayed the faith placed in him by the prime minister, and who played into the hands of destabilising elements, by forcing the arms deal debate.

As Congress(I) General Secretary Nawal Kishore Sharma put it: "When the polity weakens, the Congress is the only unifying force. If Rajiv is attacked, then the Congress is attacked, and the stability of the country is attacked." He said that the high command has now called on all the pradesh and district committees to organise several hundred conventions that will be attended by state and Central leaders, including the prime minister. Added Anand Sharma, Youth Congress(I) president: "Rajiv is the standard-bearer of the party and we won't allow him to be pulled down." And Kamal Nath, the brash, brusque MP from Madhya Pradesh said: "Whenever a challenge is thrown at the Congress, we are a united edifice. Congress leaders must realise that the relations between the prime minister and the party at the block and district levels cannot be shaken by the manipulation of those at any tier in between."

This drumbeat of solidarity found an echo in most states, except for Uttar Pradesh, where there seemed to be scattered signs of dissidence (see accompanying story). In West Bengal, Congress leaders, even after their debacle

Party stalwarts have deluged Rajiv with criticism about the "pals" he has been relying on for advice, and who they believe are political novices.

Satish Sharma

Amitabh Bachchan

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Shiv Shankar

Buta Singh

H.K.L. Bhagat

The new advisors are responsible for the parliamentary strategy and the party campaign to rally behind Rajiv.

were expressing solidarity with Rajiv Gandhi. Youth Congress(I) executive member Syed Shahid Imam, while admitting that "the state level party is a sick organisation because of the present leadership", stated emphatically that "there is no question of looking for an alternative from even within the party, as long as Rajiv is there." In Kerala, partymen seemed unfazed about Fairfax, Bofors, or V.P. Singh. Former chief minister Karunakaran said: "What V.P. Singh did was damaging to the party. There is only one leader, and that is Rajiv."

In Orissa, Fairfax and Rajiv are not so much the issue as the public's near-total alienation from the state Congress party, headed by J.B. Patnaik. The state leadership has lost so much of its credibility because of local scandals and corruption, that its leaders are finding it hard to even gather people for public rallies, leave alone convince them of well-laid "designs" by the Opposition and foreign powers, to destabilise the Rajiv Government. In Bihar, where there is a running feud between Chief Minister Bindeshwari Dubey and dissident Congress leader Jagannath Mishra, both factions have begun "mass awakening" programmes. But Mishra's supporters—now being actively courted by the high command—have begun to take the lead.

Most Maharashtra Congressmen were blaming the party's present problems on errant newspaper reporting. And here too, the conspiracy theory propagated by the CWC meeting, seems to have taken root. As B.A. Desai, the Congress(I) MLA from Bombay put it: "So far as the party is concerned, it is united solidly behind the prime minister. The whole hullabaloo in Delhi is a result of the recognition by certain world powers of the major role India is playing in international affairs."

In Madhya Pradesh, Chief Minister Motilal Vora emphasised: "All corruption charges have been emphatically denied. I don't feel that our credibility has gone down. Party workers are united to face the challenge." Said Anasuya Uike, MLA, bluntly: "It is clear that opposition parties and certain foreign powers are not too pleased with the clean image of Rajivji." The mood in Tamil Nadu, appeared to be one of disillusionment with the Mr Clean image of Rajiv. While several party luminaries admitted privately that the party had lost considerable ground in the wake of corruption charges, there was no evidence of any revolt against the leadership.

But all these emphatic pronouncements typify what is known as "Congress culture". It is not as if the rank and file Congressman is not worried. He is. And he more than readily admits, privately, that the leadership has been tainted, and that there is corruption at the top. But he is not about to revolt. There are several reasons for this. First, most Congressmen are cautious; they are not adventurous politicians. They stick to what is known as long as they can. And the more they come under attack, the more they crawl for safety, under the security blanket of their leader. It was revealing that most people interviewed, said

SIDDHANT PANDAR

CWC meeting: loyalist rhetoric

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PRESIDENT-PM

Dismissal Steps

AT a recent meeting between Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi and President Zail Singh—one of several fence-mending exercises initiated by Rajiv—the prime minister sought to bring up the point that under the Constitution he had the right to advise the President on what kind of government information should be made available to Rashtrapati Bhawan. The President replied cryptically, that under the Constitution he had the right not only to receive any information but also the right to dismiss the prime minister. Zail Singh then went on to say that he would not take such a step—yet.

But during the last few weeks, the President has received advice that if the prime minister's office is not responsive to demands for an investigation of charges of corruption in high places—especially in the light of the Bofors scandal—a process may have to be started to remove the prime minister. According to one scenario, the President is being advised to rely on the precedent set by the Supreme Court judgement in the Antulay case. Even though Antulay, the former Maharashtra chief minister, resigned under pressure, a writ had been filed with the Supreme Court to determine whether a governor could remove a chief minister who was aiding and abetting a cover-up of crimes in high-places.

The Supreme Court ruled that the governor is, indeed, the "appointing authority" and in matters such as the removal of the chief executive on corruption charges, he is not bound by the advice of the chief minister. Even though the governor is bound to act on the advice of the chief minister in all matters, it is hardly possible that a chief minister would advise the governor that he be removed. In these matters, therefore, the governor, the Court ruled, is not bound by the advice of the chief minister, and can take action against him under the Prevention of Corruption Act of 1947.

The same applies to the relationship between the prime minister and President. Rashtrapati Bhawan has been advised that the prime minister can be removed for the following reasons:

► Substantial charges of corruption are made against the prime minister and officials and politicians close to him. This holds even if party members, either out of fear of the anti-defection bill, or threats or bullying, stick by their leader, notwithstanding an erosion of the party's credibility and public mandate.

► The prime minister refuses to order a criminal investigation into the corruption charges, and the various law enforcement agencies choose to do nothing. So, opposition parties and public interest litigation groups, under the anti-corruption act, can lodge a complaint with a magistrate stating that the ruling party leadership and the bureaucracy have refused to institute any corrective mechanism aimed at investigating the corruption scandals.

► But under the anti-corruption act, the complainant's petition to the magistrate will only be admissible and an order for investigation given after the President as "appointing authority" gives his concurrence. And so the petition must be examined by the President.

The President will then seek to determine whether or not there is a prima facie case. And in order to do this he will demand from the Government every piece of information concerning the case.

► If the Government stonewalls or refuses to participate in the investigation at that stage, the prime minister, on the grounds that he is abetting a crime, can be removed by the President (the "appointing authority"). He has this authority because in an extreme case, the President is the repository of the power of the people. The prime minister, under the "doctrine of mandate" raised by Dr Rajendra Prasad in several exchanges with Jawaharlal Nehru, must seek a fresh mandate from the public in case the original mandate given by the people has for some reason evaporated.

The removal of the prime minister by the President in such cases is not to be treated as a guilty sentence for the prime minister but simply as a corrective mechanism in which he will have to face the real sovereigns—the people.

A new prime minister, elected in the interim period, will either have to demonstrate a majority or seek a fresh election. If the dismissed prime minister is returned to power—the people of the country having spoken their final word—then the President, even as the "appointing authority" cannot take any action for a second time.

T.S. ASHOK

Rajiv and Zail: constitutional crisis

However, in spite of the palpable apprehensions in ruling party circles that the President might remove Rajiv Gandhi, constitutional experts and lawyers think otherwise. Says R.C.S. Sarkar, retired law secretary and a constitutional expert: "Even if charges of corruption are held to be true against the prime minister, the President cannot remove him as long as he enjoys the confidence of the House of People."

There are others who say that the President has little tangible option left after removing the prime minister. P.G. Krishnan, professor of law in Delhi University commented: "In case the President dissolves the Parliament, and calls for fresh elections and if the ruling party wins again, it will put the position of the President in a precarious spot and will seriously undermine his position. Even an interim government, as the situation stands today, will be hard to form."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Some constitutional experts, however, point out that because of the lack of any express provisions or precedents in our constitutional history on the question of removal, one has to fall back upon British conventions. One of these conventions clearly states that the head of state cannot remove the prime minister until he "subverts the democratic basis of the Constitution". Soli Sorabjee, constitutional expert, who subscribes to this view, said: "Such a case of subversion cannot be based on allegations by politicians but incorporates cases like a law passed by the Government to stop the system of elections or turn India into a theocratic state."

Another major bone of contention highlighted by lawyers is Article 75(2). This article states that "the ministers shall hold office during the pleasure of the President". The clause, if read in isolation, means that the President can remove the prime minister by simply withholding his pleasure, a fact which has been pointed out by many as a basis for removing the prime minister.

But the exercise of the pleasure doctrine is clearly restricted by two other articles. The Constitution in Article 74(1) clearly states that "there shall be a council of ministers with the prime minister as the head to aid and advise the President who shall, in the exercise of his functions, act in accordance with such advice". And Article 75(3) points out that the council of ministers shall be collectively responsible to the house of the people. Delhi lawyer Arun Jaitley argues by saying, "The articles put together make it clear that the President cannot remove the prime minister until an except a no confidence motion against the Government is passed successfully in Parliament."

Consequently, while expert opinion dismisses the apprehensions of a large section of the members of the Congress(I), sources close to the President make a strong case for Rajiv's removal under the Constitution. If dismissal eventually becomes a reality, the country will surely be plunged into its most severe crisis yet.

—INDERJIT BADHWAR and SURAJEET DAS GUPTA openly that a loss in Haryana would not affect the solidarity of the party. In fact, that would be even more cause to hang on to the security blanket. As G. Karthikeyan, Kerala state general secretary put it: "Even if we lose Haryana, it does not make a difference. In 1967, Mrs Gandhi lost almost 13 states, but what a comeback she made!"

Secondly, there is in fact, no alternative force within the party to which dissidents can flock. Even V.P. Singh has not emerged as one yet. And Congressmen are not willing to venture forth in a vacuum. In this atmosphere of accusations and counter-accusations within the party, there is confusion about who represents whom, and a real fear is that the CBI is being used as an organisation to spy on Congressmen suspected of dissident activity. As one Uttar Pradesh MP noted: "V.P. Singh may be responsible for some of this mood. He has lost respect. Instead of keeping silent after he resigned, he began to shout and scream about his loyalty to the prime minister. Most MPs feel that if this man, who had the biggest stake of all, did not stick his neck out, then why should they stick their necks out."

But the most important stick used by the high command to keep Congressmen in line so far, has been the threat from the Prime Minister's Secretariat of dissolving Parliament and calling a mid-term election, if any "alternative" or dissident is seen receiving open support from partymen, against the prime minister. A mid-term poll is the most traumatic event in the life of politicians. As one high command member explained: "First they have to raise funds in a short period. But at least half of them know they won't get Congress tickets if this happens. And of those who get tickets, half are not sure they will win." So the safest bet is to sit it out for the remaining two-and-a-half years, "rather than get involved in the power games being played at the top".

Congressmen say privately that the party may not weaken in terms of numbers, but it has weakened because of the erosion of moral authority at the Centre. What sustains a government, ultimately, is the goodwill of the people. And it is this goodwill that is rapidly evaporating. If there is a lesson to be learnt from this, it is simply, that a numerical party majority is not sufficient to run an effective and smooth government. What is required is not a paranoid CWC resolution and hasty changes at the top, but rather, an assertion of authority, credibility and recognisable policies. The alternative is drift and dissension.

V.P. SINGH

Coming Home

A section of Congressmen, including ministers and MLAs, have started the spadework to bring the former Union minister Vishwanath Pratap Singh back home and address a series of public meetings in different parts of the state. These supporters of Singh are desperate to get him back in action in a bid to nullify the pressure built up against them by the Uttar Pradesh leadership ever since Singh quit as defence minister. These meetings will be held in the second week of May and will be patterned on Singh's public appearances in the western districts of the state after he resigned as the chief minister of Uttar Pradesh in April 1983.

Bir Bahadur: battling V.P. Singh

"Don't call it a revolt. It is perhaps the only alternative if Vishwanath Pratap Singh and his followers have to survive in politics," says a minister who prefers anonymity. According to him, Singh has also given his consent for he wants to "clarify the doubts which have been raised against him, Rajiv Gandhi and the Congress(I) in the people's mind". That the Congress(I) high command is aware of Singh's plan is evident from the qualms which the state leaders, particularly Chief Minister Bir Bahadur Singh, a traditional rival of V.P. Singh, is having these days. Slowly, the venue of the most crucial political battle within the Congress(I) is now shifting from Delhi to Lucknow.

Bir Bahadur Singh's full-time assign-

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

S. PREMI

Tripathi with Singh: rallying around

Singh's supporters are desperate to get him back in action in a bid to nullify the pressure built up against them by the state leadership.

ment these days is V.P. Singh. Apparently with the consent of Delhi, the chief minister has been portraying V.P. Singh as a Frankenstein before ministers, legislators and party workers. He warns and keeps swearing dramatically: "Oh! what a dangerous conspiracy against our leader." But he refused to go on record about these statements. "I am the chief minister. How can I answer all these questions?" he said, promptly adding: "Rajiv is the only leader in the Congress. Anybody who weakens him is my enemy first".

The chief minister is going all out to ensure that when V.P. Singh comes to the state for his public meetings he is cold-shouldered. After V.P. Singh resigned, the chief minister convened an emergency cabinet meeting on April 13 in which he lectured the ministers on the need for unity. He excoriated the conduct of the Minister of State for Forests Zafar Ali Naqvi and the Minister of State for Cooperation Surendra Singh, who received V.P. Singh on his arrival earlier in the day. And in the presence of some MLAs, he summoned Surendra Singh and asked him to resign.

In a second cabinet meeting on April 21, the chief minister had a tiff with Energy Minister Sunil Shastri who objected when Bir Bahadur Singh called V.P. Singh a traitor. He told the ministers to be "on the guard and watch their conduct". Said Shastri later: "The mud-slinging will only further harm Congress(I)'s image. The campaign to restore the party's image should not be planned after excluding V.P. Singh from it. We should instead use him for gaining what we have lost."

At the same cabinet meeting a decision was taken to lower the increased power tariff for private tube-wells which had led to unrest amongst farmers in the western part of the state. Said a senior minister: "It was not only for the sake of the farmers that the chief minister lowered the rates. One of the main intentions was to neutralise V.P. Singh's influence in the western districts." The former Union minister had drawn enthusiastic receptions in the western districts when he toured them after resigning in 1983. In fact these turn-outs had forced Mrs Indira Gandhi to consider V.P. Singh for a post in the Union Cabinet. An influential MLA from western Uttar Pradesh predicted: "This time even a better response awaits him there."

UNDOUBTEDLY V.P. Singh has a base in the state. He is personally responsible for making the political careers of at least 100 sitting legislators—by distributing Assembly election tickets in the capacity of Uttar Pradesh Congress(I) Committee chief. Said V.N. Dixit, an MLA from Kanpur, and the former defence minister's confidant: "I am, and will remain, with him as I know that he does not want to harm the Congress. It is in fact the statements of Congress(I) leaders against him which are doing more harm to the party."

Health Minister Lokpati Tripathi, who accompanied V.P. Singh on his visit to Allahabad on March 17, refuses to believe the resignation came in the heat of the moment. "I know the Raja personally and I love him for what he is. But never underestimate him. He is a shrewd politician who has done what he has with a specific purpose. Maybe some miscalculations on his part have turned the plan into a fiasco."

An indication of V.P. Singh's strength among legislators was evident during his last Allahabad visit. His eight-hour visit was organised by eight Congress(I) MLAs of Allahabad led by Bhola Singh and Satish Jaiswal, who had launched an anti-Amitabh campaign. After the visit, MLA Rama Kant Mishra said: "We invited him here because he is our undisputed leader". V.P. Singh's first visit since Bachchan's election, drew massive crowds at all 11 public meetings.

Many prominent MLAs sympathise with V.P. Singh as they feel his presence in their district ensures greater public support. Dr Krishna Vir Singh Kaushal, former minister and an MLA from Agra, who was the leader of the dissident camp against Sripati Mishra, says: "People trying to prevent him from going around and speaking in favour of the prime minister are only creating further confusion." Transport Minister Sanjay Singh says: "V.P. Singh must have realised that he committed some serious mistake. That is why he resigned. Accusing him now would hardly help in ending this discussion."

According to the leaders preparing for V.P. Singh's public appearance next month, western Uttar Pradesh, parts of Bundelkhand including Banda, and some central districts will be on the agenda. What remains to be seen is whether the former Union minister's presence attracts Congressmen or Bir Bahadur Singh's scarecrow—Vishwanath Pratap Singh—frightens them away.

—DILIP AWASTHI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Credibility Crunch

THE credibility of a government depends not so much on the strength of the ruling party as on the confidence the people repose in its integrity. In recent months the confrontation between the President and the prime minister, the Fairfax episode, the West German submarine scandal and the most recent Bofors field guns deal have between them demolished the Government's credibility.

When Rajiv Gandhi became prime minister after winning a massive mandate in the last general elections, he promised a 'clean' government, a new work culture and a streamlined administration. But the recent episodes, involving allegations of corruption and bribery in various deals, have made a mockery of the Government's clean image. Equally relevant, the disclosures about corruption involved in these deals are by agencies outside India; hardly any information surfaces as a result of the work of Indian investigating agencies. Where then is the promised work culture and streamlining of our administrative machinery?

The Swiss embassy in New Delhi has clarified that though in Switzerland bank accounts are protected against disclosure to third parties even in connection with official investigations, in the case of criminal prosecutions by another country, when the crime involved is also a criminal offence under Swiss law, banking secrecy can be lifted by a court of law. But our administration has never shown any awareness of these provisions. Why doesn't the Rajiv Gandhi Government avail of these provisions to dig out the concerned secret accounts and unearth the sources of corruption and bribery?

The repeated changes in the portfolios being handled by the prime minister, especially in the context of the recent episodes, also throw some light on personality equations, his style of functioning, and the pushes and pulls in Congress(I) power politics. For as V.P. Singh went ahead with his raids on industrial houses to check FERA violations and unearth black money, he began to seem cleaner than Mr Clean, to the great embarrassment of the prime minister. There was also the fear that the Fairfax inquiry would expose persons with high connections. And so V.P. Singh was shifted from finance to the sensitive defence portfolio before he was humiliated, so that he resigned in disgust.

The power struggles in the Congress(I) have acquired a sharper edge after the recent scandals. Having realised that V.P.Singh has fallen from 'majestic' grace, hardly any appreciable section in the Congress(I) is willing to take up cudgels on his behalf. Indeed, there is unhealthy competition among Congressmen to characterise Singh as an inadvertent promoter of destabilisation. Strangely enough, such a person was only three months ago entrusted with the defence portfolio before being forced to resign.

> "The Government and the ruling party are on the defensive, and their entire time and energy are now being spent in struggling to extricate themselves from the interlocking mesh in which they are caught."

One significant result of the new situation is that the Government and the ruling party have been put on the defensive, and their entire time and energy are now being spent in struggling to extricate themselves from the interlocking mesh in which they have been caught. In the pre-Emergency days, the Congress(I) and the Government were similarly submerged in corruption episodes like the Tulmohan Ram import licence scandal, Sanjay Gandhi's Maruti escapade and the Nagarwala affair. In those tumultuous days, the ruling party, thrown into utter confusion, was forced to take a defensive posture and the administration had become almost paralysed. The symptoms of a similar situation are visible today.

In those critical days Indira Gandhi took refuge in the Emergency, only to realise in 1977 that it was an escape route that led to a cul-de-sac. It is this experience of the past that will deter Rajiv Gandhi from promulgating an emergency. In any case, such a promulgation has been made difficult through the amendment of the emergency provision in the Constitution. Also, the prime minister does not have a pliant President at his beck and call.

The other question is whether the ruling party will face a split. Let there be no illusions on this score. Power is the cementing factor for all Congressmen. They will cling to power as iron filings cling to a magnet. Frightened by the unity displayed by the opposition parties, the Congress(I) in its desperation is raising the bogey of destabilisation. But no one will be taken in by this propaganda. The inquiry into the Lockheed scandal in Japan, involving Prime Minister Kakuei Tanaka, and the Watergate scandal concerning President Richard Nixon of the United States, could not destabilise the system in those countries.

The Congress(I) has also manoeuvred to try and split the Opposition by alleging a 'rightist' conspiracy in collusion with international forces of destabilisation—a strategy that was tried during the Emergency. But those who have learnt the lessons of the Emergency will not fall prey to any plan now to bring about a right-left divide on the corruption issue.

The scare has also been raised that in the prevailing atmosphere the President may decisively act to dismiss the Government. But this is a fear born of desperation and panic. There need be no anxiety of such a catastrophe, which will only build a halo of martyrdom round those who have sunk to the lowest depths of credibility. Besides, such a step would be most undemocratic.

Emboldened by V.P. Singh's resignation from the ministry, a question is now posed: Will he be the focus of a new consolidation? Before one hastens to reply, let it not be forgotten that V.P. Singh's resignation was just a reflex action of an injured conscience.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

 Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Photographs by TARUN CHAKRAVARTI

Road damaged by militants (above left); a 'Government of Gorkhaland' board

GORKHALAND STIR

Militants to the Fore

The north Bengal hill resort of Darjeeling is in the grip of a grey spring. Instead of sunshine and holidaymakers, for most of last fortnight, a cold fog curling around the half deserted streets blotted out the season's usual exuberance, turning Darjeeling into a phantom town stalked by the spectre of insurrection. In one part of town, Subhas Ghising, leader of the separatist Gorkhaland agitation, repeated his warnings about how the deadline for his ultimatum to the Centre had expired. In another part, district police overlord DIG R.K. Handa announced that a new plan to counter the agitation had been formulated, even as reports of bomb blasts and ambushes on police patrols poured into his control room. It fuelled fear among residents that the agitation was snowballing towards a state of insurgency.

"During the last few days we find that the police for the first time is being attacked deliberately and without provocation," admits Darjeeling Superintendent of Police R.K. Sahai. Today the police and paramilitary forces are confronted with a counter-offensive that during the past fortnight alone has claimed the life of one CRPF jawan and seriously injured over a dozen more.

In Darjeeling town, the last day of the latest six-day bandh called by the Gorkha National Liberation Front (GNLF) in protest against police action, signalled an ominous message. On the night of April 22, the town's tradition for peace was irreparably shattered by an exploding bomb and two rifle shots: a grenade had been lobbed at the district intelligence branch office situated in the heart of town and startled sentries had let loose a couple of shots into the darkness. A week earlier, a similar blast had smashed window-panes and sent lethal shrapnel ripping through the walls of the police control room in Kurseong town. A sentry on duty had narrowly escaped. "It's sheer luck that we have not had more casualties so far," remarks Additional SP Raj Kanojia who has been assigned to lead raids.

Handa too had a narrow escape last fortnight when his convoy was held up at a road block and extremists positioned on the hill tops started lobbying grenades and shooting. A bullet missed Handa's head by inches while a bomb splinter gouged a wound in his hand. There have been several similar ambushes and bomb attacks on CRPF outposts in the latter part of April. Even more disconcerting is the discovery of high explosives and a few sophisticated firearms which suggest that GNLF radicals are gearing up for increased conflict.

The district police intelligence network has so far averted major catastrophes. On April 15, for instance, the police on being tipped off, seized seven land mines that were being planted in the road and connected with detonators. A growing section of GNLF radicals, it is believed, are determined to hit the district administration hard in order to demonstrate their total control in the hills.

Already, the GNLF has succeeded in setting up an underground organisation operating parallel to the official administration. Local Nepali policemen admit that even their families have to pay "taxes" and other donations against which "official" GNLF receipts are issued. In places, especially where local officials are in league with the GNLF, special ration cards are issued. In Darjeeling town, the principal of the local college asked GNLF permission to hold examinations and so did the local Muslim leader for bringing out a Mohurram procession. The GNLF's complete dominance over the hills is similarly demonstrated by the complete success of its bandh calls. Compliance to GNLF edicts is ensured by the highly organised Gorkhaland Volunteer Corps (GVC), which of late has even been helping in combatting heroin peddlars in the towns. During a raid in the Kalimpong area, a couple of months ago, the police had even stumbled across a GNLF thana complete with a lock-up.

Consequently the only force holding out against the GNLF today is the state police aided by 28 companies of state armed police and paramilitary forces. Local policemen are exempted from participating in raids lest they and their families become targets of retaliation. But it is this organised and militant section of the GNLF that could be the greatest threat to Ghising's continued leadership.

"Subhas Ghising has already become

 CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Militant being held; (right) Ghising: changing balance irrelevant to the agitation," claims DIG Handa, interpreting Ghising's dismissal of the recent pre-meditated attacks on the police as a sign of his lack of control over the extremists. The police believes that Ghising's attempts at moderation and his tendency to call off strikes every time the Centre offers to hold talks with him, is beginning to rile the militants. Significantly, the beginning of the extremist attacks on the police and the CRPF coincided with the GNLF's failure to establish contact with Union Home Minister Buta Singh. On April 13 a two-member GNLF delegation, consisting of C. Khargha and K.C. Lama, had travelled to New Delhi to meet Buta Singh and fix a date for talks between him and Ghising, but had to return disappointed after merely submitting a memorandum.

As it is, the Gorkhalanders' attitudes have hardened following their success in ensuring a near total poll boycott during the March 23 state assembly elections. In the Darjeeling assembly constituency only 15,485 votes were polled as against a total electorate of about 1.2 lakh; in Kurseong 7,677 out of the 1.68 lakh; and in Kalimpong just 1,100 votes were polled out of an electorate of 1.05 lakh. This, according to Ghising in his memorandum to Buta Singh, constitutes "the greatest political victory of the Gorkhas for the first time in Indian history and cannot be denied or challenged by any single individual or any democratic government". For the GNLF the poll boycott is a referendum for Gorkhaland and the Centre, in Ghising's words, must "concede the demand for Gorkhaland as soon as possible without giving any further scope to the Gorkhaland movement from waging an unnecessary battle between the GNLF, the Central forces and the Marxist Government of West Bengal in the coming future".

But the Centre was not impressed. Union Minister of State for Home P. Chidambaram subsequently declared that the Centre far from being cowed down by the threat would ensure that all paramilitary help is provided to the West Bengal Government. And despite having promised some sort of a "package deal" to solve the Gorkhaland problem, after receiving the April 13 memorandum, the Centre decided not to hold any dialogue with Ghising before the expiry of his April 23 deadline. And Ghising who had threatened drastic action, meekly announced a further postponement of the agitation.

Ghising's unexpected back-tracking suggests a certain desperation beneath the bluster. As a matter of fact, Ghising and his inner circle have been waiting anxiously for the promised Central emissary and the package deal. A member of Ghising's inner sanctum told INDIA TODAY that political columnist Inderjit Khuller has been acting as an unofficial intermediary between them and the Centre. Ghising had been depserately awaiting Khuller's arrival before the expiry of the April 23 deadline. "Every time we heard rumours that Mr Khuller had arrived in Darjeeling we rushed to check it out," says P.K. Pradhan, one of Ghising's assistants. But their enquiries with the hotels proved in vain and Khuller never arrived.

A series of GNLF meetings could not come up with any decision on how to respond to the Centre's rebuff. The idea of a month-long strike was apparently struck down by Ghising, who knows his remaining trump card is his tremendous personal popularity among the district's Gorkhas who view him as a deity. A month-long strike might not prove to be endearing considering that this is the third tourist season the agitation has ruined and even tea-garden workers living on their daily wages have been hit severely. Besides, Ghising has openly promised the creation of Gorkhaland by May 1987 and that perhaps constitutes the limit of the fragile hill economy's endurance. "One mistake now and Ghising will be out of the throne," says Ghising's arch rival DIG Handa who within five months of his arrival in Darjeeling has succeeded in adding a second major slogan to the GNLF programme: after "We Want Gorkhaland", wall writings all over the district say, "Go Back Handa".

Handa's optimism might well be unfounded and the nexus between Ghising and the GNLF's radical wing could be far stronger than it is generally assumed. Among the most hardened GNLF musclemen, Darjeeling's local residents point out, are Ghising's personal bodyguards. In fact, at a meeting at Kurseong, the local Additional Superintendent of Police Ranjit Pachnanda had discovered that Ghising's bodyguards far from being the non-violent type were highly trained ex-servicemen armed with small arms and kukris. And GNLF executive committee members themselves are vehement in insisting that there is absolutely no rift within their ranks.

The problem at the moment, as the GNLF realises, is the understanding the Marxist Chief Minister Jyoti Basu appears to have come to with the Centre on the issue. Basu has already held one round of discussions with the prime minister on the issue and will follow it up later this fortnight. Given the consensus between the two governments on not wanting any division of the state, it is obvious that the promised Central package can at most offer a few economic crumbs, in which Ghising is obviously not interested. In effect, the Darjeeling chessboard shows a stalemate. But as the events of last fortnight suggest, the game might just go overboard and the next round of contest might be without any rules.

—INDRANIL BANERJIE

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE OPPOSITION

Cautious Start

THE word 'conclave' made a return to India's political vocabulary last fortnight when six chief ministers of non-Congress(I)-ruled states met in New Delhi to discuss a common problem—the Congress(I). The announcement soon afterwards that a meeting of "like-minded" political parties would be held in May, followed by another get-together of chief ministers in mid-June—probably in Bangalore—indicates that, after their drubbing in the December 1984 elections, opposition parties are finally trying to get their act together at the national level. The meeting was attended by West Bengal's Jyoti Basu, Karnataka's Ramakrishna Hegde, Andhra Pradesh's N.T. Rama Rao, Punjab's Surjit Singh Barnala, Kerala's E.K. Nayanar and Tripura's Nripen Chakraborty. Though Assam's Prafulla Mahanta could not attend, he was represented by party MP Dinesh Goswami.

The new enthusiasm to seriously re-establish old ties is directly the result of the Congress(I) reverses in the recent assembly elections in West Bengal and Kerala. Basu said as much, adding that the embarrassment to the ruling party in Parliament following recent scandals also convinced the chief ministers that the time was opportune.

The presence of three CPI(M) chief ministers—Basu, Chakraborty and Nayanar—was proof that the Congress(I)'s abrupt leftist rhetoric, as carried in a recent Congress(I) Working Committee resolution last fortnight, had failed to have the desired effect. The resolution had attributed the allegations of kickbacks in defence deals and the stashing of funds abroad to "external and internal forces of disruption, reactionary elements and multinationals". It did not succeed in wooing the CPI(M), and consequently, failed to split the Opposition. Noted the CPI(M)'s official organ, People's Democracy dismissively: "The attempt to dub genuine protests against corruption as a device of outside forces is just an attempt to cover up the misdeeds of the corrupt." Added senior CPI leader and MP Indrajit Gupta: "We consider the resolution motivated by the embarrassment the Congress(I) finds itself in. It doesn't wash with us at all."

But if Basu, as informal spokesman for the chief ministers, cautioned that people's expectations should not be raised too much, it was easy to see why. In the past, opposition alliances have been so opportunistic and brittle that they have brought discredit to most non-Congress(I) parties.

Conclave politics had really begun in end-May 1983 when Rama Rao had invited leaders of 14 opposition parties—including the communists—to Vijayawada. A month later, 16 parties similarly met at New Delhi but by the time the third get-together took place on October 5 that year at Srinagar, the BJP and the Lok Dal had already dropped out to form their short-lived National Democratic Alliance. A fourth conclave took place in mid-January 1984 in Calcutta but after that the movement petered out. The general elections in end-1984 saw an almost entirely divided opposition.

Understandably, then, opposition parties will tread carefully. For one, they have begun the exercise with the present term of Parliament only halfway through, because they want to convince voters that what they are aiming for is more than just an electoral alliance and is based on some commonality of views. The meeting resulted in a resolution that covered corruption in the ruling party and the Congress(I)'s economic policies, the delay in the submission of the Sarkaria Commission's report on Centre-state relations, a greater say for the states in loans advanced by commercial banks and misuse of the radio and television by the ruling party, among other things. Hegde floated a proposal—which had been made in the Srinagar conclave—for an inter-state council as provided for under Article 263 of the Constitution. Hegde and Rama Rao also suggested a 'confederation' of parties at the national level but that issue has been kept in abeyance for now. If little of all this was new, it established the strategy about playing safe initially.

The chief ministers found it easier to arrive at the preliminary consensus since their areas of influence are so clearly demarcated that a clash of interests is limited. Tensions can be expected to arise only when parties based in north India, where none of them is a clear leader, join the exercise in May. But the BJP may not be invited, in part because of the mutual antagonism that exists between it and the CPI(M). The Opposition's immediate test will be the election of President in July. If it fails to put up a consensus candidate, it may set back the unity efforts by several months.

—SREEKANT KHANDEKAR

PRASHANT PANJIAR

Because fruitless attempts at unity in the past have brought discredit to opposition parties, this time the participants seem determined to proceed cautiously.

Non-Congress(I) chief ministers in New Delhi: treading warily

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

QUIET.

Precision engineering gives GEC fans a silent advantage

Everyone knows GEC make quiet fans. But what makes them so quiet?

GEC's concept of total engineering. Because GEC are designers and manufacturers. Specialists in aerodynamics. And not merely 'assemblers'.

Meticulous care is taken to ensure that every nut, every bolt, every component that goes into a GEC fan, is acquired from suppliers who are leaders in their own fields.

So whether it is the mini marvel Ventilair, a ceiling fan, or a giant fan for core industries — you can rest assured it is manufactured with the same precision engineering that GEC are known for.

Simply because no one understnds fan technology better than GEC.

GEC Exhaust Fans
Choose from 16 types — ranging from 305 mm to 915 mm. For all domestic, commercial and industrial applications.

GEC Ceiling Fans
Goldline, Whispair, Classic. Available in ten sizes and a choice of two colours. Backed by 70 years of international experience.

GEC Air Circulators
Pedestal or brackets — a choice of six types.

New GEC Ventilair
Clears your kitchen or bathroom of stuffy air in 3 minutes flat. Available in two sizes: 230 mm and 305 mm.

New GEC Cooler Fan
510 mm. Specially designed for desert coolers.

New GEC Table Fan
400 mm. Oscillating type.

GEC Centrifugal and Axial Flow Fans
For ventilation. And process applications in power, steel, fertilizer, marine, mining and off-shore installations.

GEC

GEC Fans. All you hear is the sound of silence

94A.

Trade Mark GEC Permitted User — The General Electric Company of India Limited

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

KERALA

Mixed Moves

THE month-old performance of the Left Democratic Front (LDF) Government has been something of an education. One of the first decisions taken by the E.K. Nayanar Ministry was to scrap the pre-degree board announced by the United Democratic Front (UDF) government in May 1986. "The UDF in the past years has made a mess of the educational system in the state. We intend to clean up the mess. The scrapping of the proposed pre-degree board is just the beginning," the new Education Minister K. Chandrasekharan said.

The LDF's decision has drawn to a close an issue controversial from the start. The Karunakaran ministry, without taking the academic community into confidence, had last year decided to de-link pre-degree education from the universities and attach it to schools. The decision sparked off a revolt in the universities as both teachers and employees felt that a sizeable section of the staff would become superfluous if the two-year study after the 10-year-school education became an extension of school. Opposition parties felt that with elections due the ruling parties wanted to award the plus-two courses to private schools who in return would make contributions to party coffers. The prolonged strike in response to the Government's decision reduced the pre-degree examination conducted in Kerala University to a farce for thousands of students. Striking employees misplaced answerpapers and marklists, and results when they were published were found not to tally with the candidates' past performance. The resultant public uproar, forced the state Government to set-up the Janaki Amma Commission to inquire into the muddle. Former education minister T.M. Jacob claimed then that the striking employees controlled by LDF unions had deliberately misplaced the answer sheets. Significantly, the LDF Government wound up the commission at the same time as they scrapped the pre-degree board.

The new education minister also cancelled 1,500 special order transfers of headmasters, assistant education officers and some teachers issued by the former education minister. He promised not to "issue a single transfer order in the future". Chandrasekharan also announced that unlike under the UDF government when 632 new schools had been sanctioned in five years, "there will be no further privatisation of education". Another very popular government decision was to abrogate the previous government's order to sanction a relief cheque of Rs 5,000 to Harijan rape victims.

The state exchequer, however, is not in the pinkest of health. Except for two years when there was a surplus, there has been a steady rise in the deficit on the revenue accounts over the past decade. Instead of seeking loans for its capital investment requirements alone, the state Government has been borrowing to meet even its current expenditure. In just four years from 1981 to 1985, the Government's loans from financial institutions and the open market has increased nearly twelvefold, and the Centre had to give money to cover the Rs 340-crore deficit. If the state did not get a budget of Rs 3,000 crore in the seventh plan, it was because the state Government was unwilling to raise the resources it could easily have.

An unexplainable lassitude has also set in in the collection of sales tax, considered the most important source of revenue for any state. The Karunakaran government was reputed to issue large-scale stay-orders on sales tax collection. According to Viswanatha Menon, the new Marxist finance minister: "The stay-orders on the collection of sales tax created a record revenue account deficit. We are still trying to figure out how much sales tax collection has been stayed."

Doles handed out liberally by governments to gain popularity, are another major drain on state finance. "Currently the Government coughs up Rs 40 crore annually for old-age pension, agricultural workers pension and unemployment assistance. And it looks like the LDF will announce more doles, which would leave a gaping hole in the exchequer," said a concerned state planning board member. Bowing to populist pressures last week, Nayanar announced in the state Assembly that the Government would implement a pension scheme for workers in traditional industries like coir, cashew and handloom.

In its allocation of portfolios too, the Nayanar Ministry seemed to have chosen to adopt the conventional ways of the UDF government. Even though the UDF had upbraided Karunakaran for burdening the exchequer with a 19-member cabinet in 1982, the new cabinet too has an equal number. But the Marxists have monopolised the important portfolios of home, finance, industry and electricity, while giv-

Chief Minister Nayanar: taking charge

RAJAN PODUVAL

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

FEATHERLITE

"One day, I'll be the big boss"

Featherlite Sponge Leather. Opens up a whole new world of exciting possibilities. Featherlite is as beautiful as leather but more practical, durable and economical. Can be stitched and pleated just like fabric. And all you do is wipe it clean.

Available in an array of new designs and patterns of leather and textile. The first choice of interior decorators who insist on quality, versatility and good looks.

The upholstery material for interesting interiors

Lucky's

featherlite™

Sponge Leather

Lucky Plast

PRIVATE LIMITED

308, WORLD TRADE CENTRE,
BARAKHAMBA LANE, NEW DELHI 110 001
CABLE: FEATHERLITE
TELEX: 031 66610 LUKY IN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

ALLWYN NISSAN CABSTAR Mini Bus

The only 16-seater with state-of-the art Japanese technology

A winner from Allwyn Nissan. Deluxe comfort for travellers : plush seats, softer suspension for the smoothest of smooth rides ... Truly, a superb vehicle built on the proven design of Nissan that has introduced an unthinkably low noise and vibration level ever known in a passenger vehicle. Plus, the option of airconditioning with overhead fans for free circulation of air.

For the operator, it's a new high in operational economy.

Highly fuel-efficient. Virtually maintenance-free.

Also available, the 9-seater Luxury Coach with high fidelity stereo system. And, a host of thoughtful features that make it the ultimate in passenger comfort : tinted glasses; reclinable seats with foam; rectangular roof lamps; carpet; curtains; quartz clock; luggage boot, and to top it all, a fully insulated saloon.

ALLWYN NISSAN
CABSTAR
the right commercial vehicle

NISSAN

ALLWYN NISSAN LIMITED
Allwyn Bhavan, Sanathnagar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri
CC-0. In Public Domain. Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

This bird is at home serving the needs of India's rural sector

Villages are the heart of India, where over 70% of our population still lives.
And National Insurance is there, protecting one's hopes, aspirations and needs.

For instance,
National Insurance has policies that protect cattle, livestock, poultry and fisheries, against losses. Agro-pumpsets and other agricultural implements from fire, theft or mechanical breakdowns.
And individuals against personal accidents.

For the urban section
NIC provides coverage against theft, fire and personal accidents, to make life happier and more secure.
It also protects the interests of the entire industrial sector.

So, whenever you need protection, just call us. With its growing network and professional expertise, NIC offers you personalised service at every level.

National Insurance Company Limited
(A subsidiary of General Insurance Corporation)
3, Middleton Street, Calcutta 700 071.

Putting service first

CLARION C-NIC-17

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

CC-0. Indira Gandhi National Centre for the Arts. Digitized by Sarayu Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Tropical Palms"

Bring home the splendour of the outdoors.

Home Collection

BOMBAY DYEING

SHEETS • TOWELS • FURNISHINGS

dsheets — a new wave in luxury bedwear. Polycot wrinkle-free bedsheets and Beaucale and Supercale pure cotton sheets in plains and prints.
rnishings — for a touch of European elegance. The dramatic Home Collection. For every corner of your home, for the better part of your life.

CC-0. Panini Kanya Maha Vidyalaya Collection. Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ing the CPI(M) revenue, agriculture, food and civil supplies. "The Congress(I) in the past made the big mistake of allotting high profile portfolios to its constituents and it was left with almost nothing other than the chief ministership. To run the coalition, we have to call the shots," explained a senior CPI(M) leader.

Detractors claim that the real power behind the LDF throne is E.M.S. Namboodiripad, the CPI(M) general secretary and the architect of the LDF victory. The education minister's statement in the Assembly that the new educational policy would be framed after consulting Namboodiripad provoked K.M. Mani to say "the LDF ministry is being remote controlled from the A.K. Gopalan Centre, the Marxist headquarters in Trivandrum". The Marxist leadership has also made it clear that no policy decision would be made by other Front partners without consulting them. All LDF ministers have been asked to travel only in official ambassador cars and that too without police escort. As Nayanar said: "We would like to give a new image to the Government and the thrust of the new ministry is to provide an honest and efficient administration."

Meanwhile, the LDF euphoria was dampened briefly when, 48 hours after his appointment, Janata Party forest minister M.P. Veerendra Kumar resigned because of the pressure of intra-party fighting. Kumar is the managing director of the state's second largest newspaper Mathrubhoomi, a fact which is believed to have influenced his nomination. He was replaced by N.M. Joseph, a college professor whose appointment was okayed by the state's Janata MLAs who met in Bangalore in the presence of the Karnataka chief minister.

But the biggest problem facing the Marxists is how to keep both the state's police force and the CPI(M)'s trade union, CITU, under control. Nayanar has not made any major changes in the police since taking office. Meanwhile, Ananthalavattom Anandan, the powerful CITU leader and MLA, has promised the CITU "will definitely be more restrained and politically conscious".

The LDF, however, is optimistic about its future. A.C. Shanmughadas, the Congress(S) leader and health minister philosophised: "They say that the LDF has never completed a full term in office. But this time, come what may, hell or high water, with the help of the people, not only will we survive but provide a clean administration."

—SREEDHAR PILLAI

LAST WORD/RAJINDER PURI

Cleaning Up

PEOPLE are wondering what the real inside story is about V.P. Singh's resignation from the Government. The decision that V.P. Singh must be forced to quit was taken at a high-level top secret meeting attended by the prime minister and his closest aides. This is how the discussions went.

The prime minister sighed and said with distress: "Gentlemen, you know why we are meeting here. There are mounting demands in the party that V.P. Singh must be forced to quit. Frankly, I don't see why it should come to that. V.P. Singh is a loyal chap and I like him a lot!"

Buta Singh was the first to speak up. "He may be loyal to you, prime minister, but is he loyal to the party? You know that we have exacting standards of public conduct which are part of the AICC tradition!"

"Have you any specific charge against him?" the prime minister asked gravely.

For a while they fell silent. Then N.K.P. Salve spoke up: "Prime minister, you might be ignorant of this, but the whole party is talking about it. In fact, the whole country is talking about it. They say that V.P. Singh is not corrupt! Repeatedly he has committed acts which are clean! This is ruining the morale of the party!"

The prime minister said in a shocked voice: "That's a serious charge! Is it true?"

K.K. Tewari snapped: "Of course! That man is thoroughly clean and nothing can save his reputation!"

H.K.L. Bhagat coughed and said: "Aren't we all being a little hasty? I concede that many rumours are going around, but that's no reason to condemn a man. Don't forget that every man should be considered corrupt unless he is proven clean! Do we have any documented proof that V.P. Singh is clean? If not, we should give him the benefit of the doubt!"

Buta Singh objected: "Come prime minister, let's be realistic! We all know how difficult it is to get documentary evidence that a person is clean! But we also know that V.P. Singh has done enough to convince us that there is a strong prima facie case that he is clean! We may not have written proof of his cleanliness, but how can such a man be considered fit for holding public office?"

Just then the Law Minister, H.R. Bharadwaj, cleared his throat. Everybody turned his attention to him. "It seems to me that there is one aspect of this whole business which has escaped your attention, prime minister," Bharadwaj said slowly. "How will this crisis effect the entire country? Once people know that a clean minister is being allowed to function in the Government, the entire population right down to the level of the ordinary peon will want to become clean! How will our present system survive the crisis?"

Everyone nodded solemnly. The Foreign Minister N.D. Tewari, was the last to intervene. "Prime minister," he said in a sombre voice, "there is an even more serious aspect! If word gets around that there is even the slightest breath of cleanliness in our government, it will cause irreparable damage to our reputation abroad! Not a single armaments' manufacturer or foreign government will be prepared to do business with us! How will we carry on?"

"Oh, all right," the prime minister said regretfully. "I guess you're right, the party is bigger than any individual..."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

And to think you can fly there on Alitalia...6 times a week.

All roads still lead to Rome, but after we fly you there, we can fly you to London almost immediately. Six times a week, every week, a sleek Alitalia 747 leaves Delhi and Bombay for Italy. With our convenient worldwide network, we connect you to key cities in Italy, and Europe, as well as New York, Chicago, Los Angeles, Montreal and Toronto. Take an Italian airline? Certamente if you want convenience. The ultimate, if you want to be pampered in the luxury of our Top Class or Prima Business Class. Call Alitalia, or see your travel agent and book your flight today. Six flights a week ... 312 flights a year, make it so easy.

Alitalia
The airline of Italy

daCunha/ALT/2/87

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

UTTAR PRADESH

Communal Flashpoint

THE Ram Janmabhoomi-Babri Masjid controversy had already kindled communal tensions in Etah, Faizabad, Jaunpur and Ayodhya. All that Meerut needed was a tiny spark and this was provided last fortnight by a small and tragic misunderstanding. Two colonies of Muslims, celebrating Shab-e-Baraat with the traditional fireworks competition, clashed. Hindus in the neighbourhood, confused by the commotion, thought they were being attacked and quickly retaliated. For Meerut, which has a long history of communal clashes, this was enough to leave a trail of havoc that left 10 killed, 23 injured, 52 shops burnt and property worth lakhs destroyed. Raging mobs, themselves unsure of what had triggered off the riots, stalked the streets, assaulting passers-by, brickbatting their opponents, and creating pandemonium when they burnt down the screen in a jam-packed cinema hall.

As always, innocent people paid the price. Devender Kumar, on his way to the Nauchandi-ka-Mela for which Meerut is known, was stopped by some ruffians who asked him his name—and tried to slit his throat as soon as he uttered it. Razauddin, returning home in a rickshaw, was attacked with knives and lathis. Later in the fortnight, lying in a stupor in the local medical college, both considered themselves lucky to have escaped alive—and they still did not know what it had all been about. Equally ignorant were most people in the walled city of Meerut who had been caught in the web of an intense rumour campaign which bred suspicion and tension.

The group clashes and brickbatting soon faded out, but the administration was stumped by the isolated stabbings—typical of a tense Meerut—that continued. On the third day, curfew was clamped and the police strength swelled to 5,000. Preventive detention was used against 355 suspected trouble-makers and 60 arms licences were suspended. Peace meetings were organised and compensation quickly distributed. Belated "air-dashes" were also made to Meerut by Union Home Minister Buta

Photographs by PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Meerut riot victims (right) and burnt shop: pointless violence

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A whole new concept in silent air conditioning.

Divide... and cool.

The new Voltas Crystal Split Room Air Conditioner consists of two units.

Now! Elegant new design. Enhanced cooling power.

The new 1.5 tonne Voltas Crystal Split Room Air Conditioner is unlike any other. In looks. And in performance.

It comes in two parts. The elegant, laminate-finished particle board Room Unit cools your room in silence. It can be installed at ground level on the floor, or against a solid wall.

The Condensing Unit, which is the noisy part, is kept outside. On a ledge. Or in the balcony. Anywhere up to 5 metres away from the room unit. There's no need to block a window. A 10 cm dia. hole through the wall allows the pipes to connect the two units. So it keeps noise out. Completely!

Want to know more? Just contact your nearest Voltas Crystal dealer. Or us.

VOLTAS LIMITED
Appliances Business Group
19, J.N. Heredia Marg
Ballard Estate
Bombay 400 038

VOLTAS
CRYSTAL
SPLIT ROOM AIR CONDITIONER
No.1 in keeping cool... silently!

CLARION/VIKI/25A

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Singh, Chief Minister Bir Bahadur Singh and state Home Minister Gopinath Dikshit.

The Nauchandi-ka-Mela, which had drawn thousands from all over the country, was abandoned and school examinations were postponed indefinitely. Yet the tension persisted, feeding on rumours—a Hindu was stabbed in a Hindu locality in a case of mistaken identity; a headless unidentified man was found lying in a drain. And the toll kept mounting. A confounded administration tightened curfew restrictions, increased the police presence and probably blamed itself for not having anticipated a clash. Recalls Deputy Superintendent of Police Shailendra Pratap Singh, circle officer in the Kotwali and Lisari Gate area, the nerve-centre of the riots: "The atmosphere was charged due to the Babri Masjid dispute. There was no other local problem. It needed only a spark, not an issue."

On the night of April 14, when the Shab-e-Baraat celebrations were at their height, there was a pittance of a police force to face the huge mobs. Says Senior Superintendent of Police V.K.B. Nair: "Our hands were full that night. Besides this celebration, there was a Baisakhi procession, then the Dr Ambedkar Jayanti and of course, the Nauchandi-ka-Mela." Explains District Magistrate Radhey Shyam Kaushik: "The police deployment was not for a riot situation as it was a happy occasion being celebrated."

Clearly, no one in the administration had anticipated trouble although, after the Babri Masjid issue resurfaced at the national level with the mammoth rally taken out by Muslims in New Delhi recently, the reverberations had been felt loud and clear throughout Uttar Pradesh. It was only after the damage had been done that the administration rushed about banning the entry of religious fundamentalists into town. But with the air thick with tension, it will now take a long time before normalcy returns to the riot-prone city.

Although the local administration has received a clean chit from the state Government for its handling of the situation, the fact remains that it will need greater foresight if a repetition of such ugly situations is to be prevented in future. Communal tensions in the state have escalated to such a fever pitch that henceforth the spark may be provided not by a local issue at all but purely by the hatred that is being generated across a huge state.

—TANIA MIDHA

UTTAR PRADESH

Culture Wise

UTTAR Pradesh's Chief Minister Bir Bahadur Singh is an inspired man these days. The song that he and his government are humming is culture—and the tune has obviously been picked up from Rajiv Gandhi. Apart from setting up regional cultural centres and research institutes, Singh himself has inaugurated or graced as many as 17 cultural functions in or outside the state in the last four months. And each time, his presence was not a short, ceremonial affair but a highly visible performance.

As many as 31 major cultural events were organised in the state during 1986-87 as compared to 15 in 1985-86. These included state and folk drama festivals at Lucknow, a national Hindi drama festival at Dehradun, a multi-lingual drama festival at Allahabad, Ramayana Mela at Ayodhya and Shardotsava in Vrindavan. The state capital also saw four national-level music conferences between February 13 and March 25, besides the Lucknow Mahotsava. For good measure, 200 artistes performed in an Uttar Pradesh Parva organised at Madras in January, this year.

Now the state has drawn up a cultural calendar. Six festivals—the Ramayana Mela in Ayodhya, Shardotsava in Mathura, Yamunotsava in Agra, Lucknow Mahotsava in Lucknow, and two drama festivals, one at state-level and the other national-level—will be held every year. The anticipated bill: a sizeable Rs 1 crore.

The Cultural Affairs Department has naturally benefited most from Singh's new-found enthusiasm. Its budget has been hiked up sharply from Rs 60 lakh in 1985-86 to Rs 1.74 crore in 1986-87—a 190-per cent leap. What is more, it is expected to rise to a hefty Rs 4 crore in 1987-88. Says Surendra Mohan, cultural affairs secretary: "Our intention is to lay emphasis on analytical studies of our cultural background and to set up research centres for this purpose."

To translate this goal into reality, Rs 25 lakh has been sanctioned to transform five state museums into regional cultural centres. Equipped with audio and visual recording facilities, these centres—Lucknow, Mathura, Jhansi, Almora and Gorakhpur—will organise cultural activities in their zones, and undertake research work on existing art forms. "The idea is to revive and exploit the rich cultural tradition of Uttar Pradesh," says Daya Prakash Sinha, cultural affairs director.

As a first step, these centres will be assigned specific dance forms to study and promote. The studies are expected to regenerate interest in Uttar Pradesh's 24 dance forms: currently, the state is known only for Kathak. The centres will also take up projects in sculpture and painting.

Singh inaugurating auditorium: new-found enthusiasm

In addition, the Singh Government has set up three research institutes at Vrindavan, Ayodhya and Sarnath to study art forms related to Krishna, Rama and Buddha respectively. Another research institute to study Jain culture is likely to come up either at Hastinapur (Meerut) or Devgarh (Lalitpur). All these institutes will have laboratories capable of dating antiques—a facility which the state has lacked until now.

This stress is sure to give culture in Uttar Pradesh a new staying base and boost the chief minister's image as a crusader for culture.

—DILIP AWASTHI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Highflyers know the be

It has been wisely and truly said that a man is what he reads. To many of India's most successful industrialist,businessman, executives and professionals, The Times of India has been a major source of information. And it continues as a part of their staple reading,their primary access to events and ideas and opinions in the world around them.

Today, The Times Group comprises 18 newspapers and magazines, catering to the diverse interests of the reading public: women, children, cinema fans, sports lovers, readers of fiction, students, science buffs and the business community. In so doing, they have served to bring a benevolent influence on readers and society. Firmly committed to a high standard of responsible journalism, they provide a clear and untinted window to the real world. In an age of changing values, they faithfully reflect changing opinions, at the same time providing the information, analyses and comments that help to mould public opinion.

Responsible journalism and high production values have ensured a quality of readership that no other group of publications can claim. This has had happy implications for advertisers too, making The Times Group the backbone of any media plan.

For itself, The Times Group maintains its commitment to the reader, the advertiser, and the nation.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

the best way to take off.

Times change.
Faith in The Times Group doesn't.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Sintex The only reliable and time-tested READYMADE WATER TANKS

For every water storage application under all Indian conditions.

SINTEX has proved its performance against all the tough and rough Indian conditions for more than a decade now. Dotting the Indian scene with lakhs and lakhs of installations-from Kashmir to Kanyakumari and Kutch to Kohima-Sintex Tanks are proving popular for all water storage and carriage applications.

Made by a unique moulding process on computer aided machines. Sintex Water Tanks offer a set of advantages unbeatable by others.

★ Lightweight ★ Easy to install ★ Strong and Durable ★ Maintenance-free ★ 100% Leakproof and Rustproof ★ Most Hygienic ★ Available in wide range from 100 lits. to 20,000 lits capacity in different shapes ★ Backed by excellent installation and after sales service through a wide network of dealers.

For further information contact:

SINTER PLAST CONTAINERS

Plastics Division: The Bharat Vijay Mills Ltd.,
KALOL (N. GUJARAT) 382721.
Phone: (02764) 2228, 2274, 2352, 3144, 3145.
Gram: "SINTEX", Telex: 0121-296 BVM IN.

Sintex-The World's largest selling moulded polyethylene Water Tanks

OFFICES AT

● AHMEDABAD : 179, New Cloth Market, Ahmedabad - 380 002, Tel : 365157/361045 Gram : SINMOULD. ● BARODA : 10, Vishwakunj Society, Near MIG Quarters, Kareli Baug, Baroda - 390 001, Tel : 556406. ● BOMBAY : 18, World Trade Centre, Cuffe Parade, Colaba, Bombay - 400 055, Tel : 211653/217869, Gram : ROTOPLAST, Telex : 3171 SINT IN. ● BHOPAL : E-4/115, Arera Colony, Bhopal - 462 014, Tel : 65894. ● CALCUTTA : 230 A, Acharya Jagdish Chandra Bose Road, Calcutta - 700 020.Tel :434596, Gram : ROTOMOULD ● DELHI : GF-3, Osian Building, New Delhi - 110 019 Tel : 6445911/ 6431188 Gram : SEAMLESS, Telex : 31 62338 SEAM IN. ● HYDERABAD : 6-3-856, Ameerpet, Hyderabad - 500 016, Tel : 220821. ● JAIPUR : Plot No. E-40, Jamuna Nagar, Sodala, Ajmer Road, Jaipur - 6, Tel : 64713. ● MADRAS : 123, Angappa Naicken Street, 3rd Floor, Madras - 600 001 Tel : 20070, Gram : ROTOPLAST, Telex : 41 8189 SPC IN.

Bidhan-SP-111A

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TAMIL NADU

Above the Law

LAST fortnight, three armed men stormed into the house of General Insurance Surveyor S.L. Prabhu, 46, in Anna Nagar in northwest Madras and decamped with diamond and gold jewellery worth Rs 68,000. Police rounded up 20 Sri Lankan Tamil militants belonging to the Tamil Eelam Liberation Organisation (TELO) for interrogation. They were subsequently let off.

The case was symptomatic of the fact that the Tamil Nadu police, for extraneous political reasons, are not able to strictly enforce the law of the land over the Tamil militants whose number in the state is now conservatively put at 5,000. What causes greater concern is that most of the Tamil militants in India belong to the less disciplined and financially less resourceful People's Liberation Organisation of Tamil Eelam (PLOTE), the Eelam People's Revolutionary Liberation Front (EPRLF) and the TELO.

It is a potentially dangerous situation and the police seem to be powerless to act. As early as 1983, the additional sessions judge in Madras had issued a non-bailable arrest warrant against the leader and military commander of the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam (LTTE), Velupillai Pirabhakaran. To date, the police have been powerless to execute it. Instead, they have had to undergo the embarrassment of providing security for him during his frequent trips to Delhi in 1985 and 1986 for discussions on the Sri Lankan ethnic problem. Indian security forces had to fly him to Bangalore during the summit of the South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation. Confided a police inspector, who has been dealing with a number of criminal cases involving the militants: "We have had to wink at some of these things for political reasons. How do you go with a non-bailable arrest warrant to a man who is frequently invited by the chief minister for breakfast?"

The non-bailable arrest warrant had been issued against Pirabhakaran and his former close associate Raghavan after they jumped conditional bail in a criminal case. The case related to the two opening fire on PLOTE Secretary-General K. Uma Maheswaran and his associate Jotheeswaran on the night of May 19, 1982, in the busy Pondy Bazar area of central Madras. Raghavan has since been in and out of Tamil Nadu, while the police have looked on helplessly.

In the criminal case relating to the bomb blast in the international arrival hall of Meenambakkam Airport on August 2, 1984, which left 30 killed and 37 injured, the judicial second class magistrate in Saidapet in the city issued non-bailable arrest warrants against both Thambapillai Maheswaran, leader of the small militant group, the Tamil Eelam Army (TEA), and Vigneswara Raja, a retired customs collector from Sri Lanka. Both of them were out on conditional bail after three months' remand and both have subsequently jumped bail. While Raja has not surfaced after that, Maheswaran has reportedly made several trips between Madras and Singapore. In fact, reliable militant and police sources confirm that the TEA leader was in Madras on March 11 this year. State police are now working on the assumption that Maheswaran must have provided the technical expertise for the recent bomb blast which resulted in the

In spite of a non-bailable arrest warrant issued as early as 1983 by the additional sessions judge in Madras against Pirabhakaran, the police till date have been powerless to execute it.

RAGHAVENDRA RAO

In the Meenambakkam Airport bomb blast case, both Thambapillai Maheswaran and Vigneswara Raja have jumped bail despite non-bailable warrants against them.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Ariyalur train accident near Tiruchi on March 15. Disclosed a top police official: "On the face of it, it is the extremist Tamil Nadu Viduthalai Padai (Tamil Nadu Liberation Troop) which is responsible for planting the bomb. But the expertise of the explosive seems to have been provided by a Sri Lankan Tamil militant group called the Tamil Makkal Padukappu Peravai (Tamil People's Protection Assembly) which has close links with the TEA." Maheswaran is now believed to be in hiding near Madurai.

THANKS to the regular boat traffic between Rameswaram in Tamil Nadu and Jaffna across the Palk Straits, it has become common for militants, accused in criminal cases in Tamil Nadu, to jump bail and cross over the moment they are freed from remand. Two years ago, for instance, five LTTE men—Sankar, Pattu, David, Kumar and Selva—were accused in a police case regarding their assault on some PLOTE members at the Tamil Information Centre in Kodambakkam in northwest Madras. All five are known to have sailed to Jaffna soon after the case was registered. And the fact that the additional chief metropolitan magistrate in Egmore in the city has issued non-bailable arrest warrants against them doesn't help. All five have been charge-sheeted and the criminal case is due to begin shortly. But the police have given up their search because they have concluded that the accused have returned home.

In January 1986, the Tamil Nadu police unearthed a full-fledged explosives factory that PLOTE had set up at K.K. Nagar in northwest Madras. The factory was regularly turning out hand grenades on a large scale. The cops arrested six PLOTE men from the factory—Vinoo, Jayachandran, Anandan, Selvam, Sriram and Chandran. All stayed on remand for 60 days, after which they were allowed to come out on conditional bail. They promptly jumped bail and vanished. The subdivisional judicial magistrate of Poonamallee near Madras has issued non-bailable arrest warrants against all of them, but to no effect. "We believe that all these boys have escaped by boat to Jaffna," admits a top CID official.

It is not only the militants who have been jumping bail with impunity. Kandaswamy Naidu, a former Sri Lankan CID official was once part of the security network of Sri Lanka's Rural Industries Minister S. Thondaman. He is now an accused in Tamil Nadu in the sensational espionage case unearthed last year relating to the passing on of militant secrets to the Colombo Government and also in the bomb blast case in the home of LTTE adviser A.S. Balasingham. Naidu has now disappeared. He and four others had been arrested on an espionage charge, and they all came out on conditional bail. Though they had to report regularly to the additional chief metropolitan magistrate's court in Egmore, Naidu has not appeared in court for the last two months. The police are planning to ask the court for a non-bailable arrest warrant against him. But considering past experience, the warrant may not be very useful in locating him. And for the last six months, police have been awaiting Central Government sanction for laying a complaint against Naidu and the four others for violation of the Official Secrets Act.

There are countless criminal cases registered against Sri Lankan Tamil militants in Tamil Nadu. There are no exact statistics, but the fact is that in the past five years these militants have been operating out of the state, the police have been able to secure the conviction of the accused in only one case—against PLOTE leader Uma Maheswaran for attacking the police at Gummidipoondi railway station in Tamil Nadu in May 1982. But even in that case, the sentence of three months' rigorous imprisonment given by the additional sessions judge at Trivellore in Chingleput was adjusted against three months' remand. As a police official said: "In cases in which the militants are involved, it takes between six months and two years to secure conviction. And in the sole case where we were able to obtain conviction, the guilty persons didn't have to be imprisoned after the judgement."

SHYAM TEKWANI

State police are working on the assumption that Maheswaran must have provided the technical expertise for the recent bomb blast which resulted in the Ariyalur train accident.

Unlike the Sri Lankan Tamil refugees, the Tamil militants should technically be considered as illegal entrants on Indian soil. Yet even when these militants get involved in criminal cases in India, no cases are registered against them under the Indian Passports Act of 1947 or the Foreigners Act of 1939. And despite the much publicised 'operation disarm' on the militants on November 8 last year, no case has been registered against them for contravening the Arms Act. The militants have obviously been enjoying more privileges than the citizens of their host country.

—S.H. VENKATRAMANI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

After sixty five years of dynamic diversity it's time you met the team.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The collective contribution of the people who constitute the thirty five companies of The Thapar Group has helped make the Group India's third largest conglomerate.

Jagatjit Cotton Textile Mills Ltd. – JCT

Quality leaders in their range, JCT's fashionable textiles are sought-after all over India under the brand name JCT Phagwara.

Logical backward integration made JCT spearhead The Thapar Group's entry into the synthetic fibre industry. JCT now produces nylon 6, and will soon produce polyester staple fibre in technical collaboration with Zimmer AG of West Germany.

Anticipating the phenomenal demand for colour TV sets, JCT demonstrated its versatility by spearheading The Thapar Group's thrust into the field of electronics. The result is India's first colour picture tube plant with technology from Hitachi, the largest manufacturer of colour picture tubes in the world.

Ballarpur Industries Ltd. – BILT

BILT is India's largest and most diverse manufacturer of paper including specialty, industrial and cultural grades.

BILT also manufactures : chemicals which include caustic soda, sodium tripolyphosphate, phosphoric acid, bromine and bromides; glass containers and cooking oils

Strategic diversification is taking BILT into acrylic staple fibre and nylon 6,6 tyre cord and fabric in collaboration with Du Pont. In the company being set up to manufacture nylon tyre cord, Du Pont is participating with equity for the first time in India.

Other BILT ventures include : telecommunications and office automation systems with Oki Electric of Japan and a tie-up with Owens-Illinois for the modernisation of BILT's large interests in the glass industry.

Crompton Greaves Ltd.

Crompton Greaves is India's largest electrical engineering company in the private sector.

Crompton Greaves manufactures the widest range of electrical equipment in the country. From 400 KV transformers and reactors to light bulbs. From switches to switch yards. From circuit breakers to 6000 KW electric motors. From hydel turbines to pumps.

Presently this high performance company is paving its way into the future with technical collaborations with Westinghouse, Hitachi, Mitsubishi and other international giants.

Greaves Cotton and Co. Ltd.

"Engineers to the Nation" accurately describes the engineering versatility of Greaves Cotton. A multi-market, multi-product organisation, Greaves caters to myriad needs of diverse sectors of the economy, be it agriculture, aviation, construction, energy, marine, mining or oilfields.

Products manufactured by Greaves include diesel engines, gear boxes, cranes, rock roller bits, concrete pumps and speciality chemicals for the steel industry.

Greaves serves as India's window to the world by representing over 250 international giants. Today, Greaves is supporting India's thrust for self reliance in petroleum by developing products and services for the oil sector in a joint venture with Dresser Industries of U.S.A. Another project, a joint venture with Morganite Crucibles of U.K., is for the manufacture of silicon carbide crucibles for the metals industry.

Karam Chand Thapar & Bros. (CS) Ltd.

KCT has a countrywide network of 75 company owned branches that handle a wide range of products like coal, machinery, minerals, consumer goods, industrial materials, mill stores, electricals and machine tools.

KCT is engaged in specialised construction to tap India's vast hydro power resources. KCT is entering the field of speciality chemicals and is engaged in setting up a plant to manufacture chemicals from castor oil.

Other Thapar companies have activities as dynamic to their credit. Whether it's Borosil, Bharat Westfalia, Bharat Starch & Chemicals or any other of The Thapar Group's thirty five companies.

Individually they are leaders. Collectively they make a great team.

The Thapar Group

Growth From A Position Of Strength

ULKA-D-TG-389/2A

The Thapar Group Companies ■ Jagatjit Cotton Textile Mills Ltd. ■ Ballarpur Industries Ltd. ■ Crompton Greaves Ltd. ■ Greaves Cotton & Co. Ltd. ■ Karam Chand Thapar & Bros. (C.S.) Ltd. ■ JCT Electronics Ltd. ■ Northern Digital Exchanges Ltd. ■ Punjab Polyfibres Ltd. ■ Chitram & Co. Ltd. ■ Greaves Midwest Engg. Co. Ltd. ■ Greaves Foseco Ltd. ■ Hudson & Hornsby (India) Ltd. ■ Greaves Semiconductors Ltd. ■ Greaves Dresser Atlas Oilfield Ltd. ■ Andhra Pradesh Rayons Ltd. ■ Kerala Electric Lamp Works ■ Jg Glideden Ltd. ■ Bharat Starch & Chemicals Ltd. ■ English India Clays Ltd. ■ David Brown Greaves Ltd. ■ Greaves Morganite Crucibles Ltd. ■ India City Properties Ltd. ■ United Breweries Ltd. ■ Himlon Ltd. ■ Karam Chand Thapar & Brothers Ltd. ■ Borosil Glass Works Ltd.

Thrust Areas ■ Paper & Pulp ■ Electronics ■ Textiles ■ Man-made Fabrics ■ Electrical Engineering ■ Chemicals ■ Oil Sector ■ Glass ■ Hydro Power ■ Biotechnology ■ Engineering ■ Renewable Energy ■ Construction ■ Food & Allied Industries ■ Mining ■ Investment ■ R & D ■ Consultancy ■ Exports ■ Shipping & Distribution.

Joint Ventures ■ Ballarpur Industries Acrylic Staple Fibre, Nylon 6,6 Tyre Cord & Fabric, Telecommunication and Office Automation Systems ■ Jagatjit Cotton Textile Mills Ltd. Colour Picture Tubes, Polyester Staple Fibre ■ Greaves Cotton Silicon Carbide Crucibles, Drilling Equipment and services to the Oil Sector ■ Crompton Greaves Telephone Instruments, Office Automation Systems, Consumer Durables, Project Eng. ■ KCT (Coal Sales) Chemicals

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SONY

THE ULTIMATE

A masterpiece of audio sound and design.

Digital-Ready Super Acoustic Turbo 380W P.M.P.O.

super FH

FH-215R

Want to raise your listening standards? Then listen to this – the Sony Super FH System. It uses today's brightest audio technology [illegible] that's incredibly powerful and clear, including [illegible] speakers for bass you can feel. [illegible] And isn't

ONY SERVICE CENTRES IN INDIA. BOMBAY: MADRAS: BANGALORE: DELHI: COCHIN: CALCUTTA

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BIHAR

Raising a Storm

SO sudden was Chief Minister Bindeshwari Dubey's move that it took even a state used to ordinances by surprise. Last fortnight, with just two months to go for the statewide panchayat elections in June, the Government passed an ordinance reserving the post of 'mukhiya' for Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes on the basis of their population in the districts. While the final list of panchayats is still being prepared, the measure is likely to mean reservation for the chiefs of about a quarter of the 11,378 panchayats in the state. But meanwhile, elections have had to be postponed because of the legal confusion this decision has caused.

The ordinance also bars MPs and legislators from holding the post of mukhiya simultaneously, a clause which will affect about two dozen leaders. Explains Congress(I) MLA Jai Kumar Palit, who had earlier been both legislator and mukhiya together: "The whole purpose of panchayati raj system gets defeated when a single person occupies both posts. Now an independently elected mukhiya can look after the interest of the panchayat while the MLA will be able to look after the whole constituency comprising many panchayats." The mukhiya forms the backbone of village administration and his post is politically important as he directly influences developmental work in his area.

Though the measure looked good, Dubey's critics within the party feel that his 'concern' for the weaker sections is in fact a cover to counter the irrepressible former chief minister Jagannath Mishra's growing popularity among these groups because of his "Jana Jagran" campaign in Bihar. Says Kamalnath Singh Thakur, MLC: "If Dubey was really concerned, he should have brought a bill in the recent legislative session so that members could have debated it and made it more dynamic. The ordinance reflected his desperate mood." Interestingly, the ordinance was promulgated just a week after the budget session finished.

Whatever Dubey's reasons, the sensitivity of the subject was attested by the fact that most leaders—in and outside the Congress(I)—preferred not to criticise the measure too strongly. Leader of the Opposition in the Assembly Karpoori Thakur says: "It is definitely a good and daring job Dubey has done but if he is hoping to catch Harijan and Adivasi votes, he is mistaken. Political bases are not created through ordinances."

K.M. KISHAN

Dubey and his associates point out that the ordinance is the only way to help Harijans who rarely succeed in getting elected as mukhiyas.

The Government appeared in such a hurry to promulgate this ordinance that it even forgot to consult experts in the area. Bihar Rajya Panchayat Parishad Vice-Chairman Jageshwar Mandal says that the Government did not care to seek the opinion of the parishad which is an advisory body. He adds that the parishad successfully intervened when the Government wanted to take "wild and wide" measures. The parishad said that though reservation existed in Madhya Pradesh, its manner was different from that of Bihar. And no other state had barred MPs or legislators from being mukhiyas and, indeed, in many states, MPs and MLAs are associate members.

Incidentally, the Constitution does not provide for any reservation at the panchayat level. Last fortnight writ petitions were filed by several mukhiyas in the Patna High Court challenging the legality of the ordinance. As the judgement can have serious implications, it has been referred to a full bench which will hear it in May. Responding to the uncertainty, the state Cabinet has now decided to postpone elections until the legal mists clear.

There are many who feel that the ordinance is bound to heighten the caste and social tensions in villages where Harijans are already victims of atrocities which are committed regularly. This was evident during the 1978 panchayat elections in which, even by the official version, 57 people had been left dead and 350 injured—unofficial estimates indicated a death toll of more than 500. Since then, caste consciousness has increased manifold and this can only mean that the scale of violence in the next elections will be greater too.

Yet Dubey and his associates disagree and point out that the ordinance is the only way to help Harijans who rarely succeed in getting elected as mukhiyas. Says the Assembly's Deputy Speaker Shivanandan Paswan (of the Lok Dal): "Though Bihar's Harijan population is over one crore, there are only half-a-dozen Harijan mukhiyas in the state."

The recent government action has also drawn attention to a distressing fact: that the state Government has virtually ignored the three-month-old Supreme Court judgement which had made a scathing criticism of the state's habit of resorting to repromulgation of ordinances instead of getting bills passed in the Assembly. Since judgement day, the state Government has promulgated 29 ordinances and repromulgated another 17, although they could easily have been put up before the Assembly in the recently-concluded budget session. That the Government chose not to do so, although a boycott of the session by the Opposition had made its task easier, reflects poorly on its desire to respect the rule of law.

—FARZAND AHMED

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

 Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

KARNATAKA

Expansion Ills

FIVE months of speculation and suspense in Karnataka's political circles finally came to an end on April 26, with the expansion of the Ramakrishna Hegde Ministry. But with resentment and resignations surfacing in the party almost immediately afterwards, the chief minister was probably left wondering if he had created more problems than he had solved.

After securing the resignations of his 14 ministers, Hegde's reconstituted team comprised 34 ministers, 20 of cabinet rank, besides the chief minister himself. And initially, the new ministry looked so well balanced that few expected the tantrums which followed. Not only were all the state's 20 districts represented, even the proportional representation to the different castes, communities and religions seemed perfect. It comprised eight Lingayats, six Vokkaligas, two Bunts (who are sometimes categorised as Vokkaligas), eight backward classes, six Scheduled Castes, two Muslims and three Brahmins (including Hegde).

To counter allegations of non-representation of women, Hegde also included Shivakantha Chature. Another welcome aspect of the expansion was the infusion of fresh, young blood in the Cabinet. Hegde inducted as many as 11 new faces in the ministry. Said Hegde: "I wanted a blend of youth and experience, of dynamism and wisdom."

A variety of factors had prevented Hegde from pushing through with his expansion earlier. First, the party did not do particularly well in the zilla parishad poll in January. And since the mandal panchayat elections were to follow after a three-week gap, Hegde had to defer the exercise because he could not afford to risk any anti-party activities by ministers who would have been dropped. Then the Assembly's budget session followed the elections, and Hegde apparently felt that there would not be enough time for the new incumbents to pick up the threads of their ministerial responsibilities and effectively handle questions from the Opposition.

Four ministers—H.T. Krishnappa, K.M. Krishna Reddy, D. Manjunath and J.S. Deshmukh—were dropped from the outgoing cabinet, basically for what Hegde called "caste considerations". But there were other reasons too, and these ranged from shoddy performance to poor health.

On the other hand, 10 of the 14 ministers whom Hegde had dropped last June, following a memorandum submitted by 98 of the 144 Janata MLAs, were reinducted. Several of them were even given cabinet rank. Asked whether the earlier charges of corruption, inefficiency and arrogance against them had ceased to be valid, Hegde replied: "Actually, among these people, there were specific charges only against M. Raghupathy who, the MLAs felt, was arrogant. I think he has learnt his lesson."

BHAWAN SINGH

Hegde's new ministry looked so well balanced that few expected the resentful drama that followed its formation.

Raghupathy being sworn in: quick developments

But Raghupathy, who on April 26 had sworn eternal loyalty to Hegde for his reinduction—"I am so grateful to our chief minister"—made a volte face the next day when he learnt that he had been given the minor portfolio of ports and fisheries. On April 28, he threatened to resign not only from the ministry but also from the Assembly and swore to give up politics.

Raghupathy wasn't the only one to express his resentment. M.S. Narayana Rao resigned from his post of general secretary of the Janata Legislature Party, and Legislator Vishwanath Reddy Mundal gave in a letter to the assembly Speaker B.G. Banakar wanting to quit his seat. But Bankar rejected it on the grounds that it wasn't in the prescribed form. By April 28, party MLAs Leelavati Prasad and K.R. Molikere had also indicated their desire to quit their assembly seats, though neither had put anything down in writing.

Ironically, Hegde's failure to please everyone became evident only after he had formed the biggest-ever ministry in Karnataka. Its size had made a mockery of the Janata Party's oft-repeated claim of austerity. The Congress(I) was quick to point out that it was Hegde, among others, who had attacked the late Devraj Urs, then chief minister for expanding his ministry to 33. Criticism at the size also came from within the party ranks. Said Narayana Rao, who feels that the size of the ministry should not have exceeded 26: "The reputation of the chief minister himself will suffer because of the large size of the Cabinet and the improper choice of candidates." Though Rao's anger stems from the fact that none of his men have been included and because most of those dropped from the ministry following the legislators' memorandum have been reinducted, he was at pains to point out that "I am only registering my protest. There is no question of an open revolt. I myself will see to it that this does not snowball." While that may be so, with reports of dissident MLAs getting together coming in, Hegde will surely have to do a lot of pacifying in the coming days.

—ANITA PRATAP

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

ambiqueen

All that is gracious and gorgeous and sublime, thy style and majesty doth surpass . in your royal presence. on the fashion scene. IN A WORLD APART

Ambiqueen Sarees

Shri Ambica Mills Ltd

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Transasia unfolds a timeless creation in pure new wool.

Galaxy
Deluxe

Woolmark
(ऊनमार्क)

PURE NEW WOOL PILE

Experience the splendour.
Elegance, style and sophistication sprawled out at your feet.
Galaxy Deluxe wears the Woolmark.
The internationally recognised symbol guaranteeing the matchless qualities of pure new wool - exceptional durability and easy maintenance, rich colours and looks that last for years.

TRANSASIA

TransAsia Carpets

In collaboration with Bosmer of West Germany.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Binatone

3 YEAR QUARTZ GUARANTEE

on Colour Picture Tube

The result of Binatone's latest Quartz technology breakthrough—QCFS*. A unique invention that protects your colour picture tube all the time, scientifically proved by Binatone's R&D both in London and Japan.

No wonder more and more TV buyers are asking for Binatone Quartz TVs everyday.

So buy the latest. Buy the best.
Buy Binatone Quartz.
You won't find a better deal.

Binatone

Q QUARTZ | C COLOUR | F FILTER | S SYSTEM

Built better to last longer

For further details, contact your local dealer and in case of difficulty contact- Binatone Electronics Private Limited, 23/4788-90 Ansari Road, Darya Ganj, New Delhi-110002.

* Worldwide patent pending. Copyright reserved.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Arms Communications—416

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Gracious [greiʃəs] a. kind, benign, indulgent. b. gracious living, elegant way of life. At The Oberoi, Bombay, every one of our rooms and suites is a perfect example of gracious living. Here, you will find a sophisticated luxury created by the finest furnishings and fabrics in subtle shades. We've taken special care in designing spacious bathrooms with extensive vanity areas. And each room even has its own private dressing room. At The Oberoi, Bombay, gracious living is a way of life — because you deserve the best the world has to offer.

The Oberoi

BOMBAY

For reservations contact your Travel Agent or the Hotel direct: telephone 202 5757, telex 4153/4154 OBBY IN. Or any of the Oberoi Sales Offices.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

KARNATAKA

Tape Scrape

AFTER gaining extensive political mileage over the Moily tape scandal, the Janata Government in Karnataka now finds itself at the receiving end. Veerappa Moily, the Congress(I) leader who had been accused of trying to bribe legislator Byre Gowda in November 1983, has now been exonerated by the Justice R.G. Desai Commission while Gowda himself, an independent MLA who later joined the Janata and became a minister, has been indicted.

The scandal, which involved the supposed offering of Rs 2 lakh as bribe to Gowda to defect to the Congress(I), had provided the Janata Party a halo of self-righteousness, united the party MLAs and tarred the Congress(I)'s image indelibly. What had given the charge credibility was the alleged recording of the conversation between Gowda and Moily, who was then the Congress(I) leader of the Opposition.

But now, the Desai Commission, appointed by the Janata to bring out the truth, has ruled: "Conversation on the tape produced by Mr Byre Gowda is not the conversation between Mr Veerappa Moily and Mr C. Byre Gowda." The contradictions in Gowda's statements were many. Among them:

▶ In the original tape, there is no mention of the sum of Rs 2 lakh, whereas the transcript released earlier specifically mentions it. Gowda's explanation is that the amount only changed hands and that there was no talk regarding the amount. But Desai was not convinced.

▶ Gowda had mentioned the number of Moily's Ambassador car—fitted with a diesel engine—in which the taped conversation allegedly took place as MYV 5368. On verification, the commission found that the number belonged to a Standard Herald belonging to somebody else. Desai's observation was scathing: "It is admitted by Mr Gowda that he was owning an Ambassador car fitted with a diesel engine then. So the possibility of the tape having been prepared in his car cannot be ruled out."

▶ Gowda had alleged that the Centre had sent Bhajan Lal—"its expert in the art of horse-trading"—with massive funds to induce defections in Bangalore. But, during cross-examination, he admitted that he had not seen Lal himself, nor was he in a position to produce any proof to support this allegation.

▶ While Gowda claimed that many Janata legislators had been approached by Congress(I) inducers, not one testified before the commission.

▶ The claim that the agreement with Moily on the amount of bribe was reached a day before the taping incident proved mendacious—at the time at which Gowda claims that the deal was struck, Moily was attending a Public Accounts Committee meeting.

▶ While Janata leader Madhu Dandavate had said that Hegde had in his possession fingerprints taken from the currency notes, Gowda admitted during the commission's proceedings that no fingerprints had been taken.

▶ State BJP leader V.S. Acharya had said publicly that Gowda possessed letters from Moily—but this was untrue.

▶ Gowda had produced Lingaraj, a Congressman, who deposed that Moily had asked him in October 1983 to bribe Janata and independent legislators with Rs 50,000 to cross vote for Congress(I) candidates in the council elections. In fact, the council elections had been held six months earlier on March 31, 1983.

Gowda, however, was not happy with the judgement. Listing 14 reasons why he found the commission's report unacceptable, he said: "My complaint is that the commission went through the proceedings with the sole premeditated intention of exonerating Moily. All the evidence I submitted was discussed threadbare, just to find flaws. Moily made some admissions but these were not considered by the judge."

Gowda was also irked by the commission's conclusion that a portion of the transcript "must have been manipulated and concocted". "Am I so foolish? If I wanted to concoct, why should I do it in my own car and that too with all that disturbance and background noise?" he asked. His main grouse, however, was that the judge concluded definitely that the conversation was not between him and Moily although experts from the Indian Institute of Technology (IIT), Madras, had said they were not in a position to identify the voices in the time given to them. But Desai felt it "unnecessary to wait further" and announced the verdict on the basis of existing evidence. Gowda's bitterness was also directed against the Hegde Government for having accepted the report. Said Gowda: "The Government was in more of a hurry to accept the report than the commission was to submit it."

Congress(I) leaders, however, point out that for pledging loyalty to the Janata Party, Gowda had been rewarded with the chairmanship of the Karnataka Urban Water Supply and Drainage Board in August 1983. And after the sensational tapes scandal that blighted the Congress(I)'s reputation and electoral chances in March 1985, Gowda was made a cabinet minister. But in June 1986, he was among the 14 ministers who were dropped. Hegde, aware of the contradictions in Gowda's statements before the commission, knew which way things were heading and probably chose to drop him before the Congress(I) could demand his removal.

The commission's report, which has adversely affected the Janata image, has predictably been received with exhilaration by the Congress(I). Said Moily: "It is now clear that the entire Janata Government machinery had been used for the concoction of an episode and the preparation of a fraudulent document to support it." Moily's exoneration has provided the enfeebled Congress(I) an opportunity to once again flex its political muscle.

—ANITA PRATAP

Cartoon by AJIT NINAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

HARYANA

Dramatic Shift

WITH assembly elections in Haryana due in June, the state's politics, murky at the best of times, is getting murkier by the day. The dramatic shift last fortnight of the Congress(I) MP from Rohtak, Hardwari Lal, to the Lok Dal (Bahuguna), looked at first like the isolated gesture of a perennial defector. But now it seems to fit into a pattern in which the Congress(I) could find itself up against a sort of Congress(I) B-team fielded by its main opponent in the forthcoming elections, Chaudhuri Devi Lal.

Devi Lal has already managed to enlist in his Haryana Sangharsh Samiti the services of two former Congress(I) chief ministers, Bhagwat Dayal Sharma and Banarsi Das Gupta, as well as Ajit Singh, son of former Union agriculture minister Rao Birendra Singh, and a former Congress(I) legislator, Khurshid Ahmed. The exit of Hardwari Lal has enhanced the fears of an already worried Congress(I) not only because the going of a sitting MP is a serious matter on the eve of the crucial election but also because Hardwari Lal's proximity to Union Minister of Environment and Forests, Bhajan Lal, is well known.

It was Bhajan Lal, then chief minister, who had ensured a party ticket for Hardwari Lal and his hand is now being seen in his follower's departure as well. Bhajan Lal when questioned about this is all bluster and denial: "Hardwari Lal has left not because of me but because he is a man without any faith or honour. I gave him a ticket last time because I thought that he would finally stick somewhere. These stories of infighting in the Congress(I) are all rubbish. I have no problems with Bansi Lal."

Hardwari Lal himself, in his letter to Rajiv Gandhi, has mentioned stepmotherly treatment to Haryana and the Punjab accord as the reasons for quitting the party. His resignation letter reads: "Haryana, treated as a stepchild ever since its creation in 1966, was robbed of its due share of river waters and territory by the Punjab accord, which you concluded without consulting the representatives of the people. The accord has indeed negated the solemn promises made and formal agreement concluded in the past. What I have been saying in this regard has remained a cry in the wilderness." But when interviewed, he said he did not dislike Rajiv, "who is charming and cultured. But it is impossible to coexist with Bansi Lal".

The turning and twisting of Hardwari Lal, a former vice-chancellor of the Maharishi Dayanand University, Rohtak, and Kurukshetra University, are hard to follow. Just last June he had written to Surinder Singh, Bansi Lal's son, expressing happiness at his father having been made chief minister, adding: "Together we will be able to demolish Devi Lal." But last fortnight he calmly observed: "Devi Lal with his Sangharsh Samiti is Haryana's first true revolutionary."

PRASHANT PANJIAR

"I do not dislike Rajiv who is charming and cultured. But it is impossible to coexist with Bansi Lal."

HARDWARI LAL

The Congress(I) in Haryana appears to be quite overwhelmed at the moment by problems of coexistence within the party. A team of Congress(I) MPs' which returned to the capital recently after a preliminary reconnaissance of the state's political terrain, has pointed to a fairly dismal scenario if Bansi Lal and Bhajan Lal do not put personal differences aside. Said an MP who did not wish to be identified: "The Congress(I) vote in Haryana which comes mainly from the Brahmins, the backward castes and the Punjabis is still intact but if the infighting continues, there can be serious problems."

Ajit Singh, president of the Lok Dal faction that carries his name and from which Devi Lal separated with a large section of his Haryana unit intact, sees an even more devious plot behind the emergence of a Congress(I) B-team in Devi Lal's camp. Said Singh: "Bhajan Lal and Hardwari Lal basically want to see Bansi Lal out. They hope to do this by strengthening Devi Lal. I am not sure if this will work, however, because according to our reports, Devi Lal has lost a lot of credibility by taking in people like Hardwari Lal." Indeed, the Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP), an important constituent of the Haryana Sangharsh Samiti, and its state leader Mangal Sein have objected to the new entrant because "he is known to be a strong supporter of Congress(I)'s Bhajan Lal".

If the Congress(I) is facing problems, the Opposition isn't exactly without troubles of its own either. Ajit Singh admits frankly that Devi Lal's departure has been a blow to his party and that opposition leaders like Andhra Pradesh Chief Minister N.T. Rama Rao have tried to work out some sort of seat adjustment between the two groups. Said Ajit Singh: "It is not easy to fight the Government but Devi Lal thinks he is already a chief minister and can fight alone. He accuses us of being Congress(I) agents and then takes in people like Hardwari Lal. The only party which is going to benefit from all this is the Congress(I)."

With the farmers in Haryana totally involved at the moment in harvesting the wheat crop, public meetings are currently few and far in between. Election issues are yet to emerge. What is clear, however, is that the Haryana Sangharsh Samiti and the Lok Dal (Ajit Singh)-Janata combine will evolve their strategy around Rajiv Gandhi's alleged favouritism to Punjab. With the issue of territory and water already an explosive one, the ruling party is going to be hard-pressed to make a convincing stand unless all its local satraps and workers rally around.

—MADHU JAIN and TAVLEEN SINGH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

vote in om the
and the ighting serious

Lok Dal
d from a large ct, sees ind the eam in ajan Lal
t to see this by t sure if use acts, Devi edibility ple like eed, the ty (BJP), tuent of ngharsh
e leader jected to use "he ong sup-gress(I)'s is facing position troubles it Singh Devi Lal's his party

Andhra ma Rao rt of seat groups.
fight the ks he is can fight ngress(I) ople like which is s is the yana to-harvesttings are en. Elec-

What is Haryana
Dal (Ajit
olve their 's alleged e issue of explosive be hard-ng stand workers

EN SINGH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Concept of The Three-Da

For a 'perk' as attractive as the sabbatical, there are far too many resistances to making it a reality—not the least among these being the manager's own corporate stoicism and, of course, the genuine problems of continuity.

The need of course, is for creating among the more brilliant of one's people the mental spaces for creativity and personal innovation. Within the ordered routine of maintenance and day-to-day fire-fighting there is usually no mental room for the free movement of intuition and breakthrough thinking.

However, by a process of business evolution perhaps, senior executives worldwide seem to have fashioned as it were a clever, convenient, legitimate and effective substitute for the real thing—the quick, business-dictated trip outside the work city. Be it the geographical stimulus of another place or the mere distancing from the sources of expediency, managers have confessed to a perceptible shift in patterns of thinking during these trips.

A study of this phenomenon of contemporary business metaphysics inspired the hospitality designers of Welcomgroup to innovate a totally new genre of hotel services. "Can we", they asked themselves, "create an environment for the encouragement of this 'mental space' for executives?" They realised that it called for more than the obvious provision of commercial facilities like secretarial services and equipment. It meant carving out a whole new quality of properties and services. It involved programmes of executive life-style study and, very important, intensive training programmes for a new breed of hotel managers and personnel.

Maurya Sheraton Towers

Thus was born the idea of the Maurya Sheraton Towers.

saw t
the M

Busi of th club;
inco

hosp intel unob effic
the p whic

Mau imag
and on b
of th

Dipl

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Three-Day Working Sabbatical.

When we in the advertising agency were briefed about this unique concept and were 'shown the product', it was indeed difficult to contain the hyperbole of traditional advertese. The glossy photographs of the highlights of the Maurya Towers property and the services looked impressive; but we saw too the inadequacy of all these to convey the real discriminator between the Maurya Towers and other five-star deluxe hotels.

The exclusivity of each floor, the elegant design of the rooms; the Business Centre and conference rooms; the intellectual stimulation of the Tower Club with its library and bar, the dining room and the health club; the exquisite taste with which every corner is designed...all these were incomparable, but in a way not the real discriminators.

What makes the Maurya Towers another genre in the art of executive hospitality is the intangibles which the sensitive and mature intellect will perceive—in the finesse, the unobtrusiveness of the service, the incredible efficiency, the charm and the flair with which the personnel allow you that 'mental space' which in fact is possible during your stay.

Admittedly not for everybody, the Maurya Towers should be seen as an imaginative investment in creativity for you and your nucleus of brilliant people. Perhaps the next time you are in Delhi on business, it may be a good idea to try this attractive new idea of the micro-mini working sabbatical.

The Maurya Sheraton Towers at Welcomgroup Maurya Sheraton, Diplomatic Enclave, New Delhi-110 021

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Jugful of Rasna, mmm...
I'll beat him anyday, yaar."

Mudra:A:N: 3358

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Rasna

SO ORANGIE-ORANGIE!

INDIA'S LARGEST SELLING SOFT DRINK CONCENTRATE

Manufactured by: Rasna Industries, Asoka, Ahmedabad-380 016.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

10,00

Dunlop Radial Maruti tyr

A classi of Ma

Dunlop is Dunlop Alwa

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

000 tyres on the road!

DUNLOP

Radial Class

A classier way to travel–say thousands of Maruti owners. How about you?

DUNLOP
Radial Car Tyre

Always ahead.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

You can enjoy the same cooker that's the favourite in America's top department store

The Hawkins Futura has been exported to leading department stores in the United States of America. This success is based on unique consumer benefits and product design that has been awarded patents in the United States of America and the United Kingdom.

In actual cooking trials the Hawkins Futura on average proved 46% faster than microwave cooking.

The Hawkins Futura's beautiful, jewel-grey Satilon finish combines the advantages of quick-heating aluminium with the non-tarnish quality of stainless steel.

The fingertip control provides safe, automatic, direction-controlled steam release.

Enjoy cooking in the world's latest and best pressure cooker – the Hawkins Futura.

Twenty-nine traditional Hawkins models are also available from Rs. 180* upwards.

Hawkins Futura pressure cookers on display in a Bloomingdale's store in New York. Bloomingdale's is America's leading department store chain for high-quality products.

Hawkins®

FUTURA™

The New Generation pressure cooker

* Maximum recommended retail price excluding all taxes. Check with your nearest Hawkins dealer. If you need further information write to: Hawkins Cookers Ltd., Dept. No. 102, P.O. Box 6481, Bombay 18. ® Registered Trade Mark © 1987 Copyright by Hawkins Cookers Ltd. ™ Trade Mark. Patent pending.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Unlawful Marriages

CHILD marriages—banned by the law—continue to take place and enforcement authorities continue to look the other way, especially if the families of VIPs are involved. In Madhya Pradesh, a Congress(I) MP, an MLA and a general secretary of a District Congress(I) Committee (DCC-I) were among the ruling party leaders who attended a function arranged by a colleague, Indore Premier Cooperative Bank Director Hukum Singh Panwar, to celebrate the wedding of his daughters, Prembai, 6, and Sonabai, 4, and nephew Bhagwanan, 10. A social worker of Indore, who had learned of the event, lodged a report in advance with the police in Indore, and also rushed telegrams and petitions to the SP of Indore, seeking his intervention.

Child marriage near Indore: continuing evil

But Hukum Singh, an office-bearer of the Block Congress(I) Committee, kept the police at bay by ensuring the presence of bigwigs such as Radhakrishna Malaviya, Rajya Sabha member and Indore DCC(I) Chief, Rameshwar Patel, MLA from Deialpur and a general secretary of the DCC(I), and R.C. Verma, chairman of the Indore Premier Cooperative Bank and another general secretary of the DCC(I). Says the social worker, who has been running from pillar to post for action against the culprits: "I provided all evidence to the police but instead of taking any action they are threatening people who gave information."

Statue Stealing

IN the weeks to come, the Gujarat police is expected to dig deeper into a suspected international idol running racket carried out with much finesse by Vijay Aggarwal and his accomplice Gajendra Prasad Aggarwal, who have been arrested in the case.

Vijay Aggarwal would dress trendily, sling a camera across his shoulder and visit various temples like any tourist. He would then take snaps of the idols from every possible angle. Next, he would visit the local historian with the prints, pretending to be a novice who wished to learn the details and value of the statue. The photographs, complete with footnotes, would later be taken to antique dealers and bargains struck.

Gajendra Prasad Aggarwal would then take over. He was the brain behind the removal of priceless statues, some of which were carved into the rock walls of the temples. The two did this, either by bribing the temple priests or conning them into believing that they were experts who had been assigned to touch up and restore weather-beaten statues. Many temples gladly surrendered the statues in the belief that they would be restored and returned. Of course, they were not. Police now suspect that they have uncovered the tip of an iceberg with international ramifications involving crores of rupees.

Real Estate Scandal

REAL estate, it is said, is the broad foundation on which nearly all the guilt of this world rests. Last fortnight the Bihar Government came close to pleading guilty in what is widely known as the "Vijay Housing Cooperative Society land scandal". The multi-crore scandal, which involves, among others, Revenue Minister Ramjaipal Singh Yadav, set the state afire following an expose by the Patna edition of Nav Bharat Times, a Hindi daily.

The scandal revolves around the circumstances under which Yadav allotted 128 acres of choice irrigated farmland on the outskirts of the state capital to the cooperative society for a song—a paltry Rs 2.62-crore against the estimated market price of Rs 12.5 crore. Even curiouser was the fact that the society paid the entire amount through cheques even though its bank balance was only Rs 1 lakh at the time. No less intriguing is the fact that in October 1984 when Yadav was the agriculture minister, he had opposed this move. And last September Chief Minister Bindeshwari Dubey had decreed that the Government should not allot farmland for non-farming purposes. However, despite this announcement, the land was allotted by Yadav on March 22, even before the Patna High Court could adjudicate writ petitions filed by villagers challenging the proposed move.

K.M. KISHAN

Yadav: dubious moves

Patna Divisional Commissioner Krishna Singh expressed strong opposition to the proposal in a letter to the Government. But she was sidelined. The minister asked his department to withhold all files from her, and awarded the land without any investigation of the genuineness of the society and its financial health. Last fortnight, Dubey found himself trapped in the controversy. Following an initial silence on the issue, he called a high-level meeting and took Yadav and several officials to task for their failure to check the antecedents of the society. Dubey has now ordered an inquiry into the deal and asked the officials to stop proceedings for the acquisition of land.

Protesting Doctors

NOW it is the turn of the 5,990 state employed doctors to cripple the already shoddy health services in Andhra Pradesh. Last fortnight they decided to "work to rule" in protest against the Government's decision to ban private practice. Alternatively, they are demanding fatter pay packets—costing a staggering Rs 36-crore—as compensation for the ban. State Health Minister Dr M.S. Koteswara Rao, himself a physician, admits the doctors have a case for "a decent non-private practice allowance (NPPA) but demands like conveyance allowance, rent-free accommodation, risk allowance and secretarial assistance is like asking for the moon."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The doctors argue that they were always given a raw deal. Says Dr A. Gopalkrishan, chairman of the agitating doctors coordination committee: "For a long time assistant engineers and deputy superintendents of police got less and deputy collectors and munsif magistrates were on par with civil assistant surgeons. Now all of them get more." But the minister insists that the state has been more than generous because it has recommended a compensatory allowance of about Rs 500 for assistant, deputy, and civil surgeons, as recommended by the pay revision commission. The doctors are not satisfied. In 1983, when the ban was to have come into effect, the doctors obtained a stay from the high court to continue private practice. When the Supreme Court, in another verdict some months ago, declared that state governments have the right to prescribe service conditions for doctors and ban private practice, the Andhra Pradesh Government moved the high court, got the stay vacated and imposed the ban. With the Government firm on its stand on the ban, and the doctors determined to fight it, the crisis could carry on.

Airy Altercation

ONCE again Maharashtra's volatile Minister of State for Education Chandrika Kenia was at the centre of a self-created public controversy, and as it happened, this time the storm broke several thousand feet in the air in an Indian Airlines Avro flight from Pune to Bombay. The young, attractive Congress(I) politician, who in the past has got into public squabbles with newspaper photographers, journalists, student unions and other Congress(I) leaders, was involved in a messy altercation on board IC 102 on its brief, half-hour journey. By the time she landed in Bombay, Kenia was so incensed that she wrote out an eight-page complaint charging two air hostesses for not providing prompt services and accused them of "rude behaviour", adding, "If the air hostesses do not improve their behaviour, God save Indian Airlines and Air-India".

Chandrika Kenia: in a self-created public storm

Indian Airlines immediately ordered an inquiry, which found that the air hostesses had in fact behaved properly and done an excellent job looking after the passengers in the short duration of the flight. Two of the passengers submitted their written testimonies to the airline, and one of them, a passenger from Pune, wrote as if in response to Kenia's complaint: "If such people become ministers, God help our country". In response, Kenia has written a letter to Indian Airlines protesting that their inquiry was "hasty, unfair, and one-sided." She is determined to pursue the matter.

Close Connections

THE days when the judiciary and executive seemed to be pitted against each other in Tamil Nadu are no more. The state Government and the Madras High Court used to consistently disagree on recommendations for higher judicial vacancies, and instances are legion where judges have set aside executive actions.

During the second half of last year, Chief Justice M.N. Chandurkar of the Madras High Court wrote no less than three letters to Chief Minister M.G. Ramachandran seeking an appointment to formally invite him to participate in the 125th anniversary of the high court. MGR treated the requests for appointment typically—he didn't respond. Neither politicians nor journalists enjoy access to the enigmatic chief minister.

MGR: enigmatic

But the ice between the chief justice and the chief minister has now thawed. Last month, Chandurkar had a two-hour pow-wow with MGR. After that, the first bench of the high court, consisting of Chief Justice Chandurkar himself and Justice M. Srinivasan, upheld the Assembly resolution expelling 10 DMK MLAs for burning the Constitution. The high court has also submitted 18 recommendations for district judges' posts, from which the Government will select six names.

Hollow Protests

THE Opposition in Uttar Pradesh has now reached the stage of bare survival. Two unsuccessful gheraoes of Chief Minister Bir Bahadur Singh, last fortnight, revealed not only the hollow unity among them, but also more than amply demonstrated that they were without a leg to stand on.

The newly formed Krantikari Morcha—comprising the Lok Dal(B), Janata, Congress(J), CPI and CPI(M)—was created on the rebound. Mulayam Singh Yadav, opposition leader of the Vidhan Sabha, united with other "like minded parties", in response to the Lok Dal(A)'s move to dislodge him. And to make its presence felt, the morcha decided to gherao the chief minister to protest the hike in power tariff for private tubewells, bus fares and registration fee for commercial vehicles.

But the cracks in the Opposition combine were manifest at their pre-gherao meeting itself. They could not arrive at a consensus memorandum as one section demanded Rajiv Gandhi's dismissal and the other protested against the demand. Interestingly, the Lok Dal(A) also put up a similar show on April 25 outside Singh's office. However, the Government's reaction to both was similar. The protestors were first arrested and then released after a sumptuous lunch on the house.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Reaching out to you. Wherever you are.

A nationwide network of sales offices, stockyards, warehouses and consignment agencies maintaining close contact with customers.

A team of helpful application engineers, advising on product usage.

A Company where marketing is not an impersonal sale of products.

That is Tata Steel.

Reaching out to customers.

Responding to ideas on new product development.

Ensuring that commitments made are kept.

Constantly searching for ways to serve you better.

Tata Steel. The Company that is closer to you.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

TATA STEEL

The first and still the foremo

 Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ISKCON

The Palace of Intrigue

SIXTY miles west of the steel city of Pittsburgh, the six-lane highway yields to a narrow winding hill road. At several sharp bends, bright, big signboards indicate the distance to the destination, Prabhupada's Palace of Gold. The $ 7 million (Rs 9 crore) palace in a 4,000-acre commune called New Vrindavan straddles the Appalachian Hills in West Virginia, and now ranks as the second-biggest tourist attraction in the state. But recently the commune, its 700 "Krishna conscious" residents and their chief, Swami Bhaktipada, have been in the news because of serious criminal allegations against them. To find out the facts Special Correspondent SHEKHAR GUPTA visited New Vrindavan, and talked to scores of devotees, federal officials, and local politicians. His report:

The commune's brochures call it the Taj Mahal of America. The leaders of the International Society for Krishna Consciousness (ISKCON) call it a magnificent tribute to the glory of Krishna. But for the average American, the New Vrindavan commune, the showpiece of the entire ISKCON movement, is fast becoming familiar for entirely non-spiritual reasons.

The commune and its spiritual and temporal leader, His Divine Grace Swami Kirtanananda Bhaktipada, face charges ranging from murder to panhandling (begging), child molestation to copyright violations, and from kidnapping to tax evasion. The Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) and the Internal Revenue Service (IRS) have already raided the commune and taken away a truckload of documents, files and even computers. The FBI and the Marshall County police have been investigating charges of murder and drug smuggling while a Federal Grand Jury has been looking into the entire gamut of charges for the past six months. To take the controversy to a still higher pitch last month, the supreme Governing Body Council (GBC) of ISKCON, based at Mayapore in West Bengal, has expelled Bhaktipada from the society.

Bhaktipada, who himself is a member of the council, was accused by the GBC of turning the commune into a "centre of controversy in which bodies have recently been exhumed and former members convicted of murder and charged with child molestation". He has also been charged with attempting to "establish himself as the sole spiritual heir to ISKCON". Bhaktipada has responded by undertaking a publicity tour of the US, organised through a New York-based public relations firm, talking to millions of Americans every day on radio and television talk shows, dismissing the attacks on his commune as part of a right-wing conservative federal campaign against the cult (see interview). Even the spokesmen of the GBC admit that they cannot dislodge him from the commune since "he has built New Vrindavan almost independently". Says Bhaktipada of the GBC: "We have been preaching the glory of Krishna while they bothered themselves about mundane management issues."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Vrindavan commune in West Virginia; and Bhaktipada: controversial haven

In a way, the commune's problems began three years ago as the population there increased and there was a resource crunch. The devotees were building the entire commune, including the ornate palace of gold with its Italian and French crystal, marble and gold-plating, other temples, a lake and gardens entirely on their own, without blueprints and using just do-it-yourself books. Some money was raised through panhandling, some through generous donations from the 30,000 life members, most of them rich Indians and some, the commune's critics allege, through shady deals.

These critics included Steven Bryant, a Krishna follower estranged from his faith and his wife Jane, alias Jamuna Devi Dasi, a British devotee. Frustrated and angry, Bryant left the faith and carried on a relentless one-man crusade against Bhaktipada and his commune until someone put two bullets from a high-calibre handgun into his skull in Los Angeles in May last year. But Bryant dead is more of a nightmare for the commune than when he was alive. Says Marshall County Sheriff Donald Bordenkirscher, who has stalked the Krishnas unflinchingly for more than two years now: "When Bryant came to us with allegations of child molestation and drug smuggling against the commune we thought he was a man frustrated in life and spurned in marriage. But now he has become a martyr. All that he said has acquired a new significance."

For months before his death, Bryant had threatened to destroy New Vrindavan to get his wife—who had been married off to another devotee by

Bryant (right); and his wife and son: suspicious killing

CC-0 ... Gurukul Ka... n, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Long before your clothes were rolls of cloth, we thought up the drape and handle of your trousers, the sharpness of the crease, the soft comfort of your shirt, the richness of shades...

Because all this is determined by the quality of the fibre used for the yarn used for the fabric.

Jailene.

The premium Polyester Staple Fibre, imparts the desired feel and appearance to your clothing.

Your dream clothing. Swadeshi Polytex makes it possible.

jailene®

SP

Swadeshi Polytex Limited

creating tomorrow's fibre today.

Shems/2722

Style courtesy : Kalamandir

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Bhaktipada—and his children back. When he tried to smuggle his children out, he was caught and beaten up by other devotees. He then got together with other bitter ex-devotees to churn out reams and reams of charges against the commune. And finally, when even that failed, he appeared one day in Moundsville, near New Vrindavan, with a loaded Colt .45 revolver threatening to kill Bhaktipada.

At that point, the police were vigilant as an attempt on Bhaktipada's life had already taken place: Michael Shockman, another frustrated follower, had hit him on the head with an iron rod and nearly killed him. Says Bhaktipada: "Bryant told the police he had come to complete the job Shockman had started. And yet they did not prosecute him. They just let him go. Even Shockman was given just a minor sentence. He was never charged with attempted murder. All this makes you suspect if there is any

SWAMI BHAKTIPADA

"Our problem is success"

IT is hard to fault his sense of style. The latest Karma Cola Guru to hit American headlines has a personalised car number-plate that reads 'Acharya'. He takes a few bites out of a huge ornate thali at a ceremonial feast and walks away majestically as the leftovers are distributed as prasadam to squatting devotees, most of them rich Indian expatriates who pay upwards of a thousand dollars every year for a week's blissful stay at the New Vrindavan. In the imposing study of his temple-house, a tube of Vicco Vajradanti Ayurvedic toothpaste shares a shelf with expensive perfumes. Tapes of Bach nestle alongside those containing devotional ragas and bhajans, and the book Sex Can Be Harmful To Your Health adorns a book case full of both spiritual and philosophical literature.

A large German Shepherd named Gadushaka, one of the many names of Arjuna in the Hindu epic Mahabharata, follows His Divine Grace Kirtanananda Swami Bhaktipada (nee Keith Ham of Peekskill, New York). Swami Bhaktipada says he acquired the dog after an attempt on his life that nearly killed him only three years ago. That blow on his skull from a disgruntled devotee left him with an unsteady gait, loss of sensation in the limbs and also a defective vision.

Today Bhaktipada, a Christian minister's son who once dabbled in American religious history as a Fulbright Fellow at the Columbia University and ended up in the International Society for Krishna Consciousness (ISKCON) in his search for Nirvana, asserts in an interview with Special Correspondent SHEKHAR GUPTA that "we are fighting on behalf of the entire Hindu faith" and dismissed allegations against the commune. Excerpts:

Q. How can you continue to head New Vrindavan when you have been expelled by ISKCON's Governing Body Council (GBC)?

A. Because the GBC's action is all politics. They were afraid of associating with someone who had so many charges against him. They never even notified us. Now they have realised their folly and want me to return. Someone told me your problem is success. They were afraid of that.

SHEKHAR GUPTA

Bhaktipada: committed cultist

Q. Would you say that after the death of Swami Prabhupada you are ISKCON's supreme leader?

A. Yes, it amounts to that. After Prabhupada's death the GBC failed to run the movement efficiently. The followers were going away. Now I am reversing that process.

Q. But didn't the GBC say that you were being expelled because of the serious criminal charges and mismanagement at New Vrindavan?

A. There is no evidence. Anyone can make charges. Socrates was called a child molester and Christ a cheat. The KGB chief Beria said give me a man and I will give you a charge. The Federal Grand Jury has investigated us for six months and found nothing.

Q. But haven't there been murders among your followers?

A. In this country a murder takes place every 20 seconds. But when others kill they are not called Baptist, Catholic or Jew murderers. Why do people then go around saying two Krishnas killed each other, when both had already left ISKCON?

Q. But Thomas Drescher, accused of murder, says you gave him $3,000 to follow Stephen Bryant.

A. I only gave the money to the head of our Ohio Mission to buy a vehicle. I can't be held accountable for who he gave it to. In fact, the police are fabricating the case on evidence by a drug addict and a prostitute.

Q. And wasn't there also a confirmed case of child molestation in your commune's school?

A. Child molestation is a huge, huge problem. Something like this happens in every school. But because of that how can you go around saying Krishnas are hiding child molesters? We stand against all illicit sex.

Q. How can you go around saying that anything said against your commune is motivated?

A. Because there was a Federal decision a year ago to get rid of cults. It is part of the new conservatism with which the Mormons, the Scientologists, the Moonies and the Seventh Day Adventists have already had problems. The conservatives say, you are not mainline faiths, so we don't want you. So we are harassed.

Q. How much damage have the charges done to your campaign?

A. None at all. On the other hand, by the grace of Krishna we have got this marvellous opportunity to spread our message. People want to know about us and that is good for us.

Q. Do you think you will survive the current pressures?

A. Yes, indeed. As the scriptures say there are two kinds of people, devotees and demons. Krishna promised in the Gita: "It is my promise my devotees shall never perish." So we don't worry about demons at all.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

collusion between these people and the police." But the police promptly put Bryant into jail. Not long after, he was shot in his van while he sat chanting hare Rama hare Krishna.

The man suspected for the murder is Peter Drescher, another former Krishna follower. Drescher, significantly, had already been convicted for the murder in June 1983 of Charles St Denise whose body, wrapped in polythene and weighed down with bricks, was dug out of a shallow lake near the commune. According to the conviction, Drescher and his accomplice Daniel Reid, who pleaded guilty in court, killed St Denise for reasons impossible to establish.

The Los Angeles police looking into Bryant's murder and the Marshall County Sheriff's Department say Drescher was an enforcer for the commune. The West Virginia police say that St Denise, a regular visitor to the commune, was a cocaine addict and peddler. "We all suspect that drugs may have been involved, particularly considering the brutal murder," says a Marshall County policeman. St Denise was shot at least 10 times, then stabbed several times till the blade of the knife broke and then hammered in the head. In contrast, Bryant's death was more merciful.

The police say that Drescher has admitted to the fact of having been a spy and said that he had been paid $ 3,000 (Rs 38,600) by Bhaktipada to keep an eye on Bryant. But he claims that he had returned to Columbus, Ohio, a day before Bryant was killed.

With the police asserting that Drescher was hired by the commune to kill Bryant because of his campaign against Bhaktipada, the trial in Los Angeles promises to be a major media event. But even the most exhaustive trial will not be able to answer all the questions raised by the happenings at the commune, which look interconnected and yet form no logical sequence. For example:

► About a year after St Denise's murder, his five-year-old son as well as the six-year-old son of his self-confessed murderer, Daniel Reid, were found suffocating inside a refrigerator in the commune. According to the Rolling Stones magazine, which carried a damning article on New Vrindavan, they had a dead bunny lodged between them.

► Last November, six months after Bryant was murdered in Los Angeles, his three-year-old son was found dead in a lake at the commune.

► Just two days after Drescher was arrested by the police, an explosion blew up the house of Ranjal Gorby, another commune hanger-on and drug addict with whom Drescher stayed and who reported to the police on Drescher.

But commune leaders say there is no connection between the incidents. Says Bhaktipada: "There is no evidence linking Drescher with Bryant's death. And his earlier conviction for St Denise's death was purely on circumstantial evidence. It could have only been done in the court here for it was so biased."

Drescher's trial in Los Angeles promises to be a major media event, with the police asserting that he was hired by the commune to kill Bryant because of his campaign against Bhaktipada.

Commune leaders also say that Gorby's house was blown up because he was stealing on the gas company by rigging his supply lines. And the defence on the death of Bryant's child comes from none else than his mother Jamuna, Bryant's estranged wife. Says she: "It was purely an accident. Who would need to kill a three-year-old child?"

On the other hand, the New Vrindavan leaders find it harder to rebut the other major charge of child abuse against them. The sheriff's office has already arrested Frederick Difransisco, assistant to the headmaster of the commune school—called Gurukula—and Larry Gardner. The headmaster has fled to either India or Texas to evade arrest on charges of child molestation. They are accused by Susan Hebel, a former commune member, of repeatedly molesting her 13-year-old son. Bhaktipada doesn't deny the charge outright but says that child abuse is a "huge, huge" problem and happens in every school of the world: "Far from insulting women and children, we look after them much better than the rest of the American society."

He accuses the police, the press and the courts of having launched a tirade to destroy his movement. "The Rolling Stones magazine will get its answer in court. We are also initiating action against the others," he says. He points out that the investigation against the commune had begun merely on the charges that the devotees were violating copyright laws by printing and selling T-shirts, mementoes, badges and pendants in the name of well-known social organisations and sports clubs to raise money but have now been raised to much higher levels by involved parties. He claims that his publicity blitz has left the Reagan Administration unnerved.

But one thing neither Bhaktipada nor his followers deny is the sudden fall in donations since New Vrindavan hit the headlines. The commune's Architectural and Planning Director Murti Das points out that the commune's grandiose new temple project—to be completed by 1995—will need a hundred million dollars (Rs 129 crore): "We have hired the same company that brass-plated the Statue of Liberty. The entrance to the temple will be bigger than the Gateway of India and the prayer hall substantially bigger than St Paul's Cathedral at 48,000 sq ft." Such an enterprise obviously requires large-scale funding. The devotees also admit that while in a normal year 300,000 tourists visit the temple, paying $ 4 (Rs 51) each as entrance fee—besides buying souvenirs and food at the commune shops—the inflow has suffered this year.

But Bhaktipada is confident that the Indian community in the US "which is the second-richest minority after the Jews" will not let him down. If, and when, he succeeds, he will have built the most striking monument in the western world for the glory of Hinduism. However, before that dream is realised he will have to survive a few court cases and a tough, square-jawed and determined Sheriff Bordenkirscher, who has made the investigation of New Vrindavan the biggest challenge of his life.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Shalimar Paints comes off with flying colours

At Jakarta recently, Shalimar Paints won the Seventh International Asia Award - the continent's most coveted corporate trophy.

The Award, presented by the Trade Leaders Club, recognises Shalimar Paints for its quality and range of products, for its contribution to the economic development of the region.

A triumph for Shalimar Paints.
A proud moment for India.

Sculpture by Martin Perillán of Spain

Contract-SPI-1-87

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Some of the best things that have happened to The Thapar Group are just about to happen.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Thapar Group steady and sustained growth is an ...ent trait. This has made the Group India's third largest business ...ngomerate. Today, the Group is capitalising on its broad based ...ations and resources and on its ability to manage diversity. The ...e is exciting.

...T : India's first colour picture tubes

Anticipating the high demand for colour TV sets, JCT is ...eading The Thapar Group's thrust into the field of electronics ...h JCT Electronics Ltd., a project to manufacture half a million colour ...ure tubes for the first time in India, in technical collaboration with ...hi, the world's No.1 in colour picture tubes.

...LT : Nylon 6,6 industrial yarn and fabric with Du Pont

BILT enters the field of man-made fibres with Du Pont equity ...ipation for the first time in India. A project to introduce India to ...e benefits of Nylon 6,6 industrial yarn and fabric. The Company's ...ent tyre cord will revolutionise the Indian tyre industry.

...T presents polyester staple fibre

Punjab Polyfibres Ltd. will shortly give India 30,000 TPA of ...ester staple fibre, the popular fibre of today, in a wide range ...ding speciality fibres. The project is in technical collaboration ...h Zimmer AG. of West Germany.

...LT : Acrylic with Du Pont

BILT, through Himlon Ltd., will give India acrylic staple fibre ...h Du Pont technology to cater to special and emerging end uses.

NODE : Telecommunications and office automation systems

A new multi-product company from BILT, in technical collaboration with Oki Electric Industry Co. of Japan. The products : EPABX systems, telex and facsimile machines.

Greaves Dresser Atlas Industries Ltd.

A new resource for the oil sector. In technical and financial collaboration with Dresser Industries Inc. of USA to provide wireline logging and perforating services, data analysis and other allied services.

Greaves Morganite Crucibles Ltd.

A joint venture with Morganite Crucibles of U.K. to give India silicon carbide crucibles for the metals industry.

Crompton Greaves : A quantum leap in technology

This high performance company is paving its way into the future with existing technical collaborations with Westinghouse, Hitachi, Mitsubishi and many more international giants.

These are some of the areas, The Thapar Group has chosen for the future. The range of activities are diverse. The common underlying philosophy and goals, however, remain constant. Quality. Better Technology. Leadership. And Success.

The Thapar Group

Growth From A Position Of Strength

ULKA-D-TG-369/3A

...ar Group Companies ■ Jagatjit Cotton Textile Mills Ltd. ■ Ballarpur Industries Ltd. ■ Crompton Greaves Ltd. ■ Greaves Cotton & Co. Ltd. ■ Karam Chand Thapar & ...C.S.) Ltd. ■ JCT Electronics Ltd. ■ Northern Digital Exchanges Ltd. ■ Punjab Polyfibres Ltd. ■ Chitram & Co. Ltd. ■ Greaves Midwest Engg. Co. Ltd. ■ Greaves Foseco ...ion & Hornsby (India) Ltd. ■ Greaves Semiconductors Ltd. ■ Greaves Dresser Atlas Oilfield Ltd. ■ Andhra Pradesh Rayons Ltd. ■ Kerala Electric Lamp Works ■ Jg ...Ltd ■ Bharat Starch & Chemicals Ltd. ■ English India Clays Ltd. ■ David Brown Greaves Ltd. ■ Greaves Morganite Crucibles Ltd. ■ India City Properties Ltd. ■ United ...Ltd ■ Himlon Ltd ■ Karam Chand Thapar & Brothers Ltd. ■ Borosil Glass Works Ltd.

...ral Areas ■ Paper & Pulp ■ Electronics ■ Textiles ■ Man-made Fabrics ■ Electrical Engineering ■ Chemicals ■ Oil Sector ■ Glass ■ Hydro Power ■ Biotechnology ...engineering ■ Renewable Energy ■ Construction ■ Food & Allied Industries ■ Mining ■ Investment ■ R & D ■ Consultancy ■ Exports ■ Shipping & Distribution.

...Ventures ■ Ballarpur Industries Acrylic Staple Fibre, Nylon 6,6 Tyre Cord & Fabric, Telecommunication and Office Automation Systems ■ ...ugat Cotton Textile Mills Ltd. Colour Picture Tubes, Polyester Staple Fibre ■ Greaves Cotton Silicon Carbide Crucibles, Drilling Equipment and services to the ...sector ■ Crompton Greaves Telephone Instruments, Office Automation Systems, Consumer Durables, Project Eng. ■ KCT (Coal Sales) Chemicals

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Silken patchwork bedwear. You'll feel great using them any way.

INDIA'S LEADING FURNISHING FABRIC SPECIALISTS

JAGDISH STORE

2404, Hardhian Singh Road, Karol Bagh New Delhi-110005, Phones : 5717985, 5711251, 5728349

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

FAVOURABLE RULING

THE Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices Commission has upheld the refusal by International Instruments Ltd, the Bangalore dashboard meters outfit, to register some of its equity which three investment firms had acquired. Last October's ruling, which came to light recently, links the three firms with Sanjay Dalmia. The investment firms had appealed to the commission against the company's decision, claiming they had bought the shares in the normal course and had no links with the Dalmia group. But International Instruments argued that the Dalmias' stake in the company would go up to 16 per cent if the shares were registered and help them to gain control of it; that Dalmia had held talks with their German collaborators on buying their 16 per cent holding, and produced letters from the German officials to back the point. While all three denied this, the commission plumped for International Instruments' version as the firms had not submitted their shareholders' lists.

MUSHROOM GROWTH

PONDS India is planning a new sortie on the export front, with a project based in Tamil Nadu for exporting canned mushrooms. This marks yet another diversification for a company that had started out with cosmetics and then moved into the leather industry and other areas. Thus, Ponds is already selling thermometers to Canada and the UK, shoe uppers to Germany, Japan and the US, and cosmetics to the Soviet Union. The mushroom project could be followed up with yet others, because serious thinking is now going on regarding the role to be played by the different companies in the Lever group (Ponds' overseas shareholding was recently acquired by Unilever).

CARS STALLED

ALL the companies that had hoped to enter the car industry, and who had tied up collaborations with leading international manufacturers, have now virtually given up hope of their efforts fructifying. The new automobile policy being hammered out by a government committee has more or less decided that no new capacity need be created till 1990. This knocks out Tata Engineering and Locomotive Company (which had tied up with Honda), Escorts (which had teamed up with Citroen), the Raunaq Singh group (BMW), the Mahindras (Peugeot) and others, not to mention the Soviet gambit of trying to get the Lada made in India. The Lada project could however materialise as a 100 per cent export unit at Madras.

DRY CLEANING

ESCORTS may finally be rid of its dry dock, a Rs 20-crore white elephant that has been costing the company Rs 4 crore in losses every year. The navy has offered to buy the dry dock, but at no more than its book value—with the company bearing the cost of moving the dock to where the navy wants it. The dry dock—the first in the country—was acquired by Escorts five years ago as part of a tax-saving plan, but promptly ran into problems over its being moored near the Nhava Sheva port. The rapid devaluation of the rupee since 1982 made the foreign exchange loan on the dry dock very expensive to repay. And though Escorts feels the price is unattractive, it is glad to be rid of the burden.

STEADY RISE

POLITICAL uncertainty and a depressed share market are both tailor-made situations that persuade people to invest in bullion. And true enough, both gold and silver prices have been rising steadily in recent weeks. Gold has climbed from Rs 2,560 for 10 grams in early April to Rs 2,725 on April 20—a rise of over 6 per cent in three weeks. This has also been helped by rising world prices for gold, following the dollar's slide. Silver in turn has topped the Rs 5,000 mark for the first time ever, hitting Rs 5,067 for a kg on April 20—up by almost 10 per cent from the level of Rs 4,604 in early March.

Chart by B K. SHARMA

POWER TUSSLE

SHARP differences have surfaced between the Department of Power and Bharat Heavy Electricals Ltd (BHEL) over the power equipment manufacturer's future. The state-owned BHEL notched up record sales and profits last year, but is worried that imports will squeeze its business in the eighth five-year plan period. Over half the power equipment orders placed so far for 1990-95 have gone to foreign suppliers because they were tied to bilateral aid deals. Going by this, BHEL believes that the utilisation of its production capacity will dip from about 85 per cent this year to 28 per cent in the first year of the eighth plan in the case of thermal equipment. The Power Department argues that BHEL has the capacity to supply barely 60 per cent of the equipment needed for the eighth plan and that the rest has to be imported. If that's true, BHEL may be crying wolf. Nevertheless, the order-books are thin right now, and there could be problems if fresh orders don't come in soon.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Inside a Delhi shoe factory: unprecedented boom

LEATHER INDUSTRY

Spiralling Exports

WHEN business executive Shyam Prakash went to the United States last summer, he picked up a Florieshem shoe in a prestigious department store. On carting it home, he discovered to his consternation that the shoe had been made in India.

Prakash need not have been surprised. A host of leather wares, from shoe uppers and shoes to bags and garments, are witnessing an unprecedented Indian summer overseas. Back home, growing numbers of entrepreneurs are leaping into the leather export business and riding the crest of the latest business wave—leather exports.

Around the capital alone, nearly 100 small, leather exporting units have opened shop in the past one year—and most of them are flourishing. Pawan Sachdeva, for example, floated a manufacturing outfit in Delhi called M.S. Shoes East last year, and already reports sales of roughly Rs 6 crore. "We have orders worth Rs 5 crore in hand and are booked for the next six months," he says.

Rita Singh is faring well too. The enterprising businesswoman launched Middle East Shipping three years ago and plunged into leather garment exports. Along the way, she kicked off two more manufacturing units on Delhi's outskirts. Sales have vaulted from an initial Rs 40 lakh to this year's Rs 7 crore, and Singh now has a Rs 3-crore shoe uppers venture planned. Says Singh: "Ten years ago, we faced a boom in textile garments. We are now in the same position in leather."

Certainly, leather exports are booming like never before. "Over the last four years, leather exports have grown by almost 100 per cent," explains A. Sahasranaman, executive director of the Council for Leather Exports (CLE). He is right (see chart). So buoyed is the Government by the trend that the 1989-90 target of Rs 1,170 crore may rise to Rs 1,300 crore. As CLE Chairman M. Mohamed Hashim puts it: "Exports are increasing, more value added products are being exported, new markets are opening out, and new entrepreneurs are coming up in the country. I'd say there's a boom."

Even the big daddies are leaping into the arena, or feverishly expanding their production capacities. Early this year, the Government threw open shoe manufacturing, hitherto reserved for small businessmen, to companies covered by the Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices (MRTP) Act on condition that they export 75 per cent of their output. So Larsen & Toubro obtained a licence to make 7.5 lakh shoes in Gujarat and is now scouting for a collaboration with a European outfit. Indian Hotels (the Taj group) is seeking permission to throw its hat into the ring. Companies that already have shoe uppers abroad—Ponds India, Gordon Woodroffe and Wipro—have either expanded their production capacities or plan on doing so shortly. Nearly all the big boys will also move into the more profitable business of exporting shoes.

Some of them plainly see advantages in establishing a track record in exports. "A presence in the export market helps our image," confesses the senior executive of a big concern. "We can get government permission to expand in other areas." The rush that is now on is also propelled by the vacuum in overseas markets, the tax deductions (2 per cent of turnover and half the profits are tax exempt) available to exporters and profit margins that can run to 25 per cent. "With government incentives, we see a 35 per cent rate of return on investment," says L.M. Jaidka, Larsen & Toubro's deputy general manager, exports.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SHYAM TEKWANI

The Wipro factory in Madras: upgraded technology

The West is increasingly phasing out the production of labour intensive uppers and even shoes, and businessmen in India are eager to fill the void. "We contribute to only 1 per cent of the world shoe market. That shows the potential. One day, India will become shoemaker to the world," predicts V. Balaraman, executive vice-president of Ponds India. And Gordon Woodroffe Managing Director R. Krishnan Kutty talks of more than tripling his company's sales turnover in the next three years. Says Kutty: "By 1990, we expect a turnover of Rs 30 crore from finished leather and shoe uppers."

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

So far, the signals justify the upbeat mood. Overseas buyers are flocking to India in droves, and many of them are new customers. "The USSR was the traditional buyer but new buyers from Europe, the US and Japan are entering the market," confirms Balaraman. For the first time too, domestic manufacturers are in the enviable position of being able to turn down business. "We can pick and choose customers," brags a Wipro official.

Exports are of course piggybacking on cheap labour, the devaluation of the rupee (which makes Indian exports more price-competitive), and fresh government incentives. "Labour costs three times more in competing South Korea than in India," notes CLE's Sahasranaman. And in North India at least, small sweat shops work round the week, paying on a piece rate basis, often with unregistered labour that is not paid statutory dues. Concedes a small businessman in Delhi: "They work like horses, 18 hours a day."

But the Government's role in pushing exports is a major factor too. Last year, it handed out fatter cash incentives to exporters, thereby providing them with a cushion to manoeuvre in the marketplace and quote lower prices. Equally important, the Government recognised that a host of good quality leather ware components are not available in the country. So it eased import procedures for both inputs and machines, and slashed customs duties from around 200 per cent to 40 per cent: a gift that has cost the exchequer some Rs 80 crore in revenue.

Finally, the quality of Indian goatskins has been a great advantage. Says G. Thyagarajan, director of the Central Leather Research Institute (CLRI): "The export boom is also due to the quality of goatskins, which is the best in the world."

A striking characteristic of the rising export graphs is that the export mix has changed dramatically. In 1974-75, raw and semi-finished hides and skins along with finished leathers accounted for 79 per cent of the year's Rs 167 crore exports. Last year, their share in the export basket (excluding raw hides and skins whose export is now banned) dipped to just 44 per cent. "The value of exports has gone up, but the quantum has increased only marginally. Nearly half the total value of exports is accounted for by the diversification into products," argues C.K. Duraivelan, president of the All India Skin & Hide Tanners & Merchants Association.

This was encouraged by the Government, which adopted a two-pronged strategy of banning the export of most raw materials or slapping quotas on them, simultaneously holding out financial carrots to manufacturers to move upmarket into finished products. Recent examples: while finished leather exporters are not entitled to cash incentives, the incentive rate for shoe uppers is 25 per cent and for shoes 33 per cent. Expectedly, many tanners and leather processing units (the Madras-based Farida group of companies, Hashim's M.A. Khizar Hussein & Sons) switched to finished products. Symbolising the success of the official gambit, several of them now talk of exporting their products under their own brand names to foreign department stores directly, eliminating middlemen.

The official policies have had other spinoffs. Technology is being updated, manufacturers are investing in better equipment, mass production techniques are being introduced in an industry that

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BLUE STAR
the climate makers

INDIA'S FINEST PACKAGED AIR CONDITIONERS. FROM BLUE STAR.

Available ex-stock!
5, 7.5 & 10 TR
capacities water- cooled and air-cooled.

Also India's first air- cooled, Split Type
air conditioners
4, 5 & 7.5 TR capacities.

When you choose CLIMATIZER Magnum, India's finest, you know you aren't taking any chances with efficiency, reliability and flexibility. The low operating cost of our new range is another good reason for specifying CLIMATIZER Magnum for your needs!

Combined with quick deliveries and equally quick commissioning, there's no reason for you to wait!

BLUE STAR
CLIMATIZER
MAGNUM

Contact the Blue Star Office nearest to you, or write to:
AC & R Projects Division,
Blue Star Limited,
Leo House, 4th Floor,
88 C Old Prabhadevi Road,
Bombay 400 025.

JAISONS BS

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

has traditionally sworn by man rather than machine, and component units are springing up to feed exporters with items that are now being imported. "Technology is being gradually upgraded. Exporters who travel abroad have introduced new machinery in their tanneries. A silent revolution is on," says Thyagarajan of CLRI. That is true enough. Gordon Woodroffe, for instance, will invest Rs 1.5 crore this year in new machinery. Wipro installed spanking new imported equipment last March.

Many ancillary projects too are on the anvil. In Madras, the Farida group has banded with other leading exporters to set up a Rs 10-crore venture to make leather boards, heels, insoles and to upgrade the buffalo sole available in India (it is porous and gradually disintegrates when wet). In Bombay, Sanghavi Shoe Accessories has made a sortie into plastic 'lasts' (shoe shapers), which have the advantage of not expanding or contracting unlike wooden lasts. But exporters also complain of having to import even basic components. Hashim says cardboard shoe boxes have to be imported as local ones don't match world standards. "It's ridiculous having to import boxes," he grumbles. Wallet exporter R. Muralidharan adds that domestic locks, silks and push buttons leave much to be desired.

The big push overseas and subsequent updating of technology have also had little impact on the quality of shoes made at home. Industry men claim that this is due to the area being reserved for the small sector and the fact that competition is limited. Moreover, the industry's design capabilities are poor. Most exporters depend heavily on foreign buyers for designs and patterns. But this could change in course of time: the Government set up a footwear design institute last December in Agra.

Yet another offshoot of the boom could be a scarcity of leather. A recent CLRI survey found a worrisome rise in the number of livestock being slaughtered prematurely. Leather is a by-product of the meat industry, but the demand for meat is on the upswing and indiscriminate killing is compounding the scarcity. Furthermore, says Duraivelan, "Big companies are entering the business, they are prepared to pay a high price for leather and there's a scramble for leather." Ironically, then, the day may not be far off when a country which once exported raw leather will have to depend on imports for its raw materials.

—PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI

BOMBAY

Building Row

BOMBAY'S builders are up in arms—and their collective ire is showing. Last month, the Income Tax Department's attempts to auction a flat and an office in Bombay came a cropper after the managing committee of the Maharashtra Chamber of Housing Industry (MCHI) met and decided to boycott the auctions.

The Government has been on a drive to acquire undervalued property worth over Rs 10 lakh, and then to auction them on the open market, following an amendment to the income tax law last October. It has in fact successfully auctioned 5 properties in Madras, but has been stymied in Bombay, a city notorious for the investment of black money in property.

The two properties on the auction block in Bombay were among 23 acquired by the department. However, the affected owners went to court, with the exception of three, two of whose properties were auctioned last month. One, a 1,690-sq ft flat, is situated in the ritzy Napean Sea Road area, while the second, a 2,400-sq ft office, is at Nariman Point. Despite holding two auctions and having bidders like the Punjab National Bank, the flat could not be sold. The bidding stopped at Rs 35 lakh, nearly Rs 7 lakh below the department's "reserved" or floor price. For the Nariman Point office—for which the department had kept an unannounced reserve price of Rs 95.50 lakh—the bidding ended at Rs 75 lakh. This was despite competition among the Bank of India, J.M. Financial and Investment and Rama Leasing. Either the department had wrongly assessed the value of the properties or the auctions were facing stiff resistance from buyers.

"The failure of the auctions demonstrates that the department's premises really do not match the market situation," maintains Niranjan Hiranandani, MCHI joint secretary. "It is wrong to say that builders are against the new law—we are only against the manner in which the rules have been framed." For all that, the powerful builders' group clearly views the new law as a threat to the real estate market. It pulled up a builder who had put in a bid at an auction in Madras and decided to "informally request" members of the chamber not to participate in auctions.

Hiranandani, however, says that the MCHI is only trying to ensure that its members do not opportunistically cash in on other members' properties that may be up for sale. He also predicts that by artificially suppressing the demand for real estate, the new law will seriously affect the market in the long run.

That remains to be seen, but it has certainly cut the number of real estate transactions in downtown Bombay and the more expensive suburbs like Bandra and Juhu by at least half. Many would-be sellers are steering clear of the market, partly because obtaining clearances from the income tax authorities can take up to three months. Still, building activity in the distant suburbs beyond Andheri, where flats sell for under Rs 10 lakh, has got a shot in the arm.

NAMAS BHOJANI

Nariman Point office: auctioned

Tax officials are also quick to point out that the property rate that is declared in transfer documents has virtually doubled since the law was amended. In the Napean Sea Road area, for example, the declared price per square foot has shot up from Rs 1,200 to Rs 2,800. "Buyers are now paying the entire price by cheque," says Mukesh Dadlani, secretary of the Estate Agents Association of India. "Many people do not want to take the risk of transacting even 10 to 15 per cent of the price in black." Clearly, the legal change has put a damper on the use of black money in real estate deals. But whether it can arrest the explosion in property prices in this metropolis is open to question.

—M.RAHMAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

NANDED

Where cash crop resources and ample spare power capacity provide locational advantages for agro-based and other need-based industries.

Come discover Nanded where SICOM is generating new industrial growth.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SICOM

Yes. SICOM invites you to invest in Nanded – the ideal location for agro-based industries. The hinterland is rich in cash crops. And with the river Godavari flowing alongside, water supply is regular.

Nanded also offers abundant power, labour and recreational facilities.

It's connected by Vayudoot to Bombay and Aurangabad, and linked by rail to Bombay, Hyderabad and Aurangabad.

Today, 100 units are already in operation, with 62 more, under construction.

And quite a bit of it, has been SICOM's doing.

In keeping with its 20-year tradition, SICOM is furthering Maharashtra's industrial capabilities... ushering in a second industrial revolution.

It's promoting Petrochemicals, Telecommunications, Electronics, Laser Technology, Synthetic Fibres, Computers, Processed Foods... and developing new growth centres in Chiplun, Jalgaon, Paithan, Wardha and other places, to provide the necessary infrastructure.

Here's how SICOM helps you start your industry in Maharashtra's developing areas:

SICOM – accompanies you at every step.

Right from conception to the post-production of your unit, SICOM is there to help you with technical consultancy services, feasibility studies and expert guidance in plant location. What's more, it escorts you by co-ordinating with the concerned state-level agencies to get a need-based mix of infrastructure – both industrial and social.

SICOM – assists you financially.

Whether it's term loan, seed capital, direct subscription to share capital, equipment leasing, equipment finance or venture capital and market development assistance for non-resident Indians, SICOM ensures prompt service.

SICOM – offers you an irresistible package of incentives.

As an agent for the State Government's Package Scheme of Incentives, SICOM offers various benefits depending on your plant location. These include special capital incentive as a grant for new projects and excellent sales tax benefits.

SICOM – invites you to pioneer.

Start a pioneer unit with a stipulated investment in a virgin taluka or invest over Rs. 25 crores in any taluka and you get maximum benefits as incentives.

SICOM – supports innovative ideas.

Apart from reduction in sales tax on electronic items, Maharashtra has created electronic industrial estates in Pune, Nagpur and Aurangabad. What's more, if you start an electronic unit, SICOM offers attractive incentives for a period of seven years under a special scheme.

SICOM – keeps you growing.

Your relationship with SICOM can never end. Whether it's expansion, diversification or modernization, SICOM's expertise provides all the necessary inputs to keep you growing.

Such personalised service explains why over 4000 SICOM-aided projects have come up in Maharashtra, with a total investment of Rs. 5,018 crores providing employment to about 2,70,000 people.

SICOM already shares Nanded with:
* Comet Steels Ltd.
* MAIDC Fertiliser Unit
* SIPTA Coated Steels Ltd.
* Shri Laxmi Narayan Paper Mills Ltd.
* Texcom

THE STATE INDUSTRIAL AND INVESTMENT CORPORATION OF MAHARASHTRA LIMITED

Nirmal, 1st floor, Nariman Point,
Bombay-400 021.
Phone: 2023018 Telex: 011-3066.

Pioneering Maharashtra's Second Industrial Revolution.

CLARION/B/SM/42/238

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PROCESSED FOODS

Quick Fix

THE winds of change for the processed foods industry are blowing both hot and cold these days. The iceman cometh, stockings stuffed with frozen goodies. But the heat-and-eat brigade is not too far behind either.

The leaders in the fray include, among others, Tasty Bite Eatables, promoted by Ravi Kiran Aggarwal along with ice cream tycoon Ravi Ghai (Gaylord's, Yankee Doodle); the Pune-based Venkateshwara Hatcheries (Venky's), which promise the choicest chicken cuts; export giant Al Kabeer, which has just forged out into the Indian market; Quick Foods Ltd, with its Happy Home Convenience Foods; All Seasons Foods; and Kothari General Foods (KGF). ITC and other hotel chains are likely to take the plunge very soon. "It is going to be good fun," says Tasty Bite Vice-Chairman and Managing Director Aggarwal. "But there is room for everybody." Adds Al Kabeer General Manager Aspi Dinshaw: "The potential of the market has not been tapped as yet."

Consumers today want convenience. "There are an estimated 100 million people in our country whose monthly income ranges from Rs 1,000 to Rs 2,000," says KGF Chairman D.C. Kothari. "There are families in which both the partners go to work so naturally the wife does not have the time or the energy to prepare all the meals. These are the people to whom we can sell semi-cooked foods and soft drinks." And All Seasons' General Manager Sanjiv Makhija adds: "What we are offering them is a whole range of delicacies from Hungarian Goulash to Mexican Chilli Con Carne. Of course, there are also the more mundane baingan bhartas." Seasons, which is set to hit the shelves in July, also plans to come out with self-heating packets and a version of TV dinners. Says Makhija: "Nothing frozen. It has hardly any shelf life—and look at the place it takes up."

Dinshaw strongly disagrees. "In the deep freeze our products can last for nine months. Our advantage is that for a perishable item like this you don't have to go shopping every day." Al Kabeer has been in exports—mainly to West Asia—for a long time. But it was kept out of the domestic market largely due to successful lobbying by Bombay butchers afraid that frozen meats would leave them out in the cold. Within four months, Al Kabeer's monthly sales have touched Rs 1.5 lakh and are expected to climb to Rs 5 lakh soon. There is hardly a ceiling to growth: out of Bombay's total consumption of 1,500 tonnes of meat a month, the frozen component is barely 2 per cent.

Venky's "blast frozen" chicken portions have also proved a smash hit according to the company, and a lot of new products—including vegetarian items—are on the cards. Mafco, which has been in the business of frozen meats and vegetables since 1970, is soon to launch chicken cutlets and corn soup.

Also planning a foray into frozen vegetables is Tasty Bite. "Some frozen snacks too," says Aggarwal. Its initial sortie, however, will be in the ready-to-cook items—about 10 soups and a variety of meat preparations. "The chief advantage of ready-to-cook and frozen items is that they have higher food value," claims Aggarwal. "Fresh vegetables have only 92 per cent food value considering the time they take to reach the market. Our processing work is complete within 18 hours of plucking: we can attain a 95-per cent level." Tasty Bite expects a turnover of Rs 15 crore in the first year alone, some 40 per cent of which will come from exports.

Exports are, in fact, an area in which many of the new units are concentrating with All Seasons expecting to touch a 50-per cent level. "People abroad lap up biryanis and other Indian specialities," says Makhija, "but they are priced astronomically. We can sell all we want."

Television, the two-pay cheque family and increasing disposable incomes have, of course, had their role to play in the convenience food boom. But one other reason, which makes exports possible too, is the arrival of technology. "Today, our hygiene and quality-control standards have been approved by countries such as France, Kuwait and Saudi Arabia. They fully know that we are not going to start an epidemic out there," says Dinshaw. Among the new companies, Tasty Bite is collaborating with Altech of Japan and APV Parafreeze of the UK and All Seasons has linked up the British Smith and Booth Associates. "Our products will be of world standards," says Aggarwal.

In spite of the huge market, however, it is evident that not everybody will survive. Food Specialities' Maggi made its mark but competition is still hotting up. The winners will be those that make a name for themselves first. In many a boardroom therefore, advertising and product launching is of paramount importance. Copywriters are sharpening their pencils. Product managers are desperate to begin production. The Beef Stroganoff, baked beans and biryani battle is just around the corner.

—PARTHASARATHI SWAMI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SINKING CABLES IN THE SEA?

Start with an Exceptional Material.

Introducing DU PONT'S HYPALON synthetic rubber. Proven strength and performance in the harshest environments.

HYPALON resists a lot of abuse. From machines. From temperature extremes. Ozone, Corona, Radiation. And fungus growth. It even resists abuse by man.

It's a chlorosulphonated rubber jacketing and insulation for wire and cables. Which is why it protects so well.

We believe in using the finest material. And the latest technology. So you can get the best out of our products.

What's more, when you choose our material, our technical service starts working for you. Helping you select the most suitable, cost effective material for your wire and cables.

After all, HYPALON is just one out of the widest range of insulating and jacketing materials for wire and cables available today. From DU PONT.

For more information on the widest choice of insulating and jacketing polymers for wire and cables, call on DU PONT.

Yes! Please send me more information on DU PONT'S polymers for wire & cables

Name_____

Title_____

Company_____

Address_____

Tel Nos_____

Interest_____

DU PONT FAR EAST INC.
25, Maker Chambers VI,
Nariman Point, Bombay 400 021.
Tel: 202 7712, 202 9986.
Telex: 11-4230 DUFE IN.

Distributors:

UNION COMMERCIAL & INDUSTRIAL CO. PRIVATE LTD.
7, Homji Street, Fort, Bombay 400 021.
Tel: 286 3143, 286 1025.

DU PONT

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

HOME COMPUTERS

Key Success

PROPPED on his father's knee, four-year-old Samir stares gleefully at the screen. The alphabet flashes past and he keeps pace by pressing buttons on the console. Mission successfully accomplished, the computer rewards him with a "well done" and the chance to take a pot-shot at a passing Martian. Learning has never been so exciting.

Kurush, 14, is hardly ever at home during the evenings. "He was always at his friend's place playing with the computer," says his mother Gushasp. "Now that we have bought one, I am waiting for him to learn and teach me how to use it," she adds.

Daylynn Pinto, 22, who spent Rs 9,000 for the keyboard and the monitor, has already mastered two languages—basic and cobol—in just eight months. "Too many people give it up thinking it is beyond them," he says. "Actually it is all very easy. Given half a chance—and they are getting it now—tomorrow's toddlers will be teaching us new tricks."

All three belong to the 15,000 families in Bombay which now possess home computers. There are another 15,000 in the rest of the country and the numbers are growing by leaps and bounds. The Assistant Director of the National Centre for the Performing Arts, D.B. Biswas, who recently bought a home computer "mainly for his daughter Indrani who is studying in standard one", confesses: "It is rather scary sometimes. Children seem to be growing up too soon."

In fact, there is a whole new generation today which finds itself at home amidst the bits and the bytes of the new technological toy. School-level interaction on computer topics has become an everyday affair—many Bombay schools have included computer science as part of the curriculum—and over a score of computer clubs have sprung up. Some schools have also set up informal computer users' forums. And in Bangalore, a 16-year-old pre-university student caused headlines when he presented a technical paper at an international conference in Singapore.

Also bitten by the byte are Ashish Jain (who has an imported Commodore) and his friend Pavan Lulla, who owns an Acorn, also imported. Both, at 16, have just finished their SSC, use their home computers for games and simple programmes and aspire to study computer science.

Kurush Irani: all work and play

Photographs by MAHINDRA PARIKH

There are 30,000 families in India—half of them in Bombay—who own home computers. And their number is growing rapidly.

Daylynn Pinto: byte-bitten

The machine seems to have mesmerised a wide range of people. Says Computer Point's Assistant Vice-President Satish Doshi: "It is not really much of an investment, and every rupee is worth it. Many middle class urban families already possess an ordinary tape-recorder and a colour television. All you need is another Rs 4,500 and a home computer is yours for the taking. Just link them up and you are set."

Computer Point flagged off its dB Spectrum model in September last year and has already notched up sales of 1,000 units a month. A fruitful 1987 might even see them touch the 20,000 mark. Says Doshi: "We have even sold a unit to a panwalla in Nagpur who has put it up in his shop and allows his clients to play games for a price. It has proved such a hit that he now wants another." Besides dB Spectrum, two other local firms are assembling home computers—the Semiconductor Complex, which makes SCL Unicorn, and Eiko. But imported sets still constitute the major chunk of the home computer market.

The home computer, however, has its limitations. Says Shachi Kulkarni, a computer programmer: "I hardly do any work on it." This is largely because the home computer is capable of only a modest amount of programming, though there is a range of software packages available for games, education (stretching from multiplication tables and elementary english to trigonometry and geography), a few business applications and graphics.

As Computer Shack Director Farath Kapur says: "The biggest problem is software support. What is the point of buying a computer if there is nothing to do with it? Most of our clients will probably be screaming at us." She also feels that for home computers to really make their presence felt, prices must drop to a more reasonable range of Rs 1,500 to Rs 2,000.

While some agree on the price issue, others deny the lack of software. The Spectrum has more than 50 packages available and more are on the cards. They are ordinary audio-cassettes with the programme taped on. This, inevitably, has given rise to a booming market on Bombay's Lamington Road

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Your painter can tell you the cost of painting your home

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

You can make sure you get more for your money with just two words: Asian Paints

Have you been postponing the decision to paint for as long as possible, asking yourself, "who can afford such luxury?"

Paint, however costs just a fraction of the house you want to protect and decorate. And, your decision becomes easier if you have a wide choice of quality paints.

Like the range from Asian Paints, with a paint that makes the most of each budget.

For your walls, there's Apcolite 100% acrylic emulsion, a superior, long lasting finish. Or there's the more affordable Tractor distemper, with a list of virtues that have made it India's largest selling wall paint.

Apcolite synthetic enamel will keep your doors, windows and metal surfaces bright and shining like no other paint can. And TouchWood clear wood finish protects and beautifies wood in a way ordinary polish cannot.

Lasting freshness in a wide choice of shades

When you're painting your home, getting the right shades makes a lot of difference. With Asian Paints you'll find a shade you like.

What's more, the shades stay fresh for a longer time. And they are computer matched – so the shades you want are the shades you get.

Asian Paints: chosen over any other paint for more homes than any other paint.

Because each of those homeowners know that with Asian Paints, they were getting more for their money.

Money well spent

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

When you're hot and thirsty after wooing her in college or making up after a fight ... reach for a zero-bacteria Limca with thirst-quenching isotonic salts.

Limca
is veri veri lime'n' lemoni
SERVE CHILLED

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

where pirated versions are available at a scant Rs 25, against the Rs 50 to Rs 100 for the original.

However, the home computer is only a primer for computer literacy. In the West, children outgrow home computers along with teddy bears and thumb sucking. As Daylynn says: "Out there, teenagers are writing the programmes that seem so esoteric out here." But as Kulkarni points out: "Everyone must know about computers. You can't step into tomorrow's world without it." And India's kids are increasingly agreeing with that view.

—PARTHASARATHI SWAMI

PUBLIC UNITS

Unholy Mess

KERALA'S most famous emblem is that of the state Government which shows two black elephants holding aloft their trunks, supporting the Ashoka Chakra on a conch. Referring to the symbol, rebel Marxist leader M.V. Raghavan said in an assembly discussion on state public sector undertakings: "It would be better if we paint the elephants in white."

Raghavan has a point, as a report submitted recently by the Comptroller and Auditor-General of India (CAG) makes tellingly clear. Perhaps the most startling disclosure of them all is the fact that as many as 52 of the 85 state government-owned companies had not finalised their report for 1984-85. Some had not even readied their accounts for as far back as 1979-80—and apparently without any questions whatsoever being asked by the Government.

Such accounts that are available make for a pretty unflattering picture. The accumulated losses from Kerala's 85 public sector companies now total around Rs 130 crore. And losses in 29 of the worst units surveyed by the CAG amount to a staggering Rs 112 crore, an amount nearly three times their paid-up capital of Rs 40 crore.

The chronic losers are many, as a parallel report prepared recently by the State Bureau of Public Enterprises shows. The Transformers and Electricals Kerala Limited, which manufactures heavy electrical equipment, suffered a loss of Rs 6.43 crore in 1984-85. Its accumulated losses thus rose to nearly Rs 19 crore, against the paid-up capital of Rs 5 crore. Kerala Ceramics has lost Rs 7.06 crore, more than three times the share capital of Rs 1.9 crore. And the Kerala State Detergents and Chemicals has lost almost exactly double its share capital of Rs 1.35 crore. Many of the chronic losers have failed to repay government loans, some have even defaulted on the payment of interest.

The losses in any given year are sometimes equal to or bigger than the company's total income. Thus, Kerala Garments earned Rs 11.31 lakh in 1983-84 but lost Rs 10.30 lakh. Worse still, the Metropolitan Engineering Company lost Rs 39.90 lakh in 1982 on a total income of Rs 20.03 lakh. On a slightly more modest scale, Keltron Crystals lost Rs 20 lakh in 1984-85, on a total turnover of Rs 65 lakh.

Some of the bigger corporations are in a seemingly irremediable mess. The State Road Transport Corporation, for instance, has a total loss of Rs 112 crore up to March 1984. Altogether, the state has invested Rs 187 crore in the public sector up to the end of 1984-85. Says P.K. Gopalakrishnan, member of the state Planning Board: "The performance of the public sector in Kerala has been disastrous. This explains to a large extent the low productivity, high cost, non-competitive syndrome in the Kerala economy."

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

THE CHRONIC LOSERS*	PAID-UP CAPITAL (Rs crore)	ACCUMULATED LOSS (Rs crore)
Keltron Counters Ltd	2.03	2.93
Keltron Power Devices Ltd	1.67	3.24
The Kerala Ceramics Ltd	1.90	7.06
Kerala Soaps & Oils Ltd	1.85	5.03
Kerala State Detergents & Chemicals Ltd	1.35	2.70
Trivandrum Spinning Mills Ltd	1.85	3.02
Transformers & Electricals Kerala Ltd	5.09	18.88
Keltron Rectifiers Ltd	1.42	2.28
Oil Palm India Ltd	5.09	2.39
Kerala Automobiles Ltd	2.45	0.59
United Electrical Industries Ltd	1.36	1.50
Keltron Crystals Ltd	0.87	0.35
Keltron Electro Ceramics Ltd	0.80	1.36
Travancore Sugars & Chemicals Ltd	0.51	0.04
Keltron Resistors Ltd	0.53	0.83

*1984-85

The CAG report is replete with examples of gross under-utilisation of capacity, lack of inventory control, use of outmoded technology, scant regard for quality control, wasteful expenditure, the absence of organised marketing effort and a host of other deficiencies. Adds Gopalakrishnan: "These companies manufacture items from soap to computers, which can yield substantial profits provided they are managed by professionals instead of fly-by-night operators."

The Government periodically vows to set things right but has done nothing. And perhaps the biggest problem is the tendency to appoint politicians as heads of corporations. As many as 32 corporations are headed by politicians, many of them members of the state Assembly. In one such example, Ravi Kumar, a Congress(I) worker, was made chairman of Meat Products of India Ltd when K. Karunakaran was the chief minister. But Kumar had to resign when serious corruption charges were levelled against him. Another troublesome Congress(I) politician, K.K. Ponnappan, was made the chairman of Foam Matting India Ltd, which manufactures foam-backed coir matting. Ponnappan undertook a round-the-world trip at company expense, and he was beaten up by the company workers who alleged that he was indulging in corrupt practices. The company has been under a lock-out for the past two years.

Even where politicians do not head the corporations, they conspire to cast their malevolent shadow on them. Alleged a young IAS officer, who was removed from a government company recently: "The Kerala Congress threw me out because some members of the board of directors in my company were members of that party and wanted to make money in commissions."

Clearly, the new Left Democratic Front Government headed by E.K. Nayanar will need to come up with much more than mere false promises, which are all that have been heard in the past, if they plan to salvage the state's chronically afflicted public sector units.

—SREEDHAR PILLAI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

FOR ENTREPRENEURS ON THE GO IT'S MEPZ ALL THE WAY!

ZONE ENTRANCE

PRODUCTION UNIT

What's MEPZ

MEPZ -- Madras Export Processing Zone - has been set up by Govt. of India under the Ministry of Commerce. It is manned by people with versatile and flexible approach. The Development Commissioner is in overall charge. MEPZ is located in Madras on the National Highway 45 - just 8 km. from the airport and 24 kms. from Madras harbour.

What's at MEPZ ... Look out for a package of incentives

The Govt. of India and the Govt. of Tamilnadu offer an attractive package of incentives to industrialists in the Zone.

* Tax holiday for five years * Import of capital goods, raw materials etc. - no customs duty and import licence * Capital goods raw materials etc. from rest of the country exempted from central excise duty and sales tax * Foreign investment - 100% equity allowed, full and free repatriation of profits too! * Liberal sanction of foreign exchange * Priority release of cement, steel etc. * 50% subsidy for feasibility study * 10% subsidy on fixed assets for selected categories of industry * Concessional power tariff for the first five years * Special concession for SC & ST entrepreneurs * Seed capital for new technocrats.

Total Infrastructure

Facilities offered - developed plots and built up areas, power, water, manpower and finance to suit individual needs. Transport and telecommunications readily available. A warehouse of 3,000 tons capacity has been set up by MEPZ. A modern township with social amenities is being developed near the Zone.

Streamlined and speedy action took us this far

In just three years, MEPZ has come to be known for fast action. Infrastructural facilities, including 48 built up units of 500 sq. metres each,have been completed. AN EXCLUSIVE GEM AND GOLD JEWELLERY COMPLEX HAS BEEN SET UP. Out of 199 applications received, 104 have already been approved. Exports to the value of Rs.10.59 crores have been made during the past one year. Single window clearance of proposals and prompt follow-up action has made MEPZ a success story already.

In the near future ...

MEPZ is being developed in two phases. After completion, about 350 industrial units are expected to function in the Zone. Employment opportunity for over 70,000 persons.

It's Red Carpet at MEPZ!

MEPZ invites entrepreneurs to come and set up units in the Zone and reap rich benefits. Special concessions await NRIs. Step into the Zone and it's smooth sailing all the way.

MEPZ

Please get in touch with:
Development Commissioner,
Madras Export Processing Zone,
Govt. of India (Ministry of Commerce),
"Rosy Tower", Second Floor,
7, Nungambakkam High Road,
Madras - 600 034.
Phone: 470489 Telex: 41-6945 MEPZ IN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

 Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

IN SPITE of almost unprecedented growth in money supply, inflation seems to be under control. The situation is improving on the foreign trade front. The large increase in commercial bank credit to the government sector may make it difficult for commercial banks to meet the genuine needs of private industry.

All data are seasonally adjusted. Current trends are computed on the basis of six months (weekly data) or two years (monthly data) figures. The quarters referred to in the text are calendar year quarters.

In spite of the cost-push factors engineered by the tax-hikes of the recent budget, there has been a significant deceleration in wholesale prices.

Consumer Prices lag behind wholesale prices. The 8.8 per cent CPI growth rate is a reflection of the WPI growth from July to November '86.

Government borrowing from banks has led to an increase in money supply. Bank credit to the private sector is growing at 12.8 per cent.

The recent marginal fall in the rate of growth of money supply has been temporary. Current trends indicate a growth of over 21 per cent.

With exports growing at a healthy 18.5 per cent and imports at 7.9 per cent, the trade deficit may be brought under control.

The steady appreciation of the rupee which began in January continues; the exchange rate is stabilising at about Rs 12.8 per US dollar.

Although the current trend shows a moderate increase of 12.7 per cent, the stock-markets have seen pretty gone up for the past two months.

Gold prices have increased sharply in recent months. With the festival season near, the trend is likely to continue unabated for some time.

WHOLESALE PRICES

Growth of items in March 1987

	% Growth
Formulations	1178.91
Butter	25.81
Aluminium	16.28
Fish	15.5
Bananas	12.69
Oranges	10.42
Biscuits	10.37
Art Silk & Artificial Yarn	9.79
Chillies	8.44
Cotton Raw	7.09
Linseed	5.76
Rubber	5.51
Groundnut Oilcake	4.99
Coconut Oil	4.63
Onions	4.26
Arhar	4.21
Eggs	3.95
Copra	3.86
Masoor	3.47
Pet Crude & Natural Gas	3.1
Moong	3.02
Linseed Oil	2.62
Mustard Oil	2.58
Vanaspati	2.58
Nylon/Terene & Mixed Cloth	2.17
Wheat	1.94
Phosphatic Fertiliser	1.77
Milk	1.66
Gingelly Oil	1.43
Soda Ash	1.39
Jowar	1.38
Logs Timber Bamboo	1.15
Cotton Seed	1.11
Cotton Yarn	1.02
Ghee	1.0
Polythene Moulding	.98
Nitrogenous Fertilisers	.97
Urad	.82
PVC Compounds	.72
Limestone	.69
Industrial Instruments	.68
Power-Driven Pumps	.68
Pesticides & Insecticides	.68
Atta	.68
Rice	.61
Country Liquor	.58
Electrical Motors	.53

Of the 139 series considered, 67 of them with a total weight of 45.46 had a positive growth and 72 of them with a total weight of 41.15 had a negative growth.

SELECTED INDICATORS

	1987	1986
Coal
Thousand Tonnes, March	19,622	18,679
Saleable Steel
Thousand Tonnes, March	958.3	918.0
Cement
Thousand Tonnes, March	3,580	3,280
Petroleum Crudes
Thousand Tonnes, March	2,636	2,894
Petroleum Refinery Products
Thousand Tonnes, March	4,367	4,085

Compiled by THE POLICY GROUP/ICIM

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SITA, MERCURY & OBEROI HOTELS PRESENT

Soaltee Surprise

OBEROI TURNS A VISIT INTO A VACATION.

In the magic Kingdom of Nepal, Soaltee Oberoi conjures up the perfect holiday package—Soaltee Surprise. 4 days and 3 nights of excitement.

Beginning with the extravagant 5-star luxury of the Oberoi. Three speciality restaurants. A host of facilities.

Plus the only Casino in town with all the glitz and glamour of Las Vegas. Enjoy a flutter at our expense. We start you off with a generous helping of complimentary casino coupons. The rest is up to Lady Luck!

What you pay

Rs. 1499/- (per person sharing a double room, or Rs. 2190/- for single occupancy.

And what you get

A super holiday. Plus Rs. 1200/- in free casino coupons.

Add transport to and from the airport, a choice of Indian or Continental breakfast on the house, 2 deluxe half-day sightseeing tours of Kathmandu and 2 children up to 12 years accommodated free in the same room (without extra beds or meals), and you'll realise why we call it the Soaltee Surprise.

So come on up to the roof of the world. To Soaltee. For that top of the world feeling.

It's what makes a trip to Kathmandu one thing. And the Soaltee Surprise quite another.

Soaltee Oberoi

For further details contact SITA, Mercury, Oberoi Hotels or a bonafide travel agent.

ULKA-O-EIH-172

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE MARKETS

Bear Hug

THE share markets don't like political uncertainty, and the precipitous crash of equity values last fortnight, underlined this emphatically. Though the markets had recovered somewhat last fortnight, after weeks of gloom and bear hammering, this phase was short-lived. Many traders shuddered at the prospect of what might happen on the market, if the continuing ban on short selling is removed.

Despite this artificial prop being available, The Economic Times share index plunged from 247.5, at the start of April, to as low as 236.9 three weeks later. This, compared with the pre-budget peak of 265 less than two months ago, and the drop of close to 12 per cent in such a short period, left little doubt about the fact that the bulls are no match for the bears just now.

Virtually every scrip lost ground. Perhaps as a response to the news about the pharmaceutical industry having received a set-back in the courts over a price dispute with the Government, several drug shares lost substantial ground—including Ranbaxy and Sandoz. So did companies representing a wide cross-section of industry like Garware Nylon, Atlas Copco, Indian Hotels and Siemens. Escorts, which has announced relatively poor results for 1986, slid to Rs 47.25, well below the year's high of Rs 84. Both the Tata giants also lost ground. Several scrips were at or very close to their lowest points in the year.

Reliance—which is still to announce its results for 1986—dropped to an uncharacteristically modest Rs 176 before the slide was finally halted and a recovery began. But with the Government seemingly eager to prove that it will pursue charges against the company, the future must have several question marks hanging over it.

The mild recovery, late last fortnight, may not indicate that confidence has returned to the market, because this requires political stability. The Government must demonstrate that it has weathered the storm of scandals and controlled the dissension within its ranks. The new rhetoric of socialism and drum-beating about the evil designs of multinationals could not have sounded like a happy tune either.

The big question was whether the momentary recovery late last fortnight amounted to being more than an adjustment hiccup, or whether the market would soon resume its downward swing. Certainly, fresh buyers will become willing to invest at lower price levels, the ban on shortselling should provide encouragement to the bulls to try and have their way for a change, and the economy is not in such poor shape that the market must collapse. Also, what goes down must eventually move up again. But as always, the key issue is, when?

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

ACTIVE STOCKS

	1987 HIGH	1987 LOW	CLOSE 22.4.87	Change in Fortnight
Ashok Leyland	35.50	28.00	29.00	3.00 –
Associated Cement	241.50	172.00	172.00	24.00 –
Atlas Copco	150.00	112.00	114.00	34.00 –
Asian Paints	272.50	207.50	247.50	3.50 +
Avery India	169.00	150.00	151.00	8.00 –
Bajaj Auto	4925.00	3950.00	4550.00	200.00 –
Baroda Rayon	250.00	205.00	230.00	6.25 +
Bata India	160.00	122.50	124.75	18.25 –
Bayer	785.00	600.00	747.50	22.50 –
Bharat Forge	75.00	66.00	67.00	7.00 –
Birla Jute	50.75	45.50	46.50	1.50 –
Blow Plast	126.00	92.50	111.00	9.00 –
Bombay Dyeing	75.00	40.50	64.50	4.00 –
Brooke Bond	101.00	77.00	89.50	10.00 –
Ceat Tyres	70.00	48.00	62.50	2.50 +
Century Spinning	810.00	665.00	675.00	40.00 –
Chloride India	148.00	83.00	84.50	11.50 –
Colgate	391.25	327.50	381.00	8.50 +
Eskayef	247.50	171.25	223.75	11.25 –
DCM	39.00	25.00	25.25	2.75 –
Dunlop	77.75	71.25	72.75	1.25 –
Elecon	107.50	86.25	91.25	6.25 –
E.I. Hotels	56.00	42.00	43.00	1.40 –
Escorts	84.00	46.50	47.25	4.75 –
Finolex Cables	182.50	114.00	165.00	5.00 +
Food Specialities	188.50	158.50	159.00	12.00 –
Garware Polyester	97.00	69.50	72.00	9.00 –
G.E. Shipping	22.50	16.00	17.00	0.50 –
Gujarat St. Fertilisers	183.50	120.00	132.00	11.00 –
Gwalia Ind.	95.00	80.00	88.00	1.00 +
Hind. Aluminium	126.00	71.00	104.00	10.00 –
Hind. Cocoa	262.50	223.75	227.50	14.50 –
Hindustan Lever	212.00	165.00	192.50	14.50 –
Hindustan Motors	35.35	22.70	24.00	3.10 –
Hind. Dorr	407.50	295.00	390.00	5.00 +
IEL	61.50	45.00	46.50	5.00 –
Indian Organic	78.00	58.00	58.50	6.50 –
Indian Rayon	76.50	55.00	58.00	3.00 –
Indrol	510.00	252.50	255.00	27.50 –
Ingersoll-Rand	345.00	272.50	340.00	nil
ITC	78.00	41.00	41.50	7.50 –
J.K. Synthetics	93.50	56.50	58.00	12.00 –
Kinetic Engineering	312.50	225.00	250.00	5.00 –
Kirloskar Cummins	95.00	67.00	90.00	2.50 +
KSB Pumps	375.00	220.00	367.50	12.50 +
Larsen & Toubro	100.00	70.00	72.00	7.00 –
Lipton	79.50	60.00	70.50	8.00 –
Lohia Machines	32.00	14.00	15.00	8.00 –
Madura Coats	73.00	66.00	71.00	1.00 –
Mahindra & Mahindra	47.50	38.00	43.50	2.50 –
Motor Industries	400.00	342.50	350.00	15.00 –
National Organic	577.50	465.00	472.50	40.00 –
Nirlon	26.00	15.00	15.50	0.50 –
Orkay Silk Mills	115.00	70.00	70.00	7.00 –
Pelco Electronics	57.25	36.00	37.50	2.25 –
Otis Elevator	202.00	155.00	199.00	nil
Ponds	375.00	320.00	320.00	45.00 –
Premier Auto	30.00	21.00	25.50	2.75 –
Ranbaxy	135.00	90.00	90.00	33.00 –
Raymond	79.00	67.00	68.00	4.00 –
Reckitt & Colman	200.00	162.00	167.00	8.00 –
Reliance Industries	277.00	170.00	180.00	25.00 –
Shriram Fibres	36.00	25.50	25.50	0.50 –
Sandoz	140.00	80.00	81.25	21.25 –
SPIC	53.50	36.50	41.00	0.50 –
Tata Steel	1207.50	982.50	1017.50	42.50 –
Telco	665.00	550.00	570.00	15.00 –
Vulcan Laval	57.50	45.00	50.00	2.50 –
Siemens India	144.50	72.00	75.00	20.00 –
Mukand Iron	80.50	63.50	73.50	3.00 –

WORLD VALUE OF RUPEE

COUNTRY	CURRENCY	UNIT	Selling Rates Rs	TT Buying Rates Rs
Australia	Dollar	1	9.1316	9.0261
Austria	Schilling	100	100.7247	96.0000
Bahrain	Dinar	1	33.9832	33.9083
Bangladesh	Taka	100	42.5230	42.3920
Canada	Dollar	1	9.6952	9.5988
Denmark	Kroner	1	1.8771	1.8587
Egypt	Pound	1	9.5326	9.4977
France	Franc	1	2.1344	2.1299
Hong Kong	Dollar	1	1.6524	1.6364
Indonesia	Rupiah	100	0.0783	0.0699
Iran	Rial	100	18.1032	18.0181
Italy	Lira	100	0.9900	0.9800
Japan	Yen	100	9.15	9.00
Kenya	Shilling	1	0.8096	0.8000
Kuwait	Dinar	1	47.2332	47.1817
Malaysia	Dollar	1	5.1991	5.1436
Mauritius	Rupee	1	0.9998	0.9776
Nepal	Rupee	1	0.5860	0.5660
Netherlands	Guilder	1	6.2655	6.2064
Pakistan	Rupee	1	0.7530	0.7499
Singapore	Dollar	1	6.0339	5.9729
Spain	Peseta	1	0.1008	0.0999
Sri Lanka	Rupee	1	0.4500	0.4490
Sweden	Kroner	1	2.0358	2.0156
Switzerland	Franc	1	8.6069	8.5231
Tanzania	Shilling	1	0.2350	0.2298
Thailand	Baht	100	50.6000	50.4023
UK	Pound	1	20.9709	20.8008
USA	Dollar	1	12.8700	12.7625
UAE	Dirham	1	3.5099	3.4932
USSR	Rouble	1	20.2098	20.1186
W. Germany	Deutschmark	1	7.0871	7.0372

These rates were supplied by The Bank of Tokyo Limited, New Delhi and quoted between the banks on 23.4.87.

CC-0. In Public Domain: Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Books On Yoga, Philosophy And Religion.

1887–1987

Swami Sivananda
Birth Centenary Concession

From 1st April to 30th September 1987

DISCOUNT:

25% on orders upto Rs. 100/–
30% on orders upto Rs. 300/–
35% on orders upto Rs. 1000/–
40% on orders above Rs. 1000/–

SWAMI SIVANANDA

THE SCIENCE OF YOGA in 8 volumes—contains 24 titles covering a wide range of subjects—philosophical, cultural, educational, medical and mystical writings on the practice of YOGA (Paper back) Full set. Rs. 200/–

SADHANA—A Text-book on the psychology and practice of the techniques of spiritual perfection (Board) .. Rs. 90/–

THE BRIHADARANYAKA UPANISHAD—Sanskrit text, English translation and commentary (Board) .. Rs. 80/–

BLISS DIVINE—86 Self-contained essays covering all aspects of the life spiritual (Board) .. Rs. 50/–

MIND–ITS MYSTERIES AND CONTROL—The psychology of the Inner man and its applicability in the every-day life (Paper Back) .. Rs. 45/–

PRACTICE OF YOGA—A general introduction to the foundations of Yoga and effective guide to students of Yoga (Paper Back) .. Rs. 40/–

YOGA SAMHITA—Contains presentations on a variety of themes on a vast area of subjects in philosophy, religion and spiritual Sadhana (Board) .. Rs. 40/–

HOME REMEDIES—Treating of a wide range of simple household remedies, for all types of complaints, this work is exceedingly useful for rural doctors and general practioners as well (Paper Back) .. Rs. 35/–

KUNDALINI YOGA—This book explains in simple style the theory and the practice of Kundalini Yoga (Paper Back) .. Rs. 30/–

SELF-KNOWLEDGE—Collection of lessons given to struggling spiritual aspirants to enable them to surmount the obstacles in Sadhana (Paper Back) .. Rs. 30/–

SARVA GITA SARA—These Gitas present the loftiest flights of the grand Advaitavada (Paper Back) Rs. 30/–

Nearly 100 titles on subjects like METAPHYSICS, PSYCHOLOGY, YOGA, EDUCATION, RELIGION, HEALTH, etc.

50% advance with orders by MO/IPO/Bank Draft on STATE BANK OF INDIA, RISHIKESH. packing/forwarding extra. Catalogue available FREE.

THE DIVINE LIFE SOCIETY
THE SIVANANDA PUBLICATION LEAGUE
P.O. SHIVANANDANAGAR—249 192
RISHIKESH—U.P.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

To be a success in a world full of computers, it is necessary that you start preparing right away.

Get your children a home computer today.

So they can learn all about computers — their benefits, their technology, their importance — while also having loads of fun!

All over the world, over 20 million families are using home computers.

Because they are so easy to use. And so useful!

It's easier to learn about computers if you have a home computer at home. It helps you bridge the gap between ignorance and knowledge about the way computers function.

It can teach you BASIC, the first language in computers. It can teach your children Maths or Geography or other subjects in an easy, entertaining way. It can help you keep household and office accounts. It can entertain you and educate you. With hundreds of intelligent games that help you develop your decision-making abilities.

And it costs so little, every family can buy one.

Yes, a home computer is an important part of every modern home today.

Because it helps you and your children bridge the gap between today and tomorrow.

Come to Computer Point for more information and a free demonstration of the utility of home computers.

And start feeling at home with computers. Right away!

Did you learn table manners before you learnt to hold a spoon?

COMPUTER POINT

Bangalore: 43, Dickenson Road Tel: 578718/578452 • Bombay: 227, Dr. Annie Besant Road, Worli Tel: 4936716/4930543
Madras: 92, G. N. Chetty Road, T. Nagar Tel: 441192 • New Delhi: F-41, South Extension Part I Tel: 624370/698548

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

JULIO FRANCIS RIBEIRO

"No chance of success"

TO the rest of the country, he represents the very best there is in the Indian Police Service. His integrity is unquestioned, his devotion to duty unchallengeable and his courage, in the face of impossible odds, legendary. Yet, Punjab's tough-talking and even tougher-acting Director-General of Police, Julio Francis Ribeiro, will leave a controversial trail behind him when he lays down office next month (May 31) after a long and laudable innings as India's most celebrated policeman.

Though Punjab's chief minister and home minister have officially asked him to stay on and complete what he considers "an unfinished task", arrayed against Ribeiro is a virtual army of politicians and bureaucrats, armed with their own kind of ammunition, and ready to gun him down for their own various reasons.

Some of his greatest detractors sit, two floors above him in the Punjab Secretariat, in Barnala's Cabinet. Says Prem Singh Chandumajara, minister of cooperation: "Terrorism has increased since Ribeiro came here. His attitude is the same as that of the police during the days of the British raj. He attacks us even when we try to get innocent people released." The chief Akali grouse: Ribeiro does not let politicians shift cops to the places they want—"which as elected representatives we are entitled to"—and, more serious, of indulging in fake encounters.

Surprisingly, criticism of Ribeiro is not restricted to Akali politicians alone. A senior Congress(I) leader in Chandigarh feels: "He is already more powerful than any other police chief in the country, and if he gets any more powers, then we will be living in a police state. And although the Hindus love him, the Sikhs hate him."

But if Ribeiro has critics in the state, he also has supporters. His biggest admirers are the men in the force. When he came to the state in March last year, the Punjab police was highly demoralised, out-gunned and outmanoeuvred by the terrorists. The people in general had lost faith in the ability of the Punjab police to protect them from the terrorist bullet. But Ribeiro, almost single-handedly, turned the tide of affairs with his celebrated policy of "bullet-for-bullet". And today, although the terrorists are still able to kill with impunity, Ribeiro has managed to instil some confidence in the force and, more important, given the terrorists enough cause to worry.

But torn by political irritants, the ceaseless criticism of his honest efforts to fight a war which has no ground rules and the constant moves to check his powers, the battle-weary policeman now wants to retire. Ribeiro spoke to TAVLEEN SINGH last fortnight. Excerpts:

Q. When will you be retiring?

A. On May 31, I'll reach that magical age in government service—58 years.

Q. Will you stay on if you get an extension?

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

A. Barnala has asked me to and so has the home minister. I have told them that I would not like to continue and I've given them the reasons. I just don't think there's any chance of success.

Q. Why do you say that?

A. Look, this is like a war we are fighting, it is an abnormal situation. In a normal situation, duality of control is all-right, but in an abnormal situation like this, I should have the powers of an army chief where he posts his colonels and sends whichever battalions he likes to whichever area of operation he wants. Well, I don't have that control.

Q. By dual control you mean between you and the politicians?

A. Yes. If I say that Mr A should be at such and such a place, they are able to say no if they don't like it or if their followers don't like it. So even if I feel that someone is the best man (for a particular job), there are other compulsions. So how do I fight this war?

Q. Has this been happening every time you make an appointment?

A. Well, there are always questions like why do you want him and why not someone else. I resist to a great extent but they have the right to overrule me. This sort of thing happens in government but I think, in today's context, this does not produce results because officers in the field get two messages. Suppose they get a message from me and also from the politician who has brought them there, then they would like to play it safe.

Q. Could you give any instances where you have been so overruled?

A. I would not like to mention names.

Q. But would you say that there have been important instances where you have been overruled?

A. Yes.

Q. This was done by the chief minister?

A. Well, it may not necessarily be him, who is interested—there could be pressures on him. I'll give you an example. There is a certain sub division which today is one of my worst sub divisions: the officer there was only drinking and collecting money. So I got him shifted. But the (local) jathedar said who are you to move anyone shifted without asking me. And the thing was cancelled straight away. Now look at my position—the local jathedar is seen to be more important than the director-general of police.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Q. If they said to you that you would be given total charge would you stay on?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you feel when you look back that it has been an unfinished task?

A. Oh yes. In fact we are still fighting, we are in the thick of battle.

Q. When you look back on this one year, do you see it as a success or failure?

A. Neither. It's not a success because the terrorists are still capable of killing and dictating terms to the public and creating terror. It's not a failure because we have got up and fought against them. We are still fighting. And what is more, the terrorists are as bothered about us as we are about them. If they were not bothered about us then I would think that it was a total failure.

Q. Why did the number of people killed by terrorists go up last year compared to 1985?

A. Terrorist killings really began after they took charge of the Golden Temple on January 26 last year. By that time the Bains Committee had already released most of these criminals; some of them were big, some small. Everybody joined the movement once they got into the Golden Temple. Then, there was the euphoria of the return to popular rule so they had all the time in the world to organise themselves. And on March 28, they carried out a mass killing at the Daresi Ground (Ludhiana)—the day I was brought here. After that they continued to kill. I will not accept that because I came here killings have increased. But if the criticism is that if to the extent that I joined hands with them there would be more killings, then I want to know what is the other way of doing it?

Q. There is a view, based on the experience of other countries, that the police option never really works.

A. No terrorism can be fought unless you win the hearts and minds of the people. Much more important than police action is propaganda, which is not being done. For example, see what is happening today. The terrorists have decided to kill people who smoke, drink, wear saris, shave or cut their hair. Can't a massive propaganda drive be launched asking people like to stay in a state like this? If a duly elected government had passed a law like this people would have thrown out that government. And here are these people who are able to do this because the minds and hearts of the general people have not been won. And when I say people, I mean the Sikhs. They have to come to our side. They must know that what these people are doing is wrong, that it is to be condemned. And once they understand that, I am quite sure we will win. Otherwise we can only go on fighting.

Q. What about fake encounters. Even if innocents are not killed, terrorists like Kamaljit Kamba or Durga Singh have been killed in fake encounters. Could they not have been arrested, tried and hanged?

A. (laughs) Who is going to hang them?

Q. Don't we have a judicial system?

A. I think you needn't ask me this question. Not a single person is going to be convicted, not one. They have created so much terror that not one witness will come forward. Not one police officer is willing to question them. Not one prosecutor is willing to prosecute them. I won't go further than that because I'll be charged with contempt. But look, if they are going to pull guns on us we are going to kill them first. We are not going to be killed. This is our stand. Why are people so sympathetic to the killers and not to the victims? I really want to know this?

> "No terrorism can be fought unless you win the hearts and minds of the people. And when I say people I mean Sikhs. They have to come to our side. They must know that what these people (terrorists) are doing is wrong. Otherwise we can only go on fighting."

Q. There is the fear that if the police continue to do this, the situation could go out of hand as it happened in Argentina.

A. I don't know. I don't think anything like that is going to happen here. I can guarantee you that.

Q. So you feel that in certain situations the police is forced to kill a man whom they know to be a terrorist?

A. If somebody pulls a gun on us, we are going to kill him first. We are not going to allow any more of our men to be killed. Seventy of my men have already been killed.

Q. So, in your opinion no innocent man has been killed by the police in an encounter?

A. No. But their (the terrorists') definition of innocent is quite different. They believe that if you kill for the panth then you are innocent. That cannot be accepted in a civilised society.

Q. In terms of numbers how many people are you up against now?

A. Hard-core, about 90 people. Mostly Khalistan Commando Force, Khalistan Liberation Force or Babbar Khalsa.

Q. Is the pressure on the police—the fact that so many members of policemen's families have been killed—led to any bitterness among your men?

A. I must say they have taken it very calmly. They know the dimensions of the problem. It certainly has not caused the type of reaction that people may have expected. They have not gone around killing the children of terrorists or their brothers and sisters.

Q. How many police officers have lost their relatives?

A. My IG (PAP), Mangat, lost his son, who was a surgeon. My SP, Amritsar also had his son killed. Then, my DSP at Ludhiana, Rajkumar Bedi, lost his son. Recently one of my head constables, Mohinder Singh, his 70-year-old father and his three brothers were shot.

Q. What about you? Are you ever afraid that you could be killed once you retire?

A. No, I don't bother. I don't give it a second thought. After all, you do your duty. You have to go some time or the other, so why bother.

Q. How much does the involvement of politicians with terrorists hamper your work?

A. What does hamper it is that at the field-level my SHOs and SPs are very often contacted by politicians and they are influenced by these requests as they are worried about their own future.

Q. What about the charge that the Punjab police has been heavily infiltrated by the terrorists?

A. This is just not true...it is Goebbelsian-type propaganda to say this and extremely unfair because most of the Punjab police is Sikh. It is true that a few men were involved and they have already been caught and thrown out.

Q. Now that you have been here for a year do you have any ideas of a solution to the Punjab problem?

A. Yes. If you win the hearts and minds of the people, they (the terrorists) will have to go. They will no longer have a base.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Cost Efficient Galvanised Sheet Technology

Brought to India by BHARAT BERG.

Bharat Berg's Rs. 1610 lakh GP/GC Sheet project for the manufacture of 35,000 tonnes per annum of high quality plain, corrugated and profiled sheets is rapidly nearing completion at Malwan in U.P.

What makes the project unique is its high technology. The collaborators, Berg AG/SA of Switzerland and Kirchfeld (of GHH Group with an annual turnover exceeding Rs. 7000 crores) of West Germany have lent their total commitment to the project.

Bharat Berg has a specially designed 'Fuel Efficient' and 'Energy Saving' plant, which will result in lower cost of production giving the Company a tremendous edge. Besides, the Company has a facility to introduce new Industrial Profiled Sheets as well as a 'Cut to Length' facility for convenience of end users.

And, best of all, Berg is participating in Bharat Berg's Equity — a measure of their confidence in the project. It will also enable Bharat Berg to have the benefit of the latest technological developments in the field.

The product, of course, is a best seller. A premium product, it has a ready and evergrowing market with demand far exceeding supply. No wonder shares of Galvanised Sheet manufacturers are quoting much above par.

So you have a project with outstanding technology, promoters with proven expertise and a premium product.

And an investment opportunity par excellence.

Issue of 27,80,000 Equity Shares of Rs. 10 each for cash at par.

ISSUE OPENS FOR

NON RESIDENT INDIANS ON 18TH APRIL, 1987.

INDIAN PUBLIC ON 4TH MAY, 1987.

Managers to the issue

SBI Capital Markets Limited
202, Maker Towers E,
Cuffe Parade, Bombay 400 005.

Co-Managers to the Issue

punjab national bank
Merchant Banking Division
Express Towers, 3rd Floor,
Nariman Point, Bombay 400 021.

BHARAT BERG LIMITED
Agrawal Estate, 168, Vidyanagari Marg,
Kalina, Santacruz, Bombay 400 098.
Phone: 6126068, 6125510, 6125010
Telex: 011-73959 BBLB-IN

PRESSMAN

Galvanise your portfolio — Invest in a premium product.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

This summer holiday with the Stars

This summer take a break in the quiet charm of princely Mysore and the lush cool hills of Ooty. Your friends at the new, affordably luxurious Southern Star Hotels await you. We'll show you the sights and lavish you with care...

The Southern Stars are ideally located, amongst gardens and hills, near woods and lakes, palaces and monuments. See the majestic Mysore Palace, Tipu's Srirangapatna, the Chamundi temple and the Nandi Bull. Brindavan Gardens and Halebid-Belur, the wildlife of Bandipur and Mudumalai, Dodabetta Peak and Lamb's Rock. Walk through carpeted tea gardens and whistling pine woods. Go picnicking, riding, golfing or boating.

Back home at the Southern Star, play Billiards or work out at the Health Club. And in the evening, enjoy a refreshing cocktail while the Piano soothes your cares away. Dine by candlelight to a band, or be pampered by Room Service. Then, in the cosy comfort of your room, enjoy the latest movies on TV.

Best of all, we believe in value for money. Doesn't this sound like just what you need? Come soon. We'll make your holiday memorable, your honeymoon a dream. And, if it's business, we'll organise for you a conference that's efficient and enchantingly different.

Come, live with the Stars

HOTEL HSS SOUTHERN STAR

MYSORE OOTACAMUND

For information and reservations:
A K DAVE AND ASSOCIATES Delhi: Tel: 675347 Telex: 65230 Bombay: Tel: 222262 Telex: 3061 Bangalore: Tel: 579445 Telex: 8110
HOTEL SOUTHERN STAR Mysore: Tel: 27217 Telex: 256 Ooty: Tel: 3601-9 Telex: C/o 204 OR YOUR NEAREST TRAVEL AGENT

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SINO-INDIAN RELATIONS

Escalating Tension

China's intrusion in the Sumdorong Chu Valley, its protests over the grant of statehood to Arunachal Pradesh...and the hardening of its stance on the border issue, cast strains on the bilateral relationship.

—Annual Report 1986-87, Ministry of Defence.

THE strains were stretched taut as a bow-string last fortnight as a sudden snap caused the Sino-Indian relationship barometer to register an abrupt and alarming increase. The element of deja vu was unavoidable. Barely three months ago, India had teetered on the edge of an armed conflict with one of its neighbours over the army's Operation Brasstacks. And now, another exercise—Operation Chequer Board—involving the army's Eastern Command—had exhumed the spectre of a potential conflict with another and far more belligerent neighbour. Playing Chinese chequers with Beijing is a vastly different war game compared to India's Islamabad opponent.

That Beijing was bent on turning the screws on the Indian Government has been evident for some time now. Several senior US government officials who visited New Delhi in the past few months have brought the same message—China, annoyed with what it sees as Indian intransigence on the border issue, is determined "to teach India a lesson". Last fortnight, Beijing decided to speak for itself. A Chinese foreign office spokesman accused India of massing troops along the border, violating Chinese air space, repeatedly crossing the line of actual control and "nibbling at Chinese territory".

The sudden verbal offensive was as intriguing as a Chinese puzzle. Just four days earlier, an official Indian delegation led by Defence Minister K.C. Pant had stopped overnight in Beijing on the way back from the North Korean capital of Pyongyang. The Chinese, understandably, played down the visit—the official banquet for Pant was hosted by Zhu Xun, the minister for geology and mineral resources. However, during the dinner conversation, the Chinese side gave no indication that they were apprehensive about Indian troop movements, nor did they complain about territorial violations. Instead, they repeated the refrain that the border dispute between the two countries should—and could—be settled soon. The same week, CPI(M) General Secretary E.M.S. Namboodiripad had a three-hour meeting with Chinese strongman Deng Xiaoping in Beijing. Namboodiripad also came away with the impression that Sino-Indian differences "are nearer solution today than at any time before". Deng later issued a statement calling for a "reasonable solution" to the Sino-Indian border dispute.

More intriguing in the context of the subsequent, high-pitched protest by Beijing, is the fact that it comes on the eve of the eighth round of border talks between the two countries. The talks will, for the first time, discuss a specific area of dispute—the eastern sector. South Block is well aware that no single issue in recent times has incensed Beijing as much as the granting of statehood to Arunachal Pradesh—a politi[illegible] move on the part of the Rajiv Governm[illegible] undertaken against the express adve[illegible] the Foreign Ministry. It is possible th[illegible] China's sudden outburst is part of a deep[illegible] diplomatic game intended to put Sou[illegible] Block on the defensive during the talks—[illegible] game in which the Americans play th[illegible] role of devil's advocate.

China-watchers in New Delhi as w[illegible] as former foreign secretary Romes[illegible] Bhandari who was, surprisingly, part [illegible] the official K.C. Pant delegation, are al[illegible] convinced that Beijing's game plan is [illegible] pressure New Delhi at a time when [illegible] series of political crises has weakened the [illegible] Rajiv Gandhi Government and ensnare[illegible] it in domestic issues.

Already, the Indian Government [illegible] worried about the neutralising effect th[illegible] current Sino-Soviet rapprochem[illegible] would have on Soviet support in the eve[illegible] of a border clash with China. Moscow ha[illegible] made it clear to New Delhi that its efforts [illegible] improve relations with China are a k[illegible] element in Mikhail Gorbachev's interna[illegible] tional diplomatic offensive and have [illegible] highest priority. "We are aware of th[illegible] problems of provoking Beijing but [illegible] think the entire issue has been somewh[illegible] overplayed. We don't want to get int[illegible]

Pant (left) and Namboodiripad

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

tangle with the Chinese and we are sure that they don't want to either," says a senior official in South Block.

But in diplomatic terms, the two sides are already entwined in a tangle resembling a dish of mixed chow mein. Diplomatic and defence sources confirm that there has been an unusual movement of troops on both sides of the border. The Defence Ministry's annual report states that "the Chinese intrusion (into the Sumdorong Chu valley) has forced us to take appropriate defence measures along the Indo-China border". Those measures have been further reinforced by Operation Chequer Board which has added four more divisions and five front-line fighter squadrons from the western sector to the Sino-Indian border, apart from occasional sorties by Indian Air Force Mig-25 surveillance aircraft along the border.

An intelligence brief in the Hong Kong-based Far Eastern Economic Review, whose reports on China are more accurate than most, states: "Recent months have seen a sharp rise in military movements along the all-weather road linking Lhasa with Golmud in China's Gansu province. This suggests a stockpiling of supplies thought to include fuel, spares, weapons and ammunition. The sabre-rattling follows New Delhi's granting of full statehood last December to Arunachal Pradesh."

Viewed objectively, the Chinese moves were somewhat predictable. Beijing has always indulged in a carrot-and-stick policy in its dealings with New Delhi ever since the border talks started. Chinese troop movements, the indirect messages about "teaching India a lesson", their forceful reiteration of their claim to the entire area covering Arunachal Pradesh and their intrusion into the Sumdorong Chu Valley has been tempered by the official line that Beijing is as keen on a negotiated settlement of the border as New Delhi. This time, the difference is that Beijing has taken the Arunachal statehood issue as a major affront and is making it clear to New Delhi that it cannot be taken lightly. Beijing has also asserted that there can be no settlement of the border issue unless India is prepared to make territorial concessions. The unspoken message is that the territorial concessions must be in the eastern sector.

In that context, India's moves to reinforce its troops on the border seem a preventive measure. "We are not preparing for a war or trying to provoke one," says a senior army officer in Army Headquarters. "But we are in a much greater state of readiness than we have ever been before." Army sources say that they believe the Chinese will try to occupy additional territory, largely uninhabited wasteland like Sumdorong Chu, once the snows melt next month and the Indian Army's effort to close up on the border is to prevent that.

But that is a provocative situation. Operation Chequer Board was planned as an extension of Operation Brasstacks and is part of General K. Sundarji's strategy to test the preparedness of the army and mobility in the western and eastern sectors. The moving of air force squadrons, army sources say, is part of that exercise. But with border tensions having escalated, it is possible that Operation Chequer Board has been merged into the plan to reinforce the border.

The danger lies in the current over-confidence in Indian defence forces to handle any armed provocation from China. They are now infinitely better equipped in terms of weaponry, special high-altitude clothing and supply lines to forestall a repeat of 1962. The IAF has also total air superiority over the People's Air Force. In that situation, however, the fact that the chain of command and communication in the eastern border area is stretched fairly thin means that the slightest spark could trigger a conflict neither side wants.

Last week, there were indications that South Block has realised precisely that. Official sources say that the army has been told to retaliate only if they have no other choice, and that too only if the other side fires first. On the diplomatic front, in the course of the round of farewell parties for outgoing Chinese ambassador to New Delhi Li Lianqing, Beijing has been told that there is no need for further escalation of tensions and to wait for the Indian response to the Chinese package deal on the border issue offered some time ago. But at the same time, a diversion such as the bogey of an armed conflict with China would also suit the Rajiv Gandhi Government at this particular moment. The danger lies in the bogey boomeranging as it did along another border not so long ago.

—DILIP BOBB

The sudden belligerence in China's posture, experts feel, is aimed to pressure New Delhi at a time when a series of political crises has weakened the Rajiv Gandhi Government.

Indian post at Chinese border

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Telelink Nicco

We are meeting at the top to work underground

Yes... we have met at the top. At a high level meeting. NICCO. General Cable International (USA). And WBIDC. To usher in a new telecommunication era in India.

The meeting has given birth to a new Project : Telelink Nicco.

Telelink Nicco Limited (TNL) is a modern, hi-tech project with an investment of Rs.18.25 crores. Set up for the manufacture of 6,25,000 CKMs. of Polyethylene Insulated Jelly Filled (PIJF) telecommunication cables, cables that are based on stringent international standards and designed specifically to withstand the rigours of Indian conditions—to prevent moisture seepage, cross-talks and recurring cable faults. The project is located at Kalyani, Dist. Nadia in West Bengal.

Telelink Nicco would be the first project of its kind in India to have active foreign equity participation.

NICCO—FOUR DECADES OF COMMUNICATIONS EXPERIENCE

What sets NICCO apart is its ability to handle varied products and service lines—from cables and conductors, to wire ropes and steel products, from industrial and leasing services to merchant banking, from storage batteries to consumer electronics, growing rapidly through collaborations with foreign gaints in diverse areas.
From a turnover of Rs. 30 crores in 1983 to Rs. 100 crores in 1987, NICCO has recorded an excellent growth. The cash profit barometer has risen steadily from Rs. 1 crore to Rs. 7 crores within the same span.
Ever since its inception, NICCO has been maintaining stable industrial relations Paying dividend to its shareholders consistently for the last four decades.

SOPHISTICATED CABLE TECHNOLOGY FROM GENERAL CABLE (USA)

Today, General Cable International (USA) ranks among the world's foremost cable manufacturers. Besides 22 manufacturing facilities in USA, General Cable is successfully managing 11 offshore manufacturing facilities in Brazil, Colombia, Spain & Venezuela. Infact, General Cable has already created a niche in India. Till recently, the Company has been supplying Jelly Filled telephone cables to P & T (Department of Telecommunication), The Ministry of Defence and Railways—to name a few. Now this corporate giant is taking up a new role in India—by promoting Telelink Nicco. Telelink Nicco is all set to provide PIJF telephone cables to the same customers. Maintaining the same manufacturing reliability. Serving the customers better. And meeting the demands on schedule. Thus ensuring a very bright future for Telelink Nicco from its very inception.

PLANT & MACHINERY FROM DE ANGELI INDUSTRIE (ITALY)

A major part of the machinery for the Telelink Nicco Project has been imported from De Angeli Industrie of Italy, one of the world's leading manufacturers of cable machinery.

EMINENT MEN AT THE HELM

Guiding, motivating and inspiring the Telelink Nicco team is a Board of Directors comprising luminaries of Indian industry. Principal among them are the Chairman, Mr. Sukhendu Ray, the Managing Director(Designate), Dr. Abhijit Sen and Director Mr. Rajive Kaul.

THE TELECOMMUNICATION REVOLUTION IS HERE

It's the dawn of a new telecommunication era in India. By the year 2000 A.D. there will be an estimated 200 million telephone subscriber lines. Nearly 1 million public call offices and 8,00,000 data communication lines. With over 2,00,000 telex connections to ensure quick, profitable decisions-nationwide.

The exciting onward march continues. From the Nicco Family, the hi-tech trailblazer of the East. Another great effort. Another forward step towards unity in diversity.

Which makes Telelink Nicco an ideal investment opportunity to invest in and share growth with.

ISSUE OF 23,40,000 EQUITY SHARES OF RS.10/- EACH FOR CASH AT PAR.

HIGHLIGHTS

- Financial and Technical collaboration with General Cable (USA)—Fitst foreign equity participation in PIJF Cables in India.
- Trial runs have begun in February 1987—Commercial production expected shortly.
- Assured market—P & T. (Department of Telecommunication) and Ministry of Defence have been importing cables from General Cable (USA). Now Telelink Nicco will supply the same cables to them.
- Project jointly promoted by NICCO and WBIDC.
- PIJF Cables—A technically superior product vital for modernisation of Telecommunication network.
- Imported equipment from one of the World's leading machinery manufacturers—De Angeli Industrie of Italy.
- NICCO has been paying dividend every year without a break for over four decades.
- Excellent labour relations—NICCO has not lost a day's production due to labour unrest for over a decade.
- 115 E, F, I, for Non-Resident Indians & other tax benefits.
- Easy liquidity—Listing at Calcutta, Bombay and Delhi Stock Exchanges.
- 80CC consent already obtained. Other usual Income Tax/Wealth Tax benefits.

ISSUE OPENS ON
For Non-Resident Indians - April 25th, 1987
For Indian Public—May 6th, 1987

Managers to the Issue :

SBI Capital Markets Limited.

The Industrial Credit and Investment Corporation of India Ltd.
Merchant Banking Division

Advisors to the Issue :

CANARA BANK
Merchant Banking Bureau

Hambro Nicco Financial Services Ltd.

Telelink Nicco Limited
Registered Office : Nicco House, 2, Hare Street, Calcutta-700 001
Hi-tech, high diversity Nicco Family

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

bajaj

brings you a complete range of energy-efficient Industrial Luminaires.

BJHBI-250-400

BJIW-200

BJIE-140

BJFW-200

BJI-240VP

Engineered for high efficiency and designed to suit any high, medium or low bay application as well as different atmospheres like high ambient temperature/humidity in rolling and textile mills, corrosive vapours in fertiliser and chemical plants, etc.

Bajaj offers a total integrated lighting service from the designing to the electrification and installation of lighting fittings on a turnkey basis for any indoor/outdoor location.

For details write to:
Lighting Project Services
Bajaj Electricals Limited
45-47 Veer Nariman Road
Bombay 400 023.

Heros: BE-780 A

bajaj

The lighting people since 1938.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SRI LANKA

The New Offensive

INSENSATE violence once again ripped through Sri Lanka last fortnight claiming a high number of innocent lives. Besides setting back peace hopes, the violence also heightened the tension and mutual distrust between the island's two main ethnic communities—the Sinhalese and the Tamils—to new dangerous levels and seriously eroded the credibility of India as a mediator on the Sri Lankan question.

THE main Pettah Bus Terminus in the heart of Colombo city is a sea of humanity on any working day after office hours. And although there are Tamil traders and shopkeepers in the vicinity, most of the people normally waiting at the bus terminus to get home are likely to be Sinhalese. A majority of the buses from the terminus are bound for predominantly Sinhala areas like Negambo, Jayala, and Gampaha in the suburbs of the Sri Lankan capital.

As offices started giving over on the evening of Tuesday, April 21, the Pettah Bus Terminus was, as usual, swarming with people. Traffic was inching through. Packed buses were driving out for different destinations. Unobtrusively, amidst the chaos of all the hooting vehicles, four people drove into the area in a Ford Escort van and parked it between the imposing structures of the Bank of Ceylon and the Ceylon Transport Board. Like people on an urgent errand, they quickly got out of the van and busily walked away. It was 5 p.m.

Within minutes, Pettah came to resemble a mass funeral pyre. A powerful 75-kg bomb, which had been kept in the van and obviously timed, exploded. Charred, dismembered, and mutilated bodies lay strewn about everywhere, as in a battlefield. People, vehicles, handcarts, and shops went up in smoke in that blinding fury of fire.

The figures spoke of one of the worst tragedies of ethnic riot-torn Sri Lanka: 109 people, most of them innocent Sinhalese civilians were killed and 285 people were injured, again mostly Sinhalese. Colombo's suspicions immediately centred on the Eelam Revolutionary Organisers (EROS). EROS had claimed credit for the earlier bomb blasts in Colombo, the bomb in the Central Telegraph Office building in May last year and the blast in the Air Lanka plane around the same time, and it was EROS cadre members who were again nabbed in the aborted attempt to bomb the oil installation on the outskirts of Colombo early this year.

Photographs by SHYAM TEKWANI

A Colombo blast victim being laid to rest: gory tragedy

There had been provocation for Tamil militants to hit back at Colombo. In end-March, Sri Lankan Air Force planes had bombed the Jaffna General Hospital and killed 25 patients. Within a day, four fishing boats off the Jaffna coast were also fired at by the navy.

EROS, however, publicly denies responsibility for the blast. Says V. Balakumar, its convener in Madras: "We do not know who is responsible for the bomb blast. We have not done it." But added: "Why are you blaming us for killing innocent Sinhalese civilians, when the Sri Lankan Army, in the last few years, has killed nearly 20,000 innocent Tamil civilians?" Despite Balakumar's claims, however, the most liberal estimates place the Tamil civilians toll at 8,000.

Suspicion on the Tamil militants was strengthened by the fact that the bomb came close on the heels of the Good Friday massacre of 122 bus passengers on the Trincomalee-Habarana route. But in any event the incidents have effectively broken whatever fragile hopes there were of a possible settlement of the Sri Lankan Tamil ethnic problem. They gave a very convenient handle to Colombo to back out of the by now famous December 19, 1986, proposals (which envisaged the creation of a Tamil majority northern province and a Tamil majority eastern province by merging out two Sinhala electorates in Amparai district). Although Colombo has not said that it is rescinding, Prime Minister R. Premadasa sent reverberations through South Block last fortnight by telling the Sri Lankan Parliament in strongly-worded terms: "Any friend who asks us to find a political solution will be considered our biggest enemy. Let us safeguard the people and the country first." Premadasa, a Sinhalese hard-liner, said that if India had really expressed its profound grief and sorrow at the deaths of innocent civilians due to terrorist activities "should they not arrest these heartless brutes and murderers and hand them over to us?"

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Sri Lankan Minister for National Security, Lalith Athulathmudali, was, however, more diplomatic. In an interview with INDIA TODAY, he said: "We believe that the LTTE and EROS are intransigent. They are not prepared for talks. Efforts by India and the CS to persuade them to come to the negotiating table and reach a settlement have not succeeded. Not only that, these terrorist groups have now started a new broad-based offensive, killing innocent Sinhala civilians. Hence we have had to get into an active defensive situation."

Colombo withdrew the 10-day unilateral "cessation of hostilities" it had declared on the eve of the Sinhala and Tamil new year's day celebrations. Sri Lankan Air Force planes and helicopters last fortnight also began to extensively bomb Jaffna peninsula. Athulathmudali claimed that the army was only bombing selective LTTE and EROS targets, that it was only their hideouts, ordnance factories, and arms stockpiles which were being attacked and that Tamil civilians had been warned to clear out of the vicinity of these militant strongholds.

Sources in Jaffna, however, said that in two days of widespread bombing, 29 innocent Tamil civilians were killed in the peninsula. The headquarters of the Tamil refugees relief organisation was razed to the ground: the office of the Saturday Review, the weekly Jaffna English newspaper was damaged by a bomb as was the house of R. Balasubramaniam, former secretary of the now-defunct Jaffna Citizens Committee.

Colombo itself has been gripped by an air of insecurity in the aftermath of the bomb blast. Says Vasudeva Nanayakkara, the leader of the left-wing Nava Sama Samaja Party: "The common man in Colombo now feels unsafe to take a bus or walk on the road. And he thinks the Government is not protecting his life." Observes Lucien Rajakarunanayaka, journalist and columnist for several western and Colombo papers: "The man on the street in Colombo now feels very jittery about the Tamil Tigers. Every Tamil militant is a tiger for him."

Sinhala chauvinists desperately tried to whip up anti-Tamil feelings after the bomb blast. Three Tamil shops were looted in Pettah. But the Government promptly stepped in and imposed curfew to control the situation. A mass funeral of the dead was not allowed. In Welikada prison in Colombo, 700 Sinhalese prisoners tried to attack the 226 Tamils detained under the Prevention of Terrorism Act. But again, the police promptly intervened. The Tamil inmates were subsequently shifted.

It is this feeling of mutual distrust which seems to have been accentuated by the recent all-round violence in Sri Lanka. Even Tamils, who did not exactly look on with favour upon the activities of the militants, expressed misgivings about the sincerity of the Sri Lankan Government to find a political solution to the ethnic problem. Observed Sybil Kanakasundaram, a prominent resident of Colombo and originally a Jaffna Tamil: "There was a time when we were proud of the militants. But now we have begun to be even ashamed of them. Still, we do not think that the Sri Lankan Government is keen to find a negotiated political settlement to the Tamil problem." According to another prominent member of the Tamil Women's Union in Colombo: "Certainly, these recent incidents of militant violence deserve to be condemned. But they also make a negotiated settlement all the more imperative, and that the Government does not seem to be interested in finding, though the militants are being made the scapegoats for it. Even if Tamils are not given our traditional homeland, which has become a subject of dispute, we should at least have a safe homeland."

Spot where the booby-trapped van was left: inhuman

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

 Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Prominent Tamil residents of Colombo, while deprecating the killings of innocent Sinhalese civilians, say that the argument against violence should cut both ways. Said a Tamil businessman of Colombo: "If it is wrong for the militants to kill innocent Sinhalese civilians, it is also equally wrong for the Sri Lankan Army to kill innocent Tamil civilians. The Colombo Government's present reaction to go all out for the militants is intended to satisfy racist elements. One should remember that terrorists can be wiped out, but not terrorism, so long as the socio-economic factors which cause terrorism are operational."

Even Tamil victims of the bomb blast have a surprisingly soft corner for the militants. Says 44-year-old Thaiyalpaga Tiruvadavoor, a cashier in a snack bar in Pettah, who fractured his right arm in

POLITICAL FALLOUT

Anger Mounts

THE device which exploded in Colombo's busiest bazaar took a much heavier toll than those it actually killed or wounded. It brought anti-government Sinhala anger to exploding point and the real damage, as the future may show, was to the island's traditional social and political structure, and probably its non-alignment. The five days of insensate violence has dramatically transformed an "ethnic conflict" into a major political crisis. Since anti-government Sinhala feeling was accompanied by anti-Indian sentiment, Sri Lanka's relations with its big neighbour—and the mediator in the ethnic issue—may have been irreparably damaged.

Jayewardene (left) and Premadasa: cornered

The reaction of the government parliamentary group, which represents five-sixths of the Assembly's total membership of 168, was revealing. At the meeting, it seemed to take on the mass mood as it passed a two-part resolution urging the Government to continue its military offensive in the Tamil north until "terrorism was wiped out completely". The group also called on Rajiv Gandhi to arrest all Sri Lankan Tamil "terrorists" operating from Indian soil.

The five-sixths majority of the right-wing, pro-West, United National Party (UNP) which came to office ten years ago is illusory. In the aftermath of the recent wave of violence, this stark reality was suddenly exposed. In July 1977, a quirk of the British first-past-the-post system blessed the UNP with 85 per cent of the seats on a national vote of 52 per cent. In October 1982, President Jayewardene won another six-year term fairly comfortably, though by not a much larger percentage. Instead of holding the general elections which were due in 1983, the Government opted for a referendum, an unparalleled move in Sri Lanka's history.

The Government won the referendum by 3.1 million to 2.6 million votes but more interestingly, 8 lakh voters who had participated in the polls just two months earlier did not use their ballots. In August 1983, a week after the vicious anti-Tamil riots, another constitutional amendment (there are now 11 amendments to a nine-year-old constitution) forced the TULF MPs, elected representatives of the Tamil electorates of the north, to quit the body without taking an oath renouncing separatism. The Sri Lankan Parliament thus does not reflect democratic Tamil opinion or a large segment of Sinhala opinion.

More worrying to the UNP perhaps was a petition submitted by several hundred Buddhist monks and students. The petition, which was expunged from Hansard when an opposition MP read it out, demanded the resignation of a regime that could not protect Sinhala civilians or safeguard the Sinhala-Buddhist heritage from "Eelam terrorists". The demonstrators represented what an opposition MP described as the "JVP constituency". The JVP (People's Liberation Front) launched the Sinhala youth insurgency in 1971 which was mercilessly crushed by the army during Bandaranaike's premiership.

But underground, Rohana Wijeweera and his comrades have not been quiet. They have mounted a virulent anti-government, anti-India, pro-Sinhala-Buddhist campaign through miscellaneous front organisations, which has attracted young monks, unemployed Sinhala youth and university students. The worsening economic conditions will spread this discontent. Export prices (tea, rubber and coconut) are down, a drought has hurt production, and tourist income and foreign investment have slumped just when the debt-service ratio is rising. The IMF has given two loans on conditions that will increase inflation and unemployment. In June, Sri Lanka will be pledged US $ 550 million by the aid group, just meeting its defence vote, ten times higher than in 1983.

Raids on army camps by unidentified youths dressed in uniforms who escaped with sub-machine-guns and assault rifles, turned the spotlight on the JVP. Robberies of money and weapons conformed, the CID said, to the pre-1971 insurgency pattern. Far more alarming was the discovery of planned JVP infiltration of the army's lower ranks. Already 37 suspects among army recruits have been cashiered but over 2,000 recent recruits are being "re-screened". At least a thousand have deserted. The armed conflict and militarisation have not only brutalised southern society but struck deep roots in the Sinhala provinces which may produce a mirror image of the fearsome Tamil 'Tigers' among the young lions.

—MERVYN DE SILVA in Colombo

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RADEUS/AMC/5-86

I'm too old for dolls too young for the disco

But I think you're just right for Amul Chocolates

Amul Chocolates

a gift for someone you love

Six delicious varieties

Amul Milk Chocolate, Amul Crisp, Amul Coffee,
Amul Fruit & Nut, Amul Bitter, Amul Orange.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Sandvik engineer. On the spot. On your shopfloor, your job site. Wrestling with your problems. Working shoulder to shoulder with your engineers. Finding the most efficient and the most economical metalworking solution.

That's Sandvik show-how. More than highly sophisticated, state-of-the-art technology products, the on-the-shopfloor expertise and consultancy which makes them work, everywhere. So you get the edge, every time.

But at Sandvik, we know that there's no success without sophisticated, tenacious R&D. So we have one of the most modern R&D centres in the country. With never-say-die engineers working inside. Developing products peculiar to your needs... on the shopfloor. The very place our engineers meet you to solve your special problems.

Sandvik tames an Insert-hungry monster for a power builder.

A massive 6½ metre long, 620 mm diameter shaft, with skin hardness, hard spots and inclusions was being machined on a 40 KW Craven lathe using a conventional insert for turning and facing. Frequent insert breakages due to the difficult material resulted in expensive production stoppages. Sandvik's engineers studied the problems, recommended RCMX 320900 and established higher cutting parameters. The result: Smooth, uninterrupted production and dramatic productivity increases.

SANDVIK

SANDVIK ASIA LTD.

Not just know-how... but technical show-how

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Class Distinction
in more ways than one

Allwyn Quartz

An exclusive creation in the latest international style.

A sensational fusion of hi-tech and hi-fashion, the very latest from the pioneering Japanese time-keeping technology in quartz.

A class that shows through its uncanny accuracy. Unmatched reliability. And no maintenance.

Allwyn Quartz. One of the little extras – without the 'extra' price tag.

Available in a wide range.

Time FOR THE NEW GENERATION
ALLWYN

Manufactured under licence for SEIKO

3-year guarantee

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

the blast: "Tamil militants could have planted this bomb to draw the attention of the world to the fact that we Tamils are living as second-class citizens in this country. Today no Tamilian can get a job in southern Sri Lanka."

But among the Sinhalese, the anti-Tamil feeling is now at a dangerous level. Says bomb victim Ranasinghe: "Terrorism has to be wiped out if such violent incidents are not to recur. Tamil terrorists have started killing innocent Sinhalese. How can we tolerate this? And you cannot blame the army for killing Tamil people. If militants attack the army, how can the soldiers be decent to them?" Comments Air Force Warrant Officer G.D.L. Ayupala: "It is the duty of the army to hunt out terrorists who are wanted criminals. If, in the process, a few innocent Tamil civilians get killed, it cannot be helped."

Apart from heightening the mutual distrust between the two ethnic communities, the bomb blast and the Trincomalee massacre have seriously eroded the credibility of India as a mediator on the Sri Lankan question. India is now seen in Sri Lanka as having absolutely no clout with the militants to force them to the negotiating table. Even moderate Tamils say that the December 19 proposals were good enough for India to have made the Tigers see reason and accept them at least as a starting point for negotiations. Observes Dr Neelan Tiruchelvam, former Tamil United Liberation Front member of Parliament: "India has always promised more that it delivered in persuading Tamil militants to come to the settlement. India appears to be lacking in effectiveness in exerting pressure on Tamil groups. And this perception of India's ineffectiveness is dangerous."

Confided a Foreign Ministry official in Delhi: "After protracted negotiations with Colombo, we managed to wrest substantial concessions for the Tamils in the December 19 proposals. It is sad that we could not be firm in selling the package to the militants. We should have either been firm with Colombo and told them that we are fully backing the Tamil militants in their struggle, or we should have told the militants in no uncertain terms that they have to be reasonable and accept a settlement within the framework of a united Sri Lanka and not go on mouthing their unrealistic slogans. It is this dithering which has damaged our reputation internationally."

Now the popular emotion in Colombo runs very strongly against India for shielding Tamil terrorists. Says 32-year-old W. Jagatsreelal, in the gem business, whose brother H.H. Sumanasree died in the blast: "It is the Indian Government which is responsible for all these violent incidents here. We have respect only for Mahatma Gandhi, but no respect for Indira Gandhi or Rajiv Gandhi." The Tamils, on the other hand, feel very strongly that India has let them down and is not able to deal decisively with Colombo. Delhi, therefore, is now in the unenviable position of having been able to please neither the Sri Lankan Government nor the Tamils.

—S.H. VENKATRAMANI
in Colombo

Bomb blast victims in a hospital: innocent victims

Armed police at the Pettah junction: keeping the lid on

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TRAFFIC

DEATH ON THE ROADS

MUKESH PARPIANI

Each accident on the road is a human tragedy: a life ended, a family shattered. Or, if you are lucky, disability for life. Each accident also contributes to the overall statistics, and these tell a frightening tale: fatalities on the roads have become the Number One cause of accidental death in the country. The numbers are equal to a Kanishka crash every third day, and the toll in terms of economic loss is Rs 2,000 crore every year. Principal Correspondent RAJ CHENGAPPA's report on a growing national problem:

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

It was like a nightmare. But for R. Kapoor, a Kanpur lawyer, there was no waking up to a reassuring reality. In a daze he pulled himself out of his battered Maruti. In the moonlight he could see his wife, Renu, lying dead on the pavement.

Near her lay their year-old daughter Koppal, her tiny face a bloody mess, her body perforated by glass pieces. And as Kapoor rushed her he saw his son, Mudit, 5, with a deep gash on his forehead. Beside him, his friend's wife and son also lay unconscious. All four of them died at the hospital later.

They had been returning home after a pleasant dinner. Kapoor veered too far to the left to avoid another car and crashed against a small tree. With a sickening crunch a branch smashed through the windshield, cut through the left side and turned the car around. For a simple accident the price seemed too high to pay. And a month later an anguished Kapoor, 32, can only ask: "Why did I have to survive?"

Sudden and gruesome death on the road has become a chilling phenomenon in an increasingly motorised Indian society. Last year alone, 40,000 people were killed in road accidents, up from 24,600 in 1980. "It's equivalent to 123 Kanishka crashes every year, or one every three days," points out Dinesh Mohan, a World Health Organisation (WHO) consultant on traffic engineering.

It's not death alone that is worrying. The number of people injured in road accidents has almost doubled in the past 6 years, touching 1.75 lakh last year. A fourth of these cases involve serious injuries, ranging from cracked skulls to severed limbs, leaving people physically and mentally handicapped for life.

"Indians now run a greater risk than ever before of being killed in road accidents," says Dr S.M. Sareen, head of road safety at the Central Road Research Institute in Delhi. India has one of the highest accident rates in the world—one out of every 42 vehicles in the country met with an accident last year. In the United States and Europe, the average is one in every 100 vehicles. Worse, India has a fatality rate 20 times higher than the developed countries.

Road fatalities now lead the list of accidental deaths in the country, way ahead of death by drowning, fire and railway accidents. Studies done by the WHO show that road accidents account for 2.5 per cent of the total deaths recorded in developing countries like India. But in the 5-44 age group it is as high as 10 per cent, and is among the six leading causes of death.

But dry statistics don't speak of the blood and agony of reality. They don't, for instance, talk of how K.R.Sethuraman, a Bangalore office assistant, had to watch his wife being run over by a scooter. Or the sorrow of Sunithi Barua, a Calcutta housewife, who lost her son and daughter on the same day when they were run over by a bus after it hit their motorcycle. And they do not record the sage of Sudha Balachandron, 30, a Bombay doctor, paralysed from waist down after being knocked down by a car, who now finds moving her legs a little like "running a marathon."

India has a fatality rate in road accidents that is 20 times that in the developed countries.

ACCIDENT TOLL

Statistics don't reflect the appalling conditions of emergency units in government hospitals for treating accident victims. Or the shocking fact that someone could have an accident right in front of a private hospital but would not be treated there (for fear of ensuing medico-legal problems). Indeed, there is not one fully equipped specialised trauma care hospital in the country.

The bare figures don't indicate how driving licences can be bought, almost as easily as cinema tickets. Even Rajesh Pilot, Union minister of state for surface transport, admits that "you can get a licence from Pune while sitting in Delhi". Neither do they give an idea of a police force totally ill-equipped to cope with the galloping rate of accidents, and being reduced to—as one officer put it—"crash fighting." Or of municipal corporations who abet tragedies with their engineered death traps like pot-holes and badly lit roads.

The rising death toll doesn't expose

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

the fact that 90 per cent of the drivers who kill on the road are acquitted by the courts for lack of evidence. Or the long wait of Rajamma Annamalai of Madras, whose husband was run over by a lorry three years ago, with the accident tribunal still not decided on the compensation she is to be paid. Rajamma's case is the rule, not the exception.

The price of road accidents is paid not only by the victims and their relatives, but by the country as a whole. The insurance companies paid out as much as Rs 266 crore towards accident claims in 1985 alone. International traffic experts estimate that in developing countries the loss of production and hospital expenses caused by accidents would be 1 per cent of the gross national product. In India that is over Rs 2,000 crore every year—enough money to make the roads much safer.

"As a nation we should be shocked by the toll," says Ajay Kumar Singh, Bangalore's traffic chief. "Yet we hardly do anything about it." Indeed, as a traffic engineeer complains: "We are legislating death by policy." The introduction of fast cars like the Maruti and the new range of zippy two-wheelers contribute to the rising toll. Their quick acceleration and instant-braking abilities encourage speeding. And, on collision, the Maruti's fragile body usually crumbles like an eggshell. Kapoor, the Kanpur lawyer who lost his entire family in the crash, says: "The left side of my car was ripped by a branch that cut through it like a sword. Cars should not be made so fragile."

Spurring the death rattle is an unprecedented vehicle explosion, with a quadrupling of numbers in the last decade, to over 10 million now. Vulnerable two-wheelers alone number six million—one million in 1975—while trucks and buses, which cause the most damage, number one million (1975: 0.3 million). Cars number another 1.5 million. The result of having all these contraptions on the roads is anarchy.

Yet complacent traffic planners point to the fact that the accident rate per 1,000 vehicles has declined from 33.9 in 1980 to 25.5 now. What this argument ignores is the fact that all over the world the growth of accidents never keeps pace with vehicle population. In fact, the rate of decrease in Indian accidents is much slower than that recorded in developed countries and many other third world nations.

Bus ploughs into several vehicles after its brakes f

G. DEEPAK PAWAR

► They were watching Buniyaad in Bangalore when the telephone rang. Anima Burman (photo) picked it up and was given the numbing news. Her only son, Rajiv, was lying seriously injured in a city hospital. When she got there she was directed to the mortuary, and on a stone stretcher lay Rajiv, his body wrapped in a white sheet. Three hours earlier he had been run over by a bus while riding his motorcycle, and had died instantly. When her husband Sharad, a deputy inspector general of police, returned home that night from an outstation tour he found a long row of cars lined up on the street outside. Instantly, he knew something was wrong. Four months later, the Burmans and their two daughters are still in a state of shock. And Rajiv's goldfish continue to stare out of their glass bowl at his unchanged room.

Says Sharad: "There should be a law that parents must die first. When I was lighting his pyre I thought, shouldn't it have been him lighting mine instead?"

Death rides the city roads. Over a third of the accidents occur in the 12 Indian metropolises alone. Delhi, with its broad avenues and sweeping boulevards, leads the death list. Every day four people are killed and 18 others injured on the capital's roads. The numbers have doubled in the last decade.

Ironically, the problem seems to be that Delhi has such good roads. Virtually every other city has clogged traffic inching through crowded lanes, with the average speed a fraction of what exists in Delhi. The number of accidents too is much lower than the capital's.

In Bombay, where a collision occurs every 20 minutes, deaths have come down from 657 in 1985 to 555 last year (though those seriously injured rose from 805 to 946). In Bangalore and Madras too, traffic deaths show signs of having peaked at around 400 deaths a year after rising steeply for a while. And Calcutta of course is the safest city of them all, with slightly fewer deaths than even Bangalore—probably because the city's traffic moves slowest of all.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

y on the street

the Pallavan Transport Corporation is involved in so many fatal accidents that road users have nicknamed it Pallavan Kollavan (Tamil for the Pallavan killers).

► Tears well up in N.K. Balasubramaniam's eyes as he lies flat in his bed, his legs swathed in layers of bandages. "The pain, the pain," he screams, looking at his legs and repeatedly lifting his arms to some distant God asking for relief. He slips into delirium as he talks of how, while walking back with his son last month, a reversing van knocked him down and pinned his legs under its rear wheels for five agonising minutes. But for Balasubramaniam, 60, a retired accounts manager, it could have been eternity before the van moved and he was rushed to hospital, with multiple leg fractures. He still doesn't know whether he will walk again.

The Transport Ministry likes to list the causes of accidents simply as: "Bad drivers, bad vehicles and bad roads". Of these, studies have shown that bad drivers and human error are responsible for around 80 per cent of the accidents. In a country that is notorious for its slackness at work, everyone on the road seems to drive as if there is no tomorrow. Indeed, the most visible symbol of this is none other than Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi, who likes to take his imported jeep and Mercedes beyond 100 kmph, causing more than one mishap for escort cars trying desperately to keep pace.

"I've ceased to be a good Christian," says M.K. Oommen, an Indian Airlines officer in Bangalore: "Every day I use more than a dozen swear words." In Calcutta, few cars can be seen without a dent and a police officer says: "Ninety-nine per cent of the people here don't observe rules, and the 1 per cent who do are traffic cops." In Madras, lawyer K.S. Rajagopalan says: "With everyone violating laws I'm tempted to do the same myself."

A Central Road Research Institute survey of 1,200 people found that half of those who had driving licences had no knowledge of the traffic rules. Only 20 per cent of them knew how to overtake correctly. A third had no knowledge of road signs. And—in a rare display of honesty—63 per cent admitted that they did not observe rules on the road.

Fuelling the anarchy on the roads is the corrupt licensing system. In Bombay, touts arrange for a licence without a test at the Road Transport Office, for Rs 250. In Bangalore the going rate is Rs 150. In Calcutta and Delhi it's Rs 300. In Delhi, there is only one vehicle inspector to deal with 500 cases—testing new drivers and certifying vehicle fitness—every day. Driving tests, naturally, are cursory.

The lack of a national registry has complicated matters. If a driver's licence is cancelled in Delhi he can drive down to neighbouring Gurgaon in Haryana and get another without anyone being the wiser. Vehicle fitness tests are a farce. In most countries bi-annual vehicle fitness tests are mandatory. But in India the fitness tests for private vehicles are needed only after 15 years. Though trucks are to be checked annually, a system to execute this simply does not exist. And, of course, this means more corruption.

Also, unlike the rest of the world, drivers are not subjected to medical check-ups before licences are issued. When the National Transportation Planning and Research Centre in Trivandrum checked 173 truck drivers on the Quilon Highway, it found that 90 per cent of them had defective eyesight. In Delhi, when the po-

Pedestrians and two-wheelers are the most vulnerable road users. And buses and trucks are the biggest killers. Oddly enough, zebra crossings account for a high number of fatalities in the cities.

But traffic jams are obviously no solution to death on the road. And as city planners build new roads and streamline traffic, the death curve will rise again. Meanwhile, much of the increase in the national toll has come from smaller towns. In Kanpur, for instance, over 200 people were killed last year. In Nagpur, road deaths have more than doubled to 150 since 1981. In Lucknow, the annual toll is 150—three times the figure five years ago. And in bustling Pune the toll has crossed the 250 mark.

If the cities are dangerous, so are the highways, where a third of the fatalities occur, and where there is neither prompt medical aid nor police help. In the cities themselves, a third of the people killed are pedestrians. Oddly enough, as a study by the Indian Institute of Technology says, 75 per cent of these pedestrians were killed on straight roads, and not at intersections as is widely believed. In fact, zebra crossings are death-traps: 20 per cent of the pedestrians were killed on the markings.

Other pedestrians, two-wheeler riders are the most vulnerable group, with a risk level five times higher than car drivers. And, of course, the big killers in the cities are buses. The Delhi Transport Corporation—with just 5,000 buses—kills more people than all the drivers of Calcutta put together. In Madras, lice did a similar check on bus drivers, a large majority were discovered to have bad eyesight. Helpfully, the police provided them with free spectacles. "We have reduced ourselves to just a revenue collection body. We pay little attention to road safety measures," admits S.K.Sagane, Maharashtra's transport commissioner.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

► When S.B. Deol was told that he was to head Delhi's traffic police, colleagues said it was a "prestigious posting". Two months later he doesn't even like to mention what he does at a party: "The moment I tell them, people unleash a long list of complaints and suggestions."

Deol has the unenviable task of looking after a city which has the highest number of road deaths in the country. And when he does do something about it, people rarely appreciate his efforts. When he started street corner education programmes using loudspeakers, a shopkeeper at Andrews Ganj promptly rang him up and told him to shut the thing off and shift his cop elsewhere. Despite getting his police force to challan over 1,500 people for traffic violations every week, he admits: "People just don't seem to learn." Deol is philosophical: "I'll try to lose the battle as gracefully as possible."

The truth is that, despite their Bharatnatyam antics at the crossroads, traffic police all over the country are a beaten lot. Hamstrung by a lack of staff and overwhelmed by the growth of vehicles on the road, the police have become mere spectators to the chaos on the roads. "What the hell do you expect my constable to do?" asks Bangalore's Ajay Kumar. "We are not consulted on any developments at all. Bus shelters and buildings sprout up without our knowledge. And then we are expected to regulate traffic."

In fact, poor traffic engineering is a major cause of accidents and the police rarely have a say in improving matters. "We are the most visible symbols of authority on the roads when in reality the role we play is limited," says Hasan Gaffoor, Bombay's traffic chief. They are rarely consulted by the municipal corporation over development plans. Only a few cities have started traffic engineering cells, and only now is traffic flow taken into account while sanctioning buildings or developing new areas. But even then most of these regulations are observed in the breach.

Nowhere in the country has the number of traffic policemen kept pace with vehicles. In Delhi, only a quarter of the intersections are manned. In Bombay, the police asked to double the staff, and got a quarter of what they had asked for. In Bangalore, the traffic police strength hasn't increased since 1976. And in Kanpur manned intersections are unheard of.

The irony is that the penalty for violating traffic rules is nominal. In Bombay, the maximum fine levied for violations is a laughable Rs 50. On most occasions people can get away by paying the constable less. In the courts, the penalty for killing a person on the road is a maximum of two years' imprisonment, or fine, or both. And as P.N. Parashar, Kanpur's chief metropolitan magistrate, admits: "We are able to convict in hardly 5 to 10 per cent of the cases." The rest are acquitted or fined around Rs 2,000. As one police officer says: "If you want to murder someone just run over them." Indeed, if the accused pleads guilty he is usually let off with a maximum fine of Rs 5,000. But if he contests the case and loses, the penalty is imprisonment. Under the law, it is better to plead guilty.

A survey found that 80 per cent of drivers don't know how to overtake correctly, and 33 per cent don't know the road signs. Sixty-three per cent also admitted that they don't follow the traffic rules.

■ A highway crash on the busy Grand Trunk Road in w...

The investigation of traffic deaths is usually done in a cursory manner by the police, motor vehicle inspectors and doctors. Few eyewitnesses come forward to give evidence because of the dreaded prospect of repeatedly going to court. The police usually make street offenders, who connected with the case, testify and their evidence is easily demolished by defence lawyers.

Other malpractices abound. Post-mortem and first information reports often have to be paid for under the table in order to avoid delays, and in order to get them tutored. In many cases the police have to be 'kept happy' to stand as witnesses during trial. A Bangalore lawyer complains: "You have to grease everyone's palm: clerk, constable or doctor."

► His bed is like a cradle, and at 59, Ramanand Hattangadi (photo), a Bombay advocate, can barely move. After a truck smashed into his car six years ago, he has been paralysed from waist down and can move only one hand. He needs help to do simple things like raising himself or turning on his stomach.

But Hattangadi didn't allow his disability to get him down. Fighting his own case in the Motor Accident Claims Tribunal, he wheeled himself to court 43 times, examining 53 witnesses. Meanwhile, he even got a doctor, who had tried to accept a bribe...

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

were killed: terrifying rise water and only one for draining it."

Waking up to the problem, the Government declared two years ago that, irrespective of who was at fault, an accident victim's family would get Rs 15,000 if he died and Rs 7,500 in case he was permanently disabled. This was to help the victim till the compensation case was decided in court, and was to be paid within 45 days of filing the claim. But documents like the post-mortem report or insurance certificate, which the court requires, are never available in time. And the courts take a year to award the claim, negating the very purpose of the new provision.

The backlog of cases has now resulted in ambulance-chasing lawyers cropping up in every city. They get police stations to supply them with details of the day's accidents and rush to the hospital to bag the victim's case. Malpractices abound. Since half the victims are illiterate, lawyers skim off as much as 30 per cent of the compensation that is paid.

Shockingly enough, while insurance companies cough up the money even after prolonged delays, the big defaulters are public transport corporations. These are supposed to maintain a revolving fund to pay up claims, but the Calcutta State Transport Corporation for one doesn't bother. A Calcutta lawyer, Dipak Mukherjee, has over 50 cases where the corporation has not bothered to pay despite court orders. Oddly enough, the court can take no punitive action against the defaulter. It can only direct the district collector to recover the dues using "revenue methods". In most cases the collector is too busy to bother about accident victims' claims.

► At the entrance of the casualty unit in the Calcutta Medical College lies a dead man covered with a sheet. Around him the floor is littered with accident victims in various stages of agony. Relatives hold up intravenous drip bottles, a dog strolls past unchecked.

Upstairs, only one of the two operation theatres is functional, and even this lacks the basic facilities. Simple mechanical respirators vital for keeping patients alive are missing, the X-ray unit is often out of order, and the sterilisation equipment is also used for making tea.

Although accidents require a team of specialised surgeons, like orthopaedists, neurologists and plastic surgeons, only general surgeons operate. And people are getting angry. Self-defensive doctors now register cases from behind steel bars to protect themselves from assaults. All this in the largest hospital in the state, treating over 20 accident victims every day.

Accident victims should be taken to hospital as early as possible, within what doctors call the 'golden hour'. But most cities are not equipped with proper ambulance facilities to rush patients across. A study in Delhi showed that only 4 per cent of accident cases were brought to hospital in ambulances. And police brought only 20 per cent of the victims. The rest were bundled into auto-rickshaws or taxis, often causing severe secondary injuries. Says Dr P.N.Tandon, head of the neurosurgery unit at the capital's All India Institute of Medical Sciences: "In transit, reparable lesions become irreparable. Twenty per cent of the deaths can be prevented if there is on-the-spot first aid."

The public hospitals are overburdened because private

...d by the Anti-Corruption ...m. Finally, last May, after ...le spanning six years, the ...n awarded him Rs 26 lakh as ...pensation. But in victory ...ttangadi is hardly trium-...nt. For him the long battle of ...without legs continues.

...f there is anything typical ...n Hattangadi's case it is the ...k wait before justice can be ...k. The past six years have ...n accident claims doubling ...e tribunals, but without ...proportionate increase in ...staff. The Bombay Motor ...dent Tribunal, in which Hattangadi ...ed, is located on the fourth floor of a dilapidated building. It is ...posed to have four courts but, because of lack of space, makes ...with three. Of the 2,000 claims that are filed every year, only ...are settled. Currently there are over 5,000 claims to be ...ed of, some dating back to 1977.

The situation is no better in Calcutta, where at the Alipur ...court room because there is no storage space. The number of ...ed files of claimants are stacked higgledy-piggledy around ...ed before the tribunal has shot up from 498 in 1980 to ...in 1986. There is now a backlog of around 5,000 cases, and ...strate complains: "It's like a tank with two taps for filling nursing homes will have nothing to do with accident cases. A doctor at a large, swank private hospital in New Delhi explains: "The moment we take a case, it becomes a medico-legal problem. We are forced to attend courts to give evidence, and we just have no time for it." Moreover, they argue setting up a trauma care unit is expensive, as is the treatment.

NAMAS BHOJANI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Government doctors stress the need to set up fully-equipped trauma care hospitals—something that is being planned in Bangalore and Delhi. Almost a third of road accident victims suffer head injuries and need specialised care. But in Kanpur, for instance, such patients have to be rushed to Lucknow, about 80 km away, because there is no neurosurgeon in this city of about two million. Says Dr S. Arumugham, dean of Madras General Hospital: "We must also have wireless equipped ambulances that can administer first aid and treat patients even before they reach the hospital."

A battered Maruti van: the price of speed

Twenty five per cent of all accident victims are two-wheeler riders. And most of them die because they either don't wear helmets, or don't wear them properly. A Delhi study found that while only 24 per cent of helmeted riders sustained critical injuries, the figure was as high as 56 per cent for unhelmeted riders. In 30 per cent of the cases the helmet had come off before impact.

► On a wintry January evening three months ago, Seema Deb's life was turned upside down. Back home from shopping, she was told that her husband had met with an accident. On reaching the hospital, she saw him groaning in pain, his left leg soaked in blood. "I'm finished," he said when he saw her. Shortly afterwards, his body was brought out covered with a white sheet.

Deb, 44, a pharmaceutical company owner, had chosen to use his motorcycle instead of his car. He was thrown off his bike while trying to avoid a pot-hole, and a bus rammed into him. His thigh muscles were ripped, the doctors at the hospital were unable to stop the bleeding and Deb died.

The death saw the well-knit family crack up. Seema moved around in a daze for months. Her eldest son, Sambuddha, 20, dropped a year in school. Eventually, Seema pulled herself together and started managing a part of the family business. Now Seema says: "I'm not scared of death anymore."

The Government is finally waking up to the tragedy on the roads. "We are extremely concerned by the rising death toll," says Pilot. Last fortnight his ministry formed a National Road Safety Council to chalk out remedial measures. The minister is also piloting through Parliament a bill that seeks radical changes in the outdated Motor Vehicles Act. And Pilot promises to end the corruption in the road transport offices. "We will make licences as difficult as getting a bail order," he says.

Drivers will be asked to go through tests again if they meet with accidents and a medical fitness test for commercial vehicle drivers is to be introduced. Independent agencies are to be set up to conduct fitness tests for commercial vehicles. And the long-awaited national registry for licences is to be started. On all major highways, the ministry plans to introduce mobile patrols equipped with first aid facilities to attend to accident victims speedily.

But all this is not enough. Vehicles have to be made safer too. Making seat belts compulsory for cars—India is one of the few countries where this is not yet mandatory—will reduce the severity of injury and save lives, as studies abroad have repeatedly shown. Safer windshields that shatter into small pieces under impact should be a feature in all cars. For two-wheelers, both the rider and the pillion need to wear helmets since almost half of those who suffer head injuries are pillion-riders. Studies show that bicycles painted yellow or orange, instead of the traditional black, are more easily visible at night and could avert numerous accidents.

The introduction of new, fast, but fragile cars and zippy motorcycles has encouraged speeding and contributed to the rising toll.

Traffic experts believe that the death toll could be reduced if cities develop a more effective mass transportation system. In crowded Calcutta, Amiya Bandopadhyaya, chief traffic planner, Transport Department, says: "What we need is a greater use of railways to ease congestion."

But improving mass transportation systems is easier said than done. All over the country bus services run at a loss, totalling Rs 1,500 crore in 1985 alone. The seventh plan document suggested introducing electrically powered public transport systems, but the costs are prohibitive. For instance, Bangalore's planned electrified suburban network of trains, spanning 125 km, would cost around Rs 650 crore, or Rs 50 lakh per kilometre. The underground transit system is a costly but effective way out. Calcutta's Metro now costs Rs 50 crore for each kilometre. If Delhi invests in a 40 km underground system, the cost could be around Rs 3,000 crore.

But faced with the mounting loss caused by road accidents and the prospect of utter chaos on the roads, there may ultimately be no option other than the relatively safer mass transit systems. And it wouldn't kill anyone if the Government speeded up its road safety plans.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Deposits zoom from Rs. 1.96 crores to about Rs. 25 crores

Advances zoom from Rs. 2.95 crores to about Rs. 35 crores

Gross Earnings zoom from Rs. 9 lakhs to about Rs. 3.60 crores

There is only one word to describe the growth of the fastest growing Finance Company

METEORIC

COMPARATIVE POSITION

Particulars	Rs. in lakhs As at 31st March 1984	1985	1986	1987 (Estimated)
Capital	25	61	97	205
Reserves & Surplus	6	16	111	250
Deposits	196	329	1012	2500
Advances	295	563	1461	3500
Gross Earnings	9	28	160	360

A family of 7000 Shareholders, 35000 Depositors and 10000 Borrowers with 24 Branches and 8 Sakthi Safe Vaults in 5 States, ALL WITHIN JUST THREE SHORT YEARS.

SAKTHI FINANCE LIMITED

SAKTHI FINANCE LTD

(Executive Chairman : S.N.PAI)

Regd. Office : 475, Dr. Nanjappa Road, Coimbatore – 641 018. Phone : 32240 & 30500

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Path to Peace

WHEN I decided to go to Punjab, I wanted to go with a message of peace, love and understanding. And I walked more than 2,000 km carrying that message. But initially, the reaction from the other side, inside the Golden Temple, was not very encouraging. The boys there had said that they would not allow me to enter the temple, and we even got letters to this effect. The Punjab Government, in turn, said it could provide security only up to the gate. But we always felt we were safe because we were on the right path. And ultimately it was the victory of our philosophy. It was a victory of non-violence over violence. We got a tremendous response. So there is a silver lining, and nothing is lost yet.

Among the Sikhs, the feeling is more of hurt than anything else. They have been known for their valour, bravery and dedication to the country. Suddenly, the rest of the country is looking at them with suspicion. This definitely hurts them. We must revive the old image, the old feelings.

We must realise that if the Punjab problem is not solved, similar problems can spread to other states too, as fundamentalism raises its head. Then Punjab will destroy not only itself, but the rest of the country too. I, for one, never met anyone who talked of Khalistan. They believe in the oneness of the country. I met Sikhs in other states too. While the Hindus in Punjab live in fear, the Sikhs outside also live in fear, because anything that happens in Punjab affects them. Also, there are Sikh brothers at the helm of affairs all over India. Though they may say anything outwardly, they are not very happy.

I met a lot of people, people who are very big, and their opinion is as violent as the violence in Punjab. I fear such violent attitudes. It disturbs me when they say that we should be more aggressive and eliminate all violent people in Punjab.

I was really shocked to see the barrier between Hindus and Sikhs, which did not exist before this. Though the people said that there was no such thing, you could feel it. Unfortunately, some newspapers in Punjab are helping to divide Hindus and Sikhs. They forget that a Punjabi mother cries whenever anyone dies—Hindu or Sikh. The fact is that the cruel times have affected the Punjabi people and their nature. Punjabis normally have smiles across their faces, but this time they were like closed flowers.

Inevitably, it is the youngsters who always rebel first. But nobody is born a criminal. It is the environment created by the elders of the country that make youngsters behave like this. This cannot be solved with guns, because the more guns you use, the more guns you create there.

> "If I believed in eliminating violent people, I wouldn't have walked 2,000 km with a message of peace, love and understanding. And ultimately it was the victory of our philosophy. It was a victory of non-violence over violence."

I believe the Punjab problem is an internal problem. There is no point blaming our neighbours or western powers. If we cannot solve the problem, the fault lies with us. If people like us—people from different walks of life, different religions and different states—could create this impact through a via media that avoided confrontation, then we can have a settlement.

A solution can be found if we adopt a fatherly approach, not in the style of government functioning. A fatherly approach means not just submission, because a father can be tough also. But then the son knows that behind the toughness there is affection as well. If this feeling can be created, then a solution can be found.

There are three steps to be taken first. The Jodhpur detainees who have been in prison since Operation Bluestar should be tried and punished, if found guilty. Otherwise, they should be set free. As for the deserters, if they can't be rehabilitated in the armed forces because the army's rules are strict—and I agree with the Government on this—they can be rehabilitated elsewhere. They did something on the spur of the moment, because of religious feelings, and because of this they shouldn't be deprived of their livelihood.

Finally, Madame Gandhi was our leader, and her death was a black day for the nation. There is no way her death can be compensated. But the death of innocent Sikhs should also be a great shock to all of us. No one has the right to take the lives of innocent people. All such deaths after Madame Gandhi's assassination should be condemned. This will be the healing touch—for both the Sikh and Hindu psyches.

If these three steps are taken, the other issues can be solved with mutual understanding. We met Professor Darshan Singh twice. He feels that a lot of injustice has been done. And I was at the receiving end, because I was not a spokesman of any government or organisation. So I must meet the other side too. But the point is, you don't get anywhere with two meetings. They were letting out steam, and this is what happens when you come face to face for the first time. It doesn't mean that you have to resolve all those grievances. But first you must create an atmosphere of faith and trust, with the genuine involvement of the people.

As for the Barnala Government and the various terrorist groups, I don't know who should talk or who is too weak to talk. But whatever the give and take, we should not feel that anyone is going to lose anything. It is the problem of a home, of a country. And as long as it does not harm the unity of the country, we should be able to find a solution.

Personally, it was like a self-cleansing for me. The only thing I learnt is that we must stop fighting each other in the name of religion, region and language. Only then can we tackle the main problem facing the country: poverty.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

B.A. HONOURS.

The prestigious American aviation magazine Air Transport World has named us 'Airline of the Year.' We're both delighted and proud to accept the award. Our passengers can be sure that this is one laurel we certainly won't be resting on.

BRITISH AIRWAYS
The world's favourite airline.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Surpass [sə'pa:s] v. outdo, be greater or better than; pre-eminent, matchless. It is with this aim in mind that each of our chefs work extremely hard to make sure every single dish is perfectly prepared. In La Rochelle, you can enjoy exquisite French cuisine. In Taipan, you discover the delights of truly authentic Szechwan fare from China. And in the Palms, you'll find our continental and local specialities are just right for snacks or light meals. We always try to surpass the highest standards — because you deserve the best the world has to offer.

The Oberoi

NEW DELHI

For reservations please contact your travel agent, the hotel direct
Telephone 363030, Telex 63222 and 3829 OBDL IN or call Ahmedabad 464451
Bangalore 573444 • Bombay 2024343 • Calcutta 292323 • Madras 478156

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE PRESS

Joining the Battle

WHILE the Government and the Opposition battled it out in Parliament over the Fairfax and Bofors deals, and while Rajiv Gandhi and V.P. Singh squabbled over who was the real Mr Clean, newspaper readers were being treated to an uninhibited side-show which, for a time, threatened to upstage the main event. Slugging it out on the sidelines, in a media version of the wars, were the multi-edition Indian Express, owned by the combative Ram Nath Goenka, and the staid The Times of India. Ranged in opposite camps were Arun Shourie, executive editor of the Express and Girilal Jain, editor of The Times.

As usual, they took diametrically different stands. Shourie took up cudgels on behalf of V.P. Singh and Zail Singh. In angry front page articles, he castigated Rajiv Gandhi for victimising one Singh, and belittling the other. Both were exhorted to act. "V.P. Singh must disclose in Parliament all that he has found about this deal.... He must reach out to others like himself who want to reconstruct our polity.... Secondly, the President must act....The President must consult the best jurists in the country as well as leaders of all political parties to determine what must be done in this extraordinary situation."

Responding in kind—on the front page—Jain advised Rajiv Gandhi to remove V.P. Singh from office. He raised the spectre of a conspiracy: "Singh is threatening to bring down the house (the Congress) in the pursuit of his goals just as Mr (Jayaprakash) Narayan did in the mid-'70s....There cannot now be the slightest doubt that Mr V.P. Singh is out to undermine Mr Rajiv Gandhi's position, leaving the prime minister no choice but to remove him from the Government." To bemused readers, it appeared that apart from discussing issues, the two editors were perhaps trying to run the nation by proxy, from their adjacent offices along Bahadur Shah Zafar Marg, Delhi's Fleet Street.

Apart from editorial restraint, the other main casualty of this shrill campaign was Suman Dubey, Shourie's boss and editor of the Indian Express. Dubey resigned after a front page editorial in the paper accused Rajiv Gandhi of being corrupt. Said the editorial: "No prime minister has confirmed the worst allegations and suspicions about his probity as Mr Rajiv Gandhi has by his conduct since June.... The decision of the prime minister to force V.P. Singh out, removes all doubt. Mr Rajiv Gandhi or someone dear to him—dead or living—has received the kickback. He has forced V.P. Singh out... to shield himself."

Cartoon by AJIT NINAN

All those who know Dubey realised that much of what was being published in the Express was not his style. Dubey has a cool, detached, laid-back approach, whereas the Express campaign employed verbal bludgeon. Though unhappy with some of the articles published, Dubey told INDIA TODAY: "Everything went through me". But did it have his approval? "That's between me and my employer" said Dubey cryptically.

According to Express insiders, Dubey sent in his resignation to Goenka, who was in Bombay, the evening before the Express carried the editorial labelling Rajiv as corrupt. Dubey's doubts about the paper's shrill line were evident even earlier. Some days earlier, after the paper carried front page signed articles by Soli Sorabjee and Ram Jethmalani, Dubey went around the office asking editorial colleagues what they thought of it. At least two editors told him that the paper had been invaded by outsiders.

Dubey's resignation surprised Goenka, who immediately despatched his famous consiglieri S. Gurumurthy to Delhi to reason with Dubey. Gurumurthy spent two days trying to persuade Dubey to reconsider, as did the paper's editorial adviser (and former editor) S. Mulgaokar, but with little success. Dubey proceeded on leave and Mulgaokar flew to Bombay to consult Goenka about a replacement.

Meanwhile, the first charge that the two newspapers attracted was that they had become completely partisan. Commented Prem Shankar Jha, editor of The Hindustan Times, Delhi's largest circulated English newspaper: "It is not the job of the press to run such campaigns, because the press then ceases to be a watchdog and becomes a participant in the political (or industrial) battle." Jha only echoed the feelings of numerous other journalists who felt that Shourie and Jain had jumped out of the press-box and joined the political adversaries slugging it out in the arena. Ironically, Jha himself resigned a few days later following differences over editorial policy with owner K.K. Birla. He was the second editor of a major national daily to quit in the same week.

The strong stands taken by Shourie and Jain left their readers a little confused. Only a few months ago, Shourie had accused Zail Singh of playing politics by withholding assent to the Postal Censorship Bill. Jain's turn-around was as dramatic: earlier, he had termed Rajiv as naive, immature and unfit to rule.

Other senior journalists feel that Jain sees himself as a Rajguru to the political system, but Jain dismisses this charge out of hand: "I don't want to be a Rajguru or adviser to anyone. It is my business to think for the country." What turned him into a Rajiv supporter? "Because the country is in peril. I have never subordinated patriotism to journalism," said Jain, indirectly suggesting that others were doing just that.

—RAMINDAR SINGH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Carrying coals to Newcastle!

For 25 years Aplab has been manufacturing professional electronic equipment of exceptional quality. Almost every Aplab product is an import substitute.

30% of these products are regularly exported to Europe and America. And in India, the Railways, P&T, Defence establishments, Research Centres and major public and private sector companies use them.

Backed by a well-knit R&D infrastructure, Aplab's in-house technology extends to all techniques of instrumentation and packaging. Over 150 qualified engineers and managers are constantly at work, translating original ideas into innovative products. Like uP based instrumentation systems, GPIB based instruments, oscilloscopes, signal generators, DC Power supplies, inverters, PABX etc.

Aplab has scaled the heights of excellence with totally in-house technology, without any foreign collaboration or knowhow. Today, Aplab is the only indigenous professional electronic equipment manufacturing company to have made a mark both in India and abroad.

Applied Electronics Ltd.,
A-5 Wagle Industrial Estate,
Thane 400 604.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

AROUND THE WORLD ONCE IN 3 HOURS

INCREDIBLE BUT TRUE

That's the distance the KTC fleet covers every three hours. 3,20,000 km every day with a nation-wide network of over 300 branches. Leaving many others far behind.

KTC, the Leader. Carrying cargo – from medicines to machinery, from transistors to transformers with the greatest care. And speed. In sun and rain, over hills and plain.

Blazing a trail of commitment which has grown over the past three decades. The commitment to serve. The commitment to satisfy.

KTC

KERALA TRANSPORT CO

KTC Bldg YMCA Rd. Calicut 673 001 Kerala
Ph : 60972 76062/63/64 Grams : Vayuveg Tlx : 0804-201

KTC – bringing people and places closer

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Photographs by BHAWAN SINGH

Panning salt in the little Rann of Kutch: back-breaking work

SALT PRODUCTION

The Pans of Misery

THE 2,000 square miles that comprise the Little Rann of Kutch in Gujarat is a vast expanse of arid land. There is nothing to break the monotony, just a hard crust of black clay stretching up to the horizon. Centuries ago, the Little Rann was part of the sea until an earthquake turned the sea bed into a sprawling desert. About 40 feet below the crust, however, is a lake of brine, concentrated enough to produce salt, on which the economy of the area has kept afloat.

The salt producers of the Little Rann were once proud symbols of Gujarat's highly successful cooperative system, able to earn thousands of rupees for their half-yearly toil. Today, the wheel has turned, transforming them into embarrassing symbols of its limitations.

The irony is that the economics of salt production make it an ideal venture for village cooperatives. The water is brought to the surface by diesel pumps and spread out in salt pans. Each pan produces about 400 tonnes of salt and with an average family unit of five working on two pans, it means a production of 800 tonnes in the normal six-month season. But the rate of purchase is measly: 800 tonnes of salt at retail stage (60 paise per kg) would be worth Rs 4.8 lakh: instead, workers are paid as little as Rs 16,000 (2 paise per kg). According to estimates of salt cooperatives in Kharaghoda, a local centre, after deducting expenses, each member of a family of five earns less than Rs 75 per month. This, after putting in an average of 10 hours a day, seven days a week.

The tragedy is common enough. The workers are exploited by avaricious traders for whom the financial benefits are enormous. Salt extraction needs an investment of a few thousand rupees by the workers. The major expenditure goes into the pump set, diesel and engine oil. Since the poor workers lack the capital and because not every well that is dug produces brine, the traders flock to the area as soon as the salt season starts and buy the salt even before it is produced—at their own price, of course.

The palatial houses of salt merchants in Surendranagar eloquently underline the high profit margins in the one-sided trade. Though the buying rate of salt from the workers averages to around Rs 20 per tonne, it is sold on the open market at a cost of Rs 400 per tonne. Taking into account the additional cost of transportation at about Rs 90 per tonne, the traders make a profit of around 300 per cent. And since the salt is made and sold in the form of crystals, there are no overheads incurred in processing the salt either.

So exploitative is the situation that workers have now reached the point where they actually have to spend more than what they earn. Ramsinh Bhimani spent over Rs 5,000 digging for brine, and struck lucky only on the thirteenth well. After six months of toil, Bhimani sold the salt to traders at the rate of Rs 25 per tonne—or 2.5 paise per kg. With the price of common salt in the retail market about 60 paise per kg, the substantial profits are obviously being appropriated by the traders.

Says Devkaran Patadia, who had just sold one tonne of salt at the measly price of Rs 21: "When we leave the desert after the season is over, we will only have our clothes left to carry back with us." Despite the existence of salt cooperatives, the workers have no marketing infrastructure. Neither do they have the financial liquidity to hire trucks to transport the salt to railway lines or to store it in godowns till wagons are allotted. Hamstrung by ignorance, they are unable to fight the traders in any way. Technically, the Minimum Wages Act cannot be enforced because being shareholders of salt cooperatives, they are looked upon as owners.

The traders display not the slightest qualm at the condition of the workers.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The real facts behind the "zero-cholesterol" story...

We put SAFFOLA, corn oil and refined groundnut oil into a freezer for 4 hours. And this is what we found:

Corn oil froze.

Groundnut oil froze solid.

But SAFFOLA remained liquid. Even after 24 hours!

Why not try this test yourself?

This clearly proves that of the three cooking mediums, SAFFOLA is highest in polyunsaturated fat - a substance that actually helps to lower cholesterol.

Yes, all vegetable oils are "zero-cholesterol". But only SAFFOLA, with the highest content of polyunsaturated fat actually brings down the cholesterol level in the blood. And that's what really counts!

Major research studies confirm that heart disease is directly linked to the level of cholesterol in the blood. "Lowering cholesterol levels markedly reduces the incidence of fatal heart attacks"

So when you cook, fry or bake with SAFFOLA, you're doing what's best for the whole family.

The cholesterol lowering factor (polyunsaturated fat) content in various oils.

Saffola

Good for your heart. Good for your health.

FSA/BOIL/7/86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Mudra A.RIL.3480

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SUN-DAYS FOR THE SPORTIER

Take on summertime weekends in your sporty best. Sail to new heights in style with a navy blue, single breasted jacket. Light in weight, high in fashion. Brass buttons on the front and cuff. Narrow notched lapels.

White trousers are comfortably baggy, tapering at the cuffs. Double pleated on either side.

Complete the look with blue club-tie, black shark-skin belt and white leather shoes. And you're the trendiest sport.

A lot of course depends on the fabric. Choose only the best. Only Vimal Suitings. The season's hottest fashion news.

ME ENSATIONS

VIMAL®
A RELIANCE PRODUCT

POLYRICH
Suitings

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"My husband uses Keo-Karpin Hair Vitalizer because his doctor told him to..."

"I was so impressed with Keo-Karpin Hair Vitalizer.* It really works! Our doctor told my husband that Keo-Karpin Hair Vitalizer is a unique scientific formula based on extensive research. It provides all the essential proteins, co-enzymes and vitamins for strengthening hair roots, stops hair loss and prevents dandruff.

Well I know, it's certainly doing wonders for my hair too!"

Here's an excerpt from the research report:

"66.66% gave excellent and 33.33% gave good results with complete disappearance of dandruff in all cases and nearly cent per cent stoppage of fall of hair...So, success rate with Keo-Karpin Hair Vitalizer may be stated to be cent per cent."

Indian Medical Gazette 118 223 (1984)

"I use it because it did stop his hair loss."

The proven scientific way to prevent hair loss.

Dey's® Care you can trust

*It is not a toilet preparation.

CLARION C-DM-H-2

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Extracted salt being dumped in a heap: sheer exploitation by Dinesh Patel, a trader from Patdi in Surendranagar district, retorts: "How can anyone expect us to be bothered about the plight of the workers? We know that they are living an inhuman existence but the trading community is concerned only about business."

The workers suffer the constant threat of financial ruination in case the traders get together and decide not to purchase salt. The main salt trader in the area, Ramkrishna Murari Aggarwal, says that he is doing the workers a favour by advancing them money as the banks will not touch them. He adds that paying remunerative prices will not help as "the workers will squander it away".

Despite the exploitation they are forced to endure, the salt workers continue to live and work in the Little Rann year after year. They feel they are fated to live and die in the desert. "What else can we do?" asks Dhiru Siva, who has been working in the pans for the past eight years: "There are no jobs available."

Gujarat provides over 60 per cent of the country's annual salt production of 100 lakh tonnes, making it by far the largest producer in India. Its net sales provide a salt cess of Rs 80 lakh to the state Government and Rs 122 lakh to the Central Government every year. Principally, this amount is supposed to be spent on improving the industry and the lives of the people who work in it. That nothing of the kind has been achieved is indicative of the insensitive attitude of the state Government. Admits Surendranagar Collector Kailash Nathan: "No systematic planning has ever been done at the district level on how the salt cess should be fruitfully used. It should primarily be used to improve the living conditions of the salt workers and lift them out of a degrading existence."

On March 12, a group of workers re-enacted the Dandi March in Ahmedabad when they marched from Sabarmati Ashram to the Circuit House to hand over a memorandum to Chief Minister Amarsinh Chaudhary. Among the marchers was Bhupat Desai, who had also taken part in the 1930 salt satyagraha. But this time, he did so knowing that there was very little hope of success. He was facing a far more formidable enemy—his own countrymen.

—RAMESH MENON
in the Little Rann of Kutch

A couple at work: bound together in the salt trap

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

STANDARD MOTOR PRODUCTS OF INDIA LTD

Regd. Office : 134 Anna Road Madras 600 002

STANDARD 2000 Passes the Fuel Efficiency Test.

Mr K V Srinivasan, Chairman

Speech delivered by Mr K V Srinivasan, Chairman, presiding over the Thirtyseventh Annual General Meeting of the Company held on Tuesday the 31st March 1987.

Ladies & Gentlemen,

I have the pleasure and privilege of welcoming you all to our Annual General Meeting.

2. May I assure you that the Board and I share with you fully your disappointment in the results for the year 1985-86, especially after the promising start and the extremely satisfactory manner in which the Standard-2000 production was progressing. There is no doubt that had it not been for the unfortunate happenings, our original production targets would have certainly been met, which would have resulted in very satisfactory fiscal results.

3. Hardened fighters that we are, we have not succumbed to these pressures. I am delighted to inform you that the five cars which were picked up at random by the VRDE from our assembly line, as part of the testing procedure stipulated by the Government of India, have all passed the mandatory fuel efficiency tests which were conducted in Ahmednagar between the 17th and 29th of March'87.

4. What does this prove? (1) That at no point of time has Standard Motors indulged in any fraud to obtain the fuel efficiency certificate. (2) The confidence and faith which every employee of Standard Motors has in the product as well as the programme of indigenisation chalked out by the Company, a confidence which has been recently, very uniquely expressed by the guarantees which were readily given to the bank, an act which has perhaps no precedent in Indian industrial relations.

5. With these inherent strengths we face the future with confidence and I can assure you that no stone will be left unturned to put the Company back in a sound financial position. In this task, I look forward to the continued support of all the executives, staff, workers and the Union, the suppliers, financial institutions, bankers, customers, the State and the Central Governments, a support which has never been lacking in the past, for which we are always grateful.

NOTE: This does not purport to be the record of the proceedings of the Annual General Meeting.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CHANCES ARE WE HAVE TOUCHED YOUR LIFE

AND CHANCES ARE, YOU'RE STILL UNAWARE.

Chances are we are in touch with you. Every moment. In the house you live in. The car you travel in. Or the train you take. The utensils you cook in or the plate you use. Or in the bulb that gives you light. All these daily necessities require—in some form or the other—steel, cement, metals, chemicals, petrochemicals, glass, aluminium...which cannot be produced without refractories. In any industrial process where high temperatures are required, we are vital and the higher the temperature, the better we feel!

TATA Refractories—a new name with decades of expertise in quality refractories—plays a significant role in the industrial growth of the country; even when you touch a flower, you touch us unknowingly. Because we contribute towards the production of fertilizers too! TATA Refractories—touching the life of the common man, someone like you, silently.

Working our way into your life, silently.

PRODUCT RANGE

We offer the entire spectrum—from Fireclay and High Alumina to Silica, Zircon and Magnesite, apart from all speciality products for continuous casting.

TATA REFRACTORIES LIMITED

JAMSHEDPUR • BELPAHAR
SALEM • CALCUTTA

naa.TR.8093

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

AHMEDABAD

The Endless Wait

SUGRABIBI GHORI, 35, sits patiently in one corner of a congested ward in an Ahmedabad municipal hospital. Each day, patients and hospital staff pass her by without so much as a glance. For them, the motionless woman has become a sight as familiar as a hospital bed. For her, the daily vigil at the bedside of her husband, Kasam Ghori, 49, has also become something of a meaningless ritual. Yet, the grubby corner in an Ahmedabad hospital seems to wear a near-religious aura. It has become a private shrine to Hope. Endless Hope. Each day, she appears by his bedside hoping that today will be the day when he awakens. Sugrabibi's husband has been in a coma for 13 years.

She still vividly remembers that bright summer morning in March 1974, when Kasam bid her and their four children goodbye before rushing off to the fire brigade headquarters, where he worked as a fireman. Little did the family realise that their closely knit world, dominated by the energetic, jovial Kasam, was destined to be reduced to a never-ending nightmare.

Later that day, a major fire broke out in the Devki Nandan Market in Ahmedabad. Kasam was acknowledged as one of the best fire-fighters in the force, and true to his reputation he did not hesitate to rush into the blazing inferno. But the building was over a century old and the entire structure collapsed. A heavy wooden beam struck Kasam on the head. At the end of the ordeal, he was pulled out of the rubble and was his usual self, joking and laughing in spite of the excruciating pain that was shooting through his left arm. His colleagues cheered him as he was being wheeled into the operation theatre at the V.S. Hospital to get his arm operated. However, little did they realise that he would not regain consciousness again.

On the operation table, Kasam suffered a cardiac arrest, but was revived by doctors. After the operation, anxious relatives waited by his bedside for the effect of anaesthesia to wear off. But it did not. Sugrabibi was terrified. For three full days she dared not go near his bed. He was to wake up a few hours after the operation. But hours stretched into unending days, weeks, months, years—and now it has been over 13 years. However, even today, Sugrabibi remains hopeful that one day her husband will wake up and walk home with her.

The doctors, nurses and ward boys silently sympathise with her for they have seen her everyday tirelessly tending her husband as few would do in such circumstances. There seems to be such an inexplicable bond between them. She feeds him milk and fruit juices intravenously, makes his bed, changes his clothes and waits on him. Sugrabibi even intravenously feeds him some tea early in the morning—a practice that was established ever since they were married. "He used to love tea," she reminisces. Though he has been lying supine all these years, he does not have a single bed sore—proof of her dedication. Every few hours, she powders him and changes his posture. "I will not leave his bedside," she says, choking on the words.

Down the years, her tears have dried up. Her tragedy does not make her weep and she does not indulge in self pity. She knows that if she stops the intravenous feeding, he will die a painless death. But, he has a right to live, she says, and stresses that she would never desert him even if it took another decade of her life living in a hospital ward. Back in her tiny one-room kitchen house in Jamalpur, which is full of his memories, live three of their five children struggling to run the house.

So much has happened ever since Kasam went into a coma. Siraj, now 13, makes at least one trip to the hospital daily. He has never been able to talk to his father and this hurts him the most. He is not sure of whether his father will ever recover and feels that one of the greatest joys of life is to walk down the road with his father as all his friends do. He does not study as hard as he should, but Sugrabibi never berates him. "I can't," she says, underlining that Siraj lost out not only on what it meant to have a father, but also on having the attention of a mother as she had been in hospital ever since he was born. Other things happened too—which would have been great joyous moments for Kasam. Two daughters, Ruksana, 22, and Salma, 20, have been married and two months ago, Kasam, without his knowledge, has become a grandfather.

In many ways, the life of the entire family revolves around his hospital bed. At least twice a month, Salma travels to Ahmedabad from Himmatnagar, 80 km away, where she presently lives with her husband. She comes just to see her father.

Aashiana Bano, 15, the third daughter has dropped out of school after studying till the seventh standard as someone had to cook and run the house with the mother in the hospital.

For them, time seems paralysed.

USHA A. KAUL

Sugrabibi feeds Kasam: tenacity and toil

For Sugrabibi, the daily vigil by her husband's bedside has become something of a meaningless ritual. But there is always eternal hope.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

GOOD TASTE IS ALWAYS THE CONNOISSEUR'S HALLMARK

DIGJAM

Product of VXL India Ltd.
WE EXCEL

SUMMER SUITINGS FOR THE CONNOISSEUR

Digitized by Chennai and eGangotri

WALL-TO-WALL UNCARPETING FROM JOHNSON.

For a start, these tiles are available in selected cities only.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Ignore the exceptional strength of Johnson's designer floor tiles. ■ And the fact that they're just one-third the weight of mosaic. ■ Remain unimpressed by their exceptional scratch-resistance. ■ And turn a deaf ear to their unique anti-echo property. ■ They also happen to be fire-proof, stain-proof, acid-resistant and dust-repellant. But don't let that sway you. ■ Allow yourself, instead, to fall hopelessly in love with their looks. ■ A glamorous alternative to mosaic, granite, marble or stone. ■ For homes and offices. Hotels and auditoriums. ■ Whether you follow your head or your heart, you'll agree: They're the best thing that's happened to floors since the wall-to-wall carpet.

JOHNSON

DESIGNER FLOOR TILES

Trikaya.HRJ.4.86

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The more important the meeting, the more important the airline.

Flying on Lufthansa means reaching your business appointment on time.

Lufthansa

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

IPS

Historic Win

IF glasses clinked and moustaches twirled upwards in the Indian Police Service (IPS) last fortnight, it was understandable. They had won a crucial match with the Indian Administrative Service (IAS) to decide "who is the boss". This time the issue at stake was whether the home secretary—the head of the department which includes the police force—was superior to the police chief and thereby authorised to write his annual confidential report.

Having lost the first game in the Punjab and Haryana High Court, the police made a come-back in the second game when the division bench of the same court ruled in their favour. Finally last fortnight, the match was clinched when the Supreme Court dismissed a special leave petition by the State of Haryana to rule that the home secretary was not empowered to write the confidential report of the inspector general of police. "The secretary of the Home Department is the head of the Home Department...but merely because he has to conduct the business, on behalf of the Government, of the police department, he does not thereby become the head of the police department," the judgement read, and specified that the rules of the All India Service Act clearly indicated that confidential reports can only be written by an authority superior to the official concerned—in this case the inspector general of police. According to the court: "The immediate authority superior to the inspector general of police is the minister in charge of the police department." As such, the judges ruled, only the minister could write the confidential report of the police chief and not the home secretary, who may, however, assist the minister in doing so.

Wadhwa: parting gift

The judgement was received as a landmark for the larger issues it invoked. In clarifying that the home secretary could not be considered the head of the police department just because he was responsible for home affairs, the court was de facto placing the two posts at par. The judgement was read as an endorsement for the police chief to bypass the home secretary and take orders from the minister.

The IPS Central Association called the judgement "historic". Said Gautam Kaul, spokesman for the association: "The judgement recognises the special place which the police department has in the administration of the state. The police will now be accountable directly to the people for all its acts of omission and commission." However, the irrepressible Punjab police chief, Julio Ribeiro, seemed not to care. "As far as I'm concerned I don't care who writes what. I think the best judge is the public—you cannot fool them."

The reaction on the other side of the fence was muted. IAS officers were reluctant to comment. Said Uttar Pradesh Home Secretary Mata Prasad: "It is for us to follow the government rules, whatever they may be." Others were not willing to speak, though IAS feathers were ruffled.

For P.C. Wadhwa, former inspector general of police and respondent in this case, the verdict was a personal victory. Wadhwa fought through the three courts for seven long years against the State of Haryana before the Supreme Court vindicated his stand—a year after he has retired.

The court has also quashed adverse remarks written by the then Haryana home secretary L.D. Kataria in Wadhwa's confidential report in 1980. "The blot on my career stands washed off," beamed a relieved Wadhwa, adding that the judgement was important as "the police, like the judiciary, must be free from bureaucratic influences". The impact, he said, would be felt more in the smaller states, which have a personalised administration.

This is not the first legal victory for Wadhwa. Four times he has moved the judiciary against the service. Three times he has fought legal battles for the police. All seven times he has won. Last fortnight's judgement seems to be his parting salvo on behalf of the IPS. With the state home minister now responsible for both their reports, the new ruling promises to ease much of this tension.

—TANIA MIDHA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

LATE NIGHT FILMS

Midnight Feast

MOST people can't decide which is worse: staying up half the night watching an award-winning film on TV. Or going to sleep and missing it altogether. Ever since Doordarshan decided to assert its adulthood late, late in the night, viewers have been struck with a Hamlet-like dilemma: to see or not to see. Breakfast television was about as exciting as cornflakes, but late night television was something else: it held excitement, mystery, sex, all the pleasures of an after-dinner liqueur. As one viewer said: "At last we can see some of the world's best cinema. Thank you Doordarshan."

The gratitude seemed in order. Twice a week, on Tuesdays and Fridays Doordarshan set about proving that it was old enough to stay up late. At the very adult hour of 11.30 p.m. came Arth, The Marriage of Maria Braun, Ghattashraddha, Bhoomika, films that were manna to the soap-opera numbed viewers. Said Additional Director-General Shiv Sharma: "The nation is maturing, shouldn't we?" Doordarshan had promised that it would screen film classics, and thrilled TV critic Anil Dharker wrote: "What a treasure-house of the world's cinema lies before us, untouched, waiting to be discovered."

But as it turned out Doordarshan's late-night largesse was not entirely appreciated. The morning after, mothers were too tired to pack their kids off to school. Others fired off letters to newspapers saying that late night viewing had them too exhausted to do anything. "I would have watched every one of these films but not at 11.30," said Iqbal Singh, 35, a garment exporter, "I'm a working man." In Parliament, MPs nodded off to sleep complaining that their night life had been ruined by TV to be rewarded by Rajiv Gandhi's pat reply that they were most welcome to switch it off.

Meanwhile, hundreds of demonstrators surfaced outside Doordarshan Bhawan protesting that this time television had gone too far and showing too much sex would pollute their moral fibre. Presidents of the Mahila and Yuva Janata Morcha were arrested when they led another protest march shouting "Stop cheap films". Instead of the hero Doordarshan thought it would become, it was cast in the role of a villain.

Those who were happy about the films were unhappy about the quality of the prints, and Doordarshan's post-censorship censorship as in the love-scenes of Arth and in Maria Braun where they never actually show Maria killing her black lover as in the uncensored version. "But banning them is not the answer," said Asha Kapoor, 30, a Delhi housewife, "why should anyone stop true cinema buffs from enjoying these films. We are not kids licking lollipops. Dammit you always have the option not to see." For others, Doordarshan's promise of classics seemed to be simply a promise of whatever films it can get, given its clout abroad and its willingness to dip into its bank balance. But as a viewer said: "Even if they show festival leftovers, it'll still be half a loaf worth watching."

Cities that had not been included in this adult revolution—only six have so far—sulked like children left out of a midnight feast. The Tribune's office in Chandigarh was bombarded with angry phone calls and in other towns, viewers threatened to gherao Doordarshan offices if they were not included in late night transmission. Either way it seemed Doordarshan couldn't win. According to Sharma the Insat goes off at 11 p.m. making it impossible to beam the late night film all over the country. However, centres that have microwave links with Delhi are likely to be invited soon to the show which will include Yeh Nazdeekiyan, Giddh, Ek Pal, The Iceman Cometh and Triple Cross in the next month. "We never said adult films," said Shiv Sharma reacting to the uproar, "the press did. We simply mean adult perceptions at an adult hour." Doordarshan, it seems, has grown up while the Indian public still has to.

—SIMRAN BHARGAVA

Scenes from Arth, Marriage of Maria Braun: adult themes

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Created for people who know airconditioners can be made better.

The Usha Room Airconditioner. Just switch it on and you'll know it's unique.

In its design, the Usha Airconditioner incorporates the latest airconditioning technology to bring you a well balanced, more power packed and efficient appliance.

Usha Airconditioners offer the unique oscillating louvres to spread the air uniformly, all over the room.

And aesthetics. The Usha Airconditioner looks so good with its specially hand crafted wooden grill.

Usha Airconditioner : from the House of Shriram.

Acknowledged leaders in refrigeration and manufacturers of India's largest selling 'USHA' Water Coolers. Only Shriram Refrigeration could bring you an airconditioner like it.

And it's from Usha!

Usha. It's a name you've trusted for generations.

For quality and reliability.
And expert after-sales service.

The Usha Airconditioner. Just feel it perform.
And discover airconditioning at its best.

USHA
AIRCONDITIONERS.
Performance that speaks for itself.

everest/087/SPU/21

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Your father wanted you to be a lawye
But music was your life.
Whereinafter you said goodbye to the Companies Act. And delved into the Beatles. And the Stones.

Much had passed since then.
Madonna entered your life. Along wit
Cyndi Lauper. Prince. Lionel Richie.
And Stevie Wonder.
Tonight, you played the starring role in 'Grease.' Then, after the show was ove you sat in your dressing-room.
There was a soft knock on the door.
It was Dad. "You were great," he said,
as he hugged you.

From McDowell

CONTAINS NO FRUIT JUICE OR FRUIT PULP.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"I think I'll have a Thril," you said.

Enterprise D/McD/15 A

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

◆ Bottoms Up, yes, but a different one each time. And that is what must be pulling in the audience—to watch Bombay's rib-ticklingly topical musical revue, Bottoms Up, and pushing it up the popularity charts. In the fastest century in the field of English theatre in India—100 shows in just 15 months.

Behind each bottom is writer, director and co-producer Bharat Dabholkar. The entire show is a satirical commentary on day to day events and topics. And success is largely because there is a new butt for the jokes each time. Says Dabholkar: "It's not 100 shows of one Bottoms Up. It's one show of 100 Bottoms Up."

NAMAS BHOJANI

Dabholkar with co-star Rao

Sakina: tempting role

◆ It was the old order giving way to the new. When mama Madhur Jaffrey tried for a Broadway role and didn't get it, she asked her daughter to have a stab at it. Sakina Jaffrey, 23, was more successful. And with Ismail Merchant waiting in the wings, with a plum role in his latest production, the perfect take off for the fledgling is assured.

Jaffrey makes her debut in The Perfect Murder—an adaptation of H.R.F. Keating's novel with Naseeruddin Shah in the lead role of Inspector Ghote. As the simple sleuth looks for clues, Jaffrey, playing the slinky siren, tries to seduce him down the primrose path—though, with her degree in Chinese, she would make a far more perfect Suzie Wong. She concurs: "The irony of it all is that I speak fluent Chinese, but my Hindi is, well, not exactly great."

◆ With his yen for rice, getting the Japan Prize was only a matter of time. So to Science and Technology Foundation of Japan the riceman cometh—Dr Gurdev S. Khush, leader of the International Rice Research Institute team that developed the high-yielding rice variety IR36—to receive his 50 million yen (Rs 42 lakh) award, which he shares with his predecessor, Dr Beachell.

Picking up the grains of rice, a trifle late, Punjab Agricultural University—Dr Khush's alma mater—awarded him an honorary D. Sc. degree three days after the Japanese. He plans to use part of the prize money to institute scholarships for needy students at his alma mater and one for Filipino students. The rest: "I want to use for educating my own four children."

Mohyeddin: filming India

PRASHANT PANJIAR

Dr. Khush: prestigious award

◆ East of Eton can only be Doon. The playing fields of Doon have been the kindergarten for Indian politicians. And now, a half-hour documentary on this little Eden for Adams nestling in the Doon Valley, is being produced by the suave and ebullient Zia Mohyeddin, for Britain's Independent Television. East of Eton, the producer promises, will capture Dosco culture, past and present, for all those nostalgic about the days of the empire.

Mohyeddin, who left Lahore for London 34 years ago and is still remembered for his portrayal of Dr Aziz in the West End production of A Passage to India, was in Delhi last fortnight, to capture on film three aspects of Indian culture—Odissi dance, the folk music of Rajasthan as well as the martial arts of Kerala. The idea, he pointed out, was "to revive the masks from mere museum pieces and transform them into living legends—for the West needs something of this kind."

SIGNPOST

■ Died: Music Director Shankar, 65, of cardiac arrest in Bombay. The surviving half of the music duo Shankar-Jaikishen, which ruled the waves of Hindi film music in the '50s and '60s, Shankar was well known for his dextrous blending of elements of Indian and western music. Apart from that he enjoyed the reputation of a very accomplished classical musician and tabla player as well.

The partners composed some of the finest music of the period, immensely popular even today. They began their long reign in scoring music in 1947 with Raj Kapoor's Barsaat and went on to bring on a thousand sighs with their music in Aah, ran wild in Jungle, Awara and Shree 420, and gladdened audience hearts in Mera Naam Joker. After Jaikishen's death, however, Shankar slowed down somewhat, though he continued composing music for films until his death. And while he composed solo, he still retained the famous Shankar-Jaikishen banner. Among his most successful solo films scores was the music for the film Sanyasi.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

or Britain's Ind evision. East ducer promise
Dosco cultur
ent, for all tho
ut the days of th

, who left La
on 34 years ag nembered for h
Dr Aziz in th
duction of A Pa was in Delhi las capture on film of Indian cu dance, the folk sthan as well a ts of Kerala. Th
ed out, was "a asks from mere es and transform ng legends—for ds something o

NPOST

Music Director of cardiac arrest
e surviving half uo Shankar-Jai ruled the waves
music in the '50s
ankar was well dextrous blend ts of Indian and
ic. Apart from d the reputation mplished classi
and tabla player hers composed est music of the ensely popular hey began their coring music in j Kapoor's Bar on to bring on a s with their ma wild in Jungle

hree 420, and dience hearts in Joker. After eath, however, ed down some he continued
sic for films un
And while he o, he still re nous Shankar er. Among his ful solo film music for the

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

13016

13015 13014

13013

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A Risky Gambit

The Centre's sudden move last fortnight to dismiss the Surjit Singh Barnala government and bring the state under President's rule is a political gamble fraught with myriad dangers. An analysis of the Centre's gameplan and the implications.

COVER STORY 30

The Besieged Fortress

The Assembly election in Haryana, scheduled to be held next month, promises to decide the fate of both Rajiv Gandhi and the Congress(I). With Devi Lal galvanising the opposition parties into action, the battle lines are clearly drawn.

SPECIAL FEATURE 70

A Brash New Culture

The advent of the peppy Maruti has brought out the latent desire for automotive expression in a country used to making do. It has also spawned a new culture that has taken unusual forms and changed driving habits and Indian roads for ever.

LIFESTYLE 96

Heading for Trouble

The stock-market crash and the dramatic drop in Reliance's profits symbolised the problems of industry. With falling industrial production, and serious marketing or profitability problems, Indian business seemed on a downward slope.

SPECIAL REPORT 102

An Indian Summer

This summer, Indians are discovering the world. With package tours making a holiday abroad cheaper in many cases than one in the country, over half a million Indian tourists are heading towards Europe, the US and the Far East. A report.

TOURISM 134

Bringing Down the Curtain

As Doordarshan's most popular serial, Buniyaad, entered its final phase, the atmosphere on the sets resembled the break-up of a large joint family. Not one member of the cast has been left unaffected by the experience, including director Ramesh Sippy.

TELEVISION 152

गुरुकुल
गुरुकुल कांगड़ी विश्वविद्यालय
हरिद्वार
27/5/87

CONTENTS

COMMENT 11
LETTERS 14
INDIANOTES 19
CAPITALOOK 22
THE FORTNIGHT THAT WAS 27
COVER STORY
Punjab: A Risky Gambit 30
CURRENT EVENTS
Congress(I): Mood of Uncertainty 40
Michael Hershman: "Indians should know the truth" 43
The President: Deepening Crisis 44
Bihar: Divided Rule 49
Andhra Pradesh: Hydel Havoc 55
Andhra Pradesh: Reddy Cash 57
Ghani Khan Choudhury: Change of Fortunes 59
Madhya Pradesh: Criminals in Congress 63
SPECIAL FEATURE
Haryana: A Fortress Besieged 70
CRIME
Chandigarh: The House of Horror 76
GUEST COLUMN
Repressing Reform 84
STATENOTES 93
LIFE STYLE
Maruti: A Brash New Culture 96
SPECIAL REPORT
Business: Heading for Trouble 102
TRADEWINDS 113
BUSINESS
Pharmaceuticals: Bitter Pill 115
Oriental Finance: Smooth Scam 117
UCIL: Curious Closure 120
Tetra-brick drinks: Fresh Flavours 122
Rice: Staple Decline 127
The Markets: Dramatic Drop 128
TOURISM
Foreign Travel: An Indian Summer 134
INTERVIEW OF THE FORTNIGHT
P.H. Pandian: "Legislature is supreme" 140
EDUCATION
Teachers: Moonlighting Mania 144
GLOBE TROTTING
AWACS: Advantage Pakistan 149
Bofors Inquiry: Full Access 150
TELEVISION
Buniyaad: Bringing Down the Curtain 152
MUSIC
SPICMACAY: Reviving the Gurukul 158
HMV: Old is Gold 163
ENVIRONMENT
Narmada Project: Churning Controversy 164
SCIENCE
Radiation: Row on Rays 166
ARTS
Jamini Roy: An Indian Sensibility 170 LAW
Andhra Pradesh: Wage Verdict 172
EYECATCHERS 176

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

KELTRON TV IT SIMPLY ABSORBS YOU

Switch on your Keltron TV. And forget the world around you.

Because the people on a Keltron TV are as real and as alive as you are!

So whether you're watching your favourite serial-show or a good film on Doordarshan. All you will see is clarity. Crisp, live reception. You will of course hear the clearest sound.

It's more absorbing on a Keltron TV.

That's because every part in a Keltron TV is carefully chosen. Most of them are made at Keltron. And lots of Keltron parts make the finest TVs of other successful brands too.

And you can have the Keltron advantage all over the country. Because of a nationwide service back-up. Covering every town and city.

If that's not enough, talk to someone who owns a Keltron TV. If he's watching one, chances are he might not hear you.

He will be so absorbed!

KELTRON TV

Kerala State Electronics Development Corporation Limited,
Consumer Electronics Division,
Sasthamangalam
Trivandrum 695 010.
Tel: 63106.

Branch Offices:
Ahmedabad: Tel: 463664
Bangalore: Tel: 564492, 564528
Bombay: Tel: 4927447, 4927448
Calcutta: Tel: 291412, 299069
Hyderabad: Tel: 68657
Madras: Tel: 452310 452216
New Delhi: Tel: 5722602, 5723060
Trivandrum: Tel: 60241

Area Offices:
Bhopal: Tel: 66354
Calicut: Tel: 61460
Cochin: Tel: 354560
Guwahati: Tel: 31541
Madurai: Tel: 43746
Patna: Tel: 63274
Vizag: Tel: 65392

Service Centres in all major cities.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Thums Up makes it great!

Artificially flavoured. Contains no fruit juice or fruit pulp.

The refreshing Cola

Thums Up

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIA TODAY
THE COMPLETE NEWSMAGAZINE
VOLUME XII NUMBER 10
FOR THE FORTNIGHT MAY 16-31, 1987

EDITOR
ARUN PURIE

EXECUTIVE EDITOR T.N. NINAN
PICTURE EDITOR RAGHU RAI
FEATURES EDITOR INDERJIT BADHWAR
DEPUTY EDITOR DILIP BOBB
SENIOR EDITOR PRABHU CHAWLA

CORRESPONDENTS
SPECIAL CORRESPONDENTS RAMINDAR SINGH, SHEKHAR GUPTA
NEW DELHI PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI, RAJ CHENGAPPA, MADHU JAIN, SREEKANT KHANDEKAR, TANIA MIDHA
AHMEDABAD RAMESH MENON
BANGALORE ANITA PRATAP
BHOPAL N.K. SINGH
BOMBAY M. RAHMAN
CALCUTTA INDRANIL BANERJIE
HYDERABAD AMARNATH K. MENON
LUCKNOW DILIP AWASTHI
MADRAS S.H. VENKATRAMANI
PATNA FARZAND AHMED
TRIVANDRUM SREEDHAR PILLAI
LONDON RAMESH CHANDRAN
NEWS COORDINATOR RADHIKA ROY
ART DIRECTOR M.G. MOINUDDIN
CHIEF OF PRODUCTION SHIRLEY JOSHUA, ANURADHA KAPOOR
COPY DESK SIMRAN BHARGAVA, ANN NINAN
CHIEF PHOTOGRAPHER BHAWAN SINGH
PHOTOGRAPHERS PRAMOD PUSHKARNA, PRASHANT PANJIAR, NAMAS BHOJANI
CARTOONIST AJIT NINAN MATHEW
CARTOGRAPHER B.K. SHARMA
LAYOUT ARTISTS ANUP GUPTA, PEALI DUTTA GUPTA
MARKETING DIRECTOR MOHINI BHULLAR

ADVERTISING MANAGERS
DELHI NAGINDER RISHI
CALCUTTA MEERA PAUL
MADRAS R. ANAND
BANGALORE S.J. NAIDU
GENERAL MANAGER CHANDER RAI

[illegible] ROAD, OFFICE LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. F-14/15, [illegible] PLACE, NEW DELHI 110001. PHONE: 3315801-4. [illegible] INTO IN CABLE: LIVMEDIA. NEW DELHI • SUBSCRIPTION: INDIA TODAY SUBSCRIPTION DEPARTMENT. POST [illegible] FARIDABAD HARYANA • TRADE CIRCULATION: INDIA [illegible] CIRCULATION MANAGER, F-14 CONNAUGHT PLACE, MID-[illegible] NEW DELHI. PHONE: 3313076-8, TELEX: 31-62634 INTO [illegible] POST, BOMBAY-400021. PHONE: 2026152, 2029326, [illegible] BRANCH OFFICES: 28 A&B JOLLY MAKER CHAMBER II, [illegible] TELEX: 11-5373 THOM IN. CABLE: LIVMEDIA. BOMBAY • [illegible] CIRCUS, NEW DELHI-110001. PHONE: 352378, [illegible] ASU 351123. TELEX: 31-2651 THOM IN. CABLES: [illegible] DELHI • FAGUN CHAMBERS, 26 COMMANDER-IN-[illegible] MADRAS-600105. PHONE: 477188, 477770, 479163, [illegible] MADRAS • 74/1ST MARKS ROAD, BANGALORE-[illegible] 579037, 579089. CABLE: LIVMEDIA. [illegible] 560448 • EVEREST 346C CHOWRINGEE ROAD, CALCUTTA-[illegible] PHONE: 441756, 447716. CABLE: LIVINMEDIA, CALCUTTA [illegible] 1987 LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. ALL RIGHTS [illegible] THROUGHOUT THE WORLD. REPRODUCTION IN ANY [illegible] PERMITTED. PUBLISHED BY CHANDER RAI FOR [illegible] PRESS INDIA PVT LTD. NEW DELHI AND PRINTED AT [illegible] PRESS INDIA LTD. FARIDABAD HARYANA • INDIA [illegible] ACCEPTS NO RESPONSIBILITY FOR RETURNING UNSOLICITED PUBLICATION MATERIAL •

ATTENTION ARMS

Kudos for your cover story on defence deals ("Bofors and After", May 15), in which you have tried to uncover all the indisputably shady details of the Bofors deal and their implications. Rajiv Gandhi has now developed the knack of kicking up one row after another, which continue to damage his already battered reputation. It is only because we do not have a strong, credible opposition that he is still the prime minister.

New Delhi — SUSHIL MEHTANI

■ Your cover story presented adequate evidence that much dust has been raised on the defence arms deal. It is natural for defence agents to make some commission on these deals. But if the good of the country is sacrificed by such capitalistic tendencies, then it becomes cause for concern.

Calcutta — DR PRAHLAD GHOSH

KILLING FIELDS

The tragic stories of unfortunate victims made the article on traffic accidents all the more lucid ("Death on the Roads", May 15). The dilapidated state of the streets and the breaking of speed limits at night by drunken drivers of heavy vehicles are at the root of this problem. But above all, road hogs are responsible for accidents. Only harsh sentences on guilty drivers will stop the roads from becoming pools of blood.

Patna — ASHUTOSH GUPTA

CEREBRAL CONCERN

The plight of Sugrabibi and her family in Ahmedabad has been well brought out ("The Endless Wait", May 15). Cerebral damage remains an area where medical science has been unable to achieve much. However, tea, fruit juice and milk are never fed intravenously. These are given via the 'Ryles tube', which is passed through the nose to the stomach, as shown in your photograph.

Delhi — DR R. GUPTA

FUN FARE

With regard to your piece on late night films on television, ("Midnight Feast", May 15) we are obliged to Doordarshan for providing us the opportunity to view such acclaimed films, especially at a time when we have nothing else to distract us. And those who object to the moral standards of these adult films would do well to heed the prime minister's suggestion to switch off their sets.

Meerut — SARVESHWAR CHATURVEDI

VOX POPULI

Your cover story ("The Taming of V.P. Singh", April 30) is a sad commentary on the power games our politicians play and how the rules have degenerated into skull-duggery. There is no denying that Rajiv Gandhi has shown who the boss is but he has, in the process, also unwittingly proved who the real Mr Clean is.

Amritsar — R.C. KHANNA

■ Vox populi Singh—that is the most appropriate verbal tribute to that messiah of honesty. He may pass into political oblivion but a whole generation is proud of him. You presented a candid picture of the political jumble from which Singh has emerged untainted.

Bangalore — SAMEEN

■ V.P. Singh's triumphant retreat from the Union Cabinet has, far from subduing this illustrious politician, boosted his public image as an upright and unyielding leader. His ouster demonstrates the sad truth that honesty never pays in the ruling party.

Vadodara — AMIT DHOLAKIA

■ The cartoon was simply superb. Mr Clean and his government have lost their only white sheep in the set-up.

Ahmedabad — V. RANGANATHAN

■ Your cartoon, which shows an analogy between the Catholic Pope being the shepherd of his flock and Rajiv Gandhi being the shepherd of his "black" sheep, is an insult to the Catholics of this country.

Bangalore — DR ALOMA LOBO

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

■ It became clear that V.P. Singh's days in the Union Cabinet were numbered when he was shifted from finance to defence. He was too clean for even 'Mr Clean's liking. What crime did he commit when he hired Fairfax to look into unaccounted wealth of Indians abroad? If there was nothing to hide, why did Congressmen make such a hullabaloo when he ordered an inquiry into the defence deal? Far from being 'overambitious' and 'scheming', he was too simple, honest and principled to be a politician.

Bokaro — SMITA R. GUREJA

UNCONVINCING STAND

In your interview with Amitabh Bachchan ("I have been tainted for life", April 30), the superstar-turned-politician's famous baritone had a clear sycophantic pitch. By saying: "I'll leave politics if he (Rajiv) ever did," he has shown what a superficial view of democracy he seems to hold.

Muzaffarpur — MANISH KASHYAP

■ The interview with Amitabh Bachchan has brought out much more than meets the eye. Though the questions were forthright and probing, Amitabh's answers leave the reader to draw his own conclusions.

New Delhi — SHANKAR

■ In the light of the recent political scandals, Amitabh Bachchan has certainly come under a dark cloud. His replies to your probing queries are unconvincing and hardly to the point. Denying involvement in murky affairs comes easily to today's film stars. Amitabh has learnt the art of 'whitewashing' himself only too well.

New Delhi — C.S. NAGESH KUMAR

POLITICAL PLOY

Your forceful editorial ("Diversionary Tactics", April 30) rightly points to the penchant of the Central Government for appointing commissions that fail to reveal anything. The appointment of the Thakkar Commission to inquire into the Fairfax episode is the latest political ploy used by the Government to buy time till the controversies die down.

Ahmedabad — M.V. RAVINDRAN

■ The Commission of Inquiry Act is being misused by the Government to delay disclosures on issues on which it stands with its back to the wall. Such commissions do not complete their work on time and are a complete waste of public money. And the recent amendment, which empowers the Government to withhold a report if it is 'in the public interest', makes such commissions absolutely meaningless.

Bangalore — P. VENKATESH

MUSIC MAESTRO

Your story on the enterprising Gulshan Arora ("A Supersuccess Story", April 30) shows that he has definitely left the established giants of the industry far behind not only in presenting new products, but also with regard to popular oldies. Despite this, however, connoisseurs like us appreciate the old artistes, whereas Arora's new 'version recordings' kill the original and immortal voices.

Calcutta — DHRUBA MAITRA

OLD ANTIDOTE

In your article on Leucoderma ("Cuban Cure", April 30) the antidote that is being referred is described as "an extract of placenta". We wish to inform you that Placentrex, a placental extract, has been manufactured and marketed by us for the past 15 years in India. Indian doctors contacted by us are aware of this antidote. An article in this connection appeared in Jugantar, a Bengali daily, on January 24, 1985. In this light, your claims of the new 'Cuban cure' and 'wonder drug' are somewhat misplaced.

Calcutta — K.P. MUNDHRA, marketing manager, Albert David Ltd

HOUSING HARDSHIP

Your report on Bombay's living problems ("White-Collar Slum Dwellers", April 30) should enlighten the educated unemployed who see Bombay only as an El Dorado. The exodus of the working class into this dream city may seem inevitable indeed, but this article might just convince them of the hardships of finding any decent kind of accommodation.

Pune — RAJNIKANT KAVOORI

■ Your special feature focuses on a significant problem. Indeed, it's impossible to get a flat in the major cities unless one has black money. The only way out of this predicament is for the Government to provide some facilities to these slum colonies.

Motihari, Bihar — ANIMESH KUMAR

ENGAGING EPIC

Despite all the criticism about Ramanand Sagar's TV serial Ramayan ("Divine Sensation", April 30), picturising mythology is no easy task and judging from the quality of the serial, it deserves praise. Though Hindi serials are often unwelcome down south, Ramayan is very popular, perhaps because the epic is well-known and delightfully portrayed.

New Delhi — T.M. SUNDARARAMAN

TREASURE TROVE

Your report on the Hardayal Municipal Library is timely ("History Lesson", April 30), as it focuses attention on the imperative need to preserve this treasury of rare manuscripts and publications. The library needs financial assistance from all sources and its maintenance cannot be left to the scarce funds of the municipal corporation.

New Delhi — BRAHM D. GUPTA

STYLISH SUMMARY

Your new column on the fortnight that was ("The Ides of April", April 30), to summarise the main events is a welcome idea. The literary style was unusual. Purveying the events, one is left wondering how many Caesars are going to be knifed by how many Brutuses?

Bangalore — T.S. SHANKARAN

REALISTIC HUMOUR

The three-month prison sentence for Ananda Vikatan Editor S. Balasubramaniam, for publishing a cartoon ("Arresting Affair", April 30) was unfair and an assault on the freedom of the press. Cartoons that try to portray real life should not be punished because they go beyond being just funny.

Dharwad — VISHWESHWAR BHAT

ALARMING ISSUE

The mixed Ramjanmabhoomi-Babri Masjid issue ("Communal Confrontation", April 30) should not be allowed to linger on. The show of strength in Delhi and Ayodhya by both communities is sufficient indication of a devastating confrontation. The Centre should learn a lesson from Punjab and take the initiative to solve the problem since the state Government does not seem to have the ability to find an amicable solution.

Meerut — MASOOD AKHTAR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Papa said Colour
I said Eurocolor
Papa said Hi-tech
I said Hi-gain
Papa said TV
I said Telerama

Wasn't I right, Papa?

You bet you are.
Because Telerama is a stylish, world-class TV with advanced features. And outstanding performance !
Hi-gain. Fully tropicalized. With Video games and cable TV facilities. Use an adaptor... and wow ! you get teletext and a home computer monitor.
Telerama Colour TV—it's the smart choice !

TELERAMA
HI-GAIN COLOUR TV
Clearly the best
Ask the wise guy!

TELERAMA AUTHORISED SERVICE CENTRE FOR ITT COLOUR TVs

Currently available in West Bengal, Assam/N.E. States, Bihar, East M.P., Varanasi, Tamil Nadu.

TT-6400

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

LINTAS VIP M 46 2741

V.I.P. It's part of the lifestyle of travellers the world over – an unmistakable symbol of international class.

V.I.P. Built tough to take the rigours of travel. In a fascinating panorama of designs, sizes, colours, each with the distinct stamp of V.I.P style. Now with new international features – a soft grip handle, autolock security chain, recessed wheels. For that special feel of luxury only a V.I.P. can give you.

Rediscover the romance of travel. Get a V.I.P. – and get away! The world is waiting for you ...

CC-0: In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Telephones from ITI to match your living style

ITI's ringing in the new. A range of telephones bringing in new technology. With advanced features like re-dial and memory facility.

Push button as well as Rotary models. Wall Mounting and Inexpensive telephones. ITI makes a wide range and more are on the way. As good as the best abroad. ITI's telephones will last for years unlike some cheap foreign ones. ITI has been making telephones for four decades.

These telephones have also been exported to many countries which speaks of the quality standards maintained by ITI.

ITI's new range of phones gives you a choice of colours, designs and features. Guaranteed to last.

These are readily available at any of the 50 sales and service offices listed here. Go ahead and take one home.

For details contact:
Additional General Manager (Commercial)

Indian Telephone Industries Limited
(A Government of India Enterprise)
2, Convent Road, Bangalore-560 025. Phone: 562132.

Not Just Telephones-Total Telecommunications.

677 ROTARY

FACE ROTARY

677 PUSH BUTTON

672 WALL MOUNTING TELEPHONE

MULTILINE

SLIMLINE

752 TYPE

ITI's Nationwide Sales & Service Network

BANGALORE REGION: High Gate Arcade, Second Floor, 33, Church Street, Bangalore 560 001. Phone: 561800/575856/575652. Sub Offices: Secunderabad, Ph: 76857, Mysore, Ph: 22192, Dharwar, Ph: 8744, Davanagere, Ph: 4182. SOUTHERN REGION: 129, Greames Road, Second Floor, Madras 600 006. Phone: 473100/474200. Sub Offices: Madurai, Ph: 24688, Kaloor, Cochin, Ph: 351662, Coimbatore, Ph: 31501, Vellore, Ph: 23394, Tuticorin, Ph: 20033, Edappazhinji, Trivandrum, Ph: 64544, Salem, Ph: 77637, Tiruchirapalli, Ph: 31423, Visakapatnam, Ph: 69470, Calicut, Ph: 65132, Vijayawada, Ph. 867806, 5th Street, PDPM Colony, Kalpakkam. WESTERN REGION: 62/63, ADVENT, 12-A Gen. Bhosale Marg, Bombay 400 021. Phone: 2020707/2021113. Sub Offices: Ahmedabad, Ph: 360318, Pune, Ph: 56086, Panaji, Goa, Ph: 5624, Indore, Ph: 37547, Rajkot, Ph: 28886, Baroda, Ph: 323697, Nagpur, Ph: 22455, Surat, Ph: 47274, Nasik, Ph: 78721. EASTERN REGION: United India Life Assurance Buildings, 22, Chittaranjan Avenue, Calcutta 700 072. Phone: 277600/272626. Sub Offices: Ranchi, Ph: 26770, Patna, Ph: 52191, Durgapur, Ph: 3085, Cuttack, Ph: 24103, Hazaribagh, Ph: 463, Jamshedpur, Ph: 24866, Jamnagar Road, Anandnagar, Bhusawal. NORTHERN REGION: Flat No. 201-202, Rohit House, 3, Tolstoy Marg, New Delhi 110 001. Phone: 3311802/3317195. Sales Office: 12B, Netaji Subhash Road, Delhi, Ph: 275600. Sub Offices: Chandigarh, Ph: 20705, Lucknow, Ph: 35172, Saharanpur, Ph: 5247, Faridabad, Ph: 5821, Ghaziabad, Ph: 49143, Kanpur, Ph: 71186, Panipat, Ph: 2559, Kota, Ph: 5428, Udaipur, Ph: 7646, 40/10, Paricha Thermal Power Project, Jhansi.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Disintegrated Circuits

THE steady decline of national institutions has been a recurring tune played by the more pessimistic observers of the Indian scene. And the events of the recent weeks can only have served to buttress this depressing theme. Whether it is the President, prime minister, other constitutional functionaries or even non-governmental institutions like the press, there suddenly seem to be no standards of behaviour, no norms of conduct, no conventions that are followed as hallowed precedents. In such circumstances, the institutions of state must themselves come under great strain, and the complex web of checks and balances that makes for a working democracy begins to look like a disintegrated circuit.

At the highest level, both the President and the prime minister have embarked on courses of action that test the Constitution. The amazing interpretation from Rashtrapati Bhavan—that the President can dismiss a prime minister who enjoys an overwhelming majority in the Lok Sabha—is of a piece with Rajiv Gandhi allowing his personal predilections to come in the way of discharging his constitutional duty of keeping the President informed of events. Inevitably, this has ended up now with both the President and the prime minister taking rigid positions on their respective powers and responsibilities. No one knows as yet what effect this will ultimately have on the Constitution itself, on future relations between the head of state and head of government, and indeed on the Congress(I)'s choice of its next presidential candidate.

Illustration by AJIT NINAN

A short distance away from this degrading action, Parliament sees endless pandemonium and repeated walkouts, with a 'no confidence' motion against even the speaker of the Lok Sabha—for only the second time in over 35 years. The treasury benches can do little other than thump their desks, while no one in the Congress(I) seems to find anything amiss in speaker after speaker from the party roundly criticising in Parliament the actions of V.P. Singh as a leading light of the Congress(I) Government. As for the Opposition, it is as guilty as the ruling party in failing to attend crucial debates, so that a vital piece of legislation (on mail censorship) is voted with just 20 MPs in the House. In a fundamental sense, Parliament is quite simply non-functional.

The rot goes deeper. In the states, for instance, cabinet ministers are publicly named for their links with terrorists, or engage in public duels with police chiefs. Yet the show goes on, as though little is amiss. There is a diminishing faith in the Government's investigating agencies: raids never seem to be ordered against those currently in favour, and where investigations have been carried out there is no follow-up action. The investigating agencies are either doing hatchet jobs against those out of favour, or have their top-rung officials summarily removed from office when they take their jobs too seriously.

Fortunately, there is no more talk of fostering a committed bureaucracy, and it has been some time since the last protest resignation from the Supreme Court because of a supersession took place. Nevertheless, judicial appointments do not seem beyond question, even as the entire system of dispensing justice creaks under the weight of a backlog of cases and of corruption. As for commissions of inquiry, no one seems to take them seriously any more. Their reports are either not published, or when published do not find wide acceptance. In the bureaucracy, people are dismissed at whim, or given extensions of service despite a clear-cut decision not to allow extensions. The exceptions to this rule start in the Prime Minister's Secretariat, and now extend into the army, where a sudden spree of extensions to senior generals must have upset the most structured of organisations.

The press has rightly come under fire for its own failings, with editors becoming increasingly partisan and taking sides, or switching sides with an ease that would do credit to the aya Rams and gaya Rams of politics. For good measure, a spate of editors' resignations throws up the question once again of who in the media really enjoys the freedom of the journalistic pen.

This list can go on. The political parties—supposedly standard-bearers of democracy—have no internal democracy of their own and are by and large unable to hold organisational elections. Credibility in the system as a whole has been eroded to the point where the public is prepared to believe that people in positions of power or influence have illegal Swiss bank accounts and can, as a result, be blackmailed from abroad. After all the talk of a cleansing of public life, this must come as the biggest shock of all.

The reasons for the spreading malaise lie in disparate factors, and partly in the unusual events of the past few months. But the real test of any system is in unusual times, and there can be little disputing the fact that several people in public life have not lived up to the responsibilities of their office. Two years ago, Rajiv Gandhi had himself referred to the decline of national institutions, and said that nurturing them would be one of his priorities. He could take credit for some actions on this score, but he has also personally contributed to the problem. If a solution were to be sought, it can only lie with the people who are charged with upholding conventions, setting themselves high standards of behaviour and rebuilding, step by systematic step, a crumbling faith in institutions that may themselves crumble if strained any further.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Long after you've stood on your own legs, you can still count on support from Computer Point.

Right from the very first step you take in buying a computer, you can count on dependable support from Computer Point.

We'll examine your needs thoroughly – and help you choose the best system to answer them.

We'll advise you on what software to buy and why. We'll even train you to use it meaningfully.

Computer Point offers you the convenience of a single-source computer supermarket, and the assurance of genuine quality and personalised service.

When you buy a computer from us, you'll find our prices as low as (sometimes, even lower than) manufacturers' own prices. You'll also find our delivery schedules more realistic and pleasing than anybody else's!

Even long after you've started using your computer – whenever you need us, you'll find us right behind you!

Yes, if it's computers you're thinking of, you can't come to a better place than Computer Point.

Because, while everyone else looks at your needs from their angle, we see your point of view!

COMPUTER POINT

We see your point of view !

• Bangalore: 43, Dickenson Road Tel: 578718/578452 • Bombay: 227, Dr. Annie Besant Road, Worli Tel: 4936716-493
• Calcutta: 5, Camac Street • Cochin: Nedumchalil Chambers, Mullachery Canal Road, Ernakul

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Sista's-CP/1367

Hyderabad: Regency House, Greenlands Road, 680, Somajiguda Tel: 229123/229374
Madras: 32, G.N. Chetty Road, T. Nagar Tel:441192 • New Delhi: F-41, South Extension Part I Tel: 624370/698548

DON'T BE A PARTNER IN SOFTWARE PIRACY

BUY GENUINE

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SAVE RS. 39/-

Every fortnight INDIA TODAY gives you the complete perspective on subjects determining the nation's destiny.

Can you afford to miss out?

Here is my annual subscription of Rs. 105/- by Cheque/M.O/D.D

No. _____

Please mail my copy to:

Name _____

Address _____

_____

City _____

State _____

Pin Code _____

INDIA TODAY
THE COMPLETE NEWSMAGAZINE

Mail to:
Living Media India Pvt. Ltd.
Subscription Department
Thomson Press Building
P.B. No. 69, Delhi-Mathura Road
Faridabad 121007 (HARYANA)

- No one comes above Parliament. All are creatures of the Constitution.
  ■ RAJIV GANDHI quoted in Indian Express

- V.P. Singh is not honest enough.... Why should he be afraid of resigning from the Congress(I) and telling about the misdeeds and corruption of the Rajiv Government? ■ CHANDRA SHEKHAR, Janata Party president, in Indian Express

- He (V.P. Singh) is nothing but a CIA agent.... You people in the media have built him up. But he is nothing. Absolutely nothing!
  ■ KALPNATH RAI in The Illustrated Weekly of India

- I will hit back in this fight. I am not a spineless person.... I've been driven into a corner. ■ V.P. SINGH at a meeting of the Uttar Pradesh Congress(I) Executive

- They (Bansi Lal and Bhajan Lal) are selected chief ministers, not elected chief ministers. Both are puppets of Rajiv Gandhi. ■ DEVI LAL in Sunday Mail

- I don't know what purpose they (Gorkha militants) would serve by procuring arms and training themselves up in the jungles like mad men.
  ■ SUBHAS GHISING in Sunday

- Rajiv Gandhi is in the same position as I am.... He cannot get the terrorists to the table. If the terrorists don't listen to India and the Central Government, then India has no leverage. ■ J.R. JAYEWARDENE in The Hindustan Times

- To suggest that the present events are part of a single design is absurd. There may be a succession of petty controversies. but who has the brains to orchestrate such disparate factors? ■ PREM SHANKAR JHA in The Sunday Observer

- Time is now opportune for the Janata Party to emerge as a national alternative. ■ Resolution at the national-level Janata Party meeting in Bangalore

- He (Dinesh Singh) has always been a job-seeker. He played that most despicable role in bringing down the Janata regime.... He will do anything for a job. ■ RAM JETHMALANI in Probe India

- Pakistan is not a global power.... If you think that Pakistan is going for a nuclear bomb, you must ask yourself, why?
  ■ DR HUMAYUN KHAN, Pakistan ambassador, in The Times of India

- I know I can't last forever. I think of death at least once a day.
  ■ REKHA in Cine Blitz

Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The greatest cooling power under the sun.

...airconditioners work well when it ...so hot.

...when the mercury climbs over 40°C, ...start to wilt from heat exhaustion. ...ed by 46°C, there's only one machine in ...still going strong.

...ever.

...only one specially engineered to ...extreme heat.

...has airconditioners with ...ranging from 0.5 to 5 tonnes. ...models in window airconditioners and ...ction of packaged airconditioners. As ...a range of water coolers and voltage ...ers.

...airconditioners are now also ...in split units. Which means you ...the cool-air outlet in your room and ...the hum of the machine outside.

...sales executive will give you the ...

...tell you about our wide network of distributors and dealers.

He'll also tell you about our sales and service network. Thirteen sales offices. Seven-days-a-week service. Complaints attended to in 24 hours. And a standby machine if yours has to be taken for repairs.

Our sales executive may also be persuaded to disclose the names of a few Amtrex users like Reliance, Gwalior Rayon, Hoechst, Bank of India, Escorts, Bank of Baroda, Canara Bank and Diners.

Looks like everyone under the sun is using Amtrex.

Amtrex Ambience Pvt. Ltd.(An enterprise of Lalbhai Industries Consolidated), Rachana, Opp. Bombay Garage, Shahibaug Rd., Ahmedabad 380 004. Tel: 383035.

Branches/Offices at: Bombay: 233909. Calcutta: 448507. Delhi: 6835986. Madras: 440 802. Hyderabad; 722 77. Pune: 55485. Baroda: 322061.

AMTREX

Air conditioners

Now available on D.G.S. & D. Rate Contract.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Mudra:A:RIL:3855

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Cartoons by AJIT NINAN
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CHOKING POINT

■ People will go to any length to make a quick buck—and to then secure it. But the case of an assistant section officer of the Hyderabad Education Department beats all previous records.

It turned out there was a bus conductor whose young brother had developed an aversion to school. Hoping to save his sibling from the stigma of failing, he requested the section officer for a certificate ensuring his brother's promotion to the next class.

After haggling a while, they decided on Rs 200 to account for the extraordinary request. The money changed hands and the official gleefully walked away. But he soon discovered—to his horror—two suspicious strangers trailing him. In sheer panic, he popped the incriminating Rs 100 and Rs 50 notes into his mouth.

Then ensued an undignified scuffle, with his followers—who turned out to be anti-corruption officials—almost choking him in trying to retrieve their evidence. Finally, the section officer had to undergo a stomach wash at a nearby hospital. And it was only after the contents of his stomach were forensically examined and the tests proved positive for currency that the persevering officials nabbed their man.

PAPER CHASE

■ Any self-respecting student, has a trick or two up his sleeve to beat the exam system. If flattering teachers isn't enough to gain an inkling of the all-important question papers, then buying the papers outright isn't far behind. But such dark deeds are usually carried out in some back alley of the college, where money surreptitiously changes hands.

But recently, two worried Ghaziabad students found none of these established methods worked. As their exam date loomed nearer, they couldn't even find any professors loitering around in their college to plead their case. In a last desperate bid, they decided they'd meet the challenge head on.

Entering the exam hall in an unusually composed state, both sat down to tackle their Hindi paper. They revealed their grand ploy only at the end. When the invigilating professor asked for the answer books, he found hard cash attached on to two. The one with Rs 10 requested the examiner to award him 50 marks, and the other with Rs 5 pleaded for any marks at all! Needless to say, the professor awarded no marks to either.

DUTY FREE

■ Old customs die hard! Especially at the new Indira Gandhi International Airport, where passengers quake as fierce customs officials make their lives miserable. But not always do the customs officials get away with their bone-chilling efficiency in catching victims.

Last fortnight, old roles were reversed in the cat-and-mouse game. At 1.30 a.m.—

a time when pandemonium reigns supreme and the airport is buzzing with scores of harried passengers—one gentleman found all his money missing. Panic-striken, he ran screaming to the nearest policeman.

Unwittingly, he had revived old antagonisms. Both the customs officials and airport police have had daggers drawn since a sub-inspector was caught trying to smuggle gold biscuits and a customs inspector was charged with robbing a passenger. Now, all hell broke loose. The indignant customs officials struck work and raised raucous slogans when the cops started questioning their integrity.

Meanwhile, the old victims grabbed the novel opportunity. Hundreds of passengers—bags filled with goodies—merrily strolled out, while their erstwhile persecutors were engaged in stalking their own kind.

HIGH JINKS

■ Give a man an inch, and he'll take a mile. That adage can turn out to be embarrassingly true where one's countrymen are concerned, as the country's own international airline found recently.

Recently, Air-India decided to introduce free alcoholic drinks on the economy class on its Singapore-Bombay flight AI 415. Little did it realise just how enthusiastically its high-flying passengers would take to the free 'trip'. After the first round of complimentary drinks had been served, some cheerfully surprised travellers invaded the kitchen, en masse, and descending on the liquor trolley, triumphantly bore away cans of beer and bottles of scotch and gin.

This unprecedented hijack took the pursers and air hostesses completely by surprise. The intoxicated merrymakers even took over their role, smilingly serving the booze in plastic glasses held out by eagerly reaching hands. Many drinks later, a mini-melee was in progress, with the lady passengers getting the brunt of it all. As far as the airline is concerned, it is now having second thoughts about its hospitality.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

DON'T FORGET TO NOMINATE YOUR LIC POLICY

Everything was well planned and meticulous in Piyush Mukherjee's life. Like his LIC Policy. To leave-behind a solid sustenance in case he was suddenly no more.

And, when that happened, there was one little thing Piyush had forgotten. To nominate his wife in his Policy. Before the claim was settled, Piyush's wife had to undergo a lot of consequential formalities and procedural delays. To avoid such irritants, NOMINATE.

Do remember life insurance is a long term contract.

Naturally, during the contract period there may be many changes in the life and lifestyle of a person. One may get married and has to provide for the security of the growing family. In that event one may like to change the nomination from the previous nominee viz., father, mother or sister to one's spouse.

As family responsibilities grow, one may have to mortgage the policy to secure loan from financial institutions for building a house of one's own. In that event, the nomination becomes invalid and, after the mortgage loan is repaid, when the policy is reassigned the nomination is not automatically re-instated. One has to make fresh nomination. This is a MUST to avoid hassles during the claim settlement stage.

Incidently, if age is not admitted at the time of submitting the proposal, one should ensure that age is admitted. For this purpose, please send an acceptable proof of age to the branch in which the policy is serviced.

When one is prepared to channelise one's life's savings through LIC to provide the much needed security for one's beloved ones, a little care like making the nomination or effecting the change in the nomination whenever necessary and admitting the age, will go a long way and will help the LIC to serve you better.

Please help us to serve you better. The Agents of the Corporation are always available to help you. Please be in touch with your Agent for getting the right kind of advice regarding your life insurance needs and also for after-sales service.

EFFICIENT/LIC/2/87

Life Insurance Corporation of India
30 Years in the service of the people.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A child's needs are small. It takes so little to change a life.

For over a year, Love and Care, a band of dedicated volunteers, has been working quietly behind the scenes...changing the lives of an entire generation of underprivileged children.

We made a beginning in Tigra village in Haryana and in the slums of Delhi, bringing changes in the environment, medical care and education of children. We have immunized over 10,000 children and aim to immunize 1,00,000 by early '88. We have set up free clinics, schools, vocational training centres for children in slums. But our task is very large and our means, very little. We need help... your help. Please donate generously. You will be surprised at how much difference just a little money can make.

Children's needs are very small. All you have to do is share a little.

Rs. 20/- will give a child a complete one year course of immunization.

Rs. 25/- will provide a child with nutrition, or a better environment, or medical care for a month.

Rs. 30/- will pay for a child's education for a month.

Rs. 100/- will provide a child with vocational training for a month.

Rs. 200/- to adopt a child for complete care by us.

Send as much money as you like other than the listed specifications and every month you will receive his/her progress and picture.

You can also specify the age and sex of the child.

Contact us for details/voluntary services.

Come, make a hundred flowers bloom...

Yes. I'd like to share a little Love and Care.
I wish to donate Rs. _____

Please use this amount for ☐ Immunization ☐ Vocational Training ☐ Nutrition ☐ Medicare

☐ Education ☐ Environment
☐ Yes, I wish to "adopt" a child by proxy. Please send me photographs and details.

Income Tax Exemption under Section—80G

* All donations may be sent by M.O., Cheque or Bank Draft payable to:

LOVE AND CARE
D-40, Defence Colony, New Delhi 110024.

Share a little Love and Care

FSA/LC/1/87

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Odd Reluctance

● Mani Shankar Aiyar, in his heyday as the man in the prime minister's office who looked after the media, used to refer to the news agencies as the 'kept press'. If the Press Trust of India's (PTI) recent behaviour on the Bofors issue is anything to go by, Aiyar may well have been right in what he used to say.

PTI did not bother to send a correspondent to Stockholm to cover the Bofors arms deal issue, one of the biggest stories of the year. When it did eventually send someone there, it was a science correspondent—and his brief was that he should cover environmental issues.

But a reporter is a reporter, and he began filing on Bofors. In his despatches, he quoted Swedish government officials as confirming the radio charge that payments had been made into Swiss bank accounts, and that the payments were small but significant. He also quoted the Indian Ambassador in Stockholm, Bhupatray Oza, as saying that the radio had 'thin evidence' (but not no evidence at all). Another despatch mentioned that the report on the inquiry by the Swedish Audit Bureau would be made available on May 29.

● None of this has been reported in India by anyone. Yet PTI has studiously killed these despatches, and not put them out on its news service.

Low Key Role

● Amitabh Bachchan, who was slated to play a high visibility role as chairman of the committee to celebrate Nehru's birthday and India's 40th year of independence, has told the prime minister he would prefer to bow out. The reason: the press and public were beginning to ask questions about what qualifications the superstar MP had for the post and to hint darkly that this was but one more example of Rajiv Gandhi doing special favours for his buddies. Bachchan, however, does not consider the chairmanship anything special and confided in friends that his role would have been no more than laying foundation-stones and attending opening ceremonies—a public relations job—and attracting publicity due to his name. But in the current atmosphere and the attendant criticism about the "prime minister and his friends" Bachchan has decided to play an increasingly low key role in public life in order to deflect further criticism about his association with Rajiv.

Cartoons by AJIT NINAN

Close Call

● Minister of Tourism Mufti Mohammed Syed recently invited the Foreign Correspondents' Association members to lunch at the Ashok Hotel. He clearly expected a cheerful, informal gathering where he would have to answer the odd, friendly question between mouthfuls of tandoori chicken. When his advance staff party arrived to find plans afoot for a formal press conference, they tried to nip things in the bud by producing colourful brochures and tourist arrival lists. But, the press meet began as scheduled. All went rather well till a Pakistani journalist asked the minister why his countrymen found it impossible to obtain visas to go to Kashmir. Being a Kashmiri himself, Syed clearly felt this was one question he could field easily. Pat came his reply: "Would you allow us to go to Azad Kashmir?" But the Pakistani journalist persisted in his questions, forcing the minister to refer several times to Azad Kashmir without realising that his bureaucrats were beginning to squirm uncomfortably as tension started building in the air. Finally, a member of the press corps came to his rescue by asking if it was correct for a minister of the Indian Government to refer to Pakistan occupied Kashmir as Azad Kashmir. "Ah", laughed Syed, "Yes, of course. I didn't really mean Azad Kashmir."

No Bonus

● The Bofors deal with Sweden, which has come under a cloud recently, was supposed to have been clinched with an added bonus for India. It was to include the delivery of two Swedish neutron devices which are used in sophisticated armaments research. According to highly placed sources, the late Swedish premier Olof Palme had provided an assurance to the Government of India that Sweden would deliver the goods. This decision was to hold notwithstanding the pressure that his country might face in the delivery of such devices to a country like India which has not signed the nuclear non-proliferation treaty. But when the Bofors deal was later finalised, Indian officials noticed that it failed to include the neutron devices. When questions were asked, the Swedish Government informed the Indians that it had decided against supply of the devices because it would be unable to face the international outcry that would inevitably follow.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

1987 good reasons to see Thailand this year.

Majestic temples and magnificent elephants, glittering roofs and garlands of orchids, enchanting people and exotic cuisine... one could write a long book about the land they call Thailand (and many seasoned travellers have). And never has there been a better year to see Thailand than 1987. For this is Visit Thailand Year in the Land of Smiles.

Among the kaleidoscope of festivities planned for 1987 you should try to catch some of these:

Feb. 13-15. Chiang Mai Flower Festival. A million blooms, a thousand smiles. One of the unforgettable moments of your life.

April 13. Songkran Festival. A nationwide water festival celebrating the Thai Lunar New Year.

May 9-10. Bun Bang Fai Festival. "Bang!" indeed. Held in northeast Thailand, a fireworks show like no other you've ever seen.

Oct. 16. Royal Barge Procession. An armada of brilliant colours, pageantry and rare splendour not to be missed.

Nov. 5. Loy Krathong. Celebrated nationwide, this is Thailand's loveliest festival.

Nov. 14-15. The Elephant Round-Up. Come to Surin in northeast Thailand for this extraordinary display.

Nov. 22. Bangkok Marathon. A major sporting event commemorating His Majesty the King's 60th Birthday Anniversary.

Dec. 15. Light and Sound Presentation. A glittering occasion to be held at the Royal Grand Palace and the Temple of the Emerald Buddha.

These are only a small selection of the truly stunning special events that mark 1987 as Visit Thailand Year.

Make your holiday plans now. And make sure you fly on Thailand's own airline, Thai International. Where the exotic sensations that are Thailand start from the moment you step on board.

Thai

MINC&H/THA/4702

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Your painter can make your walls look fresh with any shade

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

You can make sure the freshness lasts longer with just two words: Asian Paints

Working out colour schemes is fun. Muted pastels for the living room, bright colours for the children's room, a dark shade on one wall to make a large room look smaller, cool blues and greens for rooms which get a lot of sunlight, and so on.

Your efforts to decorate your home, however, should be well rewarded. Your pleasure in your home can fade if the shades fade.

Which is why Asian Paints offers you a range of shades that stay looking fresh for years.

And, each shade is computer matched. So the shade you'll get is precisely the shade you want.

A paint for every need, every budget

For your walls, there's Apcolite 100% acrylic emulsion or Tractor distemper.

For painting doors, windows and metal, there's Apcolite synthetic enamel. And TouchWood clear wood finish for furniture.

What's more, each paint from Asian Paints makes the most of your budget. Giving you exceptional quality at affordable prices.

Which is why more homes have been decorated with Asian Paints than any other paint.

Because, each of those homeowners knew that with Asian Paints they were getting more for their money.

asian paints

Money well spent

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

OBM/9797

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Surpass [sə'pa:s] v. outdo, be greater or better than; pre-eminent, matchless. It is with this aim in mind that each of our chefs work extremely hard to make sure every single dish is perfectly prepared. In La Rochelle, you can enjoy exquisite French cuisine. In Taipan, you discover the delights of truly authentic Szechwan fare from China. And in the Palms, you'll find our continental and local specialities are just right for snacks or light meals. We always try to surpass the highest standards — because you deserve the best the world has to offer.

The Oberoi

NEW DELHI

For reservations please contact your travel agent, the hotel direct Telephone 363030, Telex 63222 and 3829 OBDL IN or call Ahmedabad 464451 Bangalore 573444 • Bombay 2024343 • Calcutta 292323 • Madras 478156

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Edge of Irony

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Barnala's Government was carelessly thrown to the wolves.

THE pointed edge of irony chiselled the fortnight that was into daunting shapes and size. On the opening day of the most momentous session of Parliament in a decade, the President—and indirectly the Rajiv Gandhi Government—had singled out Surjit Singh Barnala and his Akali Government for fulsome praise. On the day the Parliament session ended, that same Barnala Government had, without warning, been flung to waiting wolves, the chief minister's grim battle against impossible odds carelessly ignored and the future of a tormented state once again etched in dangerous silhouette.

The ironies were unending. The turbulence and uncertainty caused by the imposition of President's Rule in Punjab succeeded in totally obscuring the fact that a 25th state—Goa—had been added to the Indian union. The ruling party, already weakened by the cats-cradle of contradictions in its policies, saw the forced resignation of the third Cabinet minister in less than two months as Ghani Khan Choudhury was derailed over the granting of undue favours to an obscure Bombay firm while he was railway minister. In Rashtrapati Bhavan, the President and the prime minister fed each other birthday sweets even as it became obvious that the gloves were off in their punishing constitutional combat. On the economic battlefront, the same stock market that had ridden an unprecedented crest on the Rajiv Gandhi wave, plunged to alarming lows as investors shied away and key corporate sectors took a financial beating.

RAVI CHOPRA

The gloves were off in the constitutional combat between Rajiv and Zail.

And, as if in reflection of the uncertain political and economic weather, as many as 13 states and two Union territories were hit by a crippling drought that placed an added and potentially ominous strain on the Indian landscape. In the wider context, the real significance of the fortnight lay in the direction the public weather-wane seemed to be veering towards. A forceful element of cynicism has undoubtedly found permanent place in the public mind. The ruling party's veneer of credibility has been gradually stripped away, exposing the underside of reality. It is a dangerous moment for a government already weakened by its own impulsiveness. Gullibility can no longer be taken for granted and not many people, including those in the ruling party, believe that the change in Punjab was unrelated to the coming elections in Haryana.

Ghani Khan became the third Cabinet minister to resign in less than two months.

Haryana itself presented a prism of paradoxes as the political forces girded for the approaching electoral battle. President's Rule in Punjab is just one indication that, for the next few weeks, the Centre's every move will be locked in step with one of the smallest yet sudddenly the most important state in the country.

MGR's new bills have reached ludicrous lengths.

The ironies of politics, however, had their loudest echo in Tamil Nadu where the ruling party is led by a former film star, M.G.Ramachandran. The state Government introduced a bill in the Assembly that seeks to ban all films remotely critical of ministers or members of the Legislative Assembly, including the speaker. The AIADMK then proceeded to take the issue to more ludicrous lengths by the introduction of yet another bill that will censor all film posters that paint politicians in less than angelic colours. Though Tamil Nadu has the distinction of adopting rather unique postures on such issues, it was also yet another indication that the uneasy political atmosphere at the Centre was becoming dangerously contagious.

—DILIP BOBB

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Before you decide which water cooler to buy consider this:

- Reliability ✓
- Price ✓
- After-sales service ✓
- Maintenance/Operational cost ✓
- Elegance ✓

VOLTAS

OFFERS IT ALL

The expertise, the experience and the technology that have made Voltas the acknowledged No. 1 in air conditioning systems, are available to you in the range of Tushar Water Coolers.

TUSHAR WATER COOLERS NO. 1 IN KEEPING COOL.

Also available on DGS & D rate contract

VOLTAS LIMITED
Appliances Business Group
19, J.N. Heredia Marg, Ballard Estate
Bombay 400 038.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Super Juniors spark off a revolution!

Prohibitive computer prices.
White elephant PCs.
Dumb terminals.

Now, Shyam's Super Juniors cut through these problems in one stroke. Ushering in a new era in the field of micro-computers. With a never-before range of cost-effective PCs. Each one with machine capabilities relevant to your business needs. Today! The right processing speed. The right storage capacity. The edge of a multi-operating system. The advantage of multi-terminal and multi-tasking facilities. All this, at real down-to-earth prices.

Use it as a stand-alone work station. Or plug it in as an intelligent terminal to mini and mainframe computers. Either way, Super Junior PCs are an asset. And, at their price, a boon!

Software that's a perfect fit!

Name your profession. Spell out your need. Shyam has the most cost-effective software to match. Both general-purpose and custom-made. Reliable and fast. In an array of ready-to-use packages.

Backup Services you can rely upon

Shyam has the infrastructure to provide complete, efficient support : installation, training, service and maintenance. Its all-India network of offices is programmed to respond promptly to customer calls. With complete solutions. Two schemes for maintenance are available : *Annual maintenance contract *Per call basis maintenance.

Take the sting out of computer prices

	PC JUNIOR	PC TURBO JUNIOR	PC/AT JUNIOR
	Rs. 12,950*	Rs. 15,950*	Rs. 55,000*
CPU	8088	8088-2	80286
Speed	4.77 MHZ	4.77/8 MHZ	6/8 MHZ
RAM	256 KB	256 KB	1 MB
Expandable to (Optional)	640 KB	640 KB	3 MB
Floppy Drive	1x 360 KB	1x360 KB	1x1.2 MB 1x20 MB
Upgradable to (Maximum)	4x360 KB (2x30 MB)	4x360 KB (2x30 MB)	2x1.2 MB (2x80 MB)

PC XT Junior Rs. 29,950* PC/XT Turbo Junior Rs. 32,950*

All Super Juniors are XT/AT compatible, have a 84-key keyboard, a TV adaptor, with the option of a 12" monochrome display unit. Specifications : CGA card, Real Time Clock, 2 Serial/1 Parallel/ Games Ports.

*Excise and S.T. extra

100 Shyam PCs installed in Delhi

Introducing Super Junior PCs from SHYAM

What you need. And can afford.

FREE! 3 Software packages (Financial Accounting, Payroll and Inventory) with every Super Junior

To know more about the revolutionary Super Junior PCs, write to us. Or better still, contact us personally.

Shyam Computer Systems (P) Ltd.
C-138, Naraina Phase I New Delhi 110 028
Tel : 5413392/5419572 Telex : 031-63004 SCS IN

Delhi : Arvind International, Eros House, Nehru Place. Tel : 6439310/6415680. Apex Informatix, 201, Kanishka Shopping Plaza, Tel : 343400/Ext. 2267. • Bombay : BHAWANI ENGINEERING WORKS, 87, Vishal Industrial Estate, Village Road (Opp. Ceat Tyres), Bhandup (W), Bombay-400 078. Tel : 5515289. • Hyderabad : C/o SHYAM COMMUNICATION SYSTEMS, 28, Reddy Hostel Complex, Tilak Road, Abids, Hyderabad-500 001. Tel : 222222. • Manedragarh (M.P.) : Jai Maa Sharda Traders, Main Chowk, Manedragarh. Tel : 105. Raipur : NATIONAL COMPUTERS, Azad Chowk. Tel : 27000. • Meerut : Bits and Bytes, 2, P. L. Sharma Road, Meerut-250 001. Tel : 73156.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PUNJAB A RISKY

THE irony was inescapable: the Akali Dal had come into power after its leader Harchand Singh Longowal was gunned down by terrorists on August 20, 1985. It was unceremoniously dismissed a brief 21 months later, on the very day that Longowal's assassin Jarnail Singh was killed in a police encounter.

The late night imposition of President's rule in Punjab marked the end of yet another watershed in Sikh politics: it buried the Punjab accord for which Longowal had paid with his life, which the people of Punjab had endorsed at the polls, and for which the deeply religious chief minister, Surjit Singh Barnala, had suffered excommunication. It also buried with it any hope of a political solution in the near future. In Punjab, Akalis called it the second murder of Longowal.

The action once again exposed Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi and the Congress(I) to charges that common sense, principles and goodwill had been sacrificed at the altar of political expediency, that the logic of the tough action in Punjab lay in neighbouring Haryana, where predominantly Hindu voters were to go to the polls five weeks later. In tell-tale fashion, one of the first tasks assigned to Punjab Governor S.S. Ray was to speed up construction of the Sutlej-Yamuna Link Canal for the supply of water to Haryana.

President Zail Singh signed the promulgation with the same reluctance with which he had delivered his speech to Parliament in February praising the Barnala government. Then, he had warned the prime minister against eulogising any chief minister lest the Government be forced to eat its words later.

The warning proved prophetic. Late in the afternoon of May 12, the President was alerted that he would be requested to sign an important document. This arrived in a sealed envelope, containing Ray's report requesting Zail Singh to impose President's rule in the state. Zail Singh immediately sent the report to Home Minister Buta Singh for advice. At 7.30 p.m., the prime minister summoned a meeting of the Cabinet Committee on Political Affairs (CCPA), which endorsed the governor's recommendation. The CCPA's decision was promptly approved by the full Cabinet, though some of the ministerial experts on Punjab expressed their dissent. But Buta Singh carried the day and finally conveyed the resolution to the President at 10.30 p.m.

Zail Singh signed the controversial notification, but he held back the concerned file, to note two days later that the Government should have considered the implications of dismissing a government which enjoyed majority support. He also reiterated his earlier contention that the February eulogy of the Barnala government had not been a wise decision.

If this highlighted the Government's contrary stands on Punjab, the contradiction was only the culmination of almost four months of confusion and seeming double-dealing: public support for Barnala being undermined by sharp criticism delivered privately. That was not all. The crackdown in Punjab began, most surprisingly, at a time when the Government had indirectly opened a front for negotiation with the Akal Takht acting jathedar, Darshan Singh Ragi, and when a political initiative seemed round the corner with the release of the Jodhpur detenus. It also came when Barnala had refused to give in to Central blandishments for accepting the report of the Eradi tribunal on the sharing of Ravi-Beas waters with Haryana and Rajasthan. The report apparently favours Haryana.

YOGJOY/T

Governor Ray with police chief Ribeiro: crackdown

The imposition of President's rule in Punjab once again exposed Rajiv Gandhi and the Congress(I) to charges that common sense and principles had been sacrificed at the altar of political expediency.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

GAMBIT

Former minister Chandumajra being arrested: strong opposition support. He ention that arnala gov-e decision.

vernment's
e contradic-n of almost nd seeming pport for sharp critiwas not all.
egan, most he Govern-a front for akht acting
, and when round the he Jodhpur arnala had l blandishof the Eradi
Ravi-Beas
asthan. The ryana.

Finally, the dismissal took place when senior Akali ministers were engaged in a public slanging match with Punjab police supremo Julio Ribeiro, whose term was coming to an end in May, with the Centre and state differing over a fresh term.

The central issue which the Government pushed to the forefront to justify Barnala's dismissal was the rising graph of terrorist killings in the state: from an average of around 50 a month last year to 79 in April, with the graph still climbing. Home Minister Buta Singh charged after the dismissal that the "Barnala government was only on paper. Extremists were running a parallel government, and we did not want to run away from our responsibility." On the morning before the dismissal, Buta Singh had reeled off statistics in Parliament to prove that the law and order situation was worsening, and that over 3,000 Hindu families had migrated out of Punjab during the last two months alone—following the militants' campaign against shops selling meat, liquor and tobacco. An Intelligence Bureau report also said that practically every shopkeeper was being made to pay a ransom for running his business.

The Centre claims that because of a parallel government set up by the extremists and the sharp hike in killings, the Barnala government was no longer in a position to handle the situation.

But if this was the real scenario, it clashed hopelessly with the public face that the Congress(I) itself had been putting up. Rajiv Gandhi's support for the Barnala government was evident even upto April 25, when the Congress(I) issued a statement that it would continue to support the Barnala government "which is fighting fundamentalist and communal forces". Two days before that, Barnala had visited New Delhi and been personally assured by the prime minister that he had his support. And on April 14, Human Resources Development Minister P.V. Narasimha Rao showered praise on the Barnala government at an all-party convention on Baisakhi day, and said that Rajiv had sent him to convey the message that "we will not rest until the accord is implemented". He also announced that the Centre had decided to review the cases of all Jodhpur detenus. The previous day, Barnala and Rajiv had met for two hours to discuss this issue.

Yet, on April 27, Buta Singh despatched the first of three quickfire missives to Barnala, sharply pulling him up for his failure to handle a law and order situation which, the Union home minister

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BUTA SINGH

"Barnala sided with communalism"

WHEN Buta Singh, 53, was appointed in May 1986 as Union home minister, eight months after Surjit Singh Barnala's ascent to chief ministership of Punjab, it was believed that his brief was two-fold: keep both terrorists and the Barnala government in line. After a year in office, he has achieved at least one objective. It was his ministry which, over the last six months, built up a strong case against the Barnala government. With absolute loyalty to Rajiv Gandhi, Singh carried out the task with precision—and without reservations.

His career at the Centre began in 1974 when he was made Union deputy minister for railways. Later, during the Janata Party rule, he was the party's only AICC(I) general secretary. When Mrs Gandhi rode to power in 1980, Singh was inducted as minister of state and elevated to cabinet rank in 1983.

Singh's formula for success is a submissive approach coupled with a determination to execute perfectly any order issued by anybody close to the top party bosses. He came on the terrorists' hit list for his role in the reconstruction of the Akal Takht after Operation Bluestar. He was later declared a tankhaiya and excommunicated from the Sikh community.

More recently, he was accused of being involved in a factional war within the party which led to the sidelining of both former Union minister of state Arun Nehru and former party vice-president—and now Union minister—Arjun Singh. Today, one of Rajiv's most trusted cabinet ministers, Singh has been used to tackle several sensitive matters. In the process, he has been accused by many opposition chief ministers of misleading the prime minister on many issues relating to Centre-state relations.

Singh spoke to Senior Editor PRABHU CHAWLA at his North Block office after the declaration of President's rule in Punjab. Excerpts:

Q. Why did you dismiss the Barnala government now? Its functioning wasn't any worse than it was a few months ago.

A. We had been thinking about the possible options. It was an ongoing process. We watched the impact of peace rallies by all parties. These were having some positive impact and extremists were being isolated. They also realised that the slogan of an independent Khalistan was not being bought by the people anymore. But in the last two months, they have changed strategy.

Q. What has changed?

A. They changed their slogan. Terrorists announced that they would eliminate what they termed as Hinduism in Sikhism. It was announced that any Sikh woman who took to any fashion, any Sikh smoking tobacco, trimming his beard or selling mutton would be eliminated. They launched the worst kind of cultural revolution to impose fundamental Sikhism in Punjab's villages. Since the majority was against this kind of communalism, it led to killings of more Sikhs. It was a sinister move leading to the mass exodus of Hindus.

Q. But that was happening earlier too.

A. But it was on a large scale now and the state government was not doing any thing to reverse this trend: it could have led to a civil war. Barnala was not at all capable of handling this situation.

Q. Why do you feel that way? Hasn't he always stuck his neck out?

A. Barnala himself was not convinced about the extremists' sinister motives. At the core of his heart, he believed that they were doing the right thing. Barnala's sympathies were with this rabid kind of communalism.

Q. But only a few months ago he was eulogised by your party as one of the most secular Sikhs fighting terrorism.

A. We built his image because he took a vow to finish fundamentalism. Unfortunately, he failed miserably. Though he was chief minister, a parallel government was being run by the fundamentalists. The Barnala government existed only on paper and functioned from barricaded houses.

Q. But you praised his ministry in the Presidential address to Parliament.

A. We praised him at that time because he challenged religious interference in the running of the state. We praise him now for his stand on this issue. But his number two in the cabinet and half his cabinet colleagues pledged themselves to the high priests whom Barnala had vowed to fight. What kind of team was he leading? He had no control over his ministers who were aligned with extremist groups.

BHAWAN SINGH

Q. Have you evidence of this nexus?

A. Yes, we have it. They withdrew cases against criminals and released a large majority from jails. Government funds were used to finance them.

Q. But can you dismiss a ministry enjoying a majority on these grounds?

A. This majority is a myth. The Supreme Court has decided that all those MLAs unseated by the speaker will have the right to vote in the Presidential election. So they are all members.

Q. So you believe that the Barnala government was in a minority?

A. I am a layman and not a legal expert. Since the Supreme Court has acknowledged their right to vote, they are technically members.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Q. If the Akali ministry was in a minority, the Congress(I) should have withdrawn support and it would have fallen automatically.

A. Why should we get rid of an insufficient government in a dubious manner? Ensuring stability was our responsibility so we chose the open action of dismissing the Government.

Q. But the general impression is that the ministry has been sacrificed to enable the Congress(I) to win the Haryana Assembly elections.

A. It is too far-fetched a contention:

"If we had not intervened, it could have led to a civil war. We were convinced that Barnala was not at all capable of handling this situation."

"The Barnala government existed only on paper and functioned from barricaded houses. We could not have remained silent spectators to this kind of situation."

Your claim is just a political stunt. We did not dismiss Barnala because of that.

Q. Or was it because Barnala refused to accept the Eradi Commission's report on the sharing of river waters which would have helped Haryana?

A. This is an absolutely false allegation. There was no question of pressuring anybody to accept the verdict.

Q. Maybe, as Barnala has charged, you were misleading Rajiv for personal reasons and finally succeeded?

A. It does not behove Barnala to hit below the belt now when he is out of office. Till yesterday he had established a good rapport with me and was discussing all kinds of important issues.

Q. The Akalis have also charged that a member of your personal staff had links with terrorists?

A. Barnala was being advised to tarnish my reputation. It was as part of this conspiracy that the house of my personal assistant was raided by a police official related to Barnala. The police did not find a needle and confiscated a licensed gun which was returned a week later with an apology. The police even arrested a sarpanch and forced him to give false testimony against my staff. I being a Sikh from Punjab can't swear on oath that none of my close friends or relatives is related to any fundamental forces, but so far nobody has been able to establish any link.

Q. With one moderate government out of office, whom are you going to trust to restore normalcy?

A. The Barnala government was not a moderate government. It was a timid government. Ministers and their relatives were buying protection from the terrorists. They were being given official patronage. Dreaded terrorists were using official circuit houses and ministerial bungalows as their hide-outs.

Q. Part of the blame should also be shared by police chief Ribeiro.

A. Yes, he should have shared it but he never got a team of his choice. He had no transfer powers. And whatever action he proposed to take against terrorists was leaked out to them. Executive magistrates were directed to release people arrested for their role in killing innocent people.

Q. Do you agree that both Ribeiro and Governor Ray were conspiring against Barnala so that they could assume direct power?

A. I don't believe in this conspiracy theory. They never gave that kind of impression to us at the Centre. Ribeiro never complained against Barnala.

Q. How do you propose to restore normalcy now? Will you talk to the other Akali faction now?

A. Our first priority is to restore the people's confidence. But we will not open any dialogue with those who do not believe in the Constitution.

Q. What about muni Sushil Kumar Jain's talks with them?

A. I have no knowledge about that. It was not done with our permission. But we have all the political parties with us on the question of eliminating terrorism. And I will not hesitate in talking to even the Longowal group if it helps in restoring communal harmony in Punjab.

said, was getting rapidly worse (see box, page 32). Simultaneously, Governor Ray had sent two notes to Rajiv recommending Barnala's dismissal.

Rajiv's personal feelings, it would seem, were quite different from what his public posture suggested. For shortly before insisting that the President sing Barnala's praises in Parliament, he had written to Barnala saying that "the country has been greatly exercised over the lawlessness and terrorism in Punjab. The gruesome killings in the last few days have been particularly shocking. After the Khuda disaster (in December), I had told you that you must exert yourselves to the utmost to check the deterioration in the situation. You had assured me that stern action would be taken. But the situation has only worsened...you and your government will be judged by the firmness with which you will act now."

IF that was an unmistakable warning, the combined weight of Buta Singh, Ray and Ribeiro finally convinced the prime minister that Barnala's government could not deliver the goods.

Nevertheless, the dismissal came at a particularly indefensible time. Barnala had only recently joined battle seriously and sought to mobilise the silent Sikh masses behind him. He had also just regained a majority in the Assembly, following a Punjab High Court ruling that upheld the anti-defection law and ended up with the removal from membership of most of the rival Akali Dal MLAs. And while the crime graph was certainly climbing, the police were notching up successes too, and the militants' campaign against the consumption of meat, liquor and tobacco had begun to run aground and prove counter-productive.

Said Barnala: "Villagers had begun to form vigilante squads against these goondas. They had even begun to offer resistance with guns." And more than half the 598 liquor vends that had been closed, had reopened by the first week of May, with another 30 vends being reopened every day.

Inevitably, the Central move was fraught with grave risks. In seeking a police solution without a political counterpoint, in removing a buffer between a largely alienated Sikh community and the 'Dilli durbar', and in seemingly driving home the message that the Centre had no use for Sikh moderates, the imposition of President's rule could end up by making the Punjab problem even more intractable than it has been.

Barnala's government may have been

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SURJIT SINGH BARNALA

"Haryana was the cause"

FOR a man who has just lost the chief ministership, Surjit Singh Barnala is surprisingly devoid of rancour or bitterness. He says he was not overjoyed when he was elected chief minister: he anticipated the problems. And he is not crestfallen at his dismissal: it was building up to that. There is no feeling of betrayal, of a stab in the back. Only sadness that Punjab may be back to square one and the prospect of peace may have receded further. In between accepting the sympathies and support of friends, MLAs and officials who came to wish him well, Barnala sat with Special Correspondent RAMINDAR SINGH in two separate sessions to answer questions about the state of Punjab and what brought on President's rule. Excerpts from the interview:

Q. You have said you were asked to sell out Punjab's interests. How?

A. The accord with Sant Longowal was the culmination of a long struggle to achieve the just rights of Punjab. But when the question of implementation came up, nothing notable was done. We cannot give in where the state's interests are concerned. There can be no deviation from the terms of the accord, which were very clear. One commission asks us to part with Punjabi-speaking areas when the accord says only Hindi-speaking areas can be transferred. Agreeing to this would have violated the accord. On waters too, the accord clearly safeguards the water that Punjab was using in June 1985. It is difficult for us to accept anything else.

Q. What was the breaking point?

A. There was no breaking point. The Centre never bluntly said 'no' to any of our demands. That's why we continued discussions and tried to reach an understanding. Only two months earlier, in his address to Parliament, the President had praised the Punjab government and me. The prime minister is also on record that I was performing better than most Congress(I) chief ministers. Even as recently as April 14, Central leaders were all praise in joint rallies we held. And on April 30, the governor, addressing students of Punjabi University, praised the government's functioning. Then suddenly the Haryana elections intervened.

Q. Was there a breakdown of law and order?

A. No question of it. There was absolutely no reason for imposing President's rule. The reasons given are quite frivolous. In fact, in April and May we had the best successes in catching known terrorists. The largest number were caught in April, the largest caches of sophisticated firearms uncovered and the largest amount of robbed bank money—Rs 27 lakh—recovered. Only yesterday Longowal's assassin was killed. The so-called reform movement had been checkmated and was on the wane. From all aspects, the performance of the Government was much better than ever before. For all this we have been rewarded with dismissal.

Q. Why?

A. Because of the Haryana elections. The Congress(I) has already lost in Kerala and West Bengal. The prime minister has to face the Haryana elections. So Punjab's interests have been sacrificed at the altar of Haryana.

Q. How much faith do you have in the prime minister now?

A. My faith in him began when Longowal remarked: "Nek munda hai. Dilon bolda hai" (He is a good boy, speaks from the heart). This impression was endorsed in my meetings with him.

Q. Why then was the accord not implemented?

A. Compulsions, wrong advice. Even now I say he acted on the basis of wrong advice.

BHAWAN SINGH

"The search for a political solution has received a setback.... The situation in the state was improving."

Q. Your party has criticised the role that the governor played.

A. It was all orchestrated, engineered. On his trips around Punjab the governor organised meetings and received memorandums, mainly from Congress and BJP men. He never went to any rural areas. All this was being done under the direction of disgruntled Congressmen in Punjab, perhaps at the instance of Congress leaders in Delhi opposed to Punjab's interests.

Q. Who are you referring to?

A. I won't name anyone but some lobbies keep on working against Punjab's interests.

Q. Was the governor part of the conspiracy?

A. If the Home Ministry had already decided to dismiss us, then he was part of that conspiracy. I don't say he misled the

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Centre. But his assessment of the situation was wrong. The situation in the state was improving.

Q. When did you first hear of the move to dismiss your government?

A. From newspaper comments on the governor's tour and meetings. We were expecting it and perhaps the Home Ministry's three letters were intended to prepare the ground. One letter was leaked to the press before it reached me. There was no indication of dismissal even on the 11th evening when Rajiv phoned me.

Q. Where does the dismissal of your government leave the accord?

A. In the doldrums. I won't say the Centre has rejected the accord, but non-implementation amounts to that:

Q. Are the moderates now out in the cold?

A. The moderates are where they have been. We will pursue the Longowal path more vigorously.

Q. Do you see the dismissal of your government as part of a plan to enable holding of discussions in Amritsar between the militants and representatives of the Centre?

A. I don't know whether muni Sushil Kumar is lying (by saying he is acting on behalf of the prime minister) or Buta Singh is (by denying that the muni is acting on the Centre's behalf). One of them is, and if Buta Singh has lied, he has lied it before Parliament. On my part, I have told Rajiv that we have no objection if any agency wants to talk to the extremists. If such talks bring peace, we are welcome.

Q. Do you now feel that you were used by the Centre to confront the head priests?

A. Nobody was using me. The situation just arose and I opposed the wrong decision taken by them (head priests) on moral grounds.

Q. What next? Some of your colleagues say the situation is back to 1984.

A. I won't say it's back to 1984, but it appears they will use repressive measures. Chandumajra was arrested this morning. They are arresting our party members but cannot trace those really wanted catching. This is not the correct method of solving the Punjab tangle. The search for a political solution has suffered a setback. We have called meetings of MLAs, jathedars and the party working committee in the next 10 days to decide what line to take in the future.

KARAM SINGH/Tribune

CRPF jawans deployed in Punjab: short-term gains ineffective: it may have failed to prevent a split in the Akali Dal or even to function as a cohesive team. And after 19 months in office it may have ended up with sharply reduced support from both Sikhs and Hindus. But the circumstances of its ouster will show to a watching Sikh populace that the man who parleyed with Delhi finally left with empty hands.

Meanwhile, the arrest of the Barnala cabinet minister Prem Singh Chandumajra along with more than 400 activists of the All-India Sikh Students Federation (AISSF) and the Damdami Taksal, immediately after President's rule was imposed may have had its justification, but it also brought forth outcries of repression.

In Punjab, the dominant Sikh sentiment was that once again a direct confrontation was developing between the Centre and the Sikhs, and not between the Centre and extremists. As former finance minister Balwant Singh put it: "During Indira Gandhi's days a political conflict between the Congress and the Akalis was converted into a personal confrontation between Indira Gandhi and the Sikhs. A similar mistake is being made now. Some of the same forces active then—Darbara Singh and Buta Singh—are pushing Rajiv Gandhi into a position of confrontation with the Sikhs." The dismissal, he said, would only bring about an emotional unity among the Sikhs and "deepen their alienation from the Centre and the national mainstream". Even though the Barnala government's support base among the Sikhs had shrunk, its dismissal would convince even greater numbers that New Delhi was not to be trusted.

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

OPPOSITION members of Parliament who flayed the Government's decision were vociferous in charging that imposition of President's rule was done with an eye on Haryana. Even L.K. Advani of the BJP, which has long supported President's rule in Punjab, said that its timing would cost the Government its credibility. And Vellampuri John of the AIADMK got a rousing response when he asked: "In case the situation does not improve even after President's rule, will the Central Government be prepared to get dismissed on the grounds the Barnala government was dismissed?"

Equally shocked by the proclamation of President's rule was religious leader Jain muni Sushil Kumar, who had recently completed four days of peace talks with Akal Takht acting jathedar Darshan Singh Ragi in the Golden Temple. "We were trying to bring the militants to the path of peace," said one of his supporters, "but now all those who were talking to us will go underground again and Punjab will become a war zone." Even though the muni does not comment on his connections with the Centre, it is reliably learnt that he enjoyed the confidence of key people in Rajiv's camp. In fact his importance was demonstrated during his negotiations with Ragi, when for the first time since 1984 the Punjab Police chief pulled back CRPF pickets from around the temple for three consecutive days.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The muni's was a religious mission, not unlike that of Jayaprakash Narayan to the dacoits of Madhya Pradesh. He has documents showing that all the five jathedars and extremist groups, including the AISSF and the Khalistan Commando Force, had given their approval for and participated in the negotiations, which were tape recorded and copies distributed to villages in Punjab. According to the muni, an agreement had been reached under which, in exchange for the release of all prisoners—except those charged with patently heinous crimes—the extremists would pledge to work within the Indian Constitution. This would be followed by a call from all five jathedars for a cessation of violence and a threat of excommunication for those refusing to obey, and finally a voluntary surrender of arms at the Akal Takht.

Whether this would have succeeded or not is unclear. But Ragi and the extremists, were guarded in their comments on the imposition of President's rule: significantly, they refrained from lashing out at Rajiv Gandhi—perhaps because they were happy that Barnala had gone, perhaps because they hoped that direct negotiations would start.

MEANWHILE, villagers continued to flock to the temple complex, to extremist groups who continued to dish out rough justice on matters like property disputes. The extremist leaders had gone underground, but the 'parallel government' that the Centre made so much of was still functioning a day after the imposition of President's rule.

On the face of it the situation was incongruous: the Centre was dismissing a moderate Akali government while at the same time it was giving its nod to negotiations with terrorist groups. But equally incongruous was the situation in which it ignored these parallel negotiations as well as the gains made by the moderate Akali government and rammed Central rule on the state at a time when no spectacular terrorist incidents like the Khuda or Muktsar killings had occurred.

In its justification for its move the Cabinet used a report from Governor Ray datelined May 11, in which he wrote that the "ruling party and its government have no political will to combat...the fundamentalist movement....There is total chaos and anarchy...the killings have increased—in fact in the month of April past it was the highest ever." Ray also referred to state ministers' involvement with terrorists.

On the day that Ray's letter reached New Delhi, Barnala was supposed to fly to the capital for a final meeting with the prime minister. His home minister Kanwaljit Singh awaited him at Punjab Bhavan in the capital. But Barnala (who had tried a pre-emptive move against a dismissal by asking for an assembly session from May 27) was told not to come, and at about 8:30 p.m. Kanwaljit Singh received a call from the chief minister's office that Barnala was not coming. The die had been cast. With tears in his eyes, Kanwaljit Singh said: "They have decided to write off Punjab. The chief minister is not going to come here with a begging bowl. I just can't understand. You try so hard and then this happens. Who is going to trust the Centre any more?"

But matters had been coming to a head. Ray had gathered complaints against the Government during his state-wide tours, and on April 29, the Punjab Congress(I) organised a meeting where state party boss Beant Singh launched an attack on the Barnala government and its inability to maintain law and order.

The Akalis had read the war signs, and begun to distance themselves from the Centre. The Barnala government refused to accept the findings of the Eradi Tribunal, and Barnala attended the opposition chief ministers' conclave in New Delhi. And most importantly, the Akalis attacked the one person who had become the symbol of the Centre's power in Punjab—supercop Ribeiro.

No sooner had an interview with Ribeiro appeared in INDIA TODAY (May 15), in which he discussed his retirement plans and expressed his willingness to

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Darshan Singh Ragi: careful comments

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Jain muni Sushil Kumar: peace moves

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

continue beyond the age of superannuation provided he was given the powers of an army chief, than Balwant Singh let fly at him in a letter to the chief minister. Balwant wrote: "This is not the first time he has gone to the press over the head of the chief minister...his pronouncements on matters of policy and politics are simply violative of conduct rules of the service of which he can claim to be a proud member." Barnala himself declared that Ribeiro "is fond of publicity. He already has extraordinary powers. He can enter places of worship. He can arrest ministers. I gave him a free hand. He is a good and honest man. But he's not been that successful and he's trying to put the blame on someone else." Added Balwant Singh: "Ribeiro's demand for more powers is like him telling the prime minister that he should have nothing to do with the Border Security Force's work and that he should confine himself only to Parliament." Other Akali leaders asked why Ribeiro was not getting any of the blame for the rising graph of terrorist killings.

NEVERTHELESS, the Akalis don't have entirely clean hands. There is at least one confirmed case of a minister's son being involved with terrorists: Harpreet Singh, the son of Mohinder Singh Saiyanwala, minister for local bodies, who was arrested by the police for consorting with known terrorists and then freed on bail under pressure from his father. But Harpreet has now been re-arrested by the CBI. The other name prominently mentioned is that of cooperatives minister Chandumajra, who was arrested last week. A recently published story (that Ribeiro had informed the Home Ministry that finance minister Balwant Singh had urged him to free a suspected terrorist) has been denied both by Balwant and by Ribeiro.

Of course, the Akalis have their defence too. "When they say this about us," said Kanwaljit Singh, "they tend to forget that Barnala is number one on the terrorist list, as are most of the ministers. Our workers have been killed, the son of J.S Tohra has been killed." Chandumajra's supporters, including Balwant, point out that Chandumajra's Akali Dal youth wing was so far the only counterpoint to the AISSF. It was this youth wing that clashed with AISSF during the 1985 elections and helped to bring out the vote.

In defending the work of his government against terrorists, Kanwaljit Singh admits killings have gone up slightly. But

JULIO F. RIBEIRO

"It's much better now"

IF there is a super cop in the country today, it is Julio F. Ribeiro, director-general of the Punjab Police. And now, more than ever before, he is in the hot seat. He must confront the terrorists directly without the buffer of an elected government, and face the flak if the killings don't stop. On the first day of President's rule, Ribeiro took time off for an interview with Special Correspondent RAMINDAR SINGH. Excerpts:

Q. Now you are in the hot seat. What happens next?

A. It's much better to deal with a situation of this type on your own. Police officers get politicised under a popularly elected government. They owe allegiance to those in authority. There is a quid pro quo and policing suffers. Even if 25 per cent are posted according to the wishes of politicians, that is pretty bad for a uniformed force. That's the crux. The problem is with officers. The men are good.

Q. How will that change?

A. Now the officers in the field know what I want. I feel confident we will get results. More officers will join battle. Those who don't will be replaced. It would have been quicker if President's rule had come earlier.

Q. Do you expect a spurt in terrorist activity?

A. Yes. The terrorists are regrouping.

Q. If the Centre says law and order was out of control, how can you evade responsibility?

A. I cannot avoid responsibility. I don't have any excuses. But nobody can say I have not tried my best. If I join battle there will be casualties.

Q. The Akalis say you had become an independent centre of power.

A. What are the ministers objecting to? I put the interest of the people before the interest of the elected representatives. If those interests clash, what can I do?

Q. Aren't elected representatives guardians of people's interests?

A. I am also interested in the people.

Q. Were you taking your orders directly from the Centre?

A. What orders? I don't agree.

Q. You had charged ministers' sons and followers of being in league with terrorists.

A. There has been only one case so far. That was Saiyanwala's son.

Q. How can you eliminate terrorists when the Centre has started talking to them?

A. If talks succeed I am happy. But as long as extremists are moving about with weapons, we will fight them.

BHAWAN SINGH

Q. Is it back to square one then? Repression will attract greater violence.

A. I cannot give an authoritative answer. Unless persons with guns are neutralised there can be no solution. The campaign against meat and liquor is good. It's put a lot of Sikhs against them. It started off very strong, but later it petered out. Now it's confined to loot by robbers.

Q. Is the army going to play a large role in policing Punjab?

A. No role at all at the moment. But it has to be kept informed. Should it become beyond our capacity, it will step in. I hope that won't become necessary.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BUTA LETTERS

A Litany of Charges

BETWEEN April 27 and May 8 (three days before the Barnala government was dismissed). Home Minister Buta Singh wrote three letters to Barnala with a litany of charges. Senior Editor PRABHU CHAWLA acquired copies of the letters. Excerpts:

April 27, 1987

Dear Barnalaji,

The situation in Punjab has continued to cause me concern. I had hoped that the all-party campaign against terrorism and fundamentalism would have a beneficial impact on the law and order situation. However, action by the state Government against terrorists has failed to keep pace...

In the last week, the level of violence by terrorists is the highest in more than two years. In fact, we have not had this level of violence in a single week since June 1984...Over 100 serious incidents were reported. Thirty-five murders have been committed....

You can imagine the insecurity that has gripped people. Normal business activity is being stopped in the name of social reform and the sudden spurt in violence is forcing, once again, migration of the minority community from Punjab.

The state Government should have tightened up measures to apprehend terrorists and to give protection to vulnerable sections. However, we find that the police are being hampered in performing their functions. Perhaps the state Government has not fully comprehended the gravity of the situation. I trust that immediate steps will be taken to remedy the weaknesses of the administration and the police set-up.

With best wishes,

Yours sincerely,

Buta Singh

May 6, 1987

Dear Barnalaji,

In my previous letter, I had drawn your attention to the gravity of the situation in Punjab. If March (with 243 incidents) was the worst month from the law and order stand point since 'Operation Bluestar', April, with over 370 incidents, has been far worse. During April, nearly 100 persons have been killed and this is possibly the highest figure for any month since 1982-83.

Not only is the administration proving ineffective against terrorists, but there is possible lack of consciousness at the highest levels...that the situation is fast getting out of hand. On the other hand, some ministers are more interested in denigrating the director-general of police who has been performing his duties with dedication under extremely difficult circumstances.

The burning of liquor vends, barber saloons, meat shops, etc is continuing in a manner that gives an impression of utter lawlessness, matched by the feeling that the state Government is totally helpless. I do hope that you realise that economic activities of the state are being paralysed.

The 'Amrit Prachar' campaign has also led to the deepening of communal and separatist feelings. Sikh masses are being deliberately incited to turn against the Hindus with a view to widening the communal divide. Ragis and Dhadis have been indulging in secessionist utterances...and there appears to be no effort on the part of your administration to apply any brake on them. Consequently, Sikh youth feel encouraged to indulge in terrorist crimes believing that this would not invite action from the state Government.

Dacoities and robberies and selective attacks on banks are increasing. The educational system is fast approaching a total breakdown, with colleges and schools remaining closed for long periods....

We have received reports that some of your ministers are in touch with terrorist elements and that nothing has been done to take suitable action against these persons. No administration functioning under a democratic constitution can and should tolerate, as members of the Government, persons who function against the Constitution.

It is obvious that the state is heading towards a very serious breakdown. Also, despite discussions that we have had on the subject and what the prime minister has told you, there is no realisation or inclination to deal with the situation firmly.

With regards,

Yours sincerely,

Buta Singh

May 8, 1987

Dear Barnalaji,

The most disturbing feature is the growing insecurity among the people and the loss of faith in the state administration. The Government of Punjab has failed to measure up to the tactics, adopted by the terrorists, of creating panic under the cover of social reforms. This has been going on for nearly two months now. You are aware that about 3,000 Hindu families have moved out of Punjab due to fear and insecurity....

You are aware that the director-general of police has been directing action against terrorists in extremely difficult circumstances. The Government must strengthen his hands. On the other hand, some of your colleagues in the Government have chosen to raise unseemly controversies apparently aimed at the director-general of police.

The Central Government has lent full support to the Government of Punjab to combat terrorism. We are concerned about the deteriorating law and order situation in the state....

With regards,

Yours sincerely,

Buta Singh

EXTRACTS

"In fact, we have not had this level of violence in a single week since June 1984...over 100 serious incidents were reported. Thirty-five murders have been committed."

Letter written on April 27

"We have received reports that some of your ministers are in touch with terrorists and that nothing has been done to take suitable action against these persons."

Letter written on May 6

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Siddhartha Shankar Ray and Zail Singh: onerous task

also notes that during the last few months—apart from the slaying of Longowal's killer Jarnail Singh—three of the members of the five-man Panthic Committee (Aroor Singh, Gajja Singh and Sunbir Singh Chaheru) have been arrested. And entire gangs operating in Jullundhar (those of Keval Singh, Bauni, and others) have been smashed.

BUT the bottom line remains that the fundamental problem is political. There can be no decisive battle against terrorism in a law and order context bereft of a political solution. Despite several promises, the Centre gave nothing to Barnala—not Chandigarh, not the Jodhpur detenus, not the water—in order to strengthen his hands and enable him to tell Punjab's alienated youth that he had obtained through peace and negotiations what they could not get through violence.

The Centre's gameplan is notable for its ambiguity. From what little can be discerned, the idea is to give Ray and Ribeiro a freer hand in organising the security forces, and in postings, thereby rendering the anti-terrorist actions more effective. In the end, the Centre will want to deliver some psychologically or physically decisive blow to the terrorist movement before starting moves for a popular government, while at the same time keeping some lines of communications with the extremists open.

But these moves are fraught with dangers. With the elimination of the political option and the sidelining of the buffer government, there is really no one left to fight for the accord. The extremists don't recognise it, and the Unified Akali Dal (UAD) doesn't accept it. In any case, both Parkash Singh Badal and Gurcharan Singh Tohra are still in jail. Akali moderates who supported reconciliation and were prepared to fight, will be forced now to mouth extremist phrases to carry conviction and credibility in Punjab. As the battle again turns into one between the Centre and the Sikhs, it will be that much harder for the Centre to bring Sikhs back to the negotiating table, let alone back into the national mainstream.

There is no certainty that the Punjab gameplan will work in the Haryana elections. If the Congress loses Haryana, the main objective of risking Presidential rule will remain unachieved.

Indeed, the Centre may not even be left with Ragi to talk to, for he can hardly be expected to negotiate when the police are arresting UAD, Taksal and AISSF activists. Already the first visual message flashed to the Sikhs at Ray's first press conference could be twisted, for he was flanked by Chief Secretary P.H. Vaishnav, Home Secretary R.P. Ojha, and Ribeiro—none of them Sikh. Ray has also turned his back on the practice of having advisers (among whom he could have included a Sikh).

As the police solution is intensely sought—and there is always the danger of repression without any recourse for the innocent—the feeling of alienation among even moderate Sikhs who will feel jettisoned from the political process will deepen and possibly swell the ranks of the underground. This is bound to force an emotional unity among Sikhs which could translate later into another political unity. Barnala's party will either have to fall in line or be rendered irrelevant.

An equally risky step is the Centre's desire to talk to Ragi. Whatever the performance of the Akali government, it had proved decisively to the Centre that in a war between the 'church' and state it would uphold the state. But the Centre itself has indirectly been talking to the church (Ragi), and helping foster the impression that the Akal Takht does indeed represent the Sikhs in political matters. In its criticism of Barnala, the Centre noted that his writ had ceased to run in Punjab. But it was the Centre which bowed to Ragi's writ when, on Ragi's request, Ribeiro withdrew the CRPF from the Golden Temple.

Worst of all, there is no certainty that the Punjab gameplan will work any magic in Haryana. The Opposition has already begun a campaign aimed at convincing voters that President's rule in Punjab is a gimmick aimed at getting their votes. If the Congress loses Haryana, Rajiv Gandhi will be left with a bankrupt policy and no reserves to draw upon.

There could be temporary peace in Punjab as terrorists bide their time. But President's rule has failed to deliver long-term results in the past, both in Punjab as well as in troubled states of the North-east. Indeed, Operation Bluestar took place after a prolonged period of Central rule. Rajiv Gandhi will do well to remember that terrorist killings in Punjab reached their lowest point in recent history immediately after the Longowal accord and the September elections that brought Barnala into office. Any gameplan without the objective of a similar political settlement can only meet with failure.

—INDERJIT BADHWAR with PRABHU CHAWLA, RAMINDAR SINGH and bureau reports

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CONGRESS(I)

Mood of Uncertainty

THE ornate Central Hall of Parliament is a fairly good barometer of the mood of the ruling party. Last fortnight, as the four-month-long session came to an end, the mood communicated by the flurry of activity in the treasury benches was one of nervousness. The portly Rajya Sabha MP, Kalpanath Rai, was seen hurrying between the rows of seats, waving a newspaper and telling his party MPs: "Vishwanath Pratap Singh has spoiled the image of my party and my leader Rajiv Gandhi." In another corner, AICC(I) General Secretary Bhagwat Jha Azad was discussing party strategy with three other MPs. And in mid-Hall, Union Parliamentary Affairs Minister H.K.L. Bhagat was talking over with colleagues the mechanics of the proposed Congress(I) rally in Delhi on May 16.

In his Parliament office, the object of all this frenetic activity was quietly at work. Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi has not only been meeting senior cabinet colleagues almost every day but has also been calling party MPs individually and collectively for suggestions, these parleys often continuing late into the night. But the desire to outdo the other in displaying loyalty to the leader has only accentuated intra-party rivalry. The consequence has been confusing and contradictory advice to Rajiv.

One of the major questions facing the leadership is V.P. Singh. In the absence of any unanimity on strategy, those looking forward to rehabilitation within the party have launched a tirade against the former defence minister. Some like Azad, former Youth Congress(I) president Tariq Anwar and the discredited Rai have come close to calling Singh a CIA agent. While Rajiv's silence on the issue has been read as his approval, senior Congressmen have nevertheless refrained from attacking Singh.

Even in the meeting of the Congress(I) Parliamentary Party's (CPP-I) executive committee, the majority felt that Singh should not be subjected to any personal humiliation. The executive had to take up the Singh issue because a daily had carried Fairfax Chairman Michael Hershman's extraordinary interview that morning. Singh himself came out against Hershman's statements: "He has no right to interfere with our country's internal affairs." Rai and Azad's idea of expelling Singh from the party, though, did not find favour with Rajiv. Feels a senior Congress(I) MP: "By making charges against our partymen in public, like the Janata Party, we will ruin ourselves."

The personal attacks on the former defence minister by a section of the party—which has also questioned his integrity—appear to be a reaction to Singh's rising popularity. Rajiv has also used every platform available to drive home the point that the engagement of Hershman was part of a grand conspiracy to create instability—a charge denied by the former defence minister. Singh and his men feel that the prime minister is being misled by his close advisors who want to divert his attention from the corruption charges against big business houses.

But Singh has made it evident that he will hit back if pushed beyond a point. Says he: "I can surrender anything, my office, my politics, my social life, but I cannot surrender my right to live as a human being. I have not violated party discipline. I only implemented the party's programme of eliminating corruption. I have no regrets." In fact, over a dozen MPs have cautioned Rajiv in writing not to push Singh against the wall.

The reception Singh received in Lucknow and Allahabad, his home town, has also made party bosses uneasy. In the state capital, several MLAs and ministers met Singh although they knew he had fallen from favour. And, at a well-attended public meeting in Allahabad, half a dozen MLAs from the district, in addition to district office-bearers and former ministers, were present. Former Union minister Arun Nehru, though expected, failed to turn up.

Singh's and Rajiv's contradictory

Rajiv at YC(I) convention: no respite

The Congress(I) is at war with itself. The party's failure to finalise a clear course of action and the politics of one upmanship have sharpened intra-party rivalry.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

statements on the Fairfax matter have also heightened confusion. As the Thakkar-Natrajan Commission began its in-camera probe into the affair, Singh demanded the cancellation of the contract with the American agency if it was related as anti-national. The prime minister in turn said that there was nothing in the files to indicate the nature of the Fairfax agreement. This was out of tune with the Government stand—both inside and outside the House—that there was "a sort of arrangement with Fairfax".

What all this revealed was a party at war with itself. And, in the absence of any clear party directive on crucial issues, the Congress(I) hand wore an increasingly divided look. Party leaders have therefore been forced to fall back on cliches to defend their beleaguered leader.

But having ardently embraced the destabilisation theory, party members are surprisingly divided on its form and content. Says Arif Mohammed Khan: "In the absence of a firm and credible government, the forces of destabilisation are bound to have an upper hand. The threat is actually from communal forces which have unfortunately been encouraged during the last few months. We are diverting attention from the basic issues." Asserts Bhanu Pratap Singh, former minister and MP from Madhya Pradesh: "It is the duty of foreign agencies to cause destabilisation. But why isn't the public being taken into confidence? What has the Government done all these years except mislead the public by raising the bogey of the foreign hand? To term genuine political dissent as an act of destabilisation is blasphemy. The real danger is from sycophants within the party." Says Satya Pal Mallik, a Rajya Sabha MP from Uttar Pradesh: "The bacteria of destabilisation affects only weak people. If we have been affected, it is a reflection on our own government."

Many in the party feel Rajiv was wrongly advised to raise the foreign hand bogey which has found little public credence. But there appears to be some method in the madness since some powerful people within the Congress(I), who want to push Rajiv towards the left, believe they can achieve this by weakening the party and creating insecurity.

Indeed, the prime minister called communist leaders to discuss the new "threat perspective" and the Soviets have also been requested to pressure Indian communists to fall in line. But luring the reds into the Congress(I) bed will not be easy. Says CPI(M) MP Amal Datta: "We are aware of the threat from imperialistic forces. But the threat has arisen due to the ruling party's wrong policies."

The new insecurity is also reflected in other ways: leaders who had fallen from grace were summoned and asked to organise public meetings explaining the party viewpoint. Among them were former Maharashtra minister Ramrao Adik, former Kerala minister Vyalar Ravi, former Karnataka Congress chief K.H. Patil, former Bihar chief minister Jagannath Mishra and a whole string of MPs from Uttar Pradesh. All six AICC(I) general secretaries were also despatched to the states to ensure that resolutions expressing faith in Rajiv were speedily adopted by party units there, a task accomplished within a week.

Frontal organisations have also been mobilised. The Youth Congress(I) leadership summoned its coordinators from across the country for an extensive briefing on national issues and Rajiv found time to address them. Some enthusiastic MPs from Uttar Pradesh even decided to launch a signature campaign backing the prime minister but hurriedly called off the exercise when someone pointed out that it would imply that Rajiv had doubts about his own support.

The paranoia in the Congress(I) over the President's likely actions has forced the Government to adjourn both Houses of Parliament instead of proroguing them. According to the Constitution, though the presiding officers of the two Houses are empowered to summon a Parliament which has been adjourned, if it is prorogued, only the President can call the next session.

To round off its rally-round-the-leader campaign, a massive Congress(I) rally in Delhi—to be attended, hopefully, by five lakh people—has been planned. Uttar Pradesh Chief Minister Bir Bahadur Singh and Union Ministers Bhagat and Jagdish Tytler have been put in charge. Bir Bahadur Singh summoned MLAs and

V.P. Singh in Allahabad: strong support

The warm reception that V.P. Singh has received in Lucknow and Allahabad, his home town, has made the Congress(I) high command uneasy.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Why have Usha Water Coolers remained the undisputed market leaders over the years?

The reasons are obvious...

Usha Water Coolers have always been best-sellers.

For years now, Usha has been quenching more thirsty lips than any other water coolers.

A fact that itself speaks volumes for Usha quality and reliability. Backed by exclusives which make Usha your obvious choice.

Usha Water Coolers come to you from Shriram Refrigeration Industries Ltd. A company that has long established its credentials in the refrigeration business with products that are recognised as synonymous with quality.

Also consider the Usha range. From mini desk type models that give you 50 glasses of cold water per hour to heavy duty models which give you upto 1200 glasses per hour. Usha has it all. So whatever your specific requirement, you're sure to find it with Usha.

Efficient and prompt service is a top priority with Usha. Whenever you need it. Wherever you need it. Over 270 Service Outlets all over the country make sure there are no service delays. Ever.

Now when you feel the big summer thirst, you know which name to turn to.

A name that always offers you the best value for money. USHA.

Widest range available on DGS & D Rate Contract

USHA
WATER COOLERS.

everest/d87/SRI/71

You can't be No. 1 without good reason.

A high quality product from Shriram Refrigeration Industries Ltd.

Marketing Division : 19, Kasturba Gandhi Marg, New Delhi-110 001.Tel : 3319010/11/12/13, Telex : 031-65335 SRI IN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MPs of the state's western part to discuss the question about mobilisation of people, whose ferrying has been made the responsibility of the state's Transport Minister Sanjay Singh.

The party views this period as crucial because of the heart-stopping dive Rajiv's popularity has taken. Moreover, in a government where little has got done over the last few months because of the preoccupation with clearing controversies, three ministers have resigned during the session—an unheard-of situation. The number of vacancies in the Cabinet has now risen to five—and though there are over 550 MPs in both Houses, it is doubtful if Rajiv can identify even a dozen dependable Congressmen who can fit into his style of working.

But Rajiv's immediate concern seems to be the Haryana Assembly elections which he must win to re-establish his reputation as a vote catcher. Only this, in the short-term, can still the hostile political winds blowing across the country.

—PRABHU CHAWLA with bureau reports

MICHAEL HERSHMAN

"Indians should know the truth"

MICHAEL HERSHMAN is back in the headlines with his threat to expose the "real truth" if the Indian Government's judicial probe comes up with any 'misleading information'. The 42-year-old president of the Fairfax group, which he calls a management consultancy, has suddenly taken on a very defiant form. In an interview to Special Correspondent SHEKHAR GUPTA, he asserts that he has adopted this new threatening posture consciously. Excerpts:

Q. What are you trying to convey by suddenly taking up this threatening posture against the Government of India now?

A. What I am trying to convey I have already conveyed. I am simply stating what I see and what I believe I have a right to say.

Q. But isn't it unusual in your profession, where anonymity is such a valued commodity, to become part of the controversy by joining the issue like this?

A. Yes it is unusual. But it is an unusual situation. It is different because for some reason our investigation has been questioned. So I think I have a responsibility to make known the circumstances surrounding this entire issue.

Q. Is it because you feel slighted on being referred to as a courier company or as informers?

A. I don't see myself disgruntled on anything. As to our being called a courier company, I have answered that earlier. What we are is obvious from our terms of reference. We have been formally hired by the Government of India for specific investigations. But now that new doubts are being raised I have to take action. The Government of India has said a lot of things wrong in this respect.

Q. What exactly do you threaten to reveal?

A. Well, all I am saying is that if there is any misleading information released (by the Thakkar Commission) we would correct that, and we would correct that even if it means releasing information from our files.

Illustration by PRABAL MANDAL

Hershman: threatening posture

Q. But you have always maintained that in your profession such information is never disclosed.

A. Because this is an unusual situation, the circumstances make this necessary. People of India should know the truth.

Q. Why such concern for the people of India?

A. Because I have worked with Indians for many years. I have a great deal of respect for them.

Q. At the same time don't many people in India believe that you are part of a foreign conspiracy?

A. Well, just look at the history of the Indian political system. Every time the Government finds itself in problems it finds some foreign factors to blame. This is nothing new.

Q. Do you deny the charge that you are a CIA front and that you could be sharing information with the CIA which could be used to blackmail Indian leaders?

A. This has been said before. It is the same old situation. Trying to divert attention.

Q. Do you have a good understanding of the Indian political system?

A. Yes, I know a fair bit. I do not pretend to know a great deal though.

Q. By promising to assist the inquiry if it is conducted under V.P. Singh, have you embarrassed him?

A. Yes. It may embarrass him in the short run from a political standpoint. But we believe that the Indian people know what he is like. His honesty and integrity is well known and we believe that in the long run, the people of India will understand that he is clean and fair. He is very well respected by the Indian people.

Q. Who are you working for?

A. We have been formally retained by the Government of India to conduct investigations on various different things. That arrangement still continues and as far as we are concerned we are still working on that. We are not working for anyone else.

Q. Have you had any contact with the Government of India since this controversy surfaced?

A. Yes, there have been contacts. And some very recent ones. The Indian Government has been in touch.

Q. Have you protested against Brahm Dutt's statements calling yours a courier company?

A. I am not prepared to disclose what I have said in my communications.

Q. And have you as yet been paid anything for the work?

A. I am afraid I am not prepared to say anything about that. It is not just something about this case. In every case we keep such terms confidential.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE PRESIDENT

Deepening Crisis

It was literally a case of exchanging sweet nothings. When Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi greeted President Zail Singh on his 71st birthday last fortnight, there was much friendly banter as the two offered each other sweets. But the bitterness between them and their sharp differences over the powers of the President has now escalated to a crucial stage with the prime minister making it clear that he was not prepared to budge an inch further on the presidential issue. Having showed signs of reconciliation earlier, Rajiv seems to have now decided to assert his right to determine the nature and extent of information to be given to the President.

The Government's hardening attitude towards the President was reflected clearly in Rajiv's three-page letter to Zail Singh. The communication—which was a reproduction of the cabinet resolution—unequivocally stated that the Government had given sufficient information to the President and that it could not accede to his requests for more information.

Rajiv's strong stand was in response to a letter written a week earlier by the President in which he had sought information about the Bofors deal. Among the facts he had asked for were the preliminary test reports of the gun, comparative offers of other companies and details about the time-frame of the transfer of technology and supply of ammunition from other countries.

The prime minister sent Home Minister Buta Singh and Defence Minister K.C. Pant to brief the President on the deal. Rajiv also met Singh and discussed with him the background in which the deal was signed. The President, however, made it clear that he would like to have more information in writing rather than being told about it in generalities.

Meanwhile, as he was about to formalise his request in the letter to the prime minister, the controversy over his alleged plans to dismiss the prime minister on the grounds of corruption, exploded into the open. The bizarre proposition, which emanated from an official in Rashtrapati Bhawan, finally boomeranged on the President and cost him considerable public sympathy. Even the opposition parties roundly condemned such a move and the President found himself being accused of participating in a design to destabilise the country. Rajiv himself criticised the President indirectly when he declared that no individual, however big, would be allowed to subvert the Constitution.

Realising that the public mood had changed, Rajiv quickly got together with his new coterie of advisors to formulate his reply to the President. The Political Affairs Committee of the Cabinet met thrice within 48 hours to discuss the draft reply prepared by officials in the Cabinet and Prime Minister's Secretariat. For the first time, the prime minister took the entire cabinet into confidence before finalising his reply. Commerce Minister P. Shiv Shankar, Home Minister Buta Singh and Parliamentary Affairs Minister H.K.L. Bhagat suggested taking a strong line so that the controversy over the powers of the President to seek information under Article 78 was permanently set at rest. They argued that the reply should reassert that it was for the Cabinet to decide the nature and extent of information to be made available to the President.

The Government's stand was a deliberate departure from its earlier position on the issue. Inside and outside Parliament, the Government had taken the stand that it would always keep the President posted with details on every major issue. In fact, an hour before the President wrote his letter on the Bofors deal he had received a communication from the prime minister requesting him to send his views on Article 78. The President had to redraft his letter to incorporate the request.

K.K. CHAWLA/Hindustan Times

Rajiv greeting Zail Singh on his birthday

But Rajiv's decision to keep information away from the President on an issue like the Bofors deal, in which serious corruption charges have been made, has also boomeranged on the ruling party. Already, it has rallied the Opposition and sections of the media behind Singh. Said Andhra Pradesh Chief Minister N.T. Rama Rao: "Denying information to the President is an insult to the country." Added Lok Dal chief H. N. Bahuguna: "If the President of the country is not trusted by the Government then who else would be? It is a wrong precedent."

The President himself seems determined to assert his right and finally settle the issue. Significantly, as commander-in-chief of the armed forces, he can direct the service chiefs to report to him on all defence matters. Said a presidential supporter: "The President is bound to protect the Constitution. If he surrenders his right to be a constructive check on the Government, then democracy will not survive in this country."

Among the options being considered by the President is to issue a directive to the Government to furnish information on all the defence deals, details of Foreign Exchange Regulations Act violations by big business houses and action taken against them, foreign accounts held by Indians abroad, and corruption charges received against some of the ministers. Singh himself has received independent information on all these issues and is likely to confront the Government with it. In addition, he is likely to make the entire correspondence between him and the Government public.

But the crucial question is what shape events will take if the Government refuses to oblige the President. In the absence of any precedent, the only certainty was that the country was headed for the biggest constitutional crisis since Independence.

—PRABHU CHAWLA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The more important the meeting, the more important the airline.

Flying on Lufthansa means reaching your business appointment on time.

Lufthansa

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

What makes a Hero Cycle a Hero?

Or No. 1 in sales in the free world?

The little things in this ad.

Or, perfect parts.

The next few words will give you a fair idea of what happens to these parts before they combine in a Hero Cycle.

The main frame, made of the finest steel to precise specifications, is subjected to the Load Test.

120 kg on the back!

Then, it is put through abnormal vibrations.

Or simulated road conditions, to condition it to take on every kind of terrain.

PERFECT PIECES. OF A MASTERPIECE.

Hero Cycles Private Limited, Ludhiana

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Bicycle chains are put through the rigorous Tensile Breaking Test. Where resistance of the metal to the force acting upon it is checked.

All friction parts are manufactured by Hero's special 'cold forging' process. Which goes a longer way in durability.

And all paints used are put through a 'gloss' test to provide a superfine finish.

Then absolutely the latest glydo-electroplating and electrostatic painting processes ensure scratch-resistance and gleaming good looks.

Yes, at Hero the going gets really tough for bicycle parts.

Because only the tough get going to become part of the No. 1 bicycle.

Or, a masterpiece.

Ride a Hero. Feel No. 1

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Graviera has it made for you.
For your shirts.
For your trousers.
For your safaris.
For her.

The newest weaves.
The latest textures.
The last word in design and style.

Graviera.
Great value for money.
Always.

You've got it made with Graviera.

GRAVIERA

FASHION FABRICS ®

BHIWANI TEXTILE MILLS, Bhiwani, Haryana.
(A unit of Grasim Industries Ltd.)

Karishma/BTM/2/0720

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BIHAR

Divided Rule

BIHAR'S former chief minister Jagannath Mishra, who has become his successor Bindeshwari Dubey's biggest bogeyman, has delivered yet another telling punch. He has now broken up the state unit of the Youth Congress(I) and formed a parallel organisation called the Bihar State Youth Congress(I) Campaign Committee. The objective of the new organisation: to assist 'dedicated' and 'loyal' workers in carrying out a mass contact programme and defeat opposition designs.

The split was announced at a well-attended meeting of youth workers in Patna last fortnight: among others, 18 ruling party legislators were present. Claiming that the majority of the Youth Congress(I) workers and leaders, leaving aside the office-bearers, was with him, Mishra said that "the state party and the Government, dominated by power-seekers, contractors and vested interests" were dead. He was therefore launching a parallel organisation to

K.M. KISHAN

Mishra at the parallel state YC(I) meet: telling punch

PANIDARI

Water War

THE 300-km stretch of the Ganga between Patna and Kursaila in Bihar's Katihar district—normally a placid waterway—has suddenly attracted attention because of the spotlight on a unique and controversial feudal system, 'panidari'. Under it, waterlords or panidars tax anyone who uses their waters. Last fortnight, Chhatra Yuva Sangharsh Vahini (CYSV) volunteers, local fishermen and boatmen, made a symbolic two-week trip down the Ganga, announcing their intention to "liberate the river".

The cruise was aimed at pressuring the state Government which has failed to do anything to end the system. Neither has it introduced any law to end panidari nor has it transferred the 60,000 tanks and ponds—the scene of regular bloody battles for fishing rights—to the Animal Husbandry and Fisheries Department to lease out to cooperative societies, as is normally done elsewhere.

P.N. Bhagwati, the former Supreme Court chief justice, had opined last year that panidari could be abolished if the state Government introduced a legislation on the pattern of the act that abolished zamindari. In fact, when Chief Minister Bindeshwari Dubey met the CYSV delegation, he assured them that since legislation would take time, he would pass an ordinance. Home Department officials, however, now deny that any such promise was made. Nobody in the Government is willing to explain why it refuses to act on the issue.

The panidari system is unique to this area of Bihar. An 80-km stretch of the river from Pirpainti to Sultanpur, for instance, is controlled by two waterlords who claim that they had inherited the rights—together with the right to tax the users—for navigation and fishing from the East India Company. There are others who claim that their rights are even older. One panidar has even transferred his rights in the names of gods and goddesses to sanctify his ownership.

Taxes ranging from Rs 300 to Rs 1,000 annually, depending on the size of their nets, are collected from fishermen. Interestingly, the panidars have even appropriated the right to flood waters. "Every year flood waters submerge over 80,000 acres of land. Even here the cultivators cannot fish for fear of inviting the wrath of waterlords and their musclemen," says a CYSV volunteer. Judging from the Government's attitude, much more pressure will have to be applied before it picks up the courage to dislodge the powerful feudal interests.

—FARZAND AHMED

K.M. KISHAN

Crusade against panidari: tax trouble

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"reinforce people's faith in the Congress(I)" and strengthen Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi's hands. Vijay Kumar Choudhary, a legislator, was named president of the new organisation.

Quite understandably, Mishra's claims of strengthening the party did not impress state party leaders who were the object of his attack. Calling it an "act of gross indiscipline", a harassed Dumar Lal Baitha, president of the Bihar Pradesh Congress(I) Committee (BPCC-I), asked: "Is this the way of strengthening the organisation? If Mishra had any grievance, he should have aired it from a party platform instead of publicly denouncing the party." And a visibly annoyed President of the Bihar Youth Congress(I), Shyam Sunder Singh Dhiraj, lashed out angrily: "Mishra is in league with the Opposition and is trying to destroy the party."

Mishra's action was largely seen as a move to gain control of yet another Congress(I) frontal organisation. Last year, he had split the state's unit of the Indian National Trade Union Congress (INTUC), headed by Dubey. He had also broken up labour organisations affiliated to INTUC—like the Rashtriya Colliery Mazdoor Sangh in Dhanbad and the Bokaro Steel Workers Union—to strengthen his grassroots support. He has already secured much political mileage out of his Jana Jagaran Abhiyan, which was launched two years ago with the sole objective of denigrating the Dubey Government and building himself up as the most popular Congress(I) leader in Bihar.

Says Upendra Vidyarthi, a senior Youth Congress(I) leader and social worker who backs the former chief minister: "Mishra has no alternative but to isolate the spineless people who control such organisations." However, seasoned politician that he is, Mishra has been careful to guard against any action by the party high command. He makes it a point to swear loyalty to Rajiv consistently—"I am not ready to accept anyone as my leader except Rajiv Gandhi," he says.

Mishra is now expected to try and break up the BPCC(I). Dubey puts up a brave front and says: "People like Mishra are obviously living in a fool's paradise. His objective of breaking up the BPCC(I) will never be achieved." But there is little doubt that Mishra has made major strides on his way to gradually gaining control over Bihar's ruling party apparatus.

—FARZAND AHMED

LAST WORD/ANDER PURI

Licensed to Pry

007 suddenly knew that he was tired. He also knew that he had no business to be tired. Every tingling nerve in his body told him that violence was about to erupt. Just then, a dark shadow hurtled around the corner of the deserted street. 007 lunged forward to leap on the three-wheeler scooter and delivered a hard karate chop at the base of the driver's neck. It was a single smooth action. The driver gurgled with pain and the rickshaw lurched to a halt. 007 ordered the driver to proceed to the five-star hotel, and settled back on the seat. This was the only way to stop a rickshaw in Delhi, he thought....

As he entered the hotel, 007 swept the lobby with a quick look till his eyes settled on the crowd of Swedes chatting with the Indians. From the corner of his eye, he noticed reporters earnestly talking with a pretty Swedish woman reporter. A fat Swede looked at him. 007 extended his hand. The name is Bondopadhya, Jamshed Bondopadhya. I am the correspondent of the Cycle and Auto Parts Gazette...."

Later that evening, as he sat across the large mahogany desk in M's room in the RAW building, he reflected on the day's happenings. The pace had been hectic.

"Well, 007," M said dryly. "I've just gone through your report. You haven't got much, have you? The entire cabinet is breathing down my neck. They want some positive proof on the defence deals."

"About the corruption, sir?"

"About the attempt to destabilise the country, 007," M snapped. "Where was your mind wandering when I was briefing you?"

"I meant the corruption by the press, sir," Bondopadhya said gently.

M leaned forward. "Have you got anything on Goenka?"

"I believe I have, sir," 007 said and lit a cigarette. "Remember all the noise the press made just because the Government bought three subs for the price of four?"

"Yes, yes, go on!"

007 exhaled smoke. "Well, I have irrefutable evidence that Goenka obtains four subs for the price of three!"

M looked puzzled. "Why does Goenka need submarines?"

"Submarines, sub-editors, what is the difference? It's the principle of the thing that matters, doesn't it sir?"

"I suppose you're right," M said.

"And there are kickbacks in the press too, " 007 said.

"Tell me," M said sharply.

"Remember the stories we tried to plant against V.P. Singh? Apart from the nationalised editors, the rest kicked back like infuriated mules!"

"But is that corruption?"

"What about intellectual corruption, sir," 007 reminded him. "The press is always full of how weapons are being manufactured and sold."

"What about it?"

"Why don't we talk of how stories are manufactured and sold, sir?"

"Good idea, 007," M said. Find out how they obtain the RAW material for manufacturing their stories."

"One last question, sir," 007 said. "Why don't we investigate Bofors instead of the Indian press?"

M shot him a piercing look. "You should know. You are one of the half-dozen men with the double-0 prefix. Don't you know what that means?"

"Yes sir, it means I have the licence to kill...."

"Kill what?" M snapped.

"Kill time, sir!"

"Exactly," M said, with a dismissive nod. "Carry on, 007...."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

4,99,010 times round the world in just three years.

Elgitread gives a new lease of life to 5,00,000 tyres.

Between 1983 — when it pioneered the world-renowned precured (cold) process of retreading in India — and now, Elgitread has added 2000,00,00,000 kilometres to the lives of 5,00,000 worn out tyres. And in the process has grown to five times its corporate size with an exhaustive franchisee network all over India.

Elgitread's unique process of tyre retreading spells more mileage, savings, safety and reliability. Any wonder then, that more and more road transport corporations, truck owners and bus owners are opting for the retreading method that the world swears by.

ELGI TYRE & TREAD LTD
COIMBATORE- INDIA

ELGI TREAD
Saves miles of money

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Executive Mental Space and the Time, it has now been generally accepted, is not the principal enemy of the senior executive. When he complains about the shortage of time he is in fact admitting to a shortage of space – mental space. (This is perhaps one instance where the space-time continuum becomes apparent.)

It is not time, or the shortage of it which prevents him from arriving at solutions; it is the intrusion of irritants into the sacred precincts of his mind where problems are in the process of being sorted out; irritants which are an inevitable part of the corporate and quotidian environment in which he lives. Take these away and he has more mental space.

The reality, however, is that this is more easily said than done.

Happily (and this has been reported by a number of executives) there are legitimate corporate occasions – such as the quick business dash to another city – which almost unconsciously help create these mental spaces. Physically distanced from routine irritants, the mind seems to make room for ideas.

Here then was an exciting concept which caught the imagination of Welcomgroup; the possibility of consciously creating for the business traveller an environment in which those mental spaces could be encouraged. Suddenly they were looking at a totally new genre of hotel services – one which went beyond the mere plushness and luxury of the five star deluxe experience; beyond the obvious provision of executive facilities such as secretarial services and access to equipment. It meant shaping new concepts of property design and services;

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

the Effects of Environment.

it involved programmes of executive life-style study and intensive training for a new breed of hotel managers and personnel.

Thus was born the idea of the Maurya Sheraton Towers.

A photographer's delight, the Maurya Towers tempts you to display the glossy photographs of impressive property. But we in the agency resisted that temptation, realising that these were not sufficient to convey the real discriminator between this breakthrough concept and other five star deluxe hotels.

The exclusivity of each floor, the elegant design of the rooms; the Business Centre and conference rooms; the intellectual stimulation of the Tower Club with its library and bar, the dining room and the health club; the exquisite taste with which every corner is designed... all these were incomparable, but in a way not the real discriminators.

What makes the Maurya Towers another genre in the art of executive hospitality is the intangibles which the sensitive and mature intellect will perceive – in the finesse, the unobtrusiveness of the service, the incredible efficiency, the charm and the flair with which the personnel allow you that 'mental space' which in fact is possible during your stay.

The next time you are in Delhi on business it may be a good idea to try this fertile environment to create those wide open mental chambers of creativity.

The Maurya Sheraton Towers, at Welcomgroup Maurya Sheraton, Diplomatic Enclave, New Delhi 110 021

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

HTA-ITC-8327

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Introducing India's first NO-PAD Stamp.

New PERMA-STAMP
Upto 50,000 impressions minus your old ink-pad.

It's here!
New pre-inked Perma Stamp.
For the first time in India.

The ink is self-contained. Good for over 50,000 impressions – apart from of course looking smart and snappy.

And it never smears or smudges!

New Perma Hand Stamps . Extremely portable. Giving you sharp, crystal clear quality impressions — even photographs. Time after time. In a range of five colours and multi colours in a single stamp.

Additionally the Perma Stamp is compact and easy to carry. So designed that your executives can now have ready to use stamps in sleek pocket cases as thin as your lighter.

BORN TO WIN

The new Perma Stamp. You're looking at a Winner.
Throw away your old ink-pad.

PERMA® STAMP

Shyam Printing & Marking Devices

For further details contact our Head Office at 11 Chamiers Road, Madras 600 035
Tel: 454270 or any of our branches:
Bangalore: 569594, Bhubaneshwar: 56798 (PP).
Cochin: 354469, New Delhi: 5719480.
Hyderabad: 67913, Jaipur: 72177,
Kanpur: 68754 (PP).
Distributors: Industrial and Office Automation Corpn. Ahmedabad: 462281.
Bombay: 5513726. Pune: 63351 (PP).

THE INK-PAD IS DEAD

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ANDHRA PRADESH

Hydel Havoc

THE saffron-robed Andhra Pradesh Chief Minister N.T. Rama Rao is busy praying to the rain gods this summer. The monsoons are his only hope for overcoming an unprecedented water and power shortage, a lethal combination that has seen blood pressures in the state rising even as the water levels in the state's reservoirs have continued to fall.

Already, water is being supplied to Hyderabad only on alternate days, and could be reduced to every third day. And the sudden 60 per cent power cut imposed on high-tension consumers has forced 300 industrial units to down shutters and lay off over 70,000 workers.

There had been advance warning of the problems in store. The Andhra Pradesh State Electricity Board (APSEB) had informed the Government in February of an imminent power crisis and suggested power cuts. But NTR, keen on getting votes in the March parishad elections, deferred doing so. The power cut, when it finally came on April 14, hit without warning all the power intensive industries and the railways. The worst-hit was the cement industry: 20 per cent of the country's 33-million tonne output comes from Andhra Pradesh. The result: thousands of people have been rendered jobless as contractors have stopped work on irrigation projects (like lining canals) as cement prices have sky-rocketed.

Work at the Vishakhapatnam steel plant and the Hindustan Shipyard, beset by time and cost overruns, was also badly affected. T.V.S. Sastry, managing director of the state-owned Bharat Heavy Plates and Vessels Ltd (which supplies equipment to large projects), predicted that, in the long run, the power crisis would delay expansion of the Rourkela steel plant in Orissa.

At first, NTR was cool to the flood of criticism, and APSEB Chairman Narla Tata Rao passed the buck on to the Singareni collieries and the generators supplied by Bharat Heavy Electricals. But on May 8, NTR assured industrialists that a way would be found to stagger the available supply. Said Chairman of the state committee of the Confederation of Engineering Industry E. Ananda Rao: "The impact may not have been severe if the Government had imposed a uniform 15 per cent cut on all sectors, instead of picking on us. The situation got worse with the sudden rise in sales tax on diesel from 11 per cent to 16 per cent, making it more expensive to run generators."

With two-thirds of the state's total installed capacity of 3,595 MW drawn from hydel power stations, Andhra Pradesh depends largely on heavy rains to produce electricity. But with poor flows into the Nagarjunasagar and Srisailam reservoirs in the last two years, power cuts had become necessary. The Central Electricity Authority's annual power survey had also forecast a shortfall of 23.13 per cent even with normal rains.

Power planning went even more awry as NTR cut the allocations on power to a mere Rs 169 crore and Rs 180 crore in the last two years, instead of the anticipated Rs 300 crore each year. APSEB officials now argue that if more money had been spent on power projects, mainly the Vijayawada super thermal station, the consumption cut might have been only 10 per cent—a normal rate in summer in most states.

If there is little electricity, there is even less water. As a fire-fighting measure, the state Government has allocated Rs 3.5 crore for digging 22,500 bore wells and another Rs 6.5 crore to meet the drinking water needs in villages and towns. Hyderabad water officials dug bore wells in the drying Himayatsagar and Osmansagar lakes, and 500 wells all over Hyderabad and Secunderabad to maintain the daily flow at 33 million gallons to half the city. Most (nearly 27 million gallons) is drawn from the Majira river, and the supply may have increased if the storage capacity of the reservoir and another one at Singur, had been built as scheduled.

Not having reacted in time to warnings, Rama Rao is now taking his cue from the other actor-turned-chief minister, M.G. Ramachandran, to bring water to the people. Nearly 700,000 gallons of water are being pumped from the Krishna at Vijayawada into two 50-tanker trains. He also plans to try cloud seeding for artificial rain, and has asked MGR to loan Tamil Nadu's specially-equipped aircraft for the purpose. Said a sardonic K. Rosaiah, state Congress(I) leader: "NTR should get a couple of water diviners and a violinist to play in the Osmansagar lake bed to repeat MGR's Madras water supply show." Such antics might at least provide entertainment, if not power and water.

—AMARNATH K. MENON

Snaps India

BABJI/Janta Studios

Bore well; and (right) queuing for water

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

And to think you can fly there on Alitalia...6 times a week.

All roads still lead to Rome, but after we fly you there, we can fly you to Nice, Lyon, Marseille or Paris almost immediately.

Six times a week, every week, a sleek Alitalia 747 leaves Delhi and Bombay for Italy. With our convenient worldwide network, we can connect you to key cities in Italy, Europe, as well as North America.

Take an Italian airline? Certamente if you want convenience. The ultimate, if you want to be pampered in the luxury of our Top Class or Prima Business Class. Call Alitalia, or see your travel agent and book your flight today. Six flights a week ... 312 flights a year, make it so easy.

Alitalia
The airline of Italy

daCunha/ALT/3/87

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ANDHRA PRADESH

Reddy Cash

ENTERPRISING villagers of the ring-shaped Ranga Reddy district skirting Hyderabad have found a truly novel way to pick the state Government's pocket. Over 3,000 farmers, teachers, students, vegetable vendors—and even a village fair price shop dealer—have listed themselves as bonded agricultural labourers to collect cash relief of Rs 500. They can hope to receive another Rs 5,750—in the form of bullocks, poultry or land—for their "rehabilitation".

Ever since 1976, when the law banning the practice was enacted, Andhra Pradesh has set the lead by setting free 25,000 of the roughly 200,000 bonded labourers released throughout India. Now the home district of the Andhra Pradesh Labour Minister, P. Indra Reddy, is in the process of earning the distinction of having the highest number of "bonded labourers" anywhere. The racket is flourishing because the Telugu Desam has an eye on the forthcoming elections to the zilla praja parishad and the mandal praja parishads—both were not held here along with the rest of the state—as also gram panchayat and the village agricultural co-operative credit societies' elections.

INDIA TODAY investigations revealed that in at least seven villages—Lemur, Rachlur, Kandukur, Ameerpet, Timmapur, Jattaram and Dabbedguda—money was distributed to land-owning villagers who paid middlemen up to Rs 100 for the favour. In Lemur, 31 km south of Hyderabad, 73 of the beneficiaries do not figure on the village voter list, ration shop record or even in the memory of village elders. The Ranga Reddy district Telugu Desam President, Mula Bhaskara Reddy, belongs to Lemur and his brother Janardhan and two other close relatives figure as bonded labourers, though they are upper caste, land-owning Reddys. To cover up the fact that they are not, as mentioned, backward castes, the bonded labour list carries altered names. Confessed Venkat Reddy: "My family owns about 25 acres, but who will refuse sarkar money and benefits?" Forty nine land-owning Reddys—mentioned as Harijans or backwards—have similarly been listed in Lemur and its hamlets.

Photographs by K. BAL REDDY

Indra Reddy: embarrassed

"I helped 63 persons. What is wrong in collecting a fee for the service rendered?"

A. SUDHAKAR REDDY
Telugu Desam activist

"For many years only Harijans were bonded labour. Now, every caste is claiming money."

BAINDLA DURGAIAH
bonded labourer

Local Telugu Desam activist, A. Sudhakar Reddy, accused of collecting Rs 100 from each beneficiary, doesn't even deny the charge: "I helped 63 persons. What is wrong in collecting a fee for the service rendered?" But Lemur Sarpanch Satyanarayana Reddy says many on the list have not even received the money.

The attempt at defrauding the state is brazen. In Kandukur, Tankari Narayan Reddy was shown bonded to a cobbler, Ramajah, while S. Darshnajah who was bonded, has at another place been listed as a landlord with five bonded labourers himself. And in Rachlur, while four men were released from the bondage of Vala Erappa, his own son Rajaiah was shown bonded to another villager.

Denying his own involvement, Bhaskara Reddy concedes Telugu Desam workers were responsible for the fraud in Lemur. Says he: "In Dabbeduguda, for instance, 238 persons were released though there are only 252 persons on the voters list." The embarrassed Indra Reddy, now seems keen on busting the racket: "Both Congress and Telugu Desam workers are indulging in this mischief. I will have them booked for cheating after a full inquiry." Says a district official, however: "The landlords and party workers must have joined the racket at least with the knowledge—if not the backing—of the minister."

The immediate gain of votes apart, the long-term strategy seems to be to scuttle the bonded labour rehabilitation scheme, something landowners and officials have done successfully together in the past. Wages in the district have shot up dramatically—from between Rs 60 and Rs 80 per month to between Rs 12 and Rs 15 per day—primarily due to the efforts of the Ibrahim Patnam Taluka Vyavasaya Coolie Sangham, a voluntary organisation. Sangham activists feel that the fraud was deliberately organised to cast doubts on the genuine bonded labourers of the area. But the saddest comment comes from Baindla Durgaiah, a genuine bonded labourer and a Harijan: "For many years only Harijans were bonded labour. Now, every caste is claiming money." If official and landowners' designs are allowed to succeed, many like Durgaiah may find their door to escape from this exploitative system blocked.

—AMARNATH K. MENON

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

This summer holiday with the Stars

This summer take a break in the quiet charm of princely Mysore and the lush cool hills of Ooty. Your friends at the new, affordably luxurious Southern Star Hotels await you. We'll show you the sights and lavish you with care...

The Southern Stars are ideally located, amongst gardens and hills, near woods and lakes, palaces and monuments. See the majestic Mysore Palace, Tipu's Srirangapatna, the Chamundi temple and the Nandi Bull. Brindavan Gardens and Halebid-Belur, the wildlife of Bandipur and Mudumalai, Dodabetta Peak and Lamb's Rock. Walk through carpeted tea gardens and whistling pine woods. Go picnicking, riding, golfing or boating.

Back home at the Southern Star, play Billiards or work out at the Health Club. And in the evening, enjoy a refreshing cocktail while the Piano soothes your cares away. Dine by candlelight to a band, or be pampered by Room Service. Then, in the cosy comfort of your room, enjoy the latest movies on TV.

Best of all, we believe in value for money. Doesn't this sound like just what you need? Come soon. We'll make your holiday memorable, your honeymoon a dream. And, if it's business, we'll organise for you a conference that's efficient and enchantingly different.

Come, live with the Stars

HOTEL HSS SOUTHERN STAR
MYSORE OOTACAMUND

For information and reservations:
AK DAVE AND ASSOCIATES Delhi: Tel: 675347 Telex: 65230 Bombay: Tel: 222262 Telex: 3061 Bangalore: Tel: 579445 Telex: 8110
HOTEL SOUTHERN STAR Vinobha Road Mysore 570 005 Tel: 27217 Telex: 256
HOTEL SOUTHERN STAR Havelock Road Ootacamund 643 001 Tel: 3601-9 Telex: C/o 204 OR YOUR NEAREST TRAVEL AGENT

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

GHANI KHAN CHOUDHURY

Change of Fortunes

ONE of the finest trains in West Bengal at one time was the Gour Express, the first of many introduced by Abu Barkat Ataul Ghani Khan Choudhury during his tenure as Union railway minister. The Gour Express was a fast, punctual, unusually clean, dream of a train for people travelling between Ghani Khan's home-town, Malda, and the state capital, Calcutta. Today, however, it is invariably late, dirty, tracted most often by ancient steam engines and imbued with an air of almost deliberate neglect. The condition of the train is, if anything, an uncanny reflection of its creator's political fortunes.

Last fortnight, after having perforce relinquished his cabinet sinecure as Union programme implementation minister—a move that many believe, spells the ultimate break in his life line to Central power—Ghani Khan chose an unusual route to return home to Malda. Instead of riding, as he usually does, the Gour Express—often coupled with a special ministerial saloon—Ghani Khan chose the eight-hour road route from the state capital. Leaving Calcutta airport in his Mercedes Benz on his arrival from New Delhi where he had tendered his formal resignation the previous day, it was perhaps best that he did not use his favourite train. For, at around the same time last fortnight, the Gour Express, which at one time went packed with contractors, government officials, Congress(I) bigwigs and party workers, was being used by the state's ruling Marxists to ferry hundreds of CITU (Centre of Indian Trade Unions) workers into the once-impregnable Congress(I) fortress of Malda for the union's annual state conference. The red flags fluttering in Malda station were testimony to the fact that the wheel of political fortune had turned full circle for the former minister.

The final turn was not of Ghani Khan's volition. His associates suspect that detractors within the party, led by the formidable Makhanlal Fotedar, ensured his resignation by orchestrating a press campaign based on reports of a Public Accounts Committee (PAC) questioning his decision as railway minister, to help a private firm cling on to a piece of valuable railway land at Wadi Bunder in Bombay. The PAC report had remarked that Ghani Khan had shown "undue consideration" in allowing the private firm, Kirit Enterprises, to extend its lease over the 9,502-sq m plot by an additional five years even while the central railway authorities had been fighting in court to evict the firm. "The land grab was actively aided and abetted by extreme indulgence shown to this firm," the committee held. It noted that the minister intervened in favour of the firm on more than one occasion, overruling each time the advice of railway officials. He forced the ministry to reach an out-of-court settlement with the firm, against the recommendations of the Railway Board. The favours were reversed only when Bansi Lal took over the portfolio but the firm evaded eviction by presenting in court photocopies of the minister's file notings. Manibhai Doshi, the proprietor and former Rotary Club governor said: "I don't understand how we figure in this controversy. We bought these godowns from the Defence Ministry, and the lease agreement for the land with the railways was made before Choudhury became the railway minister."

PRASHANT PANJIAR

"I did nothing wrong and would do the same if I got another chance."
GHANI KHAN CHOUDHURY

NAMAS BHOJANI

Kirit Enterprises godown: favoured

On his part, Ghani Khan insists that the PAC report is no "slur" and does not suggest corruption on his part. "I could have stayed on in the Cabinet if I had wanted to," he says. "I had explained what the matter really was to the prime minister and besides, no minister in this country has ever resigned over similar remarks made by the PAC." Rajiv Gandhi, according to Ghani Khan, accepted his explanation "most cordially" and had listened to his arguments on how his decision had actually been in the railways' best interests.

Kirit Enterprises had initially secured a three-year lease (1980-82) on the Wadi Bunder property but after the expiry of the lease, the railways had wanted them to quit. "I wanted to help out the firm the moment I learnt that Manibhai Doshi had been a close associate of Netaji Subhash Chandra Bose and had fought in the INA (Indian National Army)," says Ghani Khan. Moreover, by getting an out-of-court settlement, Ghani Khan argues that the railways was saved expensive litigation, secured an assurance that it would get back the land after five years and freed of the

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

WHAT'S SO HOT ABOUT OUR TYRE AND TUBE REPAIR SYSTEM?

FOR ONE THING, IT REQUIRES NO HEAT AT ALL.

Tyre and tube repair until now has seen outdated methods being used. And crude ones. Searing heat was used to seal the hole in the tube. Heat! Which could damage the tube without your even knowing it. And cuts in the tyre meant the use of gaiters that not only made the tyre wobble, but also greatly reduced tyre and tube life.

OMNI precured tyre and tube repair systems now change all that. Omni is a unique concept in tyre and tube repair brought to India in collaboration with Tech Rubber Co. Inc. of the U.S.A., pioneers and leaders in over 60 countries, worldwide.

- OMNI repair patches are precured and chemically vulcanising. Which means no heat is required. Punctures in the tube are sealed perfectly in minutes.
- OMNI tyre-repair units have a unique feather edge, that restores the original contour of the damaged tyre. Therefore, no wobbling. And no pinching of the tube, which the gaiter invariably did.
- OMNI precured repair units are available off-the-shelf, tailor-made for tyre & tube injuries of different sizes and to suit different tyre ply ratings. An ideal complement also for both cold-process and hot-cap retreading.

If you are a fleet-owner, retreader, state transport undertaking or a puncture shop owner, and have not yet used OMNI, it's time you did.

If you are a cyclist, scooterist, motor-cyclist or motorist, make sure you ask for OMNI whenever you have a puncture or a tyre cut. It adds reliability and life to your tyre.

For more details on the hottest tyre-repair system, write to us at

UNIPATCH Rubber Limited

Khemka House, 11, Community Centre, Saket, New Delhi 110017, Ph: 660379, 653173, 655535
Bombay: Ph: 4927666 Calcutta: Ph: 447678-79
Madras: Ph: 476814

maadhyam

OMNI

TYRE & TUBE REPAIR SYSTEM

REPAIRS FASTER. LASTS LONGER.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

bother about encroachers settling on the land. "I did nothing wrong and would do the same if I got another chance," he adds, "but I resigned out of respect to the Parliament and its committees."

State Congress(I) leaders, on the other hand, say that all is not hunky-dory between the prime minister and Ghani Khan. On May 3, when details of the PAC report were published, Fotedar is reported to have called him up, asking him to either resign or issue a convincing rebuttal since the prime minister could not, at this juncture, afford any hint of corruption in his cabinet. Ghani Khan reportedly banged the phone down on Fotedar and made an appointment to see the prime minister the next day. Accordingly, Ghani Khan met Rajiv at 10.30 a.m. on May 4 but could not apparently convince him. Far from being "cordial", the prime minister is said to have been extremely brusque and at one point refused to argue on "semantics" when Ghani Khan tried pointing out the difference between "undue consideration" and "favouritism".

All this is of course dismissed as total fabrication by the former minister. "These reports have done me immense harm and have given the false impression that I was pressured into resigning by the prime minister." At any rate, the morning meeting lasted for just about 20 minutes, and when the two met again in the afternoon, Ghani Khan handed in his resignation letter and returned to his Akbar Road bungalow to prepare for his journey home. This time his stay at home—either in Malda or elsewhere in West Bengal—promises to be much longer than any previous stint during this decade.

Ghani Khan is, however, unlikely to take a holiday from politics. For the moment he does not intend to cause any ripples in national politics. Moreover, unlike former Union law minister Asoke Sen or Union defence minister V.P. Singh, he cannot overplay the self-righteous stance. Also, he is marked as an Arun Nehru man and close to the dissident group within the party. Keen to avoid any more fire from the party high command, he refuses to comment on the "coteries" that have gunned him down. For the moment, his sights are lower: on the leadership of the party's Bengal unit.

Though state party leaders currently refuse to go on record on the Ghani Khan affair or the implication of his exit from national politics, most see in him a force capable of grappling with state party chief Priya Ranjan Das Munshi and his former Congress(S) cohorts. Unlike most other Congressmen in Bengal, Ghani Khan is unequivocal on the subject of Das Munshi. The root of the present malaise with the party's Bengal unit, according to him, was the merger of the Congress(I) and the Congress(S). "Just imagine what will be the repercussions if the CPI and the CPI(M) were to merge today and the general secretary of the CPI took over party leadership from Jyoti Basu. Something like that has happened to us", he says.

"People like Das Munshi just cannot be compared to people like myself," he adds in disgust. "Their thinking is completely alien to me and that is why our ideas on how to revive the party in Bengal will always differ." Ghani Khan first aired his differences when Das Munshi tried to interpret the Congress(I) defeat in Bengal as a victory by pointing out that the party's performance ought to be judged in terms of votes polled (which had increased by almost 6 per cent between the 1982 and 1987 assembly polls) and not by the number of assembly seats won (which had declined from 57 to 40). The minister from Malda had put a spanner in Das Munshi's logic by stating that the 1982 polls had been contested by the Congress(I) and the Congress(S) as two separate parties, and that their collective votes in both polls added to about the same.

NAMAS BHOJANI

Ghani Khan took his attack on Das Munshi one step further last fortnight by telling INDIA TODAY: "We have to face the fact that the people of Bengal are angry at the Congress(I) as the party did not do anything expected of it during the past two years and, in effect, ignored the terrible problems of unemployment, industrial stagnation and Calcutta's transport situation." He regretted that several railway projects promised during his tenure as railway minister were not being implemented. Consequently, the Congress(I)'s promises for development sounded hollow and were dismissed as election stunts. "We should know that a hungry man is an angry man," declares Ghani Khan, "and cannot be fed with ideology or promises."

Apart from stating that this credibility problem could be rectified by the prime minister taking interest in ensuring that promises are translated into reality, the former minister is not willing to say just how he intends to deal with Das Munshi and his followers. For the moment, he appears busy testing his potential support and checking out other disgruntled state Congress(I) leaders, like Sen. Although, Somen Mitra and his state-wide organisation promises to stand by their mentor, Ghani Khan, there is unsurety about whether other smaller factions will rally round as well. As it is in Malda itself, his support has been seriously eroded—the Congress(I)'s tally of seats in this district slumped from six to one—and his recent resignation from the Union Cabinet has not elicited any popular reaction anywhere in the state. Before taking a bash at anybody else, the MP from Malda had better armour his flanks first.

—INDRANIL BANERJIE
with bureau reports

> "We bought these godowns from the Defence Ministry and the land lease was signed before Choudhury became railway minister."
>
> MANIBHAI DOSHI
> proprietor, Kirit Enterprises

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A LIFETIME AFFAIR!

CROSS BALLPENS AND CROSS PRODUCTS Now manufactured in India, by Chandra Industries (Cross Division) Bombay.

Cross Ballpen and Pencil Set now available in Four different models, GREY, CLASSIC BLACK, LUSTROUS CHROME AND G.P. Also available Ladies Ballpen in CLASSIC BLACK AND G.P.

CROSS®

SINCE 1846

LIFETIME MECHANICAL GUARANTEE

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MADHYA PRADESH

Criminals in Congress

THE involvement of criminals in politics has been public knowledge for quite some time. But how completely hooligans have entrenched themselves in the Congress(I) set-up has been sharply etched in the public mind in Madhya Pradesh in recent months by a series of appalling events.

The most recent of these was the pitched battle between two groups of the Madhya Pradesh Youth Congress(I) in front of its Bhopal headquarters last fortnight, in which lathis, crowbars and knives were freely used. The police scattered the violent mob and rescued with difficulty Jagjit Singh Brar, general secretary of the Indian Youth Congress, and Surendra Singh Thakur, Rajya Sabha member and president of the state Youth Congress(I). Ishwar Singh Chowhan, convenor of the organisation's Slum Cell, was beaten unconscious. The fight, ironically, broke out when a group tried to submit a memorandum to Brar against infighting and the criminal background of some office-bearers.

The genesis of last fortnight's incident lay in the ghastly 'Lucky episode', which led to Rajiv Gandhi's intervention and then turmoil in the state Youth Congress(I). Out of about 40 people on the organisation's executive—including office-bearers—21 have since been removed, 14 of them because of their criminal backgrounds.

On August 21 last year, someone threw a tumbler of acid on two-year-old Lucky Sharma, when he was accompanying his doctor-father Kailash Sharma, a Congress(I) activist, in Jabalpur. The acid burnt through Lucky's hair and affected his skull bone, his nose disappeared and an eye was covered by a burnt knot of flesh. His father, for whom the acid was meant, also suffered serious burns and along with his son hovered close to death for several months. Though he survived, in a dying declaration he alleged that the attack was organised by Manohar Chansoria, general secretary of the Jabalpur district Youth Congress(I), "due to political rivalry".

Pramod Sharma, then Jabalpur's superintendent of police, acted quickly. Despite immense political pressure, Chansoria was booked under the National Security Act (NSA). But a few days later, three Congress (I) legislators of the district—Chandra Mohan, Priyaranjan Dharamadhikari and Sunil Mishra—presented to Jabalpur's deputy inspector general of police, a washerman who "owned up" the crime. They not only argued that Chansoria should be released but also threatened to sit on a hunger strike if the SP was not transferred immediately. Although Chansoria was not released—the police refused to believe the story—the SP was transferred a week later, on September 1.

Kailash Sharma (left); and son Lucky

Even before this incident, complaints about the induction of criminal elements in Jabalpur had been sent to the party high command. Jabalpur Youth Congress(I) President Prem Dubey had said in a report to the organisation's President Anand Sharma: "The state organisation has inducted into the party goondas and criminals with more than 40 cases registered against them. Several warrants of arrest have been issued against them. But the police are ineffective because they are Youth Congress leaders. Extortion, gambling and forced eviction are their sources of livelihood."

Photographs by R.C. SAHU

Police trying to control YC workers

When Manohar Chansoria was nominated general secretary in 1985, there were already 14 criminal cases registered against him. His elder brother, Alok Chansoria, nominated general secretary of the state Youth Congress(I) two years ago, has a tally of 26 criminal cases. The cases against the two range from criminal intimidation to causing hurt by a dangerous weapon to causing hurt to deter a public servant from duty. Ramesh Choudhary, joint secretary of the state body, also has a dozen similar cases pending in Jabalpur police stations.

Party action did not materialise until Kailash Sharma took Lucky to the prime minister in March this year. A visibly moved Rajiv directed Anand Sharma to weed out all those with police records. Only then—six months after the crime—was Manohar expelled.

The Chansorias are related to Youth Congress(I) General Secretary Suresh Pachouri, Rajya Sabha member from Madhya Pradesh, and were nominated to organisational posts by Thakur. The two leaders helped the brothers by refusing to act even after Manohar's detention under the NSA. Moreover, no action has been taken against the three MLAs who pleaded Manohar's case.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

In fact, Mishra, one of the MLAs who tried to help, is himself an accused in a similar incident. Dayashanker Vyas, a food inspector at Katni, Mishra's constituency, told Rajiv—he had met him along with Kailash Sharma—that he suspected Mishra's hand in last summer's acid-throwing case in which Vyas had been seriously injured. Vyas said he had earned Mishra's wrath for acting against a trader closely related to the MLA, an accusation Mishra denies.

Ironically, in the 'cleansing operation' that was carried out, among those to go were the youth body's state Vice-President Sarla Mishra and Jabalpur unit's President Dubey, both of whom had accompanied the acid victims to Rajiv to complain about criminalisation. They were, explained Brar, ousted for "indiscipline". On the other hand, a joint secretary involved in a stabbing incident sometime ago was not even touched.

The opportunity presented by Rajiv's directive was apparently used by Pachouri and Thakur to settle personal scores. Along with persons with police records, they also got rid of members opposed to them. Says Brijmohan Shrivastava, one of the ousted executive members: "There is no case against me anywhere. My image is also brighter than many of those still in office."

So murky has the situation turned that the ruling party leadership no longer knows whom it can trust. Earlier this year, Vora asked the police for character verification of party members including district Congress(I) committee and district Youth Congress(I) chiefs before nominating them to the official 20-Point Programme Implementation Committees. Several names suggested by senior party leaders were axed because of what the police had to say.

This precaution was taken with good reason. During the tenure of former chief minister Arjun Singh, many persons with criminal records found place on the implementation committees. When public outrage at their credentials started rising, about 600 members statewide were dropped in 1982. Some were even former convicts.

But if people of this kind found their

BHOPAL

Letter Bomb

ALTHOUGH they write letters regularly to one another, Union Communications Minister Arjun Singh and Madhya Pradesh Chief Minister Motilal Vora have a serious communication problem. The friends-turned-foes have been sending missives to each other regularly (INDIA TODAY, December 15, 1986), leading to the washing of much dirty linen in public.

In the latest episode, Singh sent a two-page letter last fortnight accusing Vora of alienating slum dwellers, resulting in the Congress(I) losing "a solid vote bank in the urban areas of Madhya Pradesh". He claimed that the two lakh shanty dwellers, given ownership rights as a "revolutionary step" three years ago when he was chief minister, were being "harassed and forcibly evicted and no legal or official protection was being given to them".

In political circles, the hard-hitting letter is being seen as an attempt by the blue-blooded Singh to retain his image as a champion of the deprived in the state. Regularising encroachments on government land was one of the major coups Singh had pulled off during his tenure.

But what annoyed the mild-mannered Vora was the fact that photocopies of the letter, dated April 21, were distributed to the press on April 25 while Vora himself received it only on the evening of April 27. Singh's explanation: "I had marked a copy of the letter routinely to the gentleman who complained about the evictions."

But Vora refused to buy the line. Information was collected from across the state over the wireless and an official press note, ridiculing Singh for his "misleading and totally baseless" statement, was issued. The Government stand was that only 115 lease deeds had been cancelled state-wide and even action in these cases was not without reason. It also assured complete protection to slum dwellers. The chief minister has also complained to party bosses in New Delhi about Singh's "meddling".

Arjun Singh's hard-hitting letter to Vora is seen as an attempt to retain his image as the champion of the deprived.

Social workers, however, find Vora's reply far from convincing. Thirty-two deeds have been cancelled in a single Bhopal ward—number 37. The Regional Secretary of the state People's Union for Civil Liberties (PUCL), Rajendra Sail, was also arrested recently when he tried to stop Raipur Municipal Corporation officials from evicting eight hutment dwellers. The PUCL has accused the Government of "ruthlessness" in carrying out evictions. Moreover, shanty dwellers from several towns had protested outside Vora's house recently against harassment and the lack of basic amenities in slums.

That the Vora group had not taken the matter lightly also became clear when the issue figured twice at meetings of the Congress(I) Legislature Party. Pro-Vora MLAs demanded that "those who had tried to create anti-government feelings by raking up the controversy should be expelled from the party." To cap it all, Vora has sent Singh a two-page missive detailing the deterioration in telecommunication services in the state. Going by the record, the next episode in the serial won't be long in coming.

—N.K. SINGH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The real facts behind the "zero-cholesterol" story...

We put SAFFOLA, corn oil and refined groundnut oil into a freezer for 4 hours. And this is what we found:

Corn oil froze.

Groundnut oil froze solid.

But SAFFOLA remained liquid. Even after 24 hours!

Why not try this test yourself?

This clearly proves that of the three cooking mediums, SAFFOLA is highest in polyunsaturated fat – a substance that actually helps to lower cholesterol.

Yes, all vegetable oils are "zero-cholesterol". But only SAFFOLA, with the highest content of polyunsaturated fat actually brings down the cholesterol level in the blood. And that's what really counts!

Major research studies confirm that heart disease is directly linked to the level of cholesterol in the blood. "Lowering cholesterol levels markedly reduces the incidence of fatal heart attacks". So when you cook, fry or bake with SAFFOLA, you're doing what's best for the whole family.

The cholesterol lowering factor (polyunsaturated fat) content in various oils.

Saffola

Good for your heart. Good for your health.

FSA/BOIL/7/86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

This is just a glimpse of Kashmir in summer

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Can you imagine the beauty that begins where the tree line ends

Kashmir is dipped in beauty. The swaying feathery pines, conifers and chinars. The stupendous snow-capped mountains. Lakes flashing silver ripples. Streams singing songs of joy.

The Kashmir experience offers complete freedom of choice.

Just sit back and take in the heavenly sights, lounge in the open air and dream away your hours, or just take long leisurely walks in the deep woods, and feast your eyes on the poetry of nature. Stay in your own quaint houseboat and watch shikaras float by, laden with flowers. Venture out into the bazaars and take back a bit of Paradise.

Kashmir is an ideal holiday destination, eternally beautiful.

J&K TOURISM

For details contact or write to: The Director of Tourism, J&K Government, Srinagar Tel: 72449, 73648, 77224
After office hours: 77303, 77305 Grams: JAKTOURISM
Telex: 375-207 TSM IN or J&K Tourist Offices at:
Ahmedabad Tel: 391043 Bombay Tel: 216249
Calcutta Tel: 225790 Hyderabad Tel: 236686
Jammu Tawi Tel: 48172, 44527 Madras Tel: 562335
New Delhi Tel: 345373, 343400 Extn: 2379

Kashmir
you can't have enough of it!

Akshara/ITDC

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

IN A WORLD OF IMITATIONS, IT TAKES A CONNOISSEUR
TO RECOGNISE AN ORIGINAL

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

DIGJAM

A Product of VXL India Ltd.
WE EXCEL

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

SUMMER SUITINGS FOR THE CONNOISSEUR

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

way into locally respectable positions, it had a lot to do with the signals they received from their party superiors. Shanker Dayal Sharma is today the governor of Maharashtra. But in 1980, when he was contesting the parliamentary elections from Bhopal, among his vital campaigners were Haider and his gang. Haider, a notorious underworld character—listed in Bhopal police's "goonda file"—was detained under the Maintenance of Internal Security Act during the Emergency. The prominent Congress(I) leader's explanation? "After all they are also my voters!"

Two years later the district magistrate of Bhopal resisted political pressure and externed Haider from the district. As a senior police officer noted on the history sheet of Haider and his brother, another "bad" character: "After their intrusion into politics they have become political goondas. Backed by money power and their connections, they have become more dangerous than before."

(From left) Alok Chansoria; Surendra Singh; Pachouri: criminal connections

That tradition continues in spite of the party's self-proclaimed attempts to have only people with "clean images".

► A vice-president of the district Congress (I) committee in Gwalior is a history-sheeter with charges of dacoity, rape, kidnapping, blackmailing and forgery against his name.

► A family of five brothers in the Bundelkhand region, whose members have occupied important positions in the ruling party's district committee, had, at one point, 40 criminal cases registered against them ranging from murder to dacoity to kidnapping.

► A Congress (I) corporator of Bhopal was arrested last year for attacking with a sword, an engineer of the Bhopal Development Authority who refused to pay him a "commission".

► A liquor contractor of Durg, Suchcha Singh, described as a "criminal element" in police records, became a Congress(I)-backed mayor four years ago. He was subsequently arrested under the NSA and lost his position.

Worse, during Arjun Singh's chief ministership criminal cases were withdrawn against various people, including an MLA, a MP and a minister of state.

So ingrained is the criminal element in the Congress(I) that senior party leaders who are sincerely concerned about the issue find themselves in a frustrating situation, unable to win the battle decisively. What they can gain is at most a temporary reprieve until new criminals take the place of old ones.

—N.K. SINGH

KARNATAKA

Petty Politics

ARRACK continues to dog politics in Karnataka. After Chief Minister Ramakrishna Hegde's Government has shrugged off the ghost of the major scandal that arrack bottling contracts had brought, the potent liquor has now had its effect on the Karnataka Pradesh Congress(I) Committee (KPCC-I).

In a letter to Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi, the Congress(I) MP from Hassan, H.N. Nanje Gowda, has accused partyman and MLC, H.C. Srikantiah, of currying favour with Hegde to secure a lucrative contract for the bottling of arrack. According to the allegation, Srikantiah acted on behalf of Ravindra and Company, a distillery in Bidar, in which he has a vested interest. According to the economics worked out by Gowda, Srikantiah stands to gain Rs 20 lakh from the deal. Fumed Gowda: "The Congress(I) could not possibly level charges against the Hegde Government when the party itself harboured beneficiaries of shady liquor deals."

It was a serious charge and expectedly brought a sharper rejoinder from Srikantiah, who clarified that he had earned no benefit from the Rs 50,000 he had invested in the firm "to oblige a cabinet colleague". Instead, he accused Gowda of seeking Hegde's favour in securing an allotment of 40,000 litres of rectified spirit in the name of his wife's brother, Manju, who owned the Dolphin Chemicals in Mysore—a deal that was bringing in a cool Rs 1 lakh every month for the Gowda family.

Photographs by MUSHTAQ AHMED

Nanje Gowda; and (right) Srikantiah

The bickering over liquor deals was like the lighting of a fuse. And soon, charges and counter-charges were flowing merrily between the two Vokkaliga leaders. While Gowda accused Srikantiah of being Hegde's stooge, Srikantiah, in turn, complained bitterly about Gowda's "arrogance", "presumptuousness" and propensity for "mudslinging".

Finally, the Congress(I) high command had to intervene. Rajiv Gandhi has directed AICC(I) General Secretary R.L. Bhatia and Union Home Minister Buta Singh to probe the fusillade of allegations and submit a report within a month. At the executive committee meeting of the KPCC(I) on May 5, Bhagwat Jha Azad, another AICC(I) general secretary, warned that partymen would face disciplinary action if they quarrelled publicly.

Though this has slightly chastised the two warring Vokkaligas, party leaders believe that the slander has been triggered by the desire of the adversaries to emerge as the sole and unchallenged leader of their powerful community. But the squabbling has not benefited either of them. What is more, some of the mud has stuck to their party as well.

—ANITA PRATAP

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

HARYANA

A Fortress Besieged

HARYANA has entered the nation's political lexicography as a word signifying the finale, indeed, a denouement of a political battle. Political pundits have long said that it is in this small state that the political fortunes of Rajiv Gandhi and his Congress(I) are destined to take a fateful turn. With the announcement of the elections to be held in June, and with the declaration of President's rule in Punjab which appears aimed at making electoral gains in Haryana, the state, its politics and people are now even more intensely floodlit. To assess the mood of Haryana, and the battle lines that are being drawn for what many refer to as the Fourth Battle of Panipat, Features Editor INDERJIT BADHWAR extensively toured the state last fortnight and spoke to a wide cross-section of the electorate. His report:

JO Devi Lal yahan se Congress ka ghanta bajaega uss ghante ki goonj pure desh me sunai degi" (The sound of the thrashing that Devi Lal will give the Congress will reverberate across the country). Thus spoke an unlettered Jat sarpanch in Karnal as he boarded a bus, along with several colleagues, for a government-sponsored trip to a worksite along the Sutlej-Yamuna link canal. Hundreds of such trips had been organised last fortnight as part of Chief Minister Bansi Lal's election strategy to counter Lok Dal chief Devi Lal's claim that the Congress(I) Government has been pussyfooting with the construction of the link canal which will green thousands of acres of Haryana's farmlands.

But the farmer's parting shot at a

Devi Lal is not just distant thunder but straddles Haryana's electoral skyscape like an ominous raincloud.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

government whose bus he was boarding, and at whose expense he had just eaten a sumptuous meal, witnessed a puppet show and sucked at a generously stuffed hookah, was a clear indication that Devi Lal is not just distant thunder. The aging Lok Dal leader has already straddled Haryana's electoral skyscape like an ominous raincloud threatening to unleash a political deluge that will rock the state from Sirsa to Gurgaon.

Even though final lists of party candidates have still not been released, Haryana, the prosperous agro-industrial gateway to the Hindi heartland has already become a veritable political battlefield. It is from here, Congressmen say, that the rejuvenation of their battered and beleaguered party will begin. It is precisely from here, opposition parties say, that the nation-wide rout of the Congress will start. "Haryana," said Lok Dal Secretary D.C. Tyagi, "is the first impregnable garh of the heartland. Ahead lie Rajasthan and Uttar Pradesh." In pre-electoral popular imagery the Haryanvi Jat views the state as the land from where the Mahabharata and the battles of Panipat were fought. He is infused with the idea that who wins in Kurukshetra and Panipat is ultimately fated to rule from Delhi. And Devi Lal aggressively champions the slogan that Haryana is the battleground where the "corrupt Dilli Durbar and its puppets will be given a final burial".

Photographs by BHAWAN SINGH

Even with the elections a month away, the Lok Dal has energised not only the Jats but also galvanised opposition parties into action. Where few have dared to challenge the suzerainty and supremacy of Bansi Lal in Tosham, his semi-desert home constituency in Bhiwani district, today seven opponents are ready to challenge him. Significantly, even the two Marxist parties have been meeting regularly with Lok Dal's senior representatives and asking to be accommodated within the Devi Lal spearheaded opposition alliance. (The CPI-M and CPI had all along condemned the Sangharsh Samiti's andolan and rasta roko tactics in opposition to the Punjab accord as an example of reactionary kulak politics). The panchayat from Meham in Rohtak district has already anointed Devi Lal as its candidate. Traditionally, a candidate appointed in this way in Meham need not even campaign. The panchayat ensures his victory. "It is like my hukumnama," said Devi Lal.

With elections a month away, the Lok Dal has energised not only the Jats but also galvanised opposition parties into action.

UNDER the seat adjustment plan being chalked out by the Lok Dal, it was expected to field between 60 and 65 candidates for the 90-member Assembly in which the Congress presently has 70 MLAs. The Lok Dal has surrendered 17 seats to the Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP) and placed their final selection in the hands of Rajmata Scindia. Six seats will go to the Janata Party, one each to the CPI and CPI(M), and two to the Congress(J). Early last fortnight when the Lok Dal had announced the names of 21 candidates and agreed to give 17 seats to the BJP, there were still a staggering 770 applicants for the remaining 50-odd seats. All the candidates are being screened by a five-member committee with the main criteria for selection being winning ability, loyalty, and clean image. The committee will then send a list of three finalists to Devi Lal who will then select the running candidate with the advice of the party's parliamentary board.

The Lok Dal, in order to drop its casteist image, is making a genuine attempt at broadening its base. "We are ready to make adjustments with all opposition groups and castes and give others seats even in constituencies where Jats constitute between 20 and 40 per cent of the population," said Tyagi, Lok Dal secretary, "except with the Ajit Singh faction. We do not want any Bhaskar Raos or Gul Shahs," he added. This was an obvious reference to the 1982 elections in which Congress won 36 seats but was able to form a majority through massive defections from the Lok Dal organised by chief minister Bhajan Lal. "Congress members disguised as Lok Dal candidates will not be allowed to mess things up this time because our selection system is foolproof," adds Tyagi.

Veteran observers believe that what is happening in Haryana politics is unique. A state where alliances seem to transcend all party barriers, and from where the phrase 'aya Rams and gaya Rams' emanated, is now being vertically polarised between the Lok Dal and its Sangharsh Samiti partners and the Congress(I). This is largely because Devi Lal's andolan—in which lakhs of Haryanvis including Punjabis and Brahmins have participated—has projected him as a leader of the masses. It has also given a political character and dimension to regional issues which, first articulated in the context of the Punjab accord, have now coalesced into an anti-Congress movement. The declaration of President's rule in Punjab, and the death of the accord, Devi Lal said, makes no difference. "The Punjab issue was only one factor in our movement which has gained in maturity. The people will see President's rule in Punjab as just another way of fooling them. The Centre will be able to deliver only paper files. Only I will be able to deliver the river water," he promised. Against this force is pitted the Congress party, the feud between the Bhajan Lal and Bansi Lal factions and a bunch of defector MLAs who are increasingly viewed by the voters as buyable commodities. Even though the Lok Dal is also split, the Ajit Singh faction has so far failed to rock Devi Lal's political boat in the state.

The Congress(I) high command knows that even under the most favourable circumstances it can hope to do only reasonably well. In a state in which Jats comprise more than 21 per cent of the population, the Congress(I) can only win by splitting the Jats—who enjoy absolute majorities in five constituencies and are more than 40 per cent of the population in nine others—and by hanging on to its traditional Schedule Caste and non-Jat Hindu vote banks. But even this formula has produced marginal success in the past. In the 1982 assembly elections, the Congress(I) won 36 seats, receiving 37.6 per cent of the total votes polled. The Lok Dal and independents who received 50 per cent of the vote won 47 seats and the BJP six seats with a little over 7 per cent of the vote.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

EVEN though Bansi Lal and Bhajan Lal confidently predict that the Congress(I) will win between 60 and 70 seats, officials in the high command think that a sweep of the polls under the present circumstances is but a pipe-dream. The Congress percentage of votes will surely be even lower than in 1982. But in order to prevent this from turning into an electoral nightmare, the prime task confronting the Congress(I) is to prevent the feud between Bansi Lal and Bhajan Lal from wrecking the state party. A total reconciliation between the two is unlikely. Ever since Bhajan Lal—a Bishnoi from Bhawalpur who had a humble start in life as a ghee merchant—was dropped from Bansi Lal's cabinet in 1972, he became a bitter enemy, organising party dissidents who later ousted Bansi Lal. The leadership question—ever since Bhajan Lal was shifted to the Centre in June 1986 and replaced in the state by Bansi Lal—has hung like a Damoclean question mark over the state party. Even though both the Lals say publicly that they will obey the directives of the high command, they tell confidants that if the candidates of one are favoured over those of the others, they will work for their own candidates who are likely to cram the various constituencies as independents.

Ramesh Mehta, former Youth Congress president, and now president of the bar association of Sirsa said: "If unity steps and seat adjustment plans within our own party are not implemented at the earliest, there could be total chaos. No one will know which candidate is standing with whose secret backing and whom to support and who not to."

Under an "adjustment plan" being discussed last fortnight, about 35 seats were to be divided among Haryana's leading MPs, with the rest being given to Bansi Lal to distribute. In addition, the MPs would also be given tickets to run from select MLA constituencies. In this fashion, Bhajan Lal would be given 15 tickets to distribute to his own men while he would be given a ticket himself from Adampur in Hissar district; Rao Birendra Singh, the Ahir leader from Mahendragarh would be given four seats, Choudhary Dalbir Singh from Ellanabad four seats, Harpal Singh of Kurukshetra 10 seats, and so on. "This way," a senior Congress(I) minister said, "these factional leaders will be busy in their own constituencies and won't have the time to meddle in other candidates' constituencies."

Some Congressmen like Lachchman Das, minister of state for tourism from Sirsa district, do not even concede that the Bhajan Lal-Bansi Lal feud will be a factor in the coming elections. A Bhajan Lal MLA himself, Das said: "The high command has decreed, so we are now loyal to our state party leader. All this opposition euphoria, present always during the early stages, will soon die down and people will vote for us because we have been able to deliver the goods. Devi Lal didn't lay even a brick during his two years of rule. What can he claim as his success?" Adds O.P. Jindal, the farm-to-industrial-riches multimillionaire whose Hissar-based steel works provide nearly 40 per cent of India's stainless steel, and who expects to run from there on a Congress ticket: "There's no question there will be a tough fight

Despite several reconciliation efforts by party officials, the feud between Bansi Lal and Bhajan Lal threatens to wreck the Congress(I).

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

everywhere. But I think we will do well if the individuals are picked correctly and the tickets are distributed fairly."

Congressmen also note that the Government's development programmes—which have benefited the state uniformly—will also, ultimately, go in favour of the ruling party. In fact, ever since Bansi Lal was installed as chief minister he has been campaigning for his party to offset the Devi Lal andolan factor. His road building programme is rated as the best in the country. Of late he has organised widespread loan melas in which banks have been instructed to give backward communities loans of up to Rs 25,000 often with no collateral. Hundreds of copies of videotapes of Doordarshan's recent 'Focus' programme in which Devi Lal and Bansi Lal debated each other and in which Bansi Lal apparently bested his opponent, are being distributed for television screening in villages. And the state has organised free trips for thousands of villagers to worksites along the SYL canal.

Actually, the Haryanvi should have little to complain about his government and living conditions. In Haryana's 5,000 villages there is little of the grinding poverty seen in other parts of the Hindi heartland. The state has the second highest per capita income in the country and every village is electrified. Villages are all connected by pukka roads from the main highways that are maintained year-round in perfect condition. In 1966 Haryana imported foodgrains to feed its people. Today it gives more than 30 million tonnes to the Central pool, and its per capita use of improved seeds and fertilisers—already about the highest in the country—doubled during the past two years. The state's farmers are neither too rich nor too poor and most import their labour from Rajasthan, and even Mysore. The state's marketing structure ensures that the farmer walks—or rather rides on his tractor—no more than 7 km to the nearest mandi.

Bansi Lal's administrative ruthlessness has alienated the bulk of the state's public employees who recently struck work in protest.

The state boasts of decentralised mini-secretariats in the major districts where all the state Government's departments are available under one roof, working women's hostels, well-equipped leper care centres, sports stadia such as the massive Dronacharya complex in Hissar, and tourist complexes catering to all income groups (a non-vegetarian meal costs Rs 10) that have become the envy of and the models for the rest of the country. It also has the only Muslim Waqf Board in the country that is not just solvent but which has tripled its income during the past three years.

Industrially the state produces steel, textiles (Bhiwani is where Graviera Suitings come from), handloom products, tractors, small electronics and engineering goods (the road signs outside Ambala welcome the visitor 'to the land of mixis'), and soon, it plans to have a gigantic oil refinery in Karnal. Its towns—Kurukshetra, Sonepat, Hissar, Tosham, Fatehabad, Sirsa—in comparison with most in North India, are models of town planning with elaborate sewage systems, divided roads—there are flyways even in Kurukshetra and Hissar—greenbelts, primary medical centres, banks, petrol station complexes with toilet facilities, and public libraries. And despite the jostle and bustle of the omnipresent tractors and the constant throbbing of commerce, the thoroughfares are free of encroachments. There is a sense of order without regimentation.

To a large extent, the Congress(I), and in no small measure, Bansi Lal can take credit for the economic transformation of this small state and its 130 lakh people. He should be a winner on the strength of his and his party's achievements. One of the reasons he was brought in and Bhajan Lal ousted was to enable him to expand the base of Jat support (he is a Jat while Bhajan Lal is a Bishnoi) and at the same time cooperate with the Centre in implementing the now defunct Punjab accord in the face of Bhajan Lal's recalcitrance on the issue. But Bansi Lal, even his supporters say, because of his rudeness, intransigence, and abusive nature, has become his own worst enemy. In the short time he has been chief minister, he has been unable to wean Jats away from the Lok Dal and has also lost support among the traditional communities like the Punjabi Hindus, Muslims, and Brahmins. His is a classic case of how a single personality, in combination with other factors, can affect the politics of an entire region. There are several reasons why the Opposition movement has continued to gain momentum.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Bansi Lal's inaccessibility and ruthlessness as an administrator—his regime has been marked with incessant mass transfers and suspensions, very often of officials considered loyal to Bhajan Lal—has alienated the bulk of the state's 250,000 public employees, many of them Punjabis and Banias for whom opposing Bansi Lal has become a matter of do or die. They know that if he is returned he will simply crush them. During a recent two-day bandh organised by public employees that virtually paralysed the state, their leaders readily admitted that the agitation was aimed not only at redressing economic grievances but also against Bansi Lal's "dictatorship". Despite the talk of his having "mellowed" in recent times, Bansi Lal's Emergency-time image has not left him. His efforts to appease Jats by giving them job preferences have not only failed to produce the desired results but has alienated other Hindu castes who have started flocking to the broad-based Sangharsh banner offered by Devi Lal.

The Jat, by nature rebellious and irreverent, looks for camaraderie and bonhomie in his leader. The typical Jat will insist that his MLA join him for a swig of Jagadhri number one—a popular brew. Persuaded by his history that the Jat is a destroyer of governments and seats of authority, he likes in his leaders the same kind of irreverence and social intercourse. An authoritarian figure like Bansi Lal, who has devalued even his own ministers and MLAs through his own inaccessibility, is hardly the person to fire Jat imagination when an alternative mass leader like Devi Lal, who can hop from chaupal to chaupal joking, cursing, and smoking the hookah with his fellowmen is on the scene.

THE Haryana voter, who is getting increasingly more articulate and politicised, also senses a growing weakness at the Centre because of corruption issues. As one of them observed: "We like to keep abreast of everything. From Fairfax to fairsex." Even in small villages, inhabitants talk about a weakened Centre and the pointlessness in voting for a party that would support such a Centre. "If Rajiv Gandhi has nothing to hide in Bofors," said Raj Singh in Hissar, "then why doesn't he turn his files over to the President?" The Central corruption theme plays right into the hands of Devi Lal who began his Sangharsh andolan two years ago on August 9 (the day the Quit India movement was launched in 1942) with a 'Quit Corruption' slogan in which he described the All India Congress Committee as the All India Corrupt Corporation. Today, his sloganeers roam the villages proclaiming: "Our creed is 'bijli pani lao, brahshtachar hatao,' but the Congress cry is, 'brahshtachar lao, bijli pani hatao.'"

And lower level corruption—rampant during Bhajan Lal's time—and still prevalent, continues to taint the image of the state's ruling party. In Kalsami village, in the Sikh-dominated Shahabad district, Channan Singh, whose community has always voted for the Congress(I), grumbles that his MLA has never visited the area. The Sikh community here is more interested in local issues than anything that happens in Punjab. The Government is now sinking the first tubewell in Kalsami. But the residents dismiss this as an election ploy. "The real story here is that nothing moves without bribes to local officials," said Channan Singh. It is the same story in Dabra, a small village outside Hissar. "The Congress is anti-farmer. The prices of fertiliser, pesticides and seeds have tripled but we get the same price for our produce," said Pratap Singh, an ex-serviceman who had voted Congress in 1982. "But we don't even get the seeds and fertilisers," adds Bansi Singh. "We have to buy them in black or pay bribes. We have educated children but they can't get jobs because we have to pay Rs 10,000 in bribes just to even enlist them in the army. Our wheat has been damaged by the recent rain and hail but the Government hasn't even sent out inspectors to assess the damage and pay compensation." And Daljit Singh, a Unseasonable rain not only dampened the wheat harvest but also the Government's reputation for failure to take timely salvage measures.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Village inhabitants speak of corruption and a weakened Centre and the pointlessness in voting for a party that supports such a Centre.

young farmer said: "I'm a Jat. But I'll vote Lok Dal not because of caste but because this government has taken us for granted."

Despite criticism of Devi Lal's two-year tenure as chief minister, Haryana's farmers remember him for instituting the first compensation programme for damaged crops and floods, providing levy reliefs for small farmers, building Harijan chaupals throughout the state, and creating the work-for-food schemes. Among his current electoral promises which include flat rates for electricity, matching state grants for school construction and old age pensions, the most catchy, and the one that has swept people off their feet is the promise that he will forgive all the outstanding loans farmers owe to banks and cooperative institutions. When his opponents say that this is a wild and irresponsible promise which will never be implemented, Devi Lal answers: "I'm not forming a government simply to become another goat-herd."

Also for different reasons, communities that traditionally voted Congress are beginning to shift gears in other directions. The Punjabi Hindus either because of their sympathies with public employees or with the BJP which is now a firm Lok Dal electoral ally have, notwithstanding the dumping of the Punjab accord, at this stage, begun to ditch the Congress(I). The Brahmin vote for the ruling party will be seriously jeopardised by the defection of former Congress(I) chief minister and undisputed Brahmin leader Bhagwat Dayal Sharma who has cast his lot with Devi Lal. Even though Ahir leader Rao Birendra Singh is with the Congress(I), his son Ajit has joined the Lok Dal signalling a split even in this community. The trading community, usually a bellweather for electoral shifts in the state, is looking cautiously in the direction of the Lok Dal. Mohan Lal Garg, secretary of the traders' association of Ladwa grain mandi, one of the largest in the state with an annual turnover of Rs 35 crore said: "My partner is trying for a Lok Dal seat because we don't think the Lok Dal will harm our interests." These traders, again, see a weakness at the Centre and in a possible shift, they see as their protector, Banarsi Das Gupta who will contest on the Lok Dal ticket from Bhiwani.

Ambala, with its strong Harijan and Punjabi voters has traditionally been a Congress stronghold. But even here officials are predicting a life-and-death struggle for the ruling party. Hori Lal, president of the city's Balmiki Sabha and an old Congress social worker, said: "No one has done anything to help us get out of our ghetto. There are no jobs even for our educated. We feel Bansi Lal is anti-Balmiki. He doesn't even talk to us. He is disdainful of us. Now he is trying to give us loans but it is only for the elections. Our younger people are now criticising us old Congress workers for not voting independently. Voting is our dharma but this time we will not vote blindly and sell out."

The voice of protest of this old Balmiki may not reflect the entire voice of so varied a state as Haryana. But it cannot be dismissed as a straw in the wind. There are too many such straws floating in the political currents of the state, which if knotted together are likely to form a tightrope on which will teeter the political fortunes of the ruling party.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Datta's body in his room: macabre events

CHANDIGARH

The House of Horror

FROM the outside, the palatial, pink-washed house in Chandigarh's Sector 8 looked no different from its neighbours. But inside, was a world even more macabre than a Stephen King horror story. The body of a man dead for the last two years. A family whose blind faith caused them to believe he was still alive. A tantrik who succeeded in fuelling that faith, and has now been charged with the man's murder. It was a world of shadows and superstition and only last week was the outside world allowed a glimpse into the bizarre happenings at the Datta household.

Thick pink curtains kept out the sunlight and prying eyes in the sprawling drawing-room in which the family clung to each other, and its faith. A strange cloying smell—death mingled with incense—hung over everything. The dead man's wife, Kamlesh Datta, surrounded by her five children, spoke as if she were in a kind of trance and seemed unable to answer questions that were not related to the 22 months she had lived believing her husband to be alive.

The day before, her husband's body had been forcibly taken away by the police and cremated. But nobody mourned, nobody grieved and nobody had lost faith. "He was alive. I know that. I felt his pulse and his heartbeat. I was with him every night. I know. They took him away without asking for my permission," says Kamlesh. The children recalled how they used to come back from school or college in the evenings and sit and talk to their father about what had happened. The eldest, Mohita, 20, said: "He seemed to listen, although he never responded, and we believed that he was alive." The same view was shared by Datta's mother, Shanti Devi, who said the Government had no right to interfere.

But in the pink drawing-room, there were some non-believers too and promi-

Kaushal, Baldev and Daljit being arrested

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Panini Kanya Maha Vidyalaya Collection.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

cent among them was Kamlesh's mother, Bimla Devi, who shrieked at her daughter and grandchildren every time they said anything about the guru, Amir Chand Kaushal, who had convinced them that Datta was alive. "This man has destroyed our family. He knew that my son-in-law was dead. He told me this himself. I don't know what he has done to my daughter, who was so intelligent, so educated. He has destroyed these children," she said.

The bizarre story of the death and after life of Shri Ram Datta, assistant conservator of forests in Himachal Pradesh, began on June 18, 1985. Datta had come to Chandigarh to visit his wife and children who were staying with a former colleague and close friend, Baldev Singh and his wife Daljit Kaur. Daljit had become 'pregnant' after several miscarriages at the age of 45 and needed someone to run the house. Since she kept poor health so the Dattas moved in. Datta had also developed a painful boil on the back of his neck and had done nothing to treat it. He had been, for nearly two years, under the spiritual influence of guru Amir Chand Kaushal and had foresworn all medication, putting his faith instead in the power of the guru to cure anything. Kaushal's believers are not allowed to touch any medicine.

The boil, however, refused to heal and that night (June 18, 1985) he collapsed into what appeared to be a coma. Said Kamlesh: "He stopped breathing and there was no pulse. So I telephoned guruji and he said have faith in god and all will be well." Baldev says that he thought at first that Datta was dead. The boil had caused his back to swell and tauten so that all his veins seemed to be sticking out. According to Kamlesh, her husband's skin then turned black in the next few days and swellings came up all over the body. After that, what she describes as 'blood', but what doctors feel was fluid flowed out of Datta's body for three or four days. Then, she says, the skin returned to its normal colour and there were few changes for the next two years, other than the lengthening of his hair and nails.

LIFE in the house in Sector 8 continued pretty much as normal with Datta lying 'sick' in his bedroom adjoining the large drawing-room. Twice a day his wife would sponge him with water and at night she and the children slept in the same room as him without once feeling that he was dead. Although Datta did not seem to be getting any better he did not seem to get any worse either and their guru continued to reassure them that all would be well one day.

Now the guru, in an interview after his arrest last week for murder, claims that he knew the truth but could not destroy the family's faith. Says Kaushal: "I never examined him closely. It was Mrs Datta who told me that she could still feel his pulse and his heartbeat and I just couldn't shatter their faith." Apart from the guru, Kaushal, Chandigarh police have also arrested Baldev Singh and Daljit Kaur on charges of murder and conspiracy to murder on a complaint filed by Datta's brother, Anil.

Kaushal's followers, however, believe that their guru was capable of bringing Datta back to life. The followers, who requested anonymity, claim that Kaushal has cured over a thousand victims of the Bhopal gas tragedy and that he has submitted a list of 160 people whom he has cured of fatal diseases.

It was Kaushal's alleged healing powers that first drew Baldev and Daljit, who has been miraculously 'pregnant' now for 64 months, into Kaushal's innermost circle. Singh claims that his alcoholism was cured instantly when he met Kaushal eight years ago and so was a disease of the lungs, which doctors said would kill him in six months. Then, there is his wife, who has also been charged with murder. When she became 'pregnant' and there were no signs of a baby after nine months, Kaushal told her that her husband would have to gain control over his temper for the baby to be born. Further, the baby would only come when his mission was complete and that this would be the day when Datta would also be cured.

Interviewed on the day she was due to be produced in court, she said wearily: "I don't know anything any more. Everything has gone wrong. Guruji used to say I didn't have enough faith. For my part, I have done all I could. Now it is upto god."

The man at the centre of this macabre nightmare looks more like an overweight attendant in a ration shop than a spiri-

Family around the empty bed: blind faith

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

tualist or a healer. By profession, Kaushal is a schoolteacher, who till two years ago taught English and Social Studies at a school just outside Chandigarh. The cult that he created centres around the belief that one should not believe in any religion. He denies being a tantrik but admits that he performed moonlit ceremonies in which hundreds of candles would be lit ("just for decoration") and prayers would be chanted to the parmatama (god). His followers obey his every word, as if they were under some form of hypnosis. According to Baldev, the inner circle consists of only about 50 people but there are thousands of other followers, mainly the rich and the powerful.

The authorities only discovered the Datta case on May 1 when Deputy Superintendent of Police Desraj Sharma arrived at the house to enquire into the health of Datta, who had been absent from work on the basis of a series of leave applications submitted regularly by his wife. He reported what he had seen but the police took nearly six days to finally remove Datta's body.

When a team of doctors from Chandigarh's Post-Graduate Institute examined Datta's remains they found that a process of 'natural mummification' had taken place. All his organs were intact inside his body but they had shrivelled and dried up. According to a senior doctor involved in the post-mortem examination: "There is nothing miraculous about what happened. Such cases have been recorded in medical science, although they are extremely rare. We think this could have happened because he died in June when the weather is hot and dry and lends itself to mummification."

When asked to comment on the family's contention that his hair and nails grew and that his pulse could be felt, he said it was virtually impossible for laymen to distinguish a pulse that was faint and there was no question of nails growing, but hair could have grown when the skin shrank. It was not possible to ascertain what had actually caused Datta's death but doctors believe that the pus that had collected in the boil could have spread through the body and killed him. He could have been saved had he been given proper medical aid. So what remains to be decided, in what could turn into as bizarre a legal case as it is a medical one, is whether guru Kaushal and his friends did indirectly cause Datta's death.

—TAVLEEN SINGH in Chandigarh

DHANBAD

Mafia Maze

FOR years now, under the garb of being trade union leaders, khadi-clad politicians and contractors, Dhanbad's mafia bosses have ruled the area, extracting and amassing money at will. They demonstrated their apparent invincibility once again last fortnight just when the legal noose seemed to be tightening around them. Dhanbad's Superintendent of Police Vishnu Dayal Ram, who had teamed up with Deputy Commissioner Madan Mohan Jha to legally pin down six top mafia bosses was transferred and asked to leave town within 48 hours.

The transfer literally torpedoed the efforts of the two young officials who were said to have Chief Minister Bindeshwari Dubey's support but which failed at a crucial juncture. They had painstakingly built up a mountain of evidence against these six leaders—Suryadeo Singh, Sakaldeo Singh, Raghunath Singh, Navrangdeo Singh, Satyadeo Singh and Vinod Singh. In a relentless operation extending to well over a year, Jha and Ram had sifted through official files, criminal complaints, harassment charges and extortion claims.

The task was certainly not an easy one. Political patronage was all too evident. Records had been tampered with and evidence doctored. Said Jha: "In seven to eight cases against Suryadeo Singh, records were missing from even the court." The only plus factors going for the two officials were their zeal and Dubey's backing.

Their zeal paid results and a total of 40 cases were compiled, including:

► Twenty-one cases against Suryadeo Singh. With his estimated 75,000-member trade union, Suryadeo's word is the law in the area. He has been a member of the Legislative Assembly since 1977.

► Fourteen cases against Sakaldeo Singh. Initially working with Suryadeo Singh, Sakaldeo later turned against his former mentor. He even joined hands with Raghunath Singh and pledged to kill Satyadeo Singh and his elder brother Shankar Dayal Singh, who is an MP. However, his arrest in mid-1985 under the National Security Act (NSA) prevented a possible gang-land killing. He might well have entered the Assembly during the 1985 elections except that Dubey had his name axed from the Congress(I) list. He contested as a rebel candidate and lost.

► Eleven cases against Raghunath Singh, the most dreaded of mafia leaders, who is at present cooling his heels in the Gaya prison. He has the reputation of being a killer.

Photographs by K.M. KISHAN

Madan Mohan Jha

Bindeshwari Dubey

Vishnu Dayal Ram

Dhanbad's Superintendent of Police V.D. Ram and Deputy Commissioner M.M. Jha, who are said to have Dubey's support, have failed at a crucial juncture in their legal fight against the mafia.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The peaks of Himachal,
the freshwater streams and placid lakes, all the wildflowers in the meadows and the cool clean breeze of the hills, take great pleasure in inviting your presence to a natural paradise called Himachal.
Don't hold this invitation too long in your hands...
there will be others who'll beat you to this superlative experience.

Regrets only :
You will be sorry
you didn't come.

Dress :
The warmth of company.

HIMACHAL TOURISM

For more information contact the Commissioner Tourism,
Daizy Bank, Shimla-171 001.
Himachal Pradesh.
Phones : 2028, 3136.

For more information please contact Tourist Officers at : New Delhi : Chandralok Building, 36, Janpath, New Delhi 110001. Phones : 345320, 352104. Bombay : 36, World Trade Centre, Cuffe Parade, Bombay 400055. Phone : 211123. Madras : 28, Commander-in-chief Road, Madras 600005. Phones : 423214, 472966. Calcutta : Flat 1C/3, Camac Court, 25, Camac Street, Calcutta 700016. Phone : 446847. Chandigarh : SCO 1048-49, Sector 22-B, Chandigarh 160022. Phone : 26494. Literature available at Ahmedabad at, Tourism Corporation of Gujarat Ltd., Tourist Information Bureau, H.K. House, off Ashram Road, Ahmedabad 380009. Phone : 449683.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Panini Kanya Maha Vidyalaya Collection.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ARIHANT
A continuing commitment to rapid growth

FROM FIBRE TO FABRIC

Makers of OSWAL®
SUITINGS SHIRTINGS
& DRESS MATERIALS

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Arihant Fabrics...
a company committed to growth through rapid expansion.

Arihant today is a modern, well-integrated, synthetic textile plant with composite facilities...polyester filament texturising and twisting, shuttleless weaving and processing. In its pursuit of sustained growth, the Company is currently planning to set up a worsted spinning plant of 6000 spindles. It is also expanding its processing and weaving facilities.

From Fibre to Fabric...
Arihant has maintained a continuing commitment to rapid growth.

Soobhagya/82/87

ARIHANT FABRICS LTD.

Regd. Office : B-35, Phase V, Focal Point, Ludhiana-141 010

Plant supplied by SULZER RÜTI. n. schlumberger et c

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SONY®

Jimmy Connors and family

My family. And my best friend.... Playback Handycam

The playback Handycam is one friend my family never goes anywhere without. It's so light and compact. And it's fully automatic, so it couldn't be easier to use. All you do is point and shoot to get perfect pictures, anytime, anywhere. There's even a zoom with macro function to get right in close. And because it's 8mm video, the picture quality and the hi-fi sound are just incredible. What's more, you can get up to three hours of recording and playback in PAL or 2 hours in NTSC on one single cassette. See your family through a friend's eyes. The Handycam.

Just hook up the CCD-V30 to any TV for instant playback

With a Handycam, everyone can.

Handycam

Video 8

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

SONY SERVICE CENTRES IN INDIA. ORSON ELECTRONICS LTD.

BOMBAY: Tel.6300775/6300976 MADRAS: Tel.472989/473159 BANGLORE: Tel.222554 DELHI: Tel.673519/670347 COCHIN: Tel.368165 CALCUTTA: Tel.446110

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Satyadeo Singh (left) and Suryadeo Singh

Navrangdeo Singh

The mafia leaders are resisting any interference with their power or prestige, and have already drawn first blood by securing Superintendent of Police Ram's transfer.

▸ Eight criminal cases against Navrangdeo Singh and another eight against his brother Ram Chandra Singh. The two brothers, who had come from Aurangabad in search of employment, had ended up as the musclemen of B.P. Sinha, the legendary Dhanbad mafia chief who was believed to have been gunned down by Suryadeo Singh's marksmen. Later they changed their line and today are among the top contractors of Dhanbad. The most prestigious contracts seem to come their way. In 1985, Ram Chandra had secured a Rs 80-lakh medical college building contract despite the heat that was turned on him during the anti-mafia drive. Both have adopted political garbs. Navrangdeo Singh was a Congress(I) general secretary till the 1985 elections. But when his name was dropped from the list of prospective candidates, he rebelled and fought the Assembly elections on the Janata ticket. His brother too contested for the same party from Dhanbad, but both lost.

▸ Three cases against Satyadeo Singh. A leader who is both feared and respected, he became an independent member of the Legislative Council after being removed from the post of zilla parishad chief last year.

▸ Seven cases against Vinod Singh, who is Raghunath Singh's brother.

The first of these cases is scheduled to come up for hearing on May 25 and concerns the murder of Gurcharan Singh, a sand transporter, in 1982. The accused include Sakaldeo Singh, Vinod Singh and Raghunath Singh. Interestingly, Sakaldeo Singh and Vinod Singh, who were held under the NSA, were released by the Patna High Court on "technical grounds" on the very same day that the trial date was announced. Officials fear that the two mafia leaders may now terrorise and intimidate witnesses, thereby affecting the cases against them.

EARLIER, Suryadeo Singh, who was to be arrested on April 10, had successfully evaded arrest. Evidently tipped off in advance about the impending action, Suryadeo Singh suffered a "heart attack". He was hospitalised and had to go to Delhi for "treatment". Later, he went on to attend the Bangalore session of the Janata Party, neutralising the administration's efforts to arrest him.

This was not the only case where the district administration's attempts had been thwarted. Last year, a move to raid the establishments of the mafia dons by men of the Directorate of Revenue had been mysteriously shelved. The raids were to have been organised following a detailed and thorough study of the business dealings of the coal mine leaders and the illegal and benami wealth accumulated by them.

However, the question that haunts officials is: how far will their efforts succeed? Understandably, the mafia leaders will resist any interference with their power or prestige. They have already drawn first blood by securing Ram's transfer. And officials fear that more trouble may be in store for them.

But Jha is determined to carry on. Arrangements have been made to protect witnesses. Special prosecutors have been appointed and close surveillance is being maintained on the mafia chiefs. Efforts are also on to get the high court stay orders vacated.

Officials say that even if the accused are made to merely stand in the dock, it will break the myth that the dons are more powerful than the state. This is the essential aim and if some convictions result, officials say that will be an additional bonus.

With the stage set for the final battle, many people in Dhanbad are keeping their fingers crossed. Even a single success will sharply boost the morale of a district administration that has watched criminal activity continue untrammeled for decades.

—FARZAND AHMED

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Repressing Reform

VISHWANATH Pratap Singh has finally started hitting back at his detractors in the Congress(I). Consequently, the battle between the reformers and the 'old guard' in the party has broken out in earnest. In the past two months, Singh has been accused of virtually everything, from overstepping his authority as cabinet minister to being a CIA agent bent on destabilising the Government.

But these charges do not explain one puzzling feature of this campaign. The normal reaction, in the Congress(I), to the exit from government of a powerful minister with a large following should have been to minimise the importance of his departure and to underplay the reasons for it. Why is a large section of the party doing the exact opposite? Why is Singh being attacked day in and day out, more than a month after he left the Cabinet?

The answer is that the target of attack is not V.P. Singh the individual, but what he has come to represent in the party and the country. Over the last two years, the mysterious alchemy of public perceptions has turned him into the leading crusader for reform within the Congress(I) and in the Indian political system itself. The reforms were, in fact, initiated by Rajiv Gandhi, whose very first act was to weed out a large number of sitting MPs, many with dubious reputations.

To the prime minister, V.P. Singh, with his somewhat unworldly morality, proved invaluable. Singh had already earned a daunting reputation for his ruthless drive against dacoits in Uttar Pradesh. When he brought the same messianic spirit to the enforcement of the Government's tax and foreign exchange laws, he succeeded in convincing the people of India that Rajiv's Government was serious about turning a new leaf in Indian politics.

The real goal of those who want to destroy V.P. Singh is to abort Rajiv's campaign for reform within the party and the political system. From the beginning of the Fairfax affair in mid-March, their unswerving aim has been to drive a wedge between Singh and Rajiv, and by stages push the minister right out of the party. When this is done, Rajiv will become fully identified in the public mind with the corrupt system that he originally set out to reform. Any further attempt at reform by him will fail to carry conviction, and will have to be given up.

Who are the persons against the campaign for reform and why do they feel threatened? The front-runners in the attack on Singh are well known: some 30 or more MPs, a handful of ministers and ex-ministers, Uttar Pradesh Chief Minister Bir Bahadur Singh, and party managers like Kalpnath Rai. But the identities of the individuals are of far less importance than the concern that binds them together. It is not the reforms Rajiv has already carried out, which are few enough and incomplete to say the least, but what they presage for the future.

> "The real goal of those who want to destroy V.P. Singh is to abort Rajiv's campaign for reform within the party and the political system and protect the power base of the political-cum-business elite that has ruled the country for two decades."

The prime minister's programme for cleaning up electoral finance and removing all unnecessary controls in the economy threatens the power base of the political-cum-business elite that has ruled this country for the past two decades, if not longer. This power base has been built through the systematic exploitation of an economy of shortages. Controls on production, on access to foreign exchange, on expansion, on take-overs, on access to institutional finance and on the location and shifting of industry, have given the Government a thousand levers of power over business and trade. Each has been systematically exploited by individual politicians, by parties at the state level and by the central high command to extract funds. Before 1968, the lion's share was probably obtained in white money, but after the ban on company donations enacted that year, all of it came from black money. A whole new class of intermediaries emerged to carry out the liaison between the money givers and the money takers, of whom the 'agents' who arranged kickbacks on foreign contracts were only the last additions.

The campaign of reform in the Congress(I) threatens this entire class. The repeal of the ban on company donations can shift the balance in party financing back towards white money, weakening the political system's dependence on the black money generating sector of industry, and above all, on the middlemen who strike deals on their behalf. Worse still, since controls became the means for perpetuating shortages, their removal could introduce genuine competition and threaten the de facto monopoly enjoyed by the already well established industrialists.

Rajiv's own marked distaste for entertaining special pleas from MPs and chief ministers on behalf of favoured supporters, has further increased the insecurity of this established class. But it was V.P. Singh's campaign against tax offenders that proved the final straw. It threatened to demolish the privileged status, above the law, that the members of this class had created for themselves. The revelation that the Government had hired agents to probe into accounts held abroad by some of them may have bred the claustrophobia that triggered the attack on Singh and what he stood for.

In theory, Rajiv now has a choice. He can go along with the attack on V.P. Singh, eventually expel him from the party and give up the campaign for reform. By doing this, he can buy peace and relative security within the party, but at the expense of losing his remaining charisma for the people. Alternatively, he can seize the initiative back from Singh, by pushing ahead vigorously with the programme for reform. But this will make a showdown within the party unavoidable in the near future. The choice is an unenviable one, but a moment's reflection will show that Rajiv has no real option but to push ahead.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The all-season runner

POWER JOGGER

Once you're hooked on jogging, you'll do it day in, day out. Come rain. Come sunshine.

Naturally, you need a running mate that will keep you company round the year.

Power Jogger, for instance. Jogger has a lightweight synthetic suede and nylon top that washes easily and virtually maintains itself. And the shock-absorbant sole sports a rugged grip that will keep you on sure ground on any kind of surface.

Power Jogger. Impervious to weather conditions, just as you are.

POWER®

makes the DIFFERENCE...

Available at select Bata & POWER stores

CLARION C 8/L J 12

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

nd eGangotri

LOO

THE

Now say wow and sleekness c fans. Kohinoor with the elegance
chromium-plated ease of a push-regulator.
The latest in greatest in quali
aerodynamics:
Rudella, Prima, L
Coronet Super orange, red, blue and chocolate b
of gleaming sha lines. A rotating cabin fan, perfe
showrooms, resi homes. Unmatc
And Usha's ra unmatchable ag varieties in ceilin pedestal, wall, c
ventilating fans.
decorative and s leading fans to c imagination.
It's great whe things happen to reality.
Get the latest
Get the latest biggest selling!

The

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

LOOK AGAIN!

THE LATEST FROM THE GREATEST

Now say wow to the style and sleekness of Usha Table Fans Kohinoor Super Deluxe with the elegance of chromium-plated guard, the ease of a push-button regulator.

The latest in looks, the greatest in quality, in aerodynamics: Usha Senator, Isabella, Prima, Diplomat and Coronet Super Deluxe. In orange, red, blue, green, grey and chocolate brown—a host of gleaming shades and finishes. A rotating wall mounted cabin fan, perfect for offices, showrooms, restaurants and homes. Unmatchable Usha!

And Usha's range—unmatchable again! 72 varieties in ceiling, table, pedestal, wall, cabin and ventilating fans. An array of decorative and super-styled ceiling fans to capture your imagination.

It's great when beautiful things happen to the best quality.

Get the latest for a life time. Get the latest from the largest selling!

USHA

The No. 1 makes them beautiful!

Contract JEW.153/87

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Standing first has its Rasna rewards."

Mudra:A:Pl: 3356

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RELIANCE CUP 1987
CRICKET FOR PEACE
Reliance Cup 1987
The cricket event
VIMAL
The Official Fabric for Reliance Cup 1987
Fabric PERFECTION ONLY VIMAL

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Style never came on so strong!

Reach for Skybags — and you're ready to go places. Exclusively stylish. Delightfully light. Soft... yet made of tough material. So you can really pack Skybags — they take the load, beautifully.

Don't settle for an imitation. Own an original...

Skybags

SOFT • STRONG • STYLISH

The designer collection– only from VIP

LINTAS VIP S 1926

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Popular Exercise

"PADYATRAS" and "Abhiyans" are probably the most popular form of political activity these days. The latest to join the long line of political walking champions is Bihar Assembly Speaker Shiv Chandra Jha. Last fortnight, he embarked on—and completed—a 100-village "public consciousness campaign" and in the process became the country's first speaker to do so.

Though Jha asserted that the padyatra was not political in nature, not many Congress(I) leaders believed him. One objective of the expedition, it is believed, was to buttress his claim for chief ministership, because Jha, a Mithila Brahmin, significantly chose Madhubani district, the heart of Mithilanchal, for his campaign. The other aim was probably to take the battle into the camp of former chief minister Jagannath Mishra, during whose chief ministership Jha was a hardcore dissident. Mishra had staged a successful rally in Bhagalpur, Jha's constituency, as part of his Jana Jagaran Abhiyan. Jha's itinerary, in turn, took him through Jhanjharpur, Mishra's constituency.

KRISHNA MURARI KISHAN

Jha: varied objectives

The speaker's venture also ended up embarrassing the state Government. Said Jha on his return: "Mithilanchal has not seen the light of development and if adequate steps are not taken immediately to redress people's grievances, the situation might turn explosive any day."

Repeat Cancellation

IT was billed as a mini-Apna Utsav. The "Adivasi Nritya Mela", the first-ever festival of tribal dances at Dumka—in the heart of Bihar's tribal region—was to have been a gala affair until the state Government suddenly ordered its cancellation last fortnight. This was the second cancellation in a row—the first happened in December '86—and the official explanation was a lame one: the non-availability of Union Human Resources Development Minister P.V. Narasimha Rao, who was to inaugurate the function.

But by the time the Government decided to put off the mela, most artistes from outside the state had already arrived or were in the process of doing so. A three-part stage decorated with tribal art, high voltage electric cables and accommodation for about 700 participants were all nearly ready. Half the Rs 10 lakh sanctioned for the show had already been spent.

The experience was particularly dismaying for the enthusiastic tribals who for long have felt that dikus (outsiders and exploiters) have destroyed their culture. And though the Minister of State for Culture, Arjun Vikram Shah, made assurances that the idea had not been abandoned, the cancellation did reflect poorly on the state Government.

Overseas Attack

KARNATAKA Chief Minister Ramakrishna Hegde evidently does not like to cry halt to his attacks on the Congress(I) and its leader Rajiv Gandhi. Even while in Frankfurt, on the first leg of his month-long Non-Resident Indians' wooing-cum-personal health trip, Hegde has reportedly gone on record saying that Rajiv Gandhi has lost the goodwill of the people. The comment expectedly has raised a storm back home.

BHAWAN SINGH

Hegde: upsetting remarks

The voluble Congress(I) leader of the opposition in the Karnataka Legislative Council, T.N. Narasimha Murthy, lashed out angrily: "Hegde has crossed the limit. It is most unbecoming of a small state chief minister, when he is abroad, to belittle the prime minister." Demanding that Hegde be recalled for denigrating the country and the prime minister, Murthy asked: "Have you ever heard any visiting foreign dignitary, even if he be an opposition leader, criticise his government or country when he is in India?" He had a point. Opposition attacks on Hegde are likely to mount when he returns.

Decisive Contests

KERALA's Left Democratic Front (LDF) faces its first major test on June 2, when elections to the Kottayam and Vamanapuram assembly seats take place. Countermanded due to the death of independent candidates when the elections were held in March, the contests are generating considerable political interest in the state.

Ramakrishnan: high stakes

The stakes are particularly high in Kottayam, where T.K. Ramakrishnan, the Marxist cooperation minister, and T.Radhakrishnan, former Youth Congress(I) president—and now one of the state general secretaries of the Congress(I)—face each other. Not surprisingly, the LDF leaders are taking no chances. The entire Nayanar Cabinet is camping in Kottayam.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Opposition too has hurled its full machinery into the attack. Says P.C. Chacko, the Congress(I) leader: "If Radhakrishnan defeats Ramakrishnan, the number two in the Nayanar Cabinet, it will definitely boost the image of Congress(I) in the state." The Congress(I) campaign is mainly built around the fact that Ramakrishnan, who is from Ernakulam district, is an outsider. Accusing the LDF of misusing official machinery, Congress(I) leaders are also charging the Marxists with whipping up caste feelings by hinting that Ramakrishnan, an Ezhava, is a likely candidate for the chief minister's job in the future. The LDF hints are apparently aimed to smooth the ruffled feelings of Ezhavas, the largest community in the state. The wooing of this group is important in view of the fact that it has not forgotten how the Marxist leadership ditched K.R. Gouri for Nayanar at the last minute over the question of chief ministership. Says a former Congress(I) minister: "The Marxists are panicky; they fear an Ezhava backlash in Kottayam."

Keeping to Tradition

POLITICIANS in Madhya Pradesh appear to have a penchant for acquiring newspapers. Former Union minister V.C. Shukla controls Bhopal's ailing Hitavada. His elder brother and former chief minister Shyama Charan Shukla has interests in Raipur's Mahakoshal. Chief Minister Motilal Vora's family owns a flourishing Hindi daily, Amrit Sandesh, at Raipur. And now, Union Communications

Photographs by R.C. SAHU

Ajay Singh (left) and Patel: striking a deal

Minister Arjun Singh's family is said to be keen to acquire financial interests in the proposed Bhopal edition of Naveen Dunia, a Hindi newspaper currently published from Jabalpur. The paper is controlled by Congress(I) MLA and beedi-magnate Shravan Kumar Patel, a member of the erstwhile Arjun Singh cabinet in Madhya Pradesh.

"This is news to me," exclaimed Singh, when asked about the venture. But it certainly wasn't news for Patel, who confirmed in a telephonic interview from Jabalpur that negotiations had taken place to float a new publishing company at the state capital. "But this is just an idea and not a single step has been taken in this direction," he hastened to add. Meanwhile, it is learnt that Naveen Dunia has applied for allotment of government land at concessional rates in Bhopal. Vora too is understood to have okayed the proposal. And the person who is following up the case on behalf of Naveen Dunia is none else than Ajay Singh, Congress(I) MLA and Arjun Singh's son.

Belated Fallout

'OPERATION Face-lift' that spruced up Bangalore for the November 1986 SAARC (South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation) summit seems to have had its inevitable pimples. The one revealed recently involves purchases made by the health wing of the Bangalore Municipal Corporation for the summit. According to allegations levelled by BJP member Suresh Kumar—and interestingly, supported by Congress(I) and Janata Party members—36,000 baskets for garbage disposal were acquired for Rs 4.70

MUSHTAQ AHMED

Preparations for the summit: misused finances

each as against Rs 1.50 for which they are available; 1,200 pickaxes came for Rs 56 each as against Rs 15; and 20,000 litres of phenyl was bought at Rs 10 per litre although the corporation already had a similar quantity in stock. The shopping spree set the corporation back by Rs 4.3 lakh.

Though Mayor B.V. Puttegowda has ordered a three-member house committee to probe the purchases, Suresh Kumar has not been satisfied. He has now added a fresh charge against corporation officials: one of buying inferior quality tar for asphalting roads.

Holding Up Rambo

RAMBO, the superhuman US ex-Marine might be invincible on the screen but last fortnight a group of—appropriately—leftist raiders proved that he was not unstoppable. At least for some time that commercially successful one-man army did not know what hit him.

On May 2, a group of about 60 young men attacked a Calcutta movie theatre, The Globe, and stopped the screening of the film. They entered the hall at 2.30 p.m., just as the matinee show was about to begin, and told the Manager, D.Nariman, to stop the screening of Rambo. Not satisfied with Nariman's explanation that the show must go on since tickets had already been sold, the raiders manhandled him and went on a rampage, smashing plate-glass doors, fixtures and showcases. Before the police could appear, they fled. The police believe that the raiders are supporters of some radical left group. For, immediately after stopping Rambo, they proceeded to the United States Information Service's library. Fortunately, the watchman there prevented the raiders from closing down even this Uncle Sam's show.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

YOU EXPECT MORE AMERICA FROM PAN AM AND YOU SHOULD.

MORE CITIES IN THE U.S.A.

At Pan Am we have been busy both in the air and on the ground to bring you the best airline service available.

Pan Am can fly you easily from India, not only to New York, but to cities all over the U.S.A. To Los Angeles, San Francisco, Chicago, Miami, Dallas and dozens more Pan Am destinations from coast to coast. And you make your flight connections at Pan Am's exclusive Worldport® Terminal at JFK in New York. It is the only terminal with all international and domestic flights under one roof.

So when you cross the Atlantic with Pan Am you get convenient connections to a lot more cities and what's more you need just one ticket, one check-in and one baggage claim throughout your trip to the U.S.A., Mexico, Caribbean or Latin America.

MORE PRIVACY

Pan Am's Private Terminal at JFK, New York, lets you experience new heights of luxury and comfort. Here you can relax on your trip back to India while a friendly attendant looks after all your travel needs.

MORE CONVENIENT

Flying Pan Am is a lot more convenient too! Meet and Assist service and city check-in at New Delhi and Bombay and a free helicopter service at New York that whisks you off to Manhattan in minutes. And of course, the convenience of flying an airline that is recording one of the best on time performances in the industry.

So fly Pan Am to the U.S.A., Mexico, Caribbean or Latin America and get the service you expect.

For information and reservations contact your Travel Agent or call Pan Am, New Delhi: 345222, 345244; Bombay: 2029020, 2029048.

40 YEARS IN INDIA PAN AM

Systems 414

EXPECT MORE FROM PAN AM

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MARUTIS

A Brash New Culture

WHAT is small, shapely, reckless, hides behind dark glasses and raises people's blood pressure? No, not Lolita. The answer is Maruti, the peppy superbrat which other car owners love to hate. But super or brat, the Indian spin-off of the Japanese Suzuki has transformed the Indian automobile scene like nothing else and, in the bargain, spawned a brand new culture.

There are already enough Maruti jokes to fill a book. Some of the latest examples: what is common between a Maruti and a haemorrhoid problem? The answer: sooner or later everyone gets it. Or, why is a Maruti like virginity? One bang and it's never the same again.

But on a more serious level, the ubiquitous Maruti is becoming the fast forerunner of a new breed of drivers and changing attitudes, driving habits and even life-styles. It has already established itself as the predominant status symbol of the middle class, or, more specifically, Indian Yuppies. Nothing demonstrates the Maruti's effectiveness as a social symbol more than the story of a Karol Bagh chaat shop owner who was finding it difficult to get his son a proper bride. But no sooner had he bought him a new Maruti that he received a flood of marriage offers. The Maruti Marriage Bureau has a host of other successes to its credit as well. A prosperous Sikh businessman's wife looks forward to the day her only son will get married. She plans to hand her daughter-in-law the keys to a new Maruti as "mooh dikhai".

Apart from everything else, the Maruti has ushered in a new craze among Indians for splurging on car accessories. There was only so much one could do with an Ambassador. One example: the misspelt handwritten signs stating 'Power Break'. But the possibilities in a Maruti are limitless. Take young Sanjay Passi, 19, son of the Maruti dealer in Chandigarh who admits he has spent about Rs 60,000 in "customising" his Maruti. That meant repainting the car completely white, inside and out; adding an air-conditioner; a 280-watt stereo with six speakers which would probably blow the windows out if used even to a fraction of their full power; a miniature TV in the dashboard; alloy wheel rims and wide-track radial tyres; a sun roof; power windows for all the doors; large, road-hugging skirts back and front; spoilers on the bonnet and back; fog lamps; three kinds of horns; a neon light inside the cabin; reading lights with a dimmer switch; a dashboard computer which calculates the average speed, fuel consumption and engine performance; and a laser disco which flashes different colours in time to the music. Plus minor trinkets like a compass and artificial horizon which gives the alignment of the wheels. The piece de resistance, however, comes each time he jams the brakes—the car cabin and passengers are bathed in a bright red glow. Passi's only problem is that, with all the special gadgetry, he has to change his battery every three months.

One of Delhi's biggest accessory dealers, Vinod Handa, says every new Maruti owner spends at least Rs 3,000 on basic accessories—a stereo system is considered standard equipment these days. Sons of rich parents spend as much as

Passi with his car (left); and its interior: flashy gadgetry

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Iranian student in Delhi University has fitted a TV, VCR, fridge and a bed at the back of his high-roof Maruti van. In fact a number of Maruti owners have installed sun roofs and bars in their vans ignoring the fact that drinking and driving or watching TV while driving is an invitation to disaster.

To many Maruti owners, the car has become an extension of their personality, a medium of expression. This yen for automotive expression had lain dormant in most Indians till the peppy little wonder arrived on the scene: the chunky, unresponsive Ambassador and Premier evoked no effusiveness, no hankering for speed. The nearest likeness to a sporty car the Indian customer had seen was the low-slung Standard Herald, but dreams of speed vanished when one let in the clutch. It did not roar ahead, it whimpered.

The Maruti has now spawned a brash culture symbolised by the new breed of young drivers who display a suicidal disregard for traffic rules and their own lives. Roads aren't what they used to be before the peppy little hornet arrived. Neither are driving habits, nor traffic safety. Or, for that matter, car repair bills which have bestowed new wealth on car mechanics who put up signs saying 'Maruti repairs undertaken here' and charge twice the amount for repairing a Maruti than any of the older cars. With an estimated two lakh Marutis on the roads—the equivalent of the number of Fiats manufactured in the last 10 years—the little car has already given birth to a number of minor industries.

But the less desirable aspect of the new Maruti culture is the irresistible urge in the driver to speed—testified to by the large number of crumpled Marutis awaiting face-lifts at most workshops. Fun, for

Rs 30,000 to Rs 40,000, half the price of the car, on fancy, smuggled equipment like 150-watt stereo systems with six speakers, including two fitted in the headrests. One out of every 10 Maruti owners now wants a TV set on his dashboard. Handa's biggest customer, the owner of Hindustan Breweries, spent Rs 80,000 (more than the cost of the car) dolling up his Maruti.

Sanjay Sikand of Delhi's Modern School, whose Maruti is virtually a mobile discotheque said: "We have seen movies with young people riding fancy cars. Now that there is a responsive, sporty-looking car available, we want to do it too." After seeing one such movie Night Rider, he cut away small sections of his car's steering wheel which now resembles an aeroplane's U-shaped control column. An

Sikand's cut-away steering; and (right) green striped windows: new craze

PRASHANT PANJIAR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Fun Time Avon Style

AVON, India's only Bicycle Company having highest range of Cycles is not only riding high in the Indian Market, but netted around Rs. 100 million as foreign exchange for our country from advanced as well as developing countries.

Avon manufactures most of the components in their completely automatic & sophisticated Plants using micron steel of the finest quality from their own cold rolled steel mill.

To bring glittering finish, Dupliex nickel plating technology from U.K. and electrostatic painting technology from Germany are employed.

Each Bicycle which comes out from Avon Cycles is a master-piece in itself — light, easy to pedal and attractive.

No wonder, AVON Cycles today are the fastest selling.

They're simply the best.

AVON

That's my cycle

Created from the most modern plant in Asia.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

most youngsters who own Marutis, means driving fast and impressing their girl-friends. Most youngsters tend to soup-up the engine, giving the car even more zip—and adding to the problems of other drivers. Delhi police have decided to fight fire with fire. Their traffic police are now equipped with the Maruti Gypsy. Notwithstanding that, younger Maruti-owners continue to spread chaos and confusion on the roads and have earned the little car the sobriquet of "superbrat", while its light-weight body has also termed it a mobile death-trap.

car, easy to handle and park and far more dependable than its unpredictable forbears. More women can be seen on the roads today than were visible four years ago.

In fact, the Maruti has involved the entire household. Family members take pride in washing and polishing it. Upholstery colour and accessories are decided on the basis of consensus, because every individual identifies with the car. To take delivery of a new Maruti, families often bring along marigold garlands and sometimes even a band.

Cartoon by AJIT NINAN

Maruti Udyog Managing Director R.C. Bhargava, however, insists that the last label is unjustified and that the car is built to crumple on impact, so that the driver and passengers are not hurt. "The chances are greater that you will walk out of the bang-up in one piece," says Bhargava, challenging the popular misconception that the thicker its sheet metal the safer the car.

The new Maruti culture in fact starts right at the factory in Gurgaon, which is a world of discipline and equality. In the best Japanese tradition, the floor manager leads his team through a routine of physical exercise to get them to limber up before the day's work begins. The managing director and his peon wear the same overalls or uniform, whether on the shop floor or in the executive offices, and they all eat from the same canteen. That culture has slowly spread to other factories as well.

The most visible symbol of the changes wrought by Maruti is the sharp increase in the number of women behind the wheel. They say it's a woman's

Even more remarkable is the fact that some new Maruti owners have undergone a near-total personality change. "The personality of a scooter-riding army officer underwent a complete metamorphosis after he received his Maruti," says S.M. Khanna, general manager of Competent Motors, Delhi's oldest Maruti dealer. "His whole outlook changed: he looked and behaved more assured and confident. He felt more important."

Though such examples are rare, what the Maruti has certainly succeeded in achieving is a new mobility, specially among the middle class. On most week-ends, Marutis crowd the highways and families that were earlier wary of driving long distances in the more unreliable Ambassadors and Fiats are now spending more week-ends away from home.

More than any other place, Delhi is Maruti country. Its estimated 60,000 Marutis have changed dating habits. Couples are no longer forced to go to movie houses or dimly-lit restaurants. They now merely drive around in their Marutis with dark tinted windows which provide adequate privacy or park in quiet lanes with the stereo on. "It's contributing to a new permissiveness," says Khanna.

Rajinder Anand, an accessories dealer of Connaught Place, is the stereotype of his own best customer. His last Maruti had a TV in the dashboard. How could he drive and watch TV at the same time? "Apnay aap vich confidence hona chahida hai" (one should have confidence in oneself), he says, thick gold chain showing through the deep V of his half-unbuttoned shirt. He claims to have imported from Dubai the execrable green striped windows often seen on Delhi Marutis. The imitation greenery on the window panes was too much even for the desiccated Arab environs. But Anand recognised the bonanza waiting for him if the green stripes proved a hit with his attention-hungry Delhi customers. If green stripes come can white and blue be far behind? They weren't and all three varieties now obscure the side vision of an increasing number of Delhi Maruti drivers.

But perhaps the most significant change the Maruti has ushered in is a new sense of consumerism, a more discerning attitude towards automobiles which is a major difference from the cavalier, take-what-you-get attitude that existed just a few years ago. Last fortnight, a group of Maruti-owners were engaged in animated discussion about whether they should sue Maruti Udyog for the faulty clutch some Marutis seem to have. Conveniently forgotten was the fact that for over four decades, Indians have been happily buying cars in which nothing worked from day one, and without a whimper of complaint.

Bhargava disagrees that the car is a status symbol. "It is a middle class necessity. Social status comes from how much you have jazzed up your car." And this is precisely what sets the Marutis apart. Those who don't have the money for expensive gadgetry make do with stickers, like the ones which proclaim: U-R-4-ME,—or—U-R-OK,—or—G-U-R-NICE—or—I-GO-4-U. But if someone were to design a sticker to express the feelings of envious Premier and Ambassador owners, its message to the pesky Marutis would only be: U-R-A-PAIN.

—RAMINDAR SINGH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Tradition in print since 1938... Deccan Chronicle Group – the voice of AP

What's on at the cinema?
What's up in Srinagar?

Deccan Chronicle Group has given the people of Andhra their oldest English newspaper. They have left their stamp in the State's history. From Razakar, right up to the present. The voice heeded in every AP home. The secret of this success? Reporting of regional news with authenticity and promptness. Everything everyone would like to know... from the crowded markets to the changing movies, from celebrity visits to sports events.

No advertiser entering the AP market can afford to ignore the Deccan Chronicle. It provides advertising mileage at its best. Even its classified columns have become a byword — dating back to the very first issue, in May 1938.

Yes, equipment and infrastructure has changed, to keep pace with the times. The latest in typesetting, pagenation and offset printing. But one thing remains unchanged... the traditional trust that readers have in the Deccan Chronicle. Loyal, eager readers, unwilling to settle for anything less than the regional fare provided, by the 'voice of AP'. Andhra's industrialists and trade choose it — use it — to communicate with Andhra readers. They are indeed invaluable — imparting life into the articles, with up-to-date commercial and financial news.

GOLDEN JUBILEE 50 1938 1987

Reach for Andhra with the DECCAN Chronicle Group

Published simultaneously from Hyderabad and Visakhapatnam. Soon to be published from Vijayawada and Nellore.

Imageads/DC/10187-1

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

QUIET.

The best-designed fans should be felt and not heard.

Everyone knows GEC make quiet fans. But what makes them so quiet?

GEC's concept of total engineering. Because GEC are designers and manufacturers. Specialists in aerodynamics. And not merely 'assemblers'.

Meticulous care is taken to ensure that every nut, every bolt, every component that goes into a GEC fan, is acquired from suppliers who are leaders in their own fields.

So whether it is the mini marvel Ventilair, a ceiling fan, or a giant fan for core industries — you can rest assured it is manufactured with the same precision engineering that GEC are known for.

Simply because no one understands fan technology better than GEC.

GEC Ceiling Fans
Goldline, Whispair, Classic. Available in ten sizes and a choice of two colours. Backed by 70 years of international experience.

GEC Exhaust Fans
Choose from 16 types — ranging from 305 mm to 915 mm. For all domestic, commercial and industrial applications.

GEC Air Circulators
Pedestal or brackets — a choice of six types.

New GEC Ventilair
Clears your kitchen or bathroom of stuffy air in 3 minutes flat. Available in two sizes: 230 mm and 305 mm.

New GEC Cooler Fan
510 mm. Specially designed for desert coolers.

New GEC Table Fan
400 mm. Oscillating type.

GEC Centrifugal and Axial Flow Fans
For ventilation. And process appliations in power, steel, fertilizer, marine, mining and off-shore installations.

GEC

GEC Fans. All you hear is the sound of silence

93E

Trade Mark GEC Permitted User — The General Electric Company of India Limited

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Imageads/DC/10187-1

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BUSINESS

Heading for Trouble

FOR three straight years in a row, Indian industry has lived through happy times, and companies have prospered under the benign gaze of a government that has sought to liberalise the business environment. Suddenly, however, there are problems in a host of sectors, and industrial production has dipped unexpectedly. Government spokesmen make light of the problem and welcome the new, competitive environment, but there could be cause for worry. A report:

A financially crippled man-made fibre company in Bombay has sold half its head office and is hawking some of its production units. A moped company in Bangalore, helpless despite a prestigious French collaboration, has closed shop and is also up for sale. A New Delhi company making light commercial vehicles with Japanese collaboration is losing money, and its share is now available at a quarter of the price that prevailed three years ago. And a fertiliser manufacturer in Rajasthan complains that he is forced to sell his accumulated stock at huge discounts because there is a glut in the market. He too is losing money.

In the Central Secretariat, one of the Government's most influential policy-makers on economic issues listens to the litany of problems and says: "I am not at all surprised. This kind of a shake-out in fact bears out the success of government policy of allowing open competition, of moving from shortages to surpluses." And in Udyog Bhavan, an Industry Ministry official argues likewise: "We are aiming at gearing policies towards adequate production and reasonable prices. We want a buyer's market, not a seller's market. Aren't we achieving these goals?"

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

From the other side of the fence, however, the grass doesn't look quite so green. As one sector of industry after the other rushes head-on into problems in production, pricing or marketing, as companies send out balance sheets with reduced profits or unalloyed losses, and as even the most rapidly growing sectors start applying the brakes, the mood in corporate offices is unmistakably worried. The crashing stock-market reflects that worry, and Surendra Paul of the Apeejay group (which has interests in tea, shipping, steel, hotels and several other sectors) declares: "There is always a time-lag between business feeling the pinch and the Government realising that there is a problem." Adds H.P. Nanda, chairman of Escorts (which had a poor 1986): "A buyer's market does make people more quality conscious, but it is also causing a corporate slump and underutilisation of capacity."

It isn't a case of industrial recession, or at least not yet. The economy is still growing at a reasonably healthy 4 per cent, industry has decelerated but has nevertheless been growing at over 6 per cent, and as S.S. Nadkarni, chairman of the Industrial Development Bank of India (IDBI), points out: "There is no slackening of investment intentions, nor a reduction in the demand for power. These and other factors certainly do not speak of business conditions causing concern."

But the fact also is that the Government's official index for manufacturing output—after adjustment for seasonal variations—shows a dip in production for both November and December (the latest months for which data are available). Though almost every official spokesman insists that things are just fine, there is little doubt of trouble brewing on the horizon.

INDEED, the storm signals can be read quite easily—not just in the nervousness on the stock market, and not just in the troubles consuming high-flying companies like Reliance Industries. Apart from the unexpected dip in the industrial production index in November and December, there is the dramatic drop in the number of companies approaching the capital market with share and debenture issues in recent months—a sure reflection of the investment climate changing (see box on page 106). There is also the fact that as many as 51 of the 141 industrial sectors that are monitored by the Government have shown a drop in production in 1986-87 (till December). Several other sectors have managed only marginal growth. Even where there has been substantial growth (as in man-made fibres and two-wheelers), supply has outpaced demand and resulted in several of the weaker companies going under.

According to the chairman of one of Bombay's monolithic financial institutions, fully half the sectors of Indian industry now face one kind of problem or the other. These include some areas in engineering, like the capital goods sector (which faces lack of demand), fertiliser (where a glut in the market has resulted from indiscriminate imports), cement (a drop in open market prices has slashed profitability), all sectors of the automobile industry (half the manufacturers of commercial vehicles, cars and two-wheelers have cut back production or fallen miles short of sales targets), most of the electrical sector, shipping (where numerous companies are dropping below the Plimsoll line), tractors and refrigerators. Among the basic metal industries, problems are faced in steel itself (with Tata Iron and Steel reporting lower profits and mini-steel units mostly losing money) and in aluminium (where production has fallen). Most sectors of the chemicals industry have shown only marginal growth, and the paper industry continues to be deep in trouble. The list can go on.

Several agro-based industries are doing moderately well (textiles, sugar, tea, vanaspati, even jute), and the petrochemicals sector also has few problems. But increasingly, such examples are proving to be the exceptions.

"I told you so," says Freddie Mehta, the Tata group's chief in-house economist and a director of Tata Sons. "Three years ago I predicted that 1987-88 will see the slaughter of Indian industry, and I have been proved right. Competition with a capital 'C' has come to India, and industry has to face it." He is of course dead right. The open-door licensing policy followed by the Government throughout most of the '80s has meant that droves of entrepreneurs have rushed into a few favoured fields: man-made fibres, electronics, two-wheelers, light commercial vehicles, cement and fertilisers. The result has been what the IDBI's Nadkarni calls a "bunching of investment", and sudden excess capacity in a market where demand cannot keep pace. The result is the inevitable shake-

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RELIANCE INDUSTRIES

Stumbling Giant

THROUGHOUT most of 1986, Reliance had been dogged by reports of trouble on the profitability front. And throughout most of the year, the Ambanis who run this corporate juggernaut had declared that there was nothing to worry about. The year would see both sales and profits "on target", they had declared; changes in duty levels, higher interest and depreciation charges, lower price realisation: nothing would hurt the company, the Ambanis had said.

In explanation, they argued that Reliance had protected itself by going into high-value yarn, that the company enjoyed unique economies of scale, and that some of the extra financial burden would be comfortably borne by additional production. Finally, the promise had been held out that "dividend distribution will also be better than in the past".

Last fortnight, those promises returned to haunt a company that suddenly seemed vulnerable. For, while sales had increased by a handsome 23.3 per cent (to Rs 904 crore), this was well short of the expected Rs 1,000 crore. And the net profit was disastrously down, plunging from Rs 71.34 crore to Rs 14.17 crore—the company's lowest since 1980.

The dividend was halved to 25 per cent, a promised issue of bonus shares was postponed, and projects that should have been commissioned by now were admitted to have been delayed—once again belying the company's reputation for implementing projects in double-quick time.

The worst part of the news was the fact that only six months earlier, the company had claimed a half-yearly net profit of Rs 22.56 crore. Reliance's founder-Chairman, Dhirubhai Ambani, had claimed for good measure that the second half would be even better than the first. Yet, the figures now showed that the company had incurred a net loss of Rs 8.39 crore in the second half of the year—perhaps unprecedented in the company's chequered history.

On a shell-shocked stock-market (where both Reliance and Ambani have demi-godlike status), the company's share crashed to its lowest level in three years, dropping from Rs 277 some weeks ago to as low as Rs 110 before beginning to climb back—helped by a couple of quick government decisions on import curbs and duty reductions.

But for the first time on the market, both Reliance and the Ambanis now faced a credibility problem. For, in November last year, when the company approached investors with a Rs 400-crore debenture issue, no indication had been given of the trouble that Reliance was in.

Chart by B K SHARMA

Dhirubhai's sons Mukesh and Anil—both executive directors of Reliance, and normally accessible to the press—now chose to play hide-and-seek. Finally tracked down, Mukesh professed that there was no problem at all: "We said that our operating profits would be good, and they are good," he declared blandly before blaming an additional Rs 35-crore interest burden on the then finance minister V.P. Singh's decision to ban the conversion of non-convertible debentures into shares last June. Yet, Anil Ambani had contemptuously dismissed calculations of a higher interest burden last year as "the stock-market brand of arithmetic".

If the tune throughout 1986 was that profits would not be affected by the problems that the company faced, the Reliance press release last fortnight spoke of four reasons for the slump in profits: unrestrained smuggling, unrestricted imports, higher duties and the extension of relief to polyester fibre to the disadvantage of polyester yarn.

But critics of the company pointed out that smuggling was not a new phenomenon, that the higher duties on its main raw material (purified terephthalic acid, or PTA) had been compensated by a drop in import prices, and that the tax favour to polyester fibre would have benefited Reliance more than anyone else since it had the maximum production capacity.

As for the charge of unrestricted imports, the figures available varied sharply. The Association of Synthetic Fibre Industry said that 24,000 tonnes of polyester staple fibre had been imported last year (five times the level two years earlier). In sharp contrast, figures with the textile commissioner's office showed that imports during the first 11 months of 1986-87 were up by less than 1,000 tonnes, to just 3,887 tonnes—a tiny fraction of the domestic production, which has grown by leaps and bounds.

Meanwhile, there were several other factors that could have helped cause the profit slump, including the additional interest burden and the plain fact that, with production capacity in the industry as a whole going up rapidly, competition in the market-place has acquired a new

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

...ge. Inevitably, profits are going to ...—as they have done for all Reliance's ...polyester rivals too.

Orkay Silk Mills, for instance, saw sales in 1985-86 drop 20 per cent (to Rs 150 crore), and profits by 25 per cent to Rs 18 crore). Century Enka had

Dhirubhai Ambani: setback

The sharp fall in profits, halving of dividend, below-target sales and the failure to live up to promises have suddenly made Reliance look like a vulnerable giant.

...her sales, but profits dropped almost ...per cent on a pro rata basis, to ...10.95 crore. And Petrofils found its ...tax profit crashing unceremoni-...—from Rs 36.1 crore to Rs 12.6 ...re. Even in comparison with these ...formances, however, Reliance did ...rly on a profits-to-sales ratio. But the ...kay share slumped even more dra-...ically than did Reliance, going from ...35 to as low as Rs 30 before beginning ...mild recovery.

Orkay may also have kept Reliance ...mpany in trying to suppress the bad ...s for as long as it could. For Orkay too ...e no indication of a sharp drop in ...its last year, just before its own debenture issue. And shortly afterwards, Orkay Chairman Kapal Mehra sold his options on the debentures at a staggering premium of Rs 27-crore. Soon after that, the company's share price began dropping. Said a leading stockbroker in Bombay: "There should be stringent penalties imposed on company managements that mislead investors."

As for the future, Reliance's fortunes may be on the upswing again, helped by what seemed to be an end to last year's flood of bad news from New Delhi. Polyester yarn prices have been ruling higher this year than in 1986 (caused, says the grape-vine in Bombay, by the fact that the producers have formed a price cartel), the Government has just taken polyester fibre off the open general licence (thus restricting its imports), and the import duty on Reliance's main raw material, PTA, has been reduced. Following these decisions, the company stopped offering discounts on its quoted prices last fortnight, thus improving its net price realisation on polyester fibre.

Reliance will also be able to register substantial growth in sales this year. Its polyester fibre unit has overcome the initial technical problems, and its new PTA and linear alkyl benzene units (raw material for detergents), representing a combined investment of nearly Rs 500 crore at the giant Patalganga complex, should be commissioned this year. The official projections for 1987 are a turnover of Rs 1,200 crore, a growth of over 30 per cent. And if the additional depreciation on the new plants does not prove too heavy a burden, net profit too should improve.

Nevertheless, the era of super-profits in operations may be well and truly over. And the forecast that Reliance had made two years ago, of a gross profit of Rs 400 crore in 1987 on a turnover of Rs 1,500 crore, is now hopelessly out of reach. Indeed, the drop from those ambitious levels indicates the kind of problems the company has run into in commissioning its projects and maintaining its profit margins.

Perhaps in tune with this, the company's next annual shareholders' meeting will not be held in an open-air field (as it has been in the last two years because the crowds of enthusiastic investors have been much too large for any auditorium). Instead, the shareholders will meet in the confines of Bombay's Shanmukhananda Hall.

—T.N. NINAN

out, with the inefficient companies dropping out of the race.

There would be little to worry about if the matter ended there. And what Government officials argue is that there is indeed nothing more to the present situation, and that the transitional problems being seen in some areas constitute the price of changing from a protected industrial environment to a more open, competitive system.

But what businessmen across the country point to now is a more broad-based problem, with worrying contours. In several sectors, demand has quite simply not come up to the projected levels—as in commercial vehicles. Said R. Seshasayee, executive director of Ashok Leyland: "Road transport has become unviable, so transport operators are not replacing their old vehicles, and the state transport corporations don't have money." Ashok Leyland Chairman Mantosh Sondhi adds that commercial vehicle production dropped 11 per cent last year, to 55,000.

DEMAND has been a constraint in cement too, with sales last year totalling only 36 million tonnes, against the expected 40 million tonnes. Prices crashed, as a result, and Y.K. Modi of Modi Cement argued that "new cement units are losing as much as Rs 350 per tonne".

In other areas, costs have gone through the roof because of changed taxation policies and the rapid devaluation of the rupee. DCM-Toyota is one example, and its Executive Director Vivek Bharat Ram argues: "The price of my vehicles has gone up from Rs 1.4 lakh (which is what we had planned) to nearly Rs 2 lakh because the Government has raised taxes and allowed the rupee's value to fall by 50 per cent against the yen. My production this year is half of the 8,000 that I had planned." Bharat Ram's rival, Vikram Lal of Eicher Mitsubishi, adds gloomily: "Many units will be forced to close down if the Government does not give us reliefs. We are selling half of what we had expected, and there is no hope of breaking even just now." And says Bharat Ram with a foreboding of doom: "We are only seeing the beginning of the recession."

Taxation policy seems to be the villain of the piece elsewhere too. D.D. Borwankar, executive director of the Steel Furnace Association of India, says that mini-steel units are now forced to sell below cost partly because tax changes have gone against them; and Sunder Vachani, man-

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SHARE MARKETS

Shell-shocked Stocks

WHEN stock-market news reaches the front pages of the daily newspapers, the news is either very good, or very bad. Unfortunately for millions of investors, many of them anxious neophytes watching helplessly as share prices crashed resoundingly all around them, the news wasn't good at all last fortnight. By one estimate, Rs 3,000 crore worth of stock value has already disappeared, many small fortunes have been wiped out, and many more great hopes shattered.

If Rajiv Gandhi's Budget on February 28 set off a selling wave in a market full of disappointed investors, a steady flow of company profit-and-loss reports since then talked of lower profits, squeezed margins and even outright losses. In the resulting mood of anxiety, the growing political uncertainty did not help, and the disastrous profit figures announced by Reliance Industries (see page 104) did the rest. The bottom virtually fell out of the stock-market last fortnight.

For weeks before that, the authorities in charge of regulating trading in the stock exchanges across the country had tried to stem the tide, without success. Whether they will have greater success in the future is anybody's guess. But the experts were united in their opinion last fortnight that the bullish, speculative boom of the last two years was well and truly over, that the market had entered a new 'bear phase', and that many investors, who had been frightened away by unexpected losses, might never return.

The rush of investors (totalling an estimated 7 million in 1985) had led to an unprecedented stock exchange boom two years ago, and changed the face of the capital market beyond recognition. But now things seemed to be changing once again, this time for the worse. Said Mahendra Kampani, president of the Bombay Stock Exchange: "Ups and downs are normal in the market. But we are worried today because there is a total change in the psychology of the investor." Added S. Ramaswami, president of the Madras Stock Exchange: "The new issues market has got completely shattered."

Certainly, the rapidly dropping prices on the stock-market seemed to bear that out. Several shares have lost half their value or more in the last year. The redoubtable Reliance itself, ruling at over Rs 350 last year, was now down to less than Rs 150. That drop alone cost investors a staggering Rs 1,000-crore. And Orkay Silk Mills crashed from Rs 190 two years ago to barely Rs 30 at one stage. Other leading scrips, like Tata Steel and Bajaj Auto, also lost ground. One expert's detailed analysis of share price movements showed that out of 63 shares studied, five had lost more than 40 per cent of their value during March and April alone, another seven had lost more than 30 per cent, 20 had lost over 20 per cent, and 17 had lost more than 10 per cent. In all, 60 of the 63 companies had lost ground in varying degrees.

In the process, millions of unwary and somewhat naive investors got their fingers badly burnt. Quick-buck operators had floated dud shares on the market, lured unsuspecting investors into their traps and then either disappeared or quite simply left shareholders in the lurch. M.R. Mayya, executive director of the Bombay Stock Exchange, estimated last fortnight that fully one-third of the companies floated in 1985 are no longer quoted on the stock exchange—because they have no buyers at all—and another 25 per cent have their shares quoted at less than their face value (so that the initial investors have lost money). "We have tightened the scrutiny of companies wanting to be listed on the stock exchange," Mayya added; but that amounted to locking the stable door after the horse had bolted. And in Calcutta, all that the local stock exchange President Dilip Khandelwal could say was: "Yes, it is true that many of the new companies took investors for a ride."

Capital market experts forecast last fortnight that the quantum of money raised by companies through share and debenture issues would now shrink, in a sharp reversal of the trend throughout the current decade. In 1980-81, only Rs 134 crore had been raised from investors in shares and debentures. By 1985-86, as new investors flooded the market, this shot up to an astronomical Rs 2,500

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

...ore, and then further to Rs 4,000 crore ...ast year. But the curve is now dipping. As ...the stock-market rage subsided through ...1986, the number of companies floating ...their stock dropped from 190 in the first ...quarter to 138 in the second, 120 in the ...third and just 78 in the final quarter. Said ...Kampani: "Today we have just seven or ...eight companies coming to the market ...every month. Many companies are post-...poning their share issues because they ...are not sure of the response."

A major part of the problem has, of course, been that business itself has been ...going through difficult times, with a ...general squeeze on profit margins mak-...ing balance sheets look much less attrac-...tive than a year ago. Detailed analysis of ...recent company balance sheets by ...Aridhi Investment Consultants showed ...that while sales on average had shown ...an increase of 13.5 per cent, gross profit ...had actually declined by 7.4 per cent, ...while net profit had dropped even more, ...by 11.6 per cent. Said Aridhi's Ram K. ...Paraiya: "The stock-market crash is a ...backlash to the poor company results." ...Added Delhi stockbroker Harish Bhasin: "Too many companies promised the ...moon and then failed to deliver."

In part, of course, the market has ...been helpless in the face of major politi-...cal tides ebbing and flowing. The spark ...that lit up the stock-markets in 1985 was ...provided by Rajiv Gandhi, who set off a ...wave of unprecedented optimism with ...his new approach to economic policies. ...But that mood has long since changed. ...Said P.C. Jain, president of the Delhi Stock Exchange: "People expected too much from the market after the Government's liberalised policies."

The new sobriety that has been born out of bitter disappointment could now have far-reaching implications. On the one hand, investors will be more choosy about what they put their money in. On the other, companies themselves will have to offer especially attractive propositions if they are to pull in investors.

The stock-market boom of the last two years is over. Many fortunes have been wiped out and today's investor is scared.

Kampani at the Bombay Stock Exchange

In the ultimate analysis, however, a revival of the stock-market is essential if companies' investment plans are not to get affected. Brokers mostly argue that the Government must take measures to boost the capital market once again. But with millions of investors having run away after getting mauled by both bulls and bears in the stock exchange jungle, the real corrective action may have to come, not from the Government, but from the stock-markets themselves.

—T.N. NINAN with TANIA MIDHA in Bombay and bureau reports aging director of Weston Electronics, adds that the higher duties on TV sets in the last budget have cramped demand at a time when excess capacity has already been built up. "The production capacity is 4 million, demand in 1990 will be no more than 2 million." Complains Vipin Luthra of Televista: "The Department of Electronics licenses television units freely, but the Finance Ministry treats it as a luxury item and taxes it."

Even in a reasonably comfortable sector like textiles, former Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry (FICCI) president D.C. Kothari complained that raw cotton prices had shot up by 35 per cent because of exports, while FICCI Secretary General D.H. Pai Panandikar argued that "there is a demand constraint".

The two-wheeler market has seen the maximum amount of action, with units closing down, stopping production, introducing new models and slashing prices. Lohia Machines and Kinetic Honda have both slashed prices in recent months, Enfield India plans to launch a new model because some of its existing ones have failed, while Lohia, Girnar Scooters and Automobile Products of India have already launched the Trident, Prince and Polo, respectively. Meanwhile, several companies and models have fallen by the wayside: Andhra Pradesh Scooters, Chamundi Mopeds, Kelvinator's Avanti, Scooters India. Companies that commanded hefty premiums (like Ind-Suzuki) now have a problem in selling. And even today's leaders, like Hero Honda, are barely out of financial trouble. Said Hero Honda's Managing Director Ramankant Munjal: "We hope to just about break even in 1986-87."

There will now be a comparable scramble in the field of man-made fibres, where supply will outstrip demand although the seventh plan's consumption targets for 1980-90 are already being achieved. Reliance's sharp drop in profits in 1986 was partly the result of the change in the demand-supply balance, and there will be still fiercer competition in the coming months. Said Harsh Goenka, whose India Polyfibres recently went into production: "We have entered a field where there is excess capacity, and we know that the inefficient will fall out of the market."

One company that has already caved in is Nirlon Synthetic Fibres and Chemicals, which took the disastrous course of investing in diversification and expansion when prices were falling, and was quickly caught in a financial bind. The company

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Bansi Dhar (inset) and DCM's fertiliser plant: losing money

Munjal (inset) and Hero Honda motorcycles: market glut

NAMAS BHOJNI

Sagar (inset) and Nirlon House: sold to raise cash

recently sold half its headquarters building in Bombay's Worli area, and some of its production divisions too are now up for sale. Said Managing Director Virenchee Sagar: "Frankly, we should have been more cautious. We are trying to jettison some divisions, and textiles is now a losing proposition for us. If the Government does not reduce duties, the future is bleak."

Perhaps the most avoidable problem of them all has been caused in the fertiliser industry, where excessive imports have resulted in a stockpile of some 3.5 million tonnes, which in turn has forced domestic manufacturers to offer discounts of up to 20 per cent of the normal selling price. Said Pratap Narayan, executive director of the Fertiliser Association of India: "All the fertiliser companies put together have lost Rs400 crore last year by being forced to give such discounts." Added the Chairman of DCM Bansi Dhar, whose fertiliser unit in Kota has been one of the victims of the prevailing market situation: "I am giving discounts that are more than my net realisation; I am losing Rs 200 on every tonne of fertiliser that I sell. But if I close down my factory, I will lose still more."

In engineering, the problem is the familiar one of lack of orders, and a resulting cash crunch. Said J.P. Choudhury, chairman of Titaghur Steels in Calcutta: "The liquidity problems have become serious; companies are not getting enough orders, and there are delays in payments by even public sector companies." Imports are yet another problem. Choudhury adds. "The Government must see to it that indigenous industry is not destroyed, because international companies are dumping their goods here as they are short of global orders."

Engineering, fertiliser, cement, man-made fibre, automobiles, steel, electronics: there are problems on all these and other fronts; problems ranging from cost increases to inadequate demand, and from tax burdens to imported competition. Some of the problems are certainly part of the transition from a shortage-oriented to a surplus-oriented economy, and those that are going under are the ones that cannot face up to the competition. But in all too many sectors, the problems go beyond this. And if correctives are not applied, or the monsoons fail again and depress all-round demand, Indian industry is in for hard times.

—T.N. NINAN with TANIA MIDHA, SURAJEET DASGUPTA and bureau reports

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

weekend hues in breezy blues.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Summer Stunners by

OCM

SUITINGS
THE PERFECT FABRIC

A Product of VXL India Ltd.
WE EXCEL

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

You know what the Italians are like. They live for beauty... and they build forever.

So it was only natural that when we wanted to bring you a flooring that was really special we went to Italy. Si. Si.

Regency Tiles are made in collaboration with Welko Industriale. The Italian company that's numero uno — number one — in the world.

Regency proves that tiles can be tough. Beautifully.

The colours are beautiful. From sophisticated pales to strong, dark hues.

You can mix and match colours. Add borders. Create designs... Yes, you can come up with something of an Italian masterpiece all your own!

Now you can forget the old problems with the old tiles.

Forget about days and days of tedious floor polishing. With Regency, your floor's ready... presto!

Forget the stains. The scratches. The cracks. Above all, forget the embarrassment of a clean floor that always looks dirty!

Just get Regency.
And live beautifully ever after!

Regency
Italian Ceramic Tiles

Choose the toughest floor. For the most beautiful reasons.

Regency Ceramics Limited

NN House,
Chirag Ali Lane, Hyderabad 500 001
Phones: 237266/233017
Telex: 0155-6953 RCL IN

Sista's-RCL 1/78/87 C

Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE New GENERATION SENSATION

Beauty. Accuracy. Dependability. A perfect blend created by the latest Japanese technology. In a wide winning range. Allwyn.

3-year guarantee

Time FOR THE NEW GENERATION

ALLWYN
WATCHES
Manufactured under licence from
SEIKO
Handwound • Automatic • Quartz

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

GOING INDIAN

ABBOTT Laboratories will become the first multinational drug company in India to reduce its foreign shareholding from 40 per cent to 26 per cent. An application has been filed with the Controller of Capital Issues for selling 14 per cent of the stock with Abbott's American parent company to one of the companies owned by Nusli Wadia, chairman of Bombay Dyeing. Whether control of the company's day-to-day management will also change is as yet unclear, but observers in the pharmaceutical industry are reasonably sure that although Wadia is not buying into the company purely as an investor, Abbott of the US will not give up all control immediately. Abbott's voluntary dilution of its foreign shareholding to 26 per cent had been preceded by several other drug companies voluntarily diluting their foreign shareholding to 40 per cent. But these were in order to escape the restrictions of the Foreign Exchange Regulations Act. The dilution of its foreign shareholding to 26 per cent by Abbott Laboratories does not have any such advantages.

REJECTED CASE

THE Government has turned down an application by—believe it or not—the Delhi-based Hindustan Times to diversify into the leasing and hire purchase business. The K.K. Birla-owned media outfit sought to set up a new division for the purpose and had applied for clearances under the MRTP Act. But at MRTP Commission hearings, company officials failed to furnish information on certain investment and financing details. The Government subsequently sent the company a reminder last December but received no response. So it concluded that the company was not interested in pursuing the application and rejected it.

SYNTHETIC SUITORS

IN the race for acquiring different units of Nirlon Synthetic fibres and Chemicals, there are unexpected entrants and drop-outs. The latest entrant is the London-based Abdul Shamji, who is obviously bounding back into business after running into problems earlier. But with the synthetic yarn industry turning out to be singularly unattractive, other suitors are dropping out, like the Mafatlals. Among those still in the running are R.P. Goenka and the Singhanias. Goenka has a polyester fibre unit going on stream shortly, and the Singhanias are already prominent in the field of synthetics. The Ruias are also in the race, but may not find favour with the financial institutions.

DIVERSIFYING PLANS

THE Nirma group (four companies that turned out washing powder worth Rs 200 crore last year) now plans to diversify into another consumer goods field: toiletries. Karsanbhai Patel, the man behind the Nirma success, proposes to start manufacturing toothpaste and other items—and presumably give Colgate-Palmolive a run for its money in the same manner that he has in the case of Hindustan Lever. Patel's other proposed diversification—for the manufacture of 50,000 tonnes annually of linear alkyl benzene—is still pending with the Government. Meanwhile, the newly introduced Nirma detergent cake has already cornered a substantial chunk of the washing market. As a result, turnover in 1987 is expected to be Rs 350 crore.

SLOW GROWTH

THE outlook for the world economy is not as rosy as might have been expected. According to the International Monetary Fund's (IMF) latest assessment, overall economic growth is expected to be no more than 2.7 per cent, down from the 1986 figure of 2.9 per cent (which itself was something of a disappointment, given the dramatic drop in oil prices). However, the IMF expects 1988 to see an improvement in growth, with a 3.1 per cent growth in global economic activity.

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

Developing countries are expected to suffer a relatively greater set-back in 1987, with growth dropping from 4 per cent in 1986 to around 3.5 per cent. But 1988 is expected to witness a more than 4 per cent rate of growth.

MEDICAL MOVE

LARSEN and Toubro, which had its proposal to manufacture video cassette recorders turned down a few months ago, is now making plans to enter the field of medical equipment. A Rs 25-crore project will turn out electro-cardiograph machines, as well as X-ray and ultra-sound equipment.

Medical equipment is largely imported (few big outfits manufacture it with the exception of Siemens) and the area is therefore viewed as a business opportunity. Meanwhile, the company (which reported lower profits last year) has surrendered its licence for tyres because this is no longer seen as a good investment, and is now looking around for other investment opportunities.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Look at our score —
One good performance after another

BOB hit the right strokes in over 500 Public Issues — to the tune of over Rs. 1100 crores in the past two years!

A staggering performance indeed. Our offices at strategic locations attract excellent collections and customers too. We also have a top place in Non-Resident collections.

Now announces the opening of Merchant Banking Bureaus at Ahmedabad, Calcutta & Madras

Century after Century

Our collections exceed:

Rs. 144 crores — Reliance 'F' Series

Rs. 195 crores — Reliance 'G' Series

Rs. 250 crores — From Non-Resident Indians in the past two years!

ISSUES MANAGED: OVER 125

Bank of Baroda
(A Government of India Undertaking)

MERCHANT BANKING DIVISION
16th floor, Stock Exchange Towers,
Dalal Street, Bombay 400 023.

Helping raise resources — resourcefully

imageads-BOB-8788

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PHARMACEUTICALS

Bitter Pill

SIX years ago, the big pharmaceutical companies in India got a shock when the Government fixed a host of drug prices at levels that the companies thought were unreasonably low. The companies went to court, armed themselves with stay orders and went ahead with charging what they wanted for their products. Along the way, they even got a favourable verdict from the Delhi High Court.

Now, in 1987, they have got an even bigger shock: they are being asked to pay for their past sins. In a stinging verdict, replete with indictments of the industry, the Supreme Court has charged the companies with 'profiteering', asked them to roll back prices to the levels which the Government had fixed, and (worst of all) to pay the Government the extra cash that they had meanwhile collected from customers.

For an industry already squeezed by low and shrinking profit margins, the total bill may be impossible to bear. No authenticated estimates are available, but going by government calculations, Hoechst alone could be asked to pay up over Rs 25 crore—more than its annual profits and financial reserves. The total bill for the industry could be anywhere between Rs 50 crore and Rs 100 crore. Companies like Glindia (formerly Glaxo Laboratories) could end up skipping their dividend altogether, and the Sarabhai-owned S.G. Pharmaceuticals could also find itself in an unexpected financial bind.

Inevitably, the pharmaceutical companies were virtually paralysed last fortnight. The few that managed to pick up the courage to appeal to the Government for mercy got an angry rebuff from officials, and on a panicky stock-market the shares of drug companies plunged dramatically. Only late last fortnight, were there any indications that the Government might decide to soften its stand—perhaps in an effort to avoid further litigation in the form of a review petition.

In at least some cases, the drug companies had, of course, been unconsciously fleecing the consumer. Hoechst, for instance, was charging Rs 24,735 per kg of Baralgan Ketone, a bulk drug used to make an anti-spasmodic formulation, when the government-fixed price was no more than Rs 1,010. In fact, the company wanted from the Government a price that was less than Rs 9,000 per kg. Yet it continued to charge Rs 24,735 throughout the pendency of the court case.

Other companies may be less guilty, and their financial implications therefore, may also be less than cataclysmic. Cyanamid India, for instance, was the first company to go to court on the pricing issue, and maintained its Director for Finance R.C. Jhaveri: "We are still studying the implications of the verdict. We don't feel that we will have to refund any money."

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

The Supreme Court's stinging verdict, asking drug companies to cut prices to the government-fixed levels, and pay up the extra cash collected, may be too large a burden for the industry.

The Supreme Court verdict specially forbids companies from going back to court, and asks them to go to the Government with petitions for reviewing the prices fixed. And Pfizer Director Dilip Shah admitted that "going by the judgement, we cannot ordinarily challenge government-fixed prices in a court of law". But if the companies don't get the prices that they think are essential to carry on their business profitably, they might go back to the court nevertheless. Said Harish Chawla, Cipla director: "Companies will have no alternative but to go in appeal to a full bench. Otherwise they are doomed. Their right to go to court has been snatched away."

Many people in the industry feel that the court has been less than fair to the companies. One example cited is the judges' observation that the central issue was a fair price for the consumer, and the industry's need for a minimum economic price was a subsidiary objective. Following this, the court did not consider the industry's costs while upholding the government-fixed prices, and left this task to the Government. The court also declared that, price-fixing being a 'legislative' activity, no principles of natural justice need be followed. This was in sharp contrast to the earlier judgement of the Delhi High Court, which had maintained that the Government should give the drug companies the cost data on the basis of which the industry's prices were being fixed.

The drug companies' effort now is to minimise the damage, partly by claiming set-offs against the otherwise large sums that may be due, and partly by pointing out that the industry cannot survive and provide medicines if they can't get a fair return. Spokesmen for the companies have also pointed out to the Government that the pharmaceuticals industry's pre-tax profits have slumped from 15.47 per cent of sales to 4 per cent last year. And Pfizer has written to the Government, that it closed its last accounting year with profits of just 0.5 per cent of its Rs 68 crore sales. It added that, at current prices, the company would make a net loss this year, even though it has already discontinued the production of some 20 loss-making drugs.

What will finally happen to a troubled industry remained to be seen. But in one sense at least, the consumer might not benefit from the Supreme Court's concern. The extra money he has paid over the years for his drugs will be deposited by the companies into a government account. What is more, the Government is about to announce new drug price-control regulations, and several drugs will be freed from the price-control basket. If these include the drugs the court has dealt with, the manufacturers will be free once again to charge what they wish—without fear of being forced into the sick bay.

—TANIA MIDHA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BOMBAY DYEING PACKS THE EXCITEMENT BACK INTO UNIFORMS!

There's something cooking for all chefs.

Waiters, too, need wait no more.

Lab assistants need stop experimenting.

Florence Nightingales needn't tiptoe the corridors silently anymore.

Mechanics needn't go nuts.

And school kids can start smiling.

It's goodbye to dull, drab, tiresome and ho-hum uniforms.

Because the Bombay Dyeing Uniform Collection is here.

And the excitement begins.

Be uniformly different in —

- Moderata Polyester Blended Suitings
- Bullet Polyester Blended Suitings
- Quality 2878 Polyester Blended Shirtings
- Princy Polyester Blended Shirtings

Available in a range of colours.

BD/466

POLYESTER BLENDED UNIFORM MATERIAL FROM

BOMBAY DYEING

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ORIENTAL FINANCE

Smooth Scam

CAN Kerala's once-booming non-banking finance companies be depended on? Last fortnight, there were no prizes for answering that question after Sajan Varghese of the high-profile Oriental Finance and Exchange Company sought anticipatory bail, fearing arrest by the Madras police for cheating his depositors. When the sessions court at Madras rejected the bail application, Sajan simply disappeared.

The sensational bursting of the deposit bubble shocked countless depositors of Kerala's "blade companies"—so called because of the cut-throat interest rates they charge. The closure of all 20 branches of Oriental was not all. Five other companies in the business also closed shop last fortnight. Among them was Samarias Financiers, once a leading name, which shut down all its 11 branches located within the state and outside.

When the Reserve Bank of India (RBI) had asked for financial statements of all the companies in the business towards the end of 1985, Oriental had claimed that up to August 1985 it had only 1,830 depositors with accounts worth Rs63.31 lakh. But senior RBI officials feel that Sajan collected over Rs 15 crore from 40,000 depositors, big and small, in the last four years.

Sajan's success story in the early '80s is the stuff of which best sellers are made. Rising from relative obscurity as manager of one of the early "blade" companies, Sajan started his own company and soon grew into one of the most well-established names in the business.

His life-style was the envy of even film stars in Kerala. At one time, he had three Mercedes Benz, two Toyotas and a Honda. He built an air-conditioned mansion in Kottayam at an estimated cost of Rs 35 lakh and bought a Trivandrum hotel. According to Muthoot Pappachan, a leading private financier, "Sajan's life-style fooled everybody. His depositors were so awed by his style that they forgot to ask how he managed to give them a 33 per cent interest on deposits."

Pappachan and other financiers allege that Sajan did not loan out his deposits at all. His modus operandi in the last four years was simple—he issued full-page and half-page advertisements in leading newspapers promising to give 33 per cent on deposits, and this lured greedy investors in droves. Argued Pappachan: "If Sajan was paying 33 per cent when we were giving 18 per cent to 20 per cent, he should have made loans at 46 to 48 per cent to make a profit." Bankers in the state feel that no businessman could have afforded these rates. The theory, therefore, is that Sajan was paying his depositors from the principal itself, and diverting the rest of the money into film production, real estate and lavish living.

The closure of the Oriental Finance and Exchange Company, following Varghese's disappearance, has shocked Kerala's depositors.

Sajan Varghese's hotel: high profile

Flush with funds, Sajan started making films in 1983. He produced or distributed as many as 13 Malayalam films and five Tamil films, but most of them bombed at the box-office. The only real success was Avanazhi, the I.V. Sasi-directed thriller.

The proverbial last straw was Sajan's latest production, Kadathanadan Ambadi, an action-packed Malayalam fantasy. The film overshot its Rs 50-lakh budget to reach the Rs 1-crore mark. To raise money to complete the film, Sajan planned another deposit mobilisation scheme.

But early this year, the Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices Commission (MRTPC) took notice of his methods and restrained Oriental from issuing any more advertisements. Sajan tried to use posters instead, but the commission came to know about it and directed the Madras police to stop him.

In desperation, Sajan started borrowing from Marwadi financiers in Madras to keep himself afloat. The inflow of deposits was reduced to a trickle and, amid rumours of an impending crash, some large depositors withdrew their balances. Sajan's cheques began bouncing and finally, on a complaint by J.M. Ranjithan, a retired additional superintendent of police who was one of his depositors, the Madras police registered a case of cheating against Sajan and his partners, his brother and father.

Several of Sajan's depositors in Kerala have formed associations, but it is unlikely that they will get their money back. Samarias' depositors too have formed an action council and demanded a probe into the activities of private financing firms. Said a senior RBI official: "The crash of Oriental and others in the last month has made the people aware of the risk involved in blade companies. A run has started on the remaining ones and very few are likely to survive."

The Government too has sat up and taken notice. Said Viswanatha Menon, the new Marxist finance minister: "We will be amending the laws to counter the 'blade' menace though, at present, there is no legal provision to deal with them effectively."

Meanwhile, a massive manhunt has been launched by the Madras police to track Sajan down. An enterprising producer has announced a film based on the life and times of Sajan Varghese. Mammooty, Kerala's top star, will play the title role. Film or not, Kerala is unlikely to forget the man for a very long time.

—SREEDHAR PILLAI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

"Last time the lights went out, I lost 30 customers to my rival," moaned Sharmaji

Bihari Lal and Sons got a lot of new customers that day. They'd switched on their Little Genie genset, you see.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Nobody buys a saree in the dark, or jewellery, or a cassette player, or ... Actually nobody buys anything in the dark.

Does that mean every time the lights go out, you have to drive all those customers, all that business, away?

Not any more!

The magic answer!

Did you know, whenever the lights go out, you just have to give one tug to the Little Genie's starter, to light things up again. Anytime, anywhere. At home. In a shop or showroom. In offices, workshops, clinics or banks. And for outdoors too – mobile vans, camping sites, film/video shooting units ... you name it.

Little Genie – specially designed to suit Indian conditions

The Little Genie is a unique, tropicalised genset.

It functions silently and efficiently, even at high temperatures. Individual cooling fans for the alternator and the engine, and a special open construction make sure of that.

All parts are corrosion resistant, so it can withstand the roughest weather.

And a special compact design makes it easier to handle and maintain.

Protects your expensive gadgets too

A brushless generator design, perfected by Yamaha engineers, ensures constant output. So when you switch on the Little Genie, your valuable electronic gadgets like personal computers, TVs, videos, electronic typewriters ... will never get damaged by voltage fluctuations. We even have a built- in voltmeter on the genset, to set any doubts at rest.

A range of models to suit your needs

We have a range of handy models from 0.5 KVA to 2.35 KVA, with easy-to-maintain, dependable two-stroke engines or powerful 4 stroke engines. One will be just right for you.

A one year guarantee and fully equipped service centres

With Birla Yamaha gensets you get a one year guarantee, efficient after-sales service, and readily available spares, if you ever need them. Fully equipped service centres all over the country and our skilled service personnel make sure of that.

Why wait until dark!

Thousands of Birla Yamaha gensets are already with their happy owners.

And now, you too can get the better of power cuts and loadshedding. Just fill in the coupon below, and rush it to us.

And then, the Little Genie will soon be bringing in more and more business for you!

Yamaha of Japan. A Company with so many achievements.

Yamaha Motor Company, one of Japan's largest corporations, is backed by advanced, innovative technology. And it is involved in a wide range of activities. From robotics, motor cycles, outboard motors and multipurpose engines, to fibreglass reinforced plastic boats and of course gensets.

Yamaha has a string of impressive achievements to its credit.

- It is the first company to introduce the oil warning system for its gensets.
- The only company to manufacture in-house, both the alternator and the engine for its gensets.
- The first to adopt the brushless generator design for all its models.

And that's not all! Yamaha is the first to produce fibreglass reinforced plastic boats in Japan. And it is a world leader in motor cycles, outboard motors and snowmobiles too.

Please rush me:

☐ Free information folder ☐ Order form

☐ Name and address of the nearest dealer

I want a Little Genie for my:

☐ Home ☐ Office ☐ Workshop ☐ Shop ☐ Clinic ☐ _____

Name _____

Occupation _____

Address _____

_____

Name of Magazine _____

Marketing Division

BIRLA YAMAHA LTD.

A-7, South Extn Part-1,
Ring Road, New Delhi-110049.

Sista's-BYL-228/87

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri
CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

UCIL

Curious Closure

THE Bhopal gas tragedy claimed another industrial victim last month when Union Carbide India Ltd (UCIL) announced the closure of its profitable petrochemicals plant in Bombay, thereby losing its second plant. Three years ago, Carbide had agreed to sell the plant to Reliance Industries, which, however, backed out after the Bhopal disaster. Other problems then dogged the plant—new safety needs, huge claims and a court case—till the management finally applied for closure to the Maharashtra Government.

The announcement came a full year after UCIL shut down the plant, called Chemco within the corporation, ostensibly to implement the recommendations of the R.K. Garg Committee set up by the Maharashtra Pollution Control Board to evaluate safety systems in hazardous industries. Curiously, the decision also came exactly four months after UCIL announced a phased restarting of Chemco last December. But just four days after the company made public its plan to make the plant fully operational by June, the Supreme Court gave its landmark judgement in the Shriram Foods and Fertilisers' oleum gas leak case, setting rigid standards of liability for those running hazardous industries.

This judgement had sent UCIL's top management scurrying for legal advice, only to confirm the worst fears of Chemco workers. Faced with criticism, even within the corporation, that the Supreme Court judgement was being used as an excuse to implement an earlier decision, UCIL Managing Director V.P. Gokhale issued a 20-minute videotape to all employees explaining the company's stand. "It is in the interest of everybody that Chemco should run," said the suave Gokhale. "But according to legal opinion, we cannot afford to restart the plant. So we decided to sell, and the only solution was for Chemco to be taken over by a public undertaking."

UCIL was agreeable to Chemco's take-over by the Government, with the money to be kept in escrow until the Bhopal case was decided. But with the Supreme Court ruling of "absolute liability", and with the state Government putting Chemco on a list of seven companies to be shifted out of the heavily polluted Chembur area of Bombay, both UCIL and the Government are caught in a double bind. If the state Government refuses UCIL permission to close the plant, then it will have to share responsibility in case of a mishap. But if the plant is allowed to close down, more than 900 employees will go jobless.

Though Chemco was shut down for maintenance a year ago, all employees have been retained on full wages. UCIL claims it lost Rs 9 crore in 1986 on repairs and wages, a figure it also flaunts as proof of its resolve to re-start the plant until the court judgement swept the ground from under its feet. But the workers remain un-convinced. "They were just preparing a case on how to close down Chemco permanently," says K.S.S. Narayanan, general secretary of the employees union. "There is a planned move to liquidate UCIL, and it is the parent Union Carbide in the US which decided to shut Chemco down. A time will come when UCIL will be left with only a skeleton staff fighting the Bhopal case."

While state government officials decline comment on the case, Gokhale insists the company explored all avenues before asking for closure. Before it was shut down, Chemco contributed more than a quarter of UCIL's annual turnover of Rs 244 crore, and controlled nearly 80 per cent of the market for wire and cable LDPE (low density polyethylene). Besides housing India's oldest naphtha cracker, the 26-year-old plant also has an olefin complex and an organic chemicals unit. But with a production capacity of just 20,000 tonnes per annum of LDPE, its future became bleak when the giant public sector Indian Petrochemical Complex began marketing 80,000 tonnes of LDPE from 1979, and began constructing a 300,000 tonne ethylene unit near Bombay.

UCIL has, in the last two years, tried to save Chemco by asking the Government to either allow it to shift and expand capacity or allow a technology change from the riskier high pressure process to the safer low pressure one. The Government turned down both proposals. In fact, the feasibility study on a possible plant shift from Chembur, which UCIL commissioned Engineers India Ltd to prepare, put a capacity of 80,000 tonnes as an economically viable size.

Until the Supreme Court judgement, UCIL was also pressuring the state Government to allow Chemco to remain in Chembur, with a change in technology and a 200-metre buffer zone. However, not only has the state Government refused to do anything about the hutment and housing colonies that have sprung up around the plant, but, as if to underline its total lack of a cohesive policy, a state minister even inaugurated a school last August just outside Chemco's boundary wall. Now, faced with the demand for closure of the plant from UCIL, the state Government appears bereft of ideas on saving the plant and the jobs that go with it. "Workers have just become pawns," complains Narayanan. "The average age of Chemco workers is 38 years, and at this stage what chance do we have of finding alternative jobs?" With neither UCIL nor the state and Central governments coming up with an alternative plan for Chemco's future, the employees appear more or less resigned to the prospect of unemployment and the closure of India's oldest petrochemicals plant.

—M. RAHMAN

Carbide's Chembur plant and surrounding slums: hazardous

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Chennai and eGangotri

No other airline flies so many businessmen to so many places in Africa

Have business interests in Africa! Fly ETHIOPIAN, the businessman's airline. We have excellent connections and more frequencies to the following destinations.

Abidjan • Accra • Addis Ababa • Asmara • Bamako • Brazzaville • Bujumbara • Cairo • Dakar • Dar-es- Salaam • Dire Dawa • Djibouti • Douala • Entebee • Harare • Khartoum • Kigali • Kilimanjaro • Kinshasa • Lagos • Luanda • Monrovia • Nairobi and Niamey.

And of course, your precious cargo too will receive our utmost care.

DEPARTURE

Bombay — Addis Ababa	Tuesdays 4.15 A.M.
Bombay — Beijing	Thursday 8.15 A.M.
	Sundays 9.00 P.M.

ETHIOPIAN AIRLINES:

Taj Mahal Hotel, Apollo Bunder, Bombay 400 039, Tel: 2024525, 2029378

Janpath Hotel, Janpath Marg, New Delhi, Tel: 351235/350070 Ext. 2

Our General Sales Agents:

STIC TRAVELS
Bangalore — Tel: 565566
Calcutta — Tel: 292323
Faridabad (Haryana) — Tel: 3473
Hyderabad
Madras — Tel: 471195, 475332
SHEBA TRAVELS
Ahmedabad — Tel: 445317

ETHIOPIAN AIRLINES

Going to great lengths to please

GJA:2011

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TETRA-BRICK DRINKS

Fresh Flavours

SUDDENLY this summer, the trickle has turned into a flood. Where Parle's Frooti and Appy had ruled for well over a year, rival companies are rapidly flooding shop shelves with a spectrum of juices, flavoured milks and soya milk-based drinks—all packaged in revolutionary new 'tetra-bricks' or laminated boxes.

Last fortnight, the Godrej-backed Noble Soya kicked off a range of soya milk-based drinks in Bombay under the Great Shake label. Not to be outdone, the Tamil Nadu Cooperative Milk Producers' Federation unveiled a chocolate-flavoured milk called Goodness in Madras, with more flavours to follow. Others too are vying for the consumer's attention: Amul's flavoured milks; the Gujarat Agro Industries Corporation's Jive (a mango drink); and Volfruit mango and orange juices and drinks, the offshoot of a venture between Voltas and the Punjab Government.

So far, most of the new liquids are flourishing in the marketplace. Parle turns out 300 Frooti packets a minute and is furiously readying to commission four more plants round the country. "Frooti sales are booming," chuckles Parle Chairman Ramesh Chauhan. And Voltas was sufficiently buoyed by the success of Volfruit in Lucknow and Kanpur last June to launch the juices and drinks in Bombay, Pune and Delhi three months ago. Says R.N. Mukherjee, general sales manager of Voltas' consumer products division: "Volfruit is moving so fast it hardly has any shelf-life." Even the Tamil Nadu Federation hawked 2 lakh packets in the first four days after its chocolate milk was launched, ringing up sales of Rs 5 lakh—although a 200 ml packet at Rs 2.50 is priced at 90 paise more than its bottled chocolate milk.

Most market observers believe the going will only get better. Says Ravi Sheth, Noble Soya's vice-president for finance: "The market will grow by leaps and bounds." Echoing the point, Mukherjee of Voltas predicts that the Rs 10-crore market will balloon to Rs 50 crore over the next three years. Indeed, such estimates could be conservative. Goodness alone will add Rs 9 crore to the Tamil Nadu Federation's Rs 100-crore sales turnover when its plant runs to full capacity. "No one really knows how much the market will grow. We had not expected the response we got," confesses Mir Khayam Ali, the Federation's marketing manager.

Several factors have combined to bring about the boom. For one, the Government relaxed food machinery import procedures two years ago, permitting entrepreneurs to bring in packaging machines (some 29 have been imported from Tetrapac, the Swedish packaging company). Then, the Government jacked up the excise duty on carbonated drinks in the last budget, from around 30 paise to 50 paise a bottle, while leaving milk exempt from excise duty and the 10 per cent ad valorem tax on juices untouched. That pushed up the price of fizzy drinks, narrowing their price edge over juices and milk—provided these were packaged right. Luckily enough, the seven-layered laminate required for tetra-brick packets was readily available and no longer had to be imported: a National Dairy Development Board concern makes it in Gujarat.

Throw away tetra-bricks offer consumers, retailers and manufacturers several advantages over glass bottles. They are convenient to carry, unbreakable, take up little shop space, have a shelf-life of up to six months, and retailers and consumers do not have to deposit money for them. What is more, some 40,000 packets can be packed into a truck as against around 6,000 bottles, offering manufacturers obvious cost benefits. Adi Godrej, chairman of Noble Soya says: "Bottled drinks have a fundamental problem of transportation and are available within a given radius around city bottling centres. Tetra-bricks will change all that."

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

A spectrum of juices, flavoured milks and soya milk-based drinks, packaged in new tetra-bricks, has suddenly flooded shop shelves.

Tetra-bricks and the new drinks could change more than that. In theory at least, they could cut into the Rs 400-crore annual sales of fizzy drink manufacturers. "Beverages packed in tetra-bricks could eat into bottled drink sales—that's what we're aiming at, now that prices are on a par," says Javed Merchant, an executive from the Tamil Nadu milk outfit. Quick to recognise the edge the new packaging enjoys, Chauhan concedes the point: "They have not so far, but they might."

For all that, even the most optimistic do not quite believe that the new drinks will wipe out their bottled brethren. Argues Sheth: "The bottle era will not end with the new packaging. The new drinks will affect the carbonated drinks market only to a certain extent." Quite simply, the economics weigh heavily in favour of bottles. Bottles are reused some 20 times, effectively cutting their cost to less than 25 paise each. In contrast, each tetra-brick costs manufacturers almost 75 paise, the printing included. And with a profit of under 5 per cent, tetra-brick drink manufacturers cannot afford to cut prices.

"If the Government slaps additional tax on us, we're sunk. The costs are so tight that there is no room for price cuts," says an industry executive. Still, such fears could be premature. Amid a new-found awareness of the food industry's importance, the Government is unlikely to nip a growing business in the bud. For the moment, the industry is feverishly gearing up to jack up production levels. As the executive puts it: "We think these drinks will catch on."

—PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI and M. RAHMAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Care [kār] v. feel concern or interest; have liking for or wish to do; provide for. At the new Oberoi, Bombay we really know how to take care of you. Throughout your stay you'll be looked after by your own personal butler who will attend to your every need. Whether it's arranging for a suitcase to be unpacked and packed or simply replacing a button, he will always be there to take care of you in the nicest possible ways. Personal butler service — because you deserve the best the world has to offer.

The Oberoi
BOMBAY

For reservations contact your Travel Agent or the Hotel direct: telephone 202 5757, telex 4153/4154 OBBY IN. Or any of the Oberoi Sales Offices.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Air India and Boeing started setting jet age records together in 1960.

The partnership began February 21, 1960, the day Air India's first commercial jetliner – a Boeing 707 – arrived in Bombay.

That 707 had just set two new records : 4 hours, 34 minutes from Seattle to New York; 8 hours, 5 minutes from London to Bombay.

It was a good beginning.

Within two years, Air India had become the world's first all-jet commercial fleet, flying Boeing 70 exclusively.

Air India continued to be a leade In 1971 the airline acquired its fir 747.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

g. dia had st all-jet Boeing 70

be a leader hired its fir

, 27 years after the initial ership was formed, Air India operated Boeing airplanes on y 350,000 flights – about
,000 hours of flying time.

, Air India is considering other important step forward in transportation with the purchase
Boeing 747-300 Combi, a larger and more versatile long range jetliner capable of carrying both passengers and cargo to distant cities.

Air India and Boeing. Partners in aviation for 27 years. And still looking to the future for new challenges, new opportunities.

BOEING

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE PARK AVENUE LOOK
Readymade for you

Park Avenue
Menswear by Raymond's
Safaris — Designer Collection

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RICE

Staple Decline

The latest economic survey by the Kerala state planning board says that 52,098 hectares of paddy land were converted last year into coconut plantations or reclaimed for housing purposes.

AT a luncheon meeting with the Trivandrum press corps last fortnight, Kerala Chief Minister E.K. Nayanar made clear his preference for typical Kerala-style fish curry and rice. Echoing the sentiments of millions of Keralites, he said: "At least once a day I need my quota of rice to keep me going." Indeed, rice is associated with Kerala even more than coconut palms.

Yet, paddy cultivation is now on the decline in the state. Increasingly, wet paddy lands lie fallow or are put to other uses. The acreage under paddy has fallen steadily over the years, and in the state's volatile real estate market, the price of paddy land has risen much slower than other kinds of property. The result is that, despite an increase in productivity per acre, and despite substantial investment for irrigating paddy land, Kerala's rice production today is noticeably lower than it was a decade ago.

The latest economic survey by the state planning board says that 52,098 hectares of paddy land were converted last year into coconut plantations or reclaimed for housing. This was partially responsible for a 6.6 per cent drop in rice production during the year. But the more worrying fact for state planners is that the decline in both acreage and production is part of a longer trend.

In 1975, the state had 8.81 lakh hectares under paddy; by 1986 this had fallen to an all-time low of 7.07 lakh hectares. A state Agriculture Department official predicted last fortnight that the figure would soon drop to 5 lakh hectares. A decade back, Kerala's rice production amounted to 1.33 million tonnes. Last year the figure was down to 1.23 million—less than a third of the state's requirement.

The experts point to several factors accounting for this unexpected phenomenon: the high price of farm labour (as much as Rs 40 per day—more than double the rate in neighbouring Tamil Nadu) resulting from widespread unionisation and protective laws, the continuing prevalence of absentee landlords (with thousands of Keralites moving to other states or overseas in search of a living), the surge in demand for house-hold land as non-resident Keralites have sought a base back home, and the spread of urbanisation in a state with the highest man-land ratio in the country.

Before the shift away from paddy cultivation began, in the mid-1970s, there were vast paddy fields on either side of National Highway 47, which links Trivandrum to Cochin. Today, the paddy fields are still there, but they are interspersed with concrete hotels, hospitals and shopping complexes. The paddy fields around Trivandrum have been swallowed up by a spreading city. And in Tiruvalla, part of the Kuttanad rice bowl in central Travancore, palatial houses have emerged in the middle of paddy fields, most of them built by non-resident Indians. Said Nandakumaran Nair, a farmer in Tiruvalla: "Rice cultivation is no longer profitable. Our paddy fields have been given to private builders. We will use ration shop rice at home."

As Dr P.G.K. Panicker, former director of the Centre for Development Studies (CDS) in Trivandrum said: "Rice cultivation in Kerala is not viable because the cost of production is increasing steadily, while the price of paddy has remained more or less static." Added Dr K.P. Kannan, associate fellow at CDS: "The Gulf boom and the consequent rise in real estate prices have forced many people to convert wet lands into house sites, especially near the cities."

Some economists believe that this change is a social necessity in a state with an ever-exploding population. The state Government had in fact sought to preserve paddy fields a few years ago by passing the Kerala Land Utilisation Act. This made it impossible to convert paddy fields into land for housing, but the law has remained ineffective. Agriculture Minister V.V. Raghavan admitted that in most cases district collectors have been asked not to thrust the Act on farmers.

As an incentive to paddy cultivation, the state Government has been providing substantial subsidies to the farmers at nearly Rs 1,100 per hectare for pumping, fertilisers and plant protection. And Agriculture Minister V.V. Raghavan emphasised: "We will continue to cultivate rice on the existing land, and to attract unemployed youth we are planning to provide free tillers." But a state Agriculture Department official warned that paddy cultivation could decline still further, and that this would have serious repercussions on milk production as the straw required for cattle comes from paddy cultivation. Already, a common sight on the state's highways is trucks coming from Tamil Nadu laden with hay. But unmindful of such macro-economic developments, Kerala's rice cultivators have their eye on lucrative real estate projects rather than their traditional staple diet.

—SREEDHAR PILLAI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE MARKETS

Dramatic Drop

LAST fortnight belonged to Reliance Industries on the stock-market—in a rather unhappy manner. The belated announcement of the company's results, with a dramatic drop in net profits and a halving of the dividend to 25 per cent, sent the market crashing downward in shock and sympathy. In the process, Rajiv's tax concessions—announced in winding up the Finance Bill debate—were scarcely noticed.

The market rallied weakly at the end of the fortnight, but it was not clear whether this was more than a temporary adjustment caused by bears covering their positions and by investors looking for good buys at the low prices. The mood in the trading ring through the fortnight did not spell hope. What might just do the trick, however, was the announcement that polyester staple fibre was being taken off the open general licence for imports, and that the duty on both purified terephthalic acid and dimethyl terephthalate had been reduced. Both will help Reliance and the synthetic yarn, fibre and textile industry. But despite pulling up from the unofficial low of Rs 110, Reliance was still ruling at barely half the year's peak level of Rs 277, symbolising the troubled times that the company and the stock-market have been going through.

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

The Economic Times share index reflected the selling wave, dropping from 247.5 at the start of April to as low as 227.7 on May 5 before curling upward again. Several scrips touched their lowest point of the year. Reliance and Orkay dipped dramatically, as did Tata Steel, Bajaj Auto, Tata Engineering and National Organic. Orkay, however, virtually sank to the floor, halving its value in one fortnight and closing at Rs 35 amid reports that its management had been trying to shore up the price and had finally over-stretched itself. Financiers who had funded some of the purchases decided to liquidate their holdings, provoking the crash of a share that once ruled at Rs 190.

The financial institutions, some of which had begun to make selective purchases earlier, wisely chose to stay away, since none of their interventions could have helped stem the tide. Whether they and other investors will now return to the market, sensing good pickings at the present deflated prices, is now the key question. While several leading sectors of industry face a squeeze on margins and problems in the marketplace—reflected in the mixed flow of corporate results—the economy remains sound, and industrial growth at over 6 per cent is not bad. But the balance may be swung by the fact that money which had flowed into the stock-markets from other commodity markets may have started going out again—especially into the booming bullion markets.

ACTIVE STOCKS

	1987 HIGH	LOW	CLOSE 7.5.87	Change in Fortnight
Ashok Leyland	35.50	28.00	32.00	3.00 +
Associated Cement	241.50	172.00	181.00	9.00 +
Atlas Copco	150.00	105.00	118.00	4.00 +
Asian Paints	272.50	207.50	250.00	2.50 +
Avery India	169.00	145.00	145.00	6.00 –
Bajaj Auto	4925.00	3950.00	4350.00	200.00 –
Baroda Rayon	260.00	205.00	233.75	3.75 +
Bata India	160.00	120.50	136.00	11.25 +
Bayer	785.00	600.00	765.00	17.50 +
Bharat Forge	75.00	63.00	71.00	4.00 +
Birla Jute	50.75	45.00	48.00	1.50 +
Blow Plast	126.00	92.50	103.00	8.00 –
Bombay Dyeing	75.00	40.50	71.00	6.50 +
Brooke Bond	101.00	77.00	94.00	4.50 +
Ceat Tyres	70.00	48.00	65.00	2.50 +
Century Spinning	810.00	665.00	685.00	10.00 +
Chloride India	148.00	80.00	85.00	0.50 +
Colgate	391.25	327.50	362.50	18.50 –
E.I. Hotels	56.00	41.00	42.50	0.50 –
Eskayef	247.50	171.25	220.00	3.75 –
DCM	39.00	23.00	23.00	2.25 –
Dunlop	77.75	71.25	72.50	0.25 –
Elecon	125.00	86.25	100.00	8.75 +
Escorts	84.00	46.00	48.00	0.75 +
Finolex Cables	182.50	114.00	177.50	12.50 +
Food Specialities	188.50	140.00	151.00	8.00 –
Garware Polyester	97.00	69.00	76.00	4.00 +
G.E. Shipping	22.50	16.00	18.00	1.00 +
Gujarat St. Fertilisers	183.50	120.00	135.00	3.00 +
Grasim Ind.	95.00	80.00	90.50	2.50 +
Hind. Aluminium	126.00	71.00	108.00	4.00 +
Hind. Cocoa	262.50	205.00	215.00	12.50 –
Hindustan Lever	212.00	165.00	186.00	6.50 –
Hindustan Motors	35.35	22.70	24.25	0.25 +
Hind. Dorr	407.50	295.00	390.00	nil +
IEL	61.50	45.00	50.00	3.50 +
Indian Organic	78.00	51.00	57.00	1.50 –
Indian Rayon	76.50	51.00	54.00	4.00 –
Indrol	510.00	215.00	240.00	15.00 –
Ingersoll-Rand	350.00	272.50	340.00	nil
ITC	78.00	40.00	44.00	2.50 +
J.K. Synthetics	93.50	47.00	54.00	4.00 –
Kinetic Engineering	312.50	220.00	242.50	7.50 –
Kirloskar Cummins	95.00	67.00	92.50	2.50 +
KSB Pumps	375.00	220.00	361.25	6.25 –
Larsen & Toubro	100.00	67.00	71.50	0.50 –
Lipton	79.50	60.00	71.50	1.00 +
Lohia Machines	32.00	13.00	15.50	0.50 +
Madura Coats	73.00	66.00	72.50	1.50 +
Mahindra & Mahindra	47.50	38.00	44.00	0.50 +
Motor Industries	400.00	342.50	357.50	7.50 +
National Organic	577.50	435.00	450.00	22.50 –
Nirlon	26.00	11.00	14.00	1.50 –
Orkay Silk Mills	115.00	30.00	35.00	35.00 –
Peico Electronics	57.25	36.00	40.00	2.50 +
Otis Elevator	215.00	155.00	205.00	6.00 +
Ponds	375.00	295.00	310.00	10.00 –
Premier Auto	30.00	21.00	24.00	1.50 –
Ranbaxy	135.00	85.00	87.00	3.00 –
Raymond	79.00	64.00	68.00	nil
Reckitt & Colman	200.00	160.00	167.00	nil
Reliance Industries	277.00	118.00	136.00	44.00 –
Shriram Fibres	36.00	24.00	28.00	2.50 +
Sandoz	140.00	75.00	80.00	1.25 –
SPIC	53.50	36.50	41.00	nil
Tata Steel	1207.50	945.00	1025.00	7.50 +
Telco	665.00	530.00	555.00	15.00 –
Vulcan Laval	57.50	45.00	55.00	5.00 +
Siemens India	144.50	69.00	73.00	2.00 –
Mukand Iron	80.50	63.50	76.50	3.00 +

WORLD VALUE OF RUPEE

COUNTRY	CURRENCY	UNIT	Selling Rates Rs	TT Buying Rates Rs
Australia	Dollar	1	9.0269	8.9478
Austria	Schilling	100	100.1480	100.6368
Bahrain	Dinar	1	33.9772	33.8980
Bangladesh	Taka	100	42.5330	42.4086
Canada	Dollar	1	9.4837	9.4097
Denmark	Kroner	1	1.8942	1.8803
Egypt	Pound	1	9.5110	9.4836
France	Franc	1	2.1253	2.1052
Hong Kong	Dollar	1	1.6250	1.6136
Indonesia	Rupiah	100	0.0770	0.7000
Iran	Rial	100	18.1182	18.0963
Italy	Lira	100	0.9900	0.9800
Japan	Yen	100	9.15	8.95
Kenya	Shilling	1	0.8000	0.7900
Kuwait	Dinar	1	47.2442	47.1922
Malaysia	Dollar	1	5.1449	5.1004
Mauritius	Rupee	1	0.9999	0.9700
Nepal	Rupee	1	0.5900	0.5700
Netherlands	Guilder	1	6.3224	6.2797
Pakistan	Rupee	1	0.7520	0.7400
Singapore	Dollar	1	5.9761	5.9276
Spain	Peseta	1	0.1090	1.1000
Sri Lanka	Rupee	1	0.4400	0.4300
Sweden	Kroner	1	2.0358	2.0271
Switzerland	Franc	1	8.6789	8.6160
Tanzania	Shilling	1	0.2300	0.2200
Thailand	Baht	100	50.6100	50.6000
UK	Pound	1	21.2780	21.1438
USA	Dollar	1	12.6175	12.5400
UAE	Dirham	1	3.5100	3.5003
USSR	Rouble	1	20.2000	20.1132
W. Germany	Deutschmark	1	7.1174	7.0621

These rates were supplied by The Bank of Tokyo Limited, New Delhi and quoted between the banks on 8.5.87.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

B.A. HONOURS.

The prestigious American aviation magazine Air Transport World has named us 'Airline of the Year.' We're both delighted and proud to accept the award. Our passengers can be sure that this is one laurel we certainly won't be resting on.

BRITISH AIRWAYS

The worlds favourite airline.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

R & D to make 'the impossible' possible

A WIDIA IDEA FOR PACESETTING

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INNOVATION

Take the best technologists. Give them the most sophisticated equipment. And the freedom to innovate.

Result: the cutting edge of high technology. R & D triumphs to convert laboratory ideas into shopfloor miracles. Boosting productivity and profits in every user industry.

The story of WIDIA's R & D is full of innovative chapters. Tungsten Carbide Rock Roller Bits. Modular Milling Cutters. The unique 13-layer ceramic coated carbide inserts for turning, WIDALON TK15 and HK15. The country's first ever coated inserts for milling, TN35M and HK15M. As well as WIDMA Special Purpose Machine tools. Hi-tech products that deliver extraordinary performance.

WIDIA. It's the attitude that makes the difference... believing that anything is possible is the first step to making it so. That's what innovation is all about.

Progressive thinking. Advanced technology. And the finest minds. Working together. To make sure that the benefits of R & D are reaped where they are needed most: on the customer's shopfloor.

THE WIDIA IDEA

Your productivity – Our concern

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

RK SWAMY/WIL/2689

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Five Reasons why customers in over 25 Countries trust Paharpur

Paharpur has become a name to be trusted in the fields of cooling towers, air cooled heat exchangers and woven plastic bags. Here are some of the reasons more and more people are seeking us out.

Innovation

A strong commitment to high technology and research & development has given us the ability to innovate when required.

Dynamism

A highly professional management, combined with strong leadership and respect for the individual, keeps us ahead of competition.

Excellence

Having the best and most integrated cooling tower manfacturing facilities in India or, for that matter, anywhere in the world (outside the United States) makes it easy for us to produce excellent cooling towers. The same excellence goes into our other products.

Culture

Integrity and shared values are reflected in the reputation we enjoy today. A culture which has taken almost 40 years to acquire and consolidate.

Reliability

Financial strength and an obsession for accuracy, quality and service make us a reliable company to deal with. One which will be around when many other have been forgotten.

All very simple. But very difficult to duplicate.

JETSETTERS/PCT/44/86

PAHARPUR MARLEY ©

The Best Value Cooling Tower Company

PAHARPUR COOLING TOWERS PVT. LTD.

8/1/B, Diamond Harbour Road, Calcutta—700 027, India
Phone 45-8956 (3 lines) Telex 21-3293 PCTC IN 21-3367 PCTS IN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

DISTINCTLY disturbing signs are emerging in the Indian economy: inflation, though still at a very low annual rate, has begun to accelerate and industrial production is slowing down after three years of healthy growth. The Government faces the difficult task of reducing growth in money supply and relaxing bank credit to boost industry.

All data are seasonally adjusted. Current trends are computed on the basis of six months (weekly data) or two years (monthly data) figures. The quarters referred to in the text are calendar year quarters.

Following six weeks of price stability, inflation showed signs of acceleration, and could pose a problem if there is no corrective action.

Overall industrial production reached a plateau towards 1986-end. Although the trend rate is still healthy, there are signs of deceleration.

Deceleration in manufacturing output at the end of 1986 was disappointing, even though there was record growth for the last three years.

Money supply growth is far above targeted levels. The high current trend rate will lead to excess liquidity and strong pressure on prices.

Bank credit to the commercial sector remains tight. Unless the RBI relaxes its credit policy, it may begin to constrain industrial growth.

The longer term trend rate of share prices is still far above inflation rate, notwithstanding the recent minor crash in the share price index.

Growth in electricity generation remains high for the third year. Bottlenecks in the economy should be fewer this year if this continues.

Gold prices continue to rise sharply. This could accelerate if hot money flows from the share market to the bullion market.

INDUSTRIAL PRODUCTION

Growth of items in April-Dec 1986 Over April-Dec 1985

	% Growth
Railway Wagons	76.0
Forged Hand Tools	62.1
Polyester Fibres	49.7
Air/Gas Compressors	42.9
Scooters	40.3
DDT	39.9
Rubber Machinery	37.4
Wrist Watches	35.5
Computers & Peripherals	35.5
Air-Conditioners	34.7
Baby Food	31.7
Copper (cathodes)	31.6
Metallurgical Machinery	30.1
Penicillin	27.0
Nitrogenous (N) Fertiliser	25.9
Lifts	25.8
Calcium Carbide	25.1
Twist Drills	23.5
Polyester Filament Yarn	22.8
Cars	21.2
Motorcycles	21.1
Scooter Tyres	20.5
Boilers	19.9
Storage Batteries	19.8
Vat Dyes	18.4
Fluorescent Tubes	18.0
Printing Machinery	17.5
Phosphatic (p205) Fertiliser	16.1
Newsprint	16.0
Industrial Explosives	15.6
HDPE	14.9
Tetracyclin	13.6
Electric Motors	13.4
Paints & Varnishes	12.5
Cement Machinery	11.0
Earth Moving Equipment	10.9
Machine Tools	10.3
Aluminium Foils	9.9
PVC Resins	9.2
Polyesterene	9.1
Lead	8.3
Cement	8.3
Viscose Filament Yarn	8.0
Transmission Towers	7.6
Toothpaste	7.2
Bicycles	7.1

Of the 141 series considered, 90 of them with a total weight of 72.5 per cent had a positive growth and 51 of them with a total weight of 27.5 per cent had a negative growth.

SELECTED INDICATORS

	1987	1986
Coal
Thousand Tonnes, March	19,622	18,679
Saleable Steel
Thousand Tonnes, March	958.3	918.0
Cement
Thousand Tonnes, March	3,580	3,280
Petroleum Crude
Thousand Tonnes, March	2,636	2,894
Petroleum Refinery Products
Thousand Tonnes, March	4,367	4,085

Compiled by THE POLICY GROUP/ICIM

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

FOREIGN TRAVEL

An Indian Summer

ARMED with travel guides and cameras, they are flying out in droves. To the West. To the East. To the Far East. Even as far north as Moscow. By the end of summer over half a million of them would have criss-crossed the globe, making the Indian dream of "foreign returned" a reality like never before. Suddenly the world is seeing Indians in a new light: as tourists.

On the road from Lucerne to Innsbruck, backdropped by the towering Alps, the clear air is filled with the spicy smell of mango pickles and chicken masala as a group of touring Indians alight from their bus equipped with a travelling kitchen for a meal. On Paris' elegant Champs Elysees, Indian women with their sarees fluttering in the breeze, swirl in and out of haute couture shops. In the UK, where Indian tourist traffic has trebled in the past decade, groups of Indians sit guzzling beer in London's smoky pubs.

Elsewhere in the US, where Indian tourists have doubled in six years, as a motorboat heads towards the Statue of Liberty, sounds of "Wah! Wah!" float across the Hudson river. In Moscow, Indians taken on a guided tour of the Kremlin towers, make spasibo sound like Hindi as they mutter their thanks to a vocal Russian guide. And Singapore's plush shopping arcades, bristling with electronic goods, are teeming with Indians looking for a bargain buy. So heavy has been the traffic to Singapore that now one out of 12 of its tourists are Indians. "After the TV and video boom in Indian households it is now the age of foreign travel," observes Gautam Chadha, British Airways sales manager.

Stoking the wanderlust has been an unprecedented boom in package tours that has made overseas travel in many cases cheaper than having a holiday in India itself. Among the more attractive packages:

► For Rs 7,000, inclusive of air fare and hotel charges, an Indian can now have a nine-day holiday in Pattaya, Bangkok and Singapore.

► For Rs 15,000, one can fly to Europe and have a 14-day round trip spanning six countries and eat Indian food as well. For Rs 15,000 more, a nine-day tour to the US is included.

► Tours to Russia are going at a bargain price of Rs 8,000 for 12 days in Tashkent, Moscow, Leningrad and Kiev.

► Nearer home, for as little as Rs 2,000, inclusive of flight fare, Indians in Delhi and Calcutta can have a four-day holiday in Nepal (see box).

"Indians seem to be sick of India. They want to go out and see new places and shop. And they have the money to spend," says Purushotam Chhatpar, general sales manager, SOTC, the largest tour operator in the country. This year, despite doubling the number of its tours to the US and Europe, these are sold out till mid-June.

Other travel agents report the same kind of growth. "Our tours are chock-a-block," says Nadir Muncherjee, general manager, Travel Corporation of India (TCI), which runs tours to the East and West. Their weekly 'Europe by Road' buses now run to capacity. In Delhi, Iyer and Sons, which has a tour to Singapore every week, boasts that it hasn't had to drop a tour even once for the past two years. "Indians are becoming as travel minded as people in the West," says Vijay Gupta, Iyer's director.

Everywhere the rush was obvious. At all the major international airline offices there was a stampede for tickets with flights being booked well in advance. Says TCI's Muncherjee: "You can't get a seat even if you sell your blood." Air-India flights to major destinations were heavily overbooked, and it now plans to add four more flights to Europe and the US to cope with the rush. Flights on major airlines like British Airways, Lufthansa, Singapore Airlines and Pan Am too were running full and most of them had expanded their services too.

Airlines were also busy modifying services to cater to Indian tastes. British Airways plans to devote an entire music channel onboard to popular Hindi songs apart from serving supari after meals. Singapore Airlines has hired several Indian cooks to serve ethnic dishes like Dal Makhani and Palak Paneer on its flight. A major price war is also on, with every airline offering anything from 10 per cent

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PRASHANT PANJIAR

(Clockwise from top) Indian tourists at American Embassy; clicking London; on German streets and at amusement park

20 per cent discount on each ticket, making flights tantalisingly cheap (see

And not surprisingly, the queues for visas outside consulates in Bombay and Delhi get longer every day. At the American Embassy in Delhi people start queuing in the early morning and around 400 visas are issued daily. Tourist traffic to the US, which grew from 43,000 in 1980 to [illegible]00 last year, is expected to cross a [illegible] this year. The rush to the UK is no [illegible] despite the need to procure visas now. According to the British Tourist Authority last year 1.37 lakh Indian tourists visited the country. And this year it expects the figure to grow to 1.44 lakh. Meanwhile Austria, West Germany, the Soviet Union, Japan and even Australia reported a significant increase in visa applications.

What has surprised the travel trade is that despite the Union Finance Ministry imposing severe restrictions on foreign travel last year the boom hasn't deflated. The restrictions came after withdrawals under the Foreign Tourist Scheme (FTS)—which allows Indian tourists going abroad $500 each—shot up from just [illegible] crore in 1983 to Rs 196 crore in [illegible]. From April last year, Indian tourists were entitled to FTS only once every three years instead of two. Children below 12 years were entitled to only half the FTS amount. In this year's Union budget the government announced a 15 per cent tax

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

NEPAL

New Scene

WITH its high Himalayan ranges and promise of fun, Nepal is proving to be the new Shangrila for Indian travellers. The number of Indian tourists flying to Kathmandu doubled in the past five years and crossed 55,000 last year. Around the same number came by road. Now every third tourist to Nepal is an Indian.

In the summer months, when the heat and rain discourages most foreign travellers, Kathmandu is transformed into an Indian city. Every hotel, eating place and shopping centre is jammed with Indians. At the Casino Nepal, Indian men prefer to gamble on card games like blackjack and pontoon while women keep themselves busy by dropping coins into the "one-armed bandit" machines or trying their luck at roulette. "Around 75 per cent of our business is from Indians and they are big spenders," says R.D. Tuttle, Casino's managing director. Indians spend lavishly in Nepal's super market too where textiles and electronics goods are hawked at bargain prices.

RAJ CHENGAPPA

At the Casino: in thing

And Nepal is steadily becoming a major convention centre for Indian businessmen. Only last fortnight the Travel Agents Association of India held its annual convention in Nepal. Last year alone over a 100 conventions were held in Kathmandu by such companies as Reliance, Gwalior, DCM, Escorts, Glaxo and Ponds.

Companies pay as little as Rs 550 per person for each night at a five-star hotel which includes food and convention facilities, apart from sightseeing trips—something few Indian hotels can match. And some companies have even started incentive tours to Kathmandu for high-performing dealers.

Increasingly, Indian tourists too are beginning to realise how cheap a holiday to Nepal is. More than a score of travel agencies now offer package tours that suit every purse. For those who want a bit of five-star luxury, they could get one for Rs 1,499 for three nights at the Soaltee Oberoi, Kathmandu's plushest hotel. Downmarket hotels offer packages for as little as Rs 450 for three nights. Most packages come with the added attraction of free Casino coupons.

For hotels in Kathmandu the large Indian traffic is a welcome relief. During summer, which is the lean season for them, the influx has seen occupancy rates going up to 80 per cent. "We don't have lean periods any more," says Kishore Pandey, vice-president of Hotel De L' Annapurna. And hoteliers notice another trend. Kathmandu is becoming a honeymooners favourite too.

What makes things easier for Indian tourists is that they do not require a passport to enter Nepal. Just identification papers like a driving licence are sufficient. Indian rupees are freely exchangeable and with the Nepali rupee much cheaper tourists for once feel richer in a foreign country. Shiv Kumar, a Bangalore industrialist holidaying in Nepal with his family last week, says: "It's an exotic place and I'm having more fun than I could hope to have in an Indian resort."

But the surge of Indian tourists has also brought its problems. Flights are a major bottleneck and although Royal Nepal Airlines and Indian Airlines have flights daily to Kathmandu in summer, they are booked for weeks. Says Ramesh Nath Pandey, Nepal's minister of state for tourism: "We have requested the Indian Government to allow us to introduce flights connecting Kathmandu to Bombay and Madras. If it agrees, much of the problem would be solved."

—RAJ CHENGAPPA in Kathmandu

on foreign exchange withdrawals as well. But as V. Subramanian, the Finance Ministry's exchange control director, admits: "It hasn't dissuaded Indians from travelling abroad." Inder Sharma, Sita Travels' chairman, adds: "The upsurge is defying all economic rules. Nobody knows from where people get the money to travel so much. It looks like no one wants to save for their children's marriages anymore."

Much of the growth has come from India's middle class which seems to have more disposable income than ever before. "Just look at the number of executives who figure in the Rs 3,000 plus bracket in the balance sheets of companies and you see a dramatic increase," points out Francis Dagama, Air-India's regional director. And with wives also working, the income of most families has become large enough to have a holiday abroad. "Earlier only the affluent went for holidays abroad but now we get professionals, teachers and even secretaries on our tours," observes S.A. Peter of Thomas Cook.

Package tours: clicking

Significantly, a growing section of tourists today is composed of traders and farmers, India's new rich, who come from what travel agents chose to call "the hinterlands". And though most travellers are from the metropolises, small cities like Kanpur, Chandigarh, Rajkot, Satara, Madurai and Mangalore too are throwing up a good number of tourists. Sita Travels, for instance, successfully marketed foreign tours to tobacco growers in Tamil

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Noida. And members of the Lions and Rotary clubs from these cities form the largest number of people attending their international conferences abroad. Also, Indian businessmen are increasingly attending diverse international trade fairs—on medical equipment, textile and computer sciences.

Helping the boom along is the fact that with over 1.5 million Indians settled abroad, people now have more relatives to visit. But travel agencies already see a shift from what is called VFR or Visiting Friends and Relatives trips. Indians now just dump their heavy baggage with relatives, pack smaller suitcases and take off again. Typically, last week Avinash and Aruna Sundari and their two children were off to Edmonton in the US where they plan to use Aruna's sister's house as a base for their holiday. Their son, Aditya, says excitedly: "I want to see Disneyland."

The surge began five years ago when Indians discovered what is now jokingly called the "video trips" to Singapore and Dubai. With these trips costing less than Rs 6,000 the money barrier for foreign travel was broken. After their baptism in the East the travel bug seems to have bitten them for good. And package tours have clicked in a big way. Says P. Nagpal, a Delhi industrialist: "Package tours may be a little costly but they get rid of the hassles and save a lot of running around. And you don't get stuck for flights or hotel bookings." Last week Nagpal and his wife, Nisha, left for a 21-day package tour to the US and Europe.

But Indians travelling abroad are still, well, Indians. At a Bangkok massage parlour recently, an Indian tourist, when told the price for a session, promptly pulled out his calculator and worked out how much it would cost him in Indian rupees. Most Indians are fussy about food and tour operators make sure that their hotels have Indian cooks and their buses have a kitchen trailer equipped with the choicest desi cuisine. Indians are not keen sightseers either. One of them told a tour operator in the Vatican's Sistine Chapel: "I am tired of seeing churches. Why are you taking me to another one?" And tour operators are embarrassed when Indians point their fingers at waiters or take offence to bus drivers sharing meals with them. Travel agents now give a course on etiquette calling it mildly "tour briefing".

But with the travel trade predicting an even bigger exodus of Indian tourists abroad maybe s'il vous plait and danke schon would become part of the average Indian's growing foreign vocabulary.

—RAJ CHENGAPPA

AIRLINES

Sky Wars

TO Dubai and back for Rs 2,900. Singapore return for Rs 3,700. Up and down to Hong Kong for Rs 4,800. And Delhi-London-Delhi for Rs 8,000.

These fares are not being offered on no-frill charter flights but are the rates for seats on some of the major international airlines, including Air-India. In the heaviest undercutting ever seen by the country's travel industry, all the major airlines are offering discounts varying from 10 per cent to 20 per cent on flights to Europe, the US, the Middle and Far Eastern countries.

Fare discounting by airlines in India is not new. But foreign airlines say that the price war escalated when Air-India in an attempt to "clean up the market" offered travel agents a 10 to 15 per cent discount on its flights last September.

Soon everybody was in the act. The next month British Airways started what it termed as its "flexible pricing policy" by offering around 8 per cent discount on its flights to London and Hong Kong. Seeing business dropping rapidly, Singapore Airlines jumped onto the bandwagon and the prices plunged further. While the normal excursion fare to Singapore was Rs 5,400, it came down to Rs 4,500. And travel agents, who were willing to forgo a part of their normal 9 per cent commission, brought the price down to less than Rs 4,000.

And the war moved to other sectors as well. Lufthansa, which prides itself as being a "clean airline", was forced to offer a 6 per cent discount calling it a "market price adjustment." KLM, Pan Am and Air France soon joined the fray. And with everyone undercutting the other, discount rates touched the unprecedented limits of 30 per cent during off season.

The flights were still viable, for as one airline representative said: "It was better than running empty, and anyway we made up by the volume of our turnover." However, under pressure from travel agents, they have been forced to maintain the discounts even during the peak season.

Cartoon by AJIT NINAN

With the discount war getting out of hand, however, the airlines decided that enough was enough. The Board of Airline Representatives (BAR), of which all international airlines operating in India are members, has held a series of meetings in the past two months to put an end to the war. "We have to clean the market because what's happening is not a nice thing at all," says Francis Dagama, regional director of Air-India and chairman of BAR. No consensus has so far been reached on how to end the no-holds barred war. But Air-India hopes to get all the airlines to agree by June 1 on a minimum price line for tickets to prevent excessive discounting.

Meanwhile, the Indian tourist isn't complaining. The discounted air fares have made overseas travel much more attractive.

—RAJ CHENGAPPA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SPEECH DELIVERED BY SHRI RAUNAQ SINGH CHAIRMAN & MANAGING DIRECTOR AT 14TH ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING HELD ON MONDAY APRIL 27, 1987.

Shri Raunaq Singh

Friends,

I have great pleasure in extending to you a hearty and cordial welcome to the 14th Annual General Meeting of your company. The Annual Report and Audited Accounts for the year ended 31st October 1986 have already been circulated. I am sure, you would have had time to read these in detail and would be eager to offer your valuable comments & suggestions. I would not like to take much of your time.

We are meeting today in an atmosphere of confidence, hope and optimism about the future of your company, after having achieved a dramatic turnaround and after having wiped out all accumulated losses and arrears of depreciation. In fact a surplus of Rs 32 lakhs is being carried forward to the balance sheet. If the trend for the first six months of current financial year is any indication, your company should be breaking all previous records in respect of sales and profits and you should be ready to hear some cheering news when we meet next year, God willing. The company has been able to reach this impregnable position entirely due to the persistent effort of all concerned—towards continuous and ongoing product development, quality improvement, innovative marketing, cordial work atmosphere and most important of all, human resources development. No doubt the wholehearted support of financial institutions and banks has played a pivotal role. It is not that we did not face any problems. We had to cope up with several of them. I am proud to say, the management team, staff and workers measured upto the task and worked with an unity of purpose. Operating, technical and managerial skills are being further sharpened to face the challenges of future.

BUSINESS ENVIRONMENT

Since Hon'ble Shri Rajiv Gandhi assumed leadership of the Govt, there has been a perceptible change for the better in the attitude of the Govt. towards industry & trade as a whole.with pragmatism and positive approach being the undertone. As we enter the 3rd year of 7th plan, most of the indicators of economic performance are encouraging The growth impulses are being sustained by allocation of further resources for development. The economy has certainly taken a sharp upswing in the recent past to 5% per annum compared to the earlier 3.5% per annum. The year gone-by witnessed acceleration of industrial growth, resilience of agriculture despite a poor monsoon, buoyancy of investment intentions, healthy growth of export and slowing down of imports. These are all harbingers of further good things to happen. Sweeping reforms in fiscal policies have certainly contributed to buoyancy in revenue collections. Reduction in procedural impediments, growing emphasis on capacity creation/utilisation, insistence on technology upgradation, encouragement of healthy competition, preference for economic scales of production and loosening of infrastructural bottlenecks, are all paving way for a healthy industrial sector. We have now come to witness and enjoy the fruits of a regime of reasonable tax rates, in a long term predictable environment with sharp focus on better compliance and enforcement. However, the resources position of the Government continues to be under severe pressure, with mounting non-plan expenditure, shortfalls in public sector surpluses and adverse balance of trade. A heartening feature is that the Govt is alive to these problems and there is a demonstrable urgency in tackling them. In this context, the new concept of zero-based budgeting is to be appreciated.

Specific action plans have been formulated to tone up the working of public sector units and to boost exports.

A strong and sustained growth of export is possible only with a strong industrial sector, operating in a cost-conscious environment, with continuous ongoing technological upgradation and reaping economic scales of production. Energy conservation is another area which calls for the highest priority. I am glad to inform you that the key objectives of your company are precisely dovetailed to the national objectives as enunciated above.

A few words about the Central Govt budget for 1987-88 which has met with mixed reactions—quite rightly, anxiety and concern have been widely expressed in industry & trade circles, about the proposal to tax minimum 30% of book profits and the insertion of section 194-E in the Income-Tax Act. It is earnestly hoped that these proposals will be withdrawn by the Government, consistent with the general approach of pragmatism. Otherwise it would be like killing a goose that lays golden eggs everyday.

The tyre industry is feeling let down, with the budget not offering any relief whatsoever, except a concession in import duty on tyre moulds used for export production. Extension of Modvat to other chapters has not really helped the tyre industry, since main items like nylon and rayon fabrics have been left out of its perview. A persistent plea of the industry to consider tyre as an essential item (and not as a luxury one) and reduce excise duty to 15%, has so far fallen on deaf ears. I am very hopeful that atleast by the time we meet next year, this distortion would be corrected. I would like to compliment the Govt for its bold initiative to restructure the interest rates on bank borrowings.

TYRE INDUSTRY

The problems and prospects of the tyre industry cannot be viewed in isolation, since it is just one component of a much bigger industry viz "Road Transport Industry". The rapid development of the economy since the advent of planning has not only contributed to substantial growth in agriculture and industrial production, but also to a corresponding development of infrastructural facilities and services. With railways shedding short-distance non-bulk movements, continuous growth of road transport industry as the most economic and desirable alternative is a natural consequence.

There are three major components of road transport industry viz a network of roads properly constructed and maintained, a healthy automobile industry and an infrastructure industry which plays a supporting role in maintenance and servicing. (tyre constitutes an important and vital component of this). High cost of transportation naturally gets reflected in the price of essential commodities since transportation cost works out to as much as 25%, (incase of perishable items it could as well be 100%!). The logic of classifying automotive tyre as a luxury item and punishing it with a high rate of excise duty is questionable.

Somehow or the other development of roads has been progressively neglected as could be seen from the proportion of public sector outlay on road transport provided in the successive 5 year plans. Hardly 1/3rd of 5.76 lakh villages in the country are connected by all-weather roads. Therefore there is an urgent need to increase the outlay for development and maintenance of roads, to meet transportation demands effectively and economically. In the absence of a long term development policy for the road transport industry, the growth of tyre industry has naturally suffered with the added burden of excess capacity. It is advisable to encourage the existing units to expand and achieve economic

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

APOLLO TYRES LTD

HIGHLIGHTS

- RECORD SALES AND PROFITS
- ACCUMULATED LOSSES WIPED OUT
- ARREARS OF DEPRECIATION FULLY PROVIDED
- CURRENT YEAR SALES 60% UP OVER LAST YEAR
- CONTINUED THRUST ON PRODUCT EXCELLENCE AND EXPORT.

scales of production instead of proliferating capacity. The overall capacity so far registered with DGTD is adequate to take care of projected demand upto the end of this century.

TECHNOLOGY

The rate of obsolescence in tyre industry is phenomenal which calls for continuous upgradation of technology in respect of products, processes and plant. Although basic research at the company level is very expensive, your company has access to the fruits of such research being continuously carried out at General Tire's plant through the instrument of a collaboration. Proper organisation and facilities have been built up at Apollo and which is fully geared to adopt and assimilate General Tires' technology—to develop new products, establish quality control techniques, design tyres to give higher mileage/carry more loads and reduce product costs without sacrificing quality. A firm commitment to this strategy has paid rich dividends in the past and will be pursued vigorously in the coming years.

EXPORTS

The Union Commerce Ministry is engaged in, formulating a multi-pronged strategy for promotion of export for achieving the goals of the 7th plan. The strategy has been designed to identify products and markets which have a growth potential and provide for a set of policy measures which would help in the production of goods that are acceptable in the international market and make it profitable for the exporter to export. The Indian companies can certainly compete with the best international companies provided, they do so on equal terms. The Indian tyre industry has demonstrated its ability to build up exports rapidly, in that, within a short period it built up exports to over Rs. 50 Cr. per annum, with clientele spread over such diverse countries like USA, USSR, Afghanistan, Holland etc. Unfortunately, export growth suffered a setback with the problem of product liability insurance cropping up in USA.

The interest on pre-shipment credit has been recently brought down to 9.5% p.a. but is still higher than 6-7% enjoyed by our competitors abroad. The Indian exporter has to deal with as many as 20 agencies which causes considerable hardship, apart from loss of time and money. It would be advisable to establish a single-window operational clearance mechanism. Many of the competing countries are enjoying concessional freight on internal movement of export consignments. Your company is planning to export atleast Rs. 4 Cr. worth tyres during the current financial year.

RAW MATERIAL

After the introduction of buffer import scheme, price of natural rubber, has been more stable than in the earlier years. However, the buffer stock maintained by STC is considered to be inadequate and should be increased to cover atleast a month's requirement. Some of the critical raw materials like SBR, polybutadiene rubber and VP latex have been shifted from OGL to restricted permissible list. In the absence of adequate indigenous availability, I am afraid this will cause serious dislocation of production. These raw materials are required to achieve certain unique performance characteristics in the finished product. It is earnestly hoped that these vital raw materials will be restored to the OGL list.

AN OVERVIEW OF OPERATIONS

The year under review was an important milestone for the company with production crossing Rs. 103 Cr. and sales touching Rs. 98 Cr. I am confident that we will cross the Rs. 200 Cr. mark in a much shorter time than it has taken to reach Rs. 100 Cr. The viability and profitability of the company has now been firmly established and is ready for a further climb. With a record gross profit of Rs. 11.90 Cr. on top of Rs. 6.11 Cr. in the previous year, all accumulated losses, as well as arrears of depreciation have been totally wiped out, leaving a surplus of Rs. 32 lakhs. The commitments to financial institutions towards repayment of loan instalments and funded interest, are being met as per schedule without affecting liquidity and growth plans. Power shortage in Kerala has become a recurrent problem, with overdependence on the weather Gods. Therefore, captive generating facilities covering 60% of power requirements are being installed to pre-empt any future disruptions in production. With the conclusion of a 3-year agreement with the trade unions, production is in full swing. A range of tyres for new generation vehicles are ready for launch. The continued cooperation and support of our collaborator has helped the company in maintaining product leadership. The dedication to quality is a way of life in Apollo, so much so, that it goes far beyond rhetorical slogans. The ongoing programme of continued improvement reaches out for change, refinement and even revolution in pursuit of quality excellence.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Before concluding, I must express my sincere thanks to the financial institutions and bankers for their continued support, without which it would not have been possible for the company to reach the present position. My gratitude to our collaborators—M/s General Tire International Co, USA for their active participation and support in achieving product excellence. Our valued customers have been the backbone of our company's success. My sincere thanks to the employees for their dedicated hard work. Most important of all, it is you the respected shareholders who have shown immense patience and have stood by the company during the most difficult period. I am sure, your patience will not go unrewarded and the management of the company hopes to live upto your expectations I am thankful to my worthy colleagues on the board for their advice, counsel and guidance. I would like to congratulate and convey our best wishes on behalf of you to Mr E K Nayanar who has taken over as Chief Minister of Kerala.

Thank you

Cochin RAUNAQ SINGH

NOTE :
This does not purport to be the proceedings of the Annual General Meeting.

adlyads/31

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

P.H. PANDIAN

"Legislature is supreme"

IN less than two years in office, Tamil Nadu Assembly Speaker P.H. Pandian, 42, has already created legislative history. His acerbic, yet well-reasoned, rulings have reversed high court judgements, sent editors to jail and expelled half the opposition DMK MLAs.

Pandian began his career as an advocate in Tirunelvelli and was elected to the state Assembly in 1977, then re-elected in 1980 and 1985. An MGR loyalist, he was appointed deputy speaker in 1982, and to his current position in 1985.

Pandian firmly believes that the "people's voice", as reflected in the legislature, should prevail in a democratic system. And this is clearly reflected in all his rulings. He hit the headlines early last year when he acquitted three persons convicted by the Madras High Court, saying that he was only "correcting" the judgement. His ruling almost led to a constitutional crisis in the state, with the high court sticking to its decision.

The controversial speaker strongly feels that the judiciary and the media have overstepped their jurisdictions and that there is a need to discipline both these institutions. Last fortnight, he was once again in the centre of a controversy when he demanded that all licences for cinema houses showing films derogatory to politicians should be cancelled. He also reiterated his stand when he directed his secretariat not to respond to a Supreme Court notice regarding a writ petition challenging the expulsion of 10 DMK members from the Assembly. Like his peers, he has refrained from meeting the press. In an exclusive interview, he spoke to Senior Editor PRABHU CHAWLA in Madras. Excerpts:

SHYAM TEKWANI

Q. Through your recent ruling in the state Assembly you have been asserting that the legislature has unlimited powers. Why do you feel this way?

A. I firmly believe that the legislature is supreme in a democracy. Each of its members represents the people of the state. We have four-and-a-half crore people and all of them cannot sit in the Assembly. They can only elect a representative to the House. In fact, an assembly reflects the will of the people, the pulse of the people and is the heart of the people.

Q. Should it be above the judiciary?

A. The judiciary only implements the laws passed by the legislature. It cannot deliver judgements beyond the law of the land. So we can assume that legislatures who have the powers to enact the laws are the most powerful organs of democracy.

Q. You mean that the legislatures can also have the powers of the judiciary as you showed recently?

A. The legislature is not passing a judicial verdict. But it can deliver social justice to the poor. You have to agree that both the judiciary and the executive are products of the legislature. The executive is responsible to the legislature which in turn is accountable to the people. It is this accountability which raises the status of the legislature in comparison to the judiciary. If you look at it that way, even the judiciary has no accountability.

Q. If a legislature starts performing the task of the judiciary, there is a danger that it may deliver political judgements.

A. You can't say that. The majority cannot be biased and politicised. Recently, we have noticed that the judiciary is making inroads into the powers of the legislature. Some of the members of the judiciary have claimed that the legislatures have failed the people. Nobody can be allowed to run down an elected body.

Q. But have legislatures failed to deliver the goods?

A. Who has to judge that? Only the people, and nobody else has the right to pass judgements. The people are supreme. And if they elect the same legislators again, it means they have endorsed the conduct and performance of the legislators and ministers.

Q. Are you asserting that there should not be any other check on the executive and the legislature in a democracy?

A. No. None at all, except what is provided in the Constitution.

Q. But the executive does have the power. Legislatures can impeach judges.

A. If that was so, then my ruling reversing the high court judgement should have been accepted.

Q. Are you in favour of assemblies performing the role of the courts as well? Then what will the courts do?

A. Courts have the power to accept writ petitions against elected representatives. If found guilty of violating the laws, they can unseat a ruling MLA.

Q. But a speaker can't reverse a judgement of the high court.

A. Speakers derive their power from the House. Every legislature has the power to enact laws which can nullify the

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

...ffects of a high court judgement. Even the chief minister has recently declared that Parliament will not accept the Supreme Court judgement on the national anthem.

Q. But none of them has reversed a judgement as you have. Is this the only case of its kind in India?

A. Nullification and reversal are the same thing. In both, the action and the remedy is the same: not to give effect to a judicial verdict. It is a question of interpretation of the power of the legislature. I am convinced that legislatures can reverse a judgement, so I did it. Others have not felt like me so far.

Q. But you seem to be against the idea of even the media writing against politicians.

A. I am opposed to the role of an irresponsible section of the press. Certain vested interests are misusing this freedom. Even under the Constitution, the freedom of the press is not higher than the freedom of an ordinary citizen whose voice is represented in the State Assembly.

Q. Do you believe that there should be some restrictions on the press?

A. The press will have to accept reasonable restrictions. It is mentioned even in the Constitution. If there are no restrictions on it, then what is the remedy against an irresponsible media?

Q. You are against the media exposing corrupt and inefficient politicians?

A. No. But allegations should not be vague. They should be specific and confirmed. Vested interests control the press. We should have an ombudsman for the press in India. If you have a right to write against politicians, then why not write against the irresponsible media also? The media is not above the law. It is not engaged in any social service. It is an industry and is run on a commercial basis. What is the check on the media in India?

Q. You have the courts and the Press Council.

A. Can you get an immediate remedy from these institutions? People believe that the pen is mightier than the sword. But it should be mightier only during times of war and not during peace time. The mighty should be more restrained and tolerant in their behaviour. The press should have concern for the nation and the constitutional functionaries. If you attack a politician, you sell more copies of your publication. It means the press is cashing in on the reputation of another person. We are now in 1987 and we cannot claim that freedom of the press was guaranteed in 1947. Things are changing. We need not change the laws. But they have to be interpreted according to the changing times.

Q. But it is the responsibility of the media to keep the people informed about the conduct and performance of their representatives.

A. Then they should distribute their publications free of cost. It should not be done on a commercial basis.

Q. If nothing is printed in the commercially-run media who will inform the electorate?

A. Readers can't judge what is right or wrong. Only the affected person can judge that a false statement has been published.

Q. But you also expressed a view that the licences of all those films depicting politicians with a negative image should be cancelled?

> "The judiciary is making inroads into the powers of the legislature. Some of the members of the judiciary have claimed that the legislatures have failed the people. You can't allow anybody to run down an elected body like this."

A. I strongly believe that we cannot be ridiculed in public. If you are ridiculing the legislators, it means you are ridiculing the public. Cinema houses are not doing charity or screening free shows. These films are attacking a popular person.

Q. Are all politicians popular?

A. If they were not popular, they would not have been elected. Evil may be in one corner or in one individual. But why do you want to propagate it throughout the country with the help of cinema? Evil should be curbed and not propagated. If you do that, the moral standards of public life will deteriorate. Some cinema people are more interested in tarnishing the image of a person. Has anybody propagated or appreciated any good work, uprighteousness, or honesty in any politician? You are playing up only the corrupt and not the non-corrupt.

Q. If one accepts your contention, a legislator cannot be attacked by anyone and should be allowed unbridled powers?

A. There should be some curb on him but he cannot be subjected to non-valid criticism. Or, we will have to start a press or a cinema to defend ourselves.

Q. But it is always the ruling party which benefits from all curbs inside or outside the legislature.

A. No. The Opposition gets a lot of time in the Assembly to attack the Government. In fact, it gets more chances than the ruling party. If the speaker is pro-opposition, he is hailed as neutral. But when he is actually neutral, he is accused of being biased and pro-ruling party.

Q. But your recent ruling in expelling MLAs from the Opposition has been interpreted as harsh and in favour of the ruling party.

A. It is not a harsh punishment. I gave them all a warning. I summoned them to my chamber and advised them against burning the Constitution. But they did not listen to me. I had no alternative but to perform my duties of protecting the Constitution.

Q. But you became the first speaker in the country who disqualified almost half the main opposition in the House. Couldn't you restrain yourself?

A. It was within my powers. My decision was ratified by the House.

Q. But it reversed the verdict of the people who had elected them. It could lead to a situation where the entire Opposition can be thrown out if it is inconvenient to the ruling party.

A. That can't happen. It depends on the occasion. It was not a punishment. That way, an election petition against the MLAs is also a punishment. And the courts can also declare an election null and void. Can we say that they have reversed the people's verdict? Under the Constitution, legislatures are the most powerful organs and this has to be reiterated.

Q. Since an MLA can't be attacked, do you support the idea that people should have the right to recall him before the expiry of his term?

A. Yes. They can recall their representatives. Anyway, a legislator is unseated when convicted by a court of law for illegal activities.

Q. How do you assess the performance of MGR's Government?

A. MGR has provided a good and efficient leadership. He has given a people's government. He has satisfied the common man on the street. He represents the voice of the poor people. His principles and policies have been appreciated by the people.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SAVING A FEW RUPEES ON YOUR ROOFING SHEETS COULD BE AN EXPENSIVE MISTAKE.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Of course you can buy a cheap brand of A.C. roofing sheets, and save yourself some money. But don't be surprised when, in a few years, it shows up as an expensive mistake.

Because cutting corners, as you know, can never substitute quality.

Quality in Experience.

At Everest, we don't sell cheap A.C. roofing sheets. As pioneers, we have always given you the best.

A fact that has stood the test of time for over 50 years. For clients like Larsen & Toubro, Reliance, Hindustan Lever, Bajaj Auto, Dunlop, Indian Railways, BHEL and hundreds more.

Quality in Research.

Our 'no compromise' policy begins at our R&D centre. Stringent evaluation to determine the best grade of fibre and cement.

Continuous testing of the fibre-cement mix. Specially developed fibre orientation technology for precise and even distribution of fibre.

Adding up to enhanced strength that is consistent across every sheet.

No wonder our testing standards are 25% higher than ISI.

Quality in Service.

In service too, we don't cut corners.

The Everest 'Code of Practice' which lays the standard norms for correct product usage is, in fact, something the entire industry swears by.

Our technical service personnel are at your beck and call to help with design and installation. And to recommend the right products and accessories. Absolutely free of cost.

Quality in Versatility.

Our technological base allows us to make specialised designs for specific projects.

Like our dust-proof design for Kinetic Honda. Special gutter design for Bajaj Auto. Special curved sheets for Kerala Road Transport. And many others.

You'll find the largest product range available with Everest, for a complete roofing system.

A choice of 3 roofing sheet designs. The widest range of gutters and roofing accessories.

And, of course, we have extensive coverage with 4 factories, a country-wide network of sales depots, stockists and dealers to ensure instant delivery and service.

To be able to give you all this, we've had to pay a price. A price that's understandably, a bit higher.

For us. And, naturally, for you.

But when you think about it, it's a small price to pay for the sake of your reputation.

And, of course, your peace of mind.

EVEREST

FIBRE CEMENT PRODUCTS

50 YEARS WITHOUT COMPROMISE.

EVEREST BUILDING PRODUCTS LTD.
(A MEMBER, TURNER AND NEWALL GROUP, U.K.)

Ashok Bhawan, 93 Nehru Place,
New Delhi-110 019. Tel: 643 2568/643 2569

Zonal Sales Offices: • Block 'D' Shivsagar Estate, Dr. Annie Besant Road, Worli, Bombay-400 018. Tel: 493 8234/493 8236
• Podanur P.O., Coimbatore-641 023.Tel: 24116/24117 • Everest House, 948 Napier Town, Post Box 70, Jabalpur-482 001.Tel. 25216/25217.
• Everest House, Taratolla Road, Garden Reach, Calcutta-700 024.Tel: 45 2001/45 2002.

Enterprise/D/EV/14

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TEACHERS

Moonlighting Mania

■ UMESH KUMAR does not have the easy hands of the paanwalla. For 45-year-old Kumar, making paan in Greater Kailash is a part-time job, and a new one at that. His real job is teaching social sciences in an off-campus college in north Delhi. During Holi, he sells colours.

■ ASHOK RAJ, in his mid-30s, runs a gas agency in the afternoons; most mornings he lectures on commerce in a Delhi college. But his second profession is eating into his first; the teaching is rapidly becoming non-existent.

■ RADHA NATH, in her late 20s, teaches English in the mornings and edits a magazine in the afternoons.

THESE people are real (though their names have been changed), and moonlighting is, sadly, becoming a fact of life in the groves of academe. Students are not the only ones to cut classes; quite a few teachers do too. The result: many of the colleges are gradually becoming intellectual wastelands, and deserted ones at that.

Teaching has had to play second fiddle, as the number of college teachers with 'other jobs' has reached disturbing proportions. Delhi University itself has no estimate of the scale of the problem. But its seniormost professors feel that while nearly 10 to 15 per cent of the faculty in many of the university's colleges boost their incomes by working on the side, in some of the off-campus colleges, over half the teachers are busy moonlighting. Some teachers, in fact, only come to college on salary days. Says Subhadra Butalia, an English teacher who retired recently from Dayal Singh College: "I would definitely say that 90 per cent of my male colleagues have other jobs. We used to rarely see them in college."

'French leave' has gained currency to such an extent that teachers themselves are worried about the absenteeism. The staff council in Ramjas College, for instance, recently passed strictures against a colleague. Says Dilip Simeon, a history lecturer there: "We just had to do this. A colleague who runs a magazine came out in print about the decline of excellence in academia. But this gentleman himself never takes his classes. When asked to do so, he tells the other teachers to divide the work among themselves."

Why are teachers throwing in the towel, and giving in to Mammon after having shunned him for so long? For most university teachers, it is no longer a question of ethics, it is a question of their very survival. Moonlighting is not new, but spiralling rents and the equally vertiginous price index have made a mockery of the teacher's tight budget.

Teachers who have put in 15 years, get paid barely Rs 3,000 a month; their counterparts in the Government earn Rs 5,000, plus get an all-important roof over their heads. Net of rent (a single room can cost as much as Rs 1,500), the hapless lecturer gets only one-third as much as the government servant, who in turn sees himself as being underpaid. A career in the army is much more paying, more so if perquisites like free rations and medical cover are thrown in. Says M.M.P. Singh, president of the Delhi University Teachers Association (DUTA): "The annual increment is about Rs 50. Throw in the allowances and it is slightly over Rs 100. Even after a promotion, the pay hike is often negligible. We have no conveyance allowances, no deputations, often no promotions."

Moonlighting is sadly becoming a fact of life in the groves of academe. It's not only students who cut classes; teachers do too.

An unmarried lecturer can still make ends meet; but a married man with a family, can't survive on his salary with any semblance of self-respect. Nor can a woman lecturer who has a family to support and does not have any private means. Social pressures eventually become difficult to resist. It is no small irony that college teachers want to give their children the best education, but are finding it increasingly difficult to afford the best schools. Two schoolgoing children can cost Rs 600 a month, on fees and bus fare alone, and that can be 40 per cent of the take-home pay, net of rent.

So people move to the most distant corners of the city to save on rent (as Saraswati Majumdar did, and she now changes three buses each morning and spends four hours a day commuting); or they don't get themselves a new coat for 15 years (as is the case with S.P. Chauhan of Shivaji College); or spend their life's savings paying for one medical mishap (as did a lecturer of Maheshwari Dayal Singh College). Or, they start moonlighting.

There are many ways out of the financial labyrinth. Tuitions were the first, and are still, the most common exit. Working in what are disparagingly called 'teaching shops', is the other. Writing for newspapers, or editing book manuscripts for publishing houses, are also respectable ways of getting some extra cash in the pocket. But not everyone has these avenues open, and teachers are diversifying into areas that were considered dishonourable not so long ago.

Some now run agencies to sell things like gas, motor parts, oil and clothes. Some dabble on the stock exchange, especially those who teach in commerce colleges. And some sell insurance or organise chit funds. There are convenient alibis as well as side doors to other businesses. A lecturer of DAV College runs a management institute in his wife's name. And a Satyavati College lecturer draws an additional salary from a boarding school in neighbouring Haryana. Until recently, a lecturer of Ramjas College, who is the son of a former University Grants Commission chairman, ran a full-fledged travel agency. Hindu College history teacher is a part-time model, and so is her husband who also teaches in the same college.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Money alone is not the motivating force. Says Purabhi Panwar, who teaches English at the College of Vocational Studies: "I felt that I was stagnating. So I started to write book reviews. I went on to features, and soon wanted to develop as a journalist." The money came as a bonus, but then Panwar had also wanted to buy a flat, something she could not have done without the extra income.

Cartoon by AJIT NINAN

Academics, of course, is uniquely positioned for facilitating moonlighting. Teachers are expected to use most of their time keeping abreast of developments in their areas of specialisation: doing research, reading, and guiding students. Most of them, as a result, are asked to hold classes for no more than 15 or 18 hours a week, with long summer holidays and winter holidays at other times in the year thrown in. Holding down a second job, or carrying on a side business is not, therefore, a very difficult affair, especially when classes allotted to you: most boys' colleges do not believe in attendance records.

There have been fashions in the variety of moonlighting. In the mid-1960s, teachers wrote books, both for intellectual stimulation as well as for a little extra money. In the next decade, teachers began to dabble in the share market and chit funds—this was the beginning of the boom in the stock-market. In the '80s, the petty businesses have gained currency. Some teachers started speculating in real estate. Consultancy, whether in management colleges or for private firms, was the other lucrative avenue. Senior professors of management colleges earn small fortunes in consultancies for private companies. Some teachers of the Faculty of Management in Delhi University, and Sri Ram College of Commerce, for instance, get as much as Rs 2,000 for each assignment. Contracts for government or public sector companies can yield still more.

But life for the unlucky ones with no other source of money, has become financially difficult, to the point that even the surviving idealist may have to resort to moonlighting. Says Anil Sethi of Khalsa College: "I used to boast about not tutoring students for money. I would do it free. Now I am actively looking for tuitions. And I kick myself for not joining the Government."

And Chauhan of Shivaji College adds ruefully: "I wish to God that I had become a school teacher; I would not be in this state now. I am paying Rs 50-an-hour to one of them for tutoring my daughter in physics and chemistry. It comes to Rs 600 every month." B.N. Raina of Kirori Mal College, who has taught post-graduates English for the last 16 years, in addition to the three years he spent teaching in the US complains: "Social pressures cannot be escaped. We need money for clothes, for cigarettes. I can't even afford to buy a book.... Naturally, people will have to look for money elsewhere."

There are many ways out of the financial labyrinth: from tuitions to journalism to gas agencies to dabbling in shares.

The only thing left for many of the teachers is the students and the sacrosanct relationship with them. These teachers just dig in their heels and brave it out, but often at the cost of a genteel poverty, nothing set aside for the inevitable rainy day, and the certainty of dropping slowly down the ladder of social respectability.

In a rapidly changing society, where the worth of a man is measured by how much he earns, the greatest casualty is the self-esteem of the teachers. Says R.C. Malhan, who teaches economics at St Stephen's: "When I joined in 1961, there was respect for a teacher. There is not much today. Our value system has changed; only money has any value now." And for Vijay Singh, who teaches in Satyavati College, the tragedy is that "a teacher feels there is a social stigma attached to his profession".

Raksha Sethi, Anil's wife who also teaches at Khalsa College, is even more bitter. "When you are in a social gathering, people lose interest the moment you tell them that you are a lecturer. They realise we earn nothing, and are thus not worth talking to.... Our son says that he will never become a teacher because he will then have to refuse everything his children will ask him for." And another teacher said that one of the students he tried to discipline, turned upon him and told him that his father paid his servant more than what the teacher earned.

A feminisation of the university is also taking place: more and more women are joining colleges, women who either have houses or are married and are self-sufficient. Between 1978-79 and 1982-83 (the latest year for which figures have been compiled), the number of male teachers in Delhi's colleges actually fell—from 2,767 to 2,693—while the number of women teachers rose from 2,070 to 2,301. Said DUTA President Singh: "It will not be long before the female-male ratio is 60:40."

If things continue the way they are, fewer bright teachers will remain. As it is, many come not because they want to teach but because they cannot find jobs elsewhere. Many of the absentee teachers ought not to have been teachers in the first place. Says Tripta Wahi, who teaches history in Hindu College: "Many of those who cut classes often come through the back door, or are with the establishment and have political clout."

Already there is a dearth of good people. Says Malhan: "It is difficult in economics to get good people. They don't come into the profession; they prefer to join companies selling soap." And though an official committee has suggested that teachers' pay scales should be improved following the Fourth Pay Commission report for Central government staff, things are not likely to change for some time.

—MADHU JAIN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

People at the top

The higher the apex of a pyramid, the greater its size and wider its base. This principle applies equally to any management function. And information, that essential tool, must increase in scope and in depth, to keep pace with changing needs.

The Times of India daily and its sister publications, together known as The Times Group have for almost a century and a half been essential reading for decision makers, and anyone to whom accurate information is important. Firmly committed to a high standard of responsible journalism, they provide a clear and untinted window to the real world. In an age of changing values, they faithfully reflect changing opinions, at the same time providing the information, analyses and comments that help to mould public opinion.

Responsible journalism and high production values have ensured a quality of readership that no other group of publications can claim. This has had happy implications for advertisers too, making The Times Group the backbone of any media plan.

For itself, The Times Group maintains its commitment to the reader, the advertiser, and the nation.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ed a wider vision.

Times change.
Faith in The Times Group doesn't.

ACIL-BC-51/86 C1

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Metal furniture that's tougher than time. And smarter than style

Allwyn Furniture Systems.
Your key to a readymade office.
Executive Tables, Chairs, Filing Cabinets, Almirahs. And a host of other office accessories.

Allwyn. The metalcraft legend that put its expertise to work.
And created office furniture
that's guaranteed to outlast lifetimes.

Allwyn. Designed for today's corporate needs. And destined to match tomorrow's.

ALLWYN

Sleek. And tough

Hyderabad Allwyn Limited

Allwyn Bhavan, HYDERABAD-500 018.

MARS HAF 20/86

Allwyn Furniture Systems

★ Executive Tables ★ Chairs ★ Filing Cabinets ★ Almirahs ★ Office Accessories

Hyderabad Allwyn Area Offices: Ahmedabad Ph. 407699, Bangalore Ph. 228885, Bhopal Ph. 65986/ 62979 Bhuoaneswar Ph. 52271, Bombay Ph. 4927575/ 4927586, Calcutta Ph. 446853/ 433576, Chandigarh Ph. 41941, Cochin Ph. 368002, Gauhati Ph. 32691, Ghaziabad Ph. 843204, Hyderabad Ph. 552308/ 43407, Jabalpur Ph. 22665, Jaipur Ph. 65729, Kanpur Ph. 245249, Karnal, Madras Ph. 77177/ 811401, Nagpur New Delhi Ph. 734740, 730715, Patna Ph. 32745, Pune Ph. 66166 (PP), Vijayawada Ph. 62544, Visakhapatnam Ph. 61652.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Cartoon by AJIT NINAN

AWACS

Advantage Pakistan

LOSE an F-16 and gain an AWACS. Islamabad proved just that last fortnight as the Pakistan Air Force's most prized fighter was downed at 22,000 feet over the Khost province of Afghanistan to a high-streaking MiG-23. The immediate reaction in the US was one of shock and outrage. To most US opinion leaders and even liberal commentators, not to talk of the Pentagon hawks, the very idea of losing an F-16 to a moderately good Soviet fighter aircraft was inconceivable. The result: a fresh outcry against the Soviet intimidation of Pakistan and a much needed plug for the Pakistani quest of an Airborne Warning and Control System (AWACS) aircraft.

The change that the incident brought about was most palpably visible in the editorial columns of the New York Times, a newspaper that had so far opposed the suggestion of any major arms sales to Pakistan. In an impassioned editorial, headlined "Lease Radar Planes to Pakistan", the paper declared: "Pakistan deserves US help, leasing it Hawkeyes makes sense. Can Congress rise to the challenge?"

The challenge before the Congress, obviously, is to get around the existing American laws that make such quick leasing of major armament systems difficult. But indications last fortnight were that the Congress was not exactly devoid of people determined to find a way out. Brooklyn Representative Stephen Solarz, who heads the house Asian and Pacific Affairs Subcommittee, was prompt in holding hearings on the issue. He has consistently backed the idea of leasing AWACS to Pakistan. And last month, with the Senate subcommittee voting the $4.2 billion aid package to Pakistan in its entirety, the AWACS issue seemed to be over.

In the Indian camp the supply of the AWACS aircraft to Pakistan over a two to three-year period was considered a fait accompli. But last fortnight the issue was reopened by none else than Pakistani Prime Minister Mohammed Khan Junejo. He sent in, through hawkish Conservative Senator Gordon Humphrey a letter to President Ronald Reagan that was unusual in its content.

Junejo virtually threatened that in case the US Administration did not immediately release the E-2C Hawkeyes to Pakistan his country may find it impossible to support the Afghan rebels. Further, he said he did not mind if, for the time being, American crews and technicians flew the aircraft. He even promised that the aircraft would be flown at a reasonable distance from the Afghan border so that neither the aircraft nor the crews are endangered.

The letter came just a few days before the F-16 was shot down—so quick that some in the Pentagon joke that the whole thing was pre-planned. However, even before it was delivered to Reagan the letter was leaked to Novak and Evans, the muckraking Washington Post columnists known to represent the extreme right opinion in the US capital. They quoted extensively from the letter to make out a strong case for the lease.

The letter, and the subsequent developments, have opened up several new possibilities and questions. The US Assistant Secretary of State Michael Armacost seemed to represent the Administration's point of view, when speaking at an Asia Society meeting, he declared that the lease presented a "more urgent answer" which may find "preference in the Congress", and may be more acceptable to India.

But he was quick to point out the complications. President Reagan would have to first certify that the release of the planes would make no difference to the defence preparedness of the United States. And, as Armacost added, it involves the question of "Americans being deployed in areas where the Soviets are employed in active military operations".

The Pentagon, however, did show a marked unwillingness to lease out the aircraft. Assistant Secretary of Defence, Richard Armitage, says the lease would, atleast in the short run, "degrade our capability". According to him, the navy is not in a position to release four Hawkeyes nor can the US Air Force spare three E-3A sentry AWACS without compromising security. Yet he and the other Pentagon decision-makers indicate that for Pakistan's sake they would be willing to bend law and logic as far as humanly possible.

The Indians, however, viewed the lease offer as a mixed blessing. While it would mean that Pakistan will get its airborne surveillance capability much sooner than Indian planners had anticipated, it would also entail US controls over it. The Pakistanis may not be able to use it, at least routinely, against India if the aircraft are to be flown by American pilots. At the same time, there is the fear that once the systems are transferred to Pakistan their leased status may not mean much.

Indian strategists remember only too well that when the Pakistani submarine Ghazni was destroyed in Indian waters in 1971 it was on lease from the US. Further, that was before hostilities formally began in December.

Also, in 1980, the US gave AWACS to Saudi Arabia on wet lease in the face of an Iranian threat. Next year, the Saudis were allowed to buy brand new AWACS of their own.

But whether or not the lease finally leads to a sale there is little doubt at least about one point: that in exchange for a quick transfer, Pakistan has agreed to scale down its quest to the relatively modest twin-engined Hawkeye instead of the awesome E-3A sentry AWACS.

—SHEKHAR GUPTA in Washington

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BOFORS INQUIRY

Full Access

THE Bofors scandal took a dramatic turn last week when Swedish Radio announced that Bofors had paid 175 million Kroner (Rs 35 crore) to Indian sources in May, 1986. This was in addition to the 33 million Kroner (Rs 6.6 crore) paid in November-December 1986. The new revelations have put an entirely different twist on the Bofors deal. Over Rs 40 crore is no small amount and, if additional money has been paid, as now seems likely, the obvious implication can only be that some of that money found its way to the highest levels of the Indian Government.

Even more damaging was the radio's report that Per Mossberg, director general of Bofors, had admitted that it had all along been stipulated in the contract signed between the Indian Government and Bofors that 3 per cent of the total contract value would be paid as "provisions". Three per cent would work out to around Rs 50 crore. This would further imply that the Indian Government knew all along that the sum was to be paid as "provisions", a typically Swedish word that can be loosely translated as commissions. If proven true, it would contradict Rajiv Gandhi's statements that no middlemen were involved and no commissions paid.

The latest revelations have put additional pressure on the Swedish Audit Bureau entrusted with probing the Indian Bofors deal. There is already mounting speculation in Stockholm that the National Bureau of Auditing will officially present the findings of its investigations next fortnight. The key question, however, was whether the investigations would reveal the names of Indians who received payments into secret Swiss bank accounts. Even if it were confirmed that large payments were paid by Bofors, the repercussions for the Indian Government or its Swedish counterpart would be tremendous.

However, the question being asked by most non-Swedes related to the credibility and effectiveness of the bureau itself. In Sweden, the "Riks Revisions Verket"—the National Bureau for Auditing—is respected for its integrity and independence. It is affiliated to both the Ministry of Finance and the ministry for Civilian Affairs. Although a government-controlled body, it enjoys a hard-earned reputation in auditing and monitoring the performance of public corporations. The bureau is headed by an auditor-general appointed for a six-year term. The current incumbent is Ingmar Mundebo, who is involved in the Bofors investigations. Mundebo is a widely-respected former Liberal Party politician, who was minister for finance and quit politics in 1980. The auditor-general is assisted by a 10-member board, of which he is also the chairman. All 10 members are nominated by the Government and include, besides civil servants, three MPs who thus guarantee the Swedish Parliament an insight into the workings of this public body.

Rajiv, it appears now, had given far too much weight to Palme's informal assurance that no middlemen would be involved.

Assisting auditor-general Mundebo in the investigations into the alleged Bofors pay-offs, is Bo Sandberg, an experienced administrator who has been designated project leader. As a bureau spokesman said: "In our investigations, we do get overall directions from the Government, but from then onwards, we operate without any form of interference. This current assignment is rather unusual in the sense that we normally do not investigate private enterprises. This is an exceptional case." Asked if that factor would undermine the thoroughness of the investigation, the spokesman responded: "Not at all. I think we are equally competent to assess Bofors and undertake a fair and thorough investigation."

Although there are little doubts about the bureau's ability to do a diligent job, journalists at the Swedish National Radio were worried whether the audit bureau's two senior officials were getting access to the kind of information the radio itself possessed. Said a senior journalist: "What we would like to see is how deep they can dig to unearth the information. They can certainly get information from the Riks Banken which in turn can get the documents from Bofors' bank, the Skandinaviska Enskilda Banken. But the question is, how much can they get out of Bofors?" Asked if the radio station would cooperate by offering their own evidence should the audit bureau get itself into a quagmire, journalists replied: "At this moment, we have taken no decisions. But it is certainly in our interest that the bureau gets all the information it needs."

Meanwhile, Carl Johan Aberg, the undersecretary for foreign trade when the Bofors deal was being negotiated, finally granted interviews to the Swedish press. Aberg bluntly stated that no written assurances on the non-involvement of middlemen was ever given to Rajiv by Olof Palme in January 1986.

Aberg said he was told by the then Bofors' chief executive, Martin Ardbro, that the company would not involve middlemen in the Indian contract. He then repeated this to Olof Palme. The Swedish prime minister, at a private lunch given by Rajiv Gandhi where Sonia Gandhi was also present, only "mentioned" to Rajiv that no middlemen would be involved. Added Aberg: "No other Swedes were present. And Palme had offered no documents whatsoever". The Indian prime minister then went on to state in Parliament that he had received assurances from Palme. The general thrust of Aberg's statements seemed to be that Rajiv was giving far too much weight to what was a passing reference made by Palme.

—RAMESH CHANDRAN in Stockholm

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

For a few glorious days forget your earthly bonds.

Take a Welcombreak!

Welcombreak is an exciting getaway for the entire ...ily. Walk down shell-strewn beaches, and travel the ...ndless deserts. Play golf on velvet greens, or a set of tennis ...very morning. Or simply revel in the luxury of India's finest ...ls. Welcombreak has it all!

Wind-surfing at Welcomgroup Cidade de Goa.

...mgroup Mughal Sheraton, Agra

...t Break Rs.1099/-
...g Break Rs.1499/-

...% discount on health ...and beauty parlour
...e coupons worth ...00/- for recreation
...mming pool

...mgroup Windsor Manor, Bangalore

...t Break Rs.699/-
...g Break Rs.999/-

...% discount on ...ty parlour
...ming
...ral at extra cost
...nis, golf and
...s on request
...mming pool

...cial Features :

...% discount on all other food and beverage items
...ge at Cidade de Goa 25% on all beverages only
...s for room only for two on twin-sharing basis
...accommodation for 2 children below 12 years
...bed Rs.100/-
...al breakfast (exclusive for package)
...: Rs 50/- per person
...dren : Rs.25/- per child (under 12 years)
...al buffet dinner (exclusive for package)
...: Rs 85/- per person
...dren : Rs.50/- per child
...ervice charges & taxes extra as applicable.
...D FROM 1ST APRIL TO 30TH SEPTEMBER 1987
...e valid only on advance reservation of package
...lid for all Indians and foreigners residing in India only

Welcomgroup Umaid Bhawan Palace, Jodhpur

Short Break Rs.666/-
* Free entry to the Palace Museum and Mehrangarh Fort
* Airport-hotel-airport transfers
* Optional tours for sightseeing to Mandore Gardens and Jaswant Thara at extra cost
* Swimming pool

Welcomgroup Bay Island, Andamans

Long Break Rs.1110/-
Big Break Rs.1850/-
* Table-tennis, darts and other indoor games
* Sightseeing, fishing and snorkelling optional at extra cost
* Swimming pool

Welcomgroup SeaRock, Bombay

Short Break Rs.1099/-
Long Break Rs.1599/-
* 15% discount on beauty parlour, Mind and Body Temple
* Tennis and squash facilities
* Swimming pool

Welcomgroup Cidade de Goa, Goa

Long Break Rs.1950/-
Big Break Rs.2850/-
* Gala dinner nite on a luxury river cruiser
* Chauffeur-driven car (for four hours)
* Airport-hotel-airport transfers
* Gifts and many other complimentaries
* Swimming pool

Short Break: 2 nights 3 days
Long Break: 3 nights 4 days
Big Break: 5 nights 6 days

HTA 5090

CALL WELCOMNET
Welcomgroup Hotels' Instant Reservation Network.

...3014127, 3010849
...221121, 220923, 2042286
...473691, 479460
...299567, 299659

Hyderabad	825428	Baroda	323232
Bangalore	258030	Ahmedabad	409367
Coimbatore	22629	Kanpur	66512
Pune	65719

Or any Welcomgroup hotel or your travel agent.

WELCOMGROUP
Palaces, hotels, resorts, indovilles

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BUNIYAAD

Bringing Down the Curtain

■ SHYAM LAL strolls on the beach in Andheri. People crowd round. The crowd gets bigger. Somebody throws a stone at him, shouting: "How dare you be so nasty to JB and Vrishbhan?" Shyam Lal (Vinod Nagpal) runs to a taxi, the crowd chases him.

■ Mangala in all white widow attire steps outside the sets. Within minutes she is gheraoed. "JB is dead, JB is dead," they chant, verging on hysteria. Women put their hands on Mangala's head and mourn.

■ A doctor from the Tata Memorial Cancer Hospital sends a message to Buniyaad script-writer Manohar Shyam Joshi that he should not let JB die because it would affect people with leukaemia in the country. He suggests a bone marrow transplant. A group of college girls appeal to Joshi to give JB the best medical treatment and let him live.

NEVER has the line between fiction and fact, between reel and real life been so blurred, the identification so complete. In Buniyaad art has not only imitated life, it has become life for thousands of television addicts. And when the curtain comes down next week for the last time after 104 episodes, thousands are likely to suffer acute withdrawal symptoms.

Those symptoms are already visible on the sets of the second-longest running serial in Doordarshan history. For most of those involved, cast, crew and director Ramesh Sippy, a unique experience is coming to an end, an expanding joint family is about to break up. A certain ennui has set in. People want to leave but not without varying levels of regret. Vijayendre Ghatge (Vrishbhan), half in jest, touches Ramesh Sippy's feet and says: "Goodbye, sir. I'm off." Sippy, absent mindedly nods: "See you tomorrow." Vrishbhan: "But, sir this is my last day." Sippy, as if awakening from a dream, finally extends his tiny frame for a formal goodbye. JB (Abhinav Chaturvedi) killed off in episode 100, has already made his tearful farewell as has Subhadra (Anjana Mumtaz). But, as she says: "I just don't want to leave, I keep finding excuses to come back; this has become my family."

But the goodbyes, it appears, might only be au revoirs. Although Sippy and company have closed shop, they do hope to return—even though they don't admit it. The last show is twice as long and winds up this epic saga of a Punjabi family spanning seven decades and many generations. But astutely, the final episode includes several teasers to a possible Buniyaad Revisited in case Doordarshan, besieged by

Photographs by NAMAS BHOJANI

(Anti-clockwise from left) Joshi with Sippy; and the Buniyaad family on the sets: Lochan and her mother; Roshan Lal; Prince and Mangala; Haveli Ram: larger than life

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

n

y's feet and Sippy, absent tomorrow."
my last day."
om a dream.
e for a formal urvedi) killed
ady made his adra (Anjana
"I just don't ng excuses to e my family."
es, it appears,
u revoirs. Al-nd company
hey do hope to gh they don't now is twice as this epic saga
ily spanning many genera-
, the final epi-
ral teasers to a Revisited in , besieged by om left) Joshi

the Buniyaad
: Lochan and an Lal; Prince
Haveli Ram
n life

In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Product value flows from corporate values at Tata Tea.

As the world's largest tea company, we bear special responsibilities.

To set an example. To define standards. To point the way for the rest of the industry to follow.

Commitments that we're uniquely equipped to discharge. With our operations running from planting through processing to packaging and marketing, there's so much we can do to benefit so many.

For the consumer, the widest range of the finest teas at the most affordable prices.

For the industry, and indeed for the nation's economy... new ways, new technologies, new examples to help catalyze growth.

For the worker, comprehensive programmes encompassing housing, health, education, recreation, family planning...

There's a vision at work here, extending far beyond mere commercial obsessions. A quest for excellence in every area of operation. A preoccupation not just with leaf tea and dust tea... but with humanity.

TATA TEA LIMITED

Making a difference.... differently

CC-0. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RAMESH SIPPY

Soap Success

It could have been mission impossible: 200 people: cast and crew, with varying sizes of egos and tantrums working 15-hour days together. But director Ramesh Sippy, who has the patience and unflappability of a turtle, steered them smoothly past 104 milestones of Buniyaad. Quietly assertive, Sippy moves through the sets like a tiny god. His every gesture is an unquestioned command; the adulation is almost embarrassing.

For Sippy himself Buniyaad has been an undreamed-of resurrection. Now, it is back with renewed vigour to the big screen. Principal Correspondent MADHU JAIN interviewed Sippy. Excerpts:

Q. What has* Buniyaad *meant for you?

A. It's been a marathon—a strenuous, huge project. But the end comes as a relief. It has been strange: families visiting the sets are so keyed up. Buniyaad has become a part of their lives.

Q. What did you want to do with* Buniyaad?

A. There is no message to be conveyed. One purpose was to travel through time. But we were not able to stick to this because of interventions by Doordarshan. Partition could not be made too traumatic. They cut references to Gandhi. Some of their cuts were ridiculous: the refugee camp scenes were the most affected. This was the time of displacement of refugees from Punjab, the Government did not want us to show any problems in refugee camps. They wanted us to show the refugees from Pakistan arriving in Delhi and going straight into houses. So we watered it down to family problems.

Q. To what extent did audience feedback influence the course of the story?

A. I did not expect so strong a reaction to JB dying. But one can't change the story. You can't hide the truth; in the early '60s there was no cure for leukaemia. But we couldn't change the story. In the end people know JB is alive and kicking round like Abhinav Chaturvedi.

Q. Vinod Nagpal says that when it is close-up time, they know they are in for it. That is when you really get them to work.

A. It is not the dialogue which takes time but the silent reactions: the look, the glance, the turn-away, the feel. It is difficult because, at that time, they are not reacting to a person but to a set-up, a dummy situation. They must have a voice to react to and therefore the cue becomes important.

Q. Will your* Buniyaad *experience influence your film-making?

A. I have learned a lot about the narrative form; now I am even more conscious that human interest is very important to the story in the Indian context. I am also confident that I will be able to make movies faster. I plan to use the video monitor for feature films.

NAMAS BHOJANI

Sippy: resurrected

Q. Manohar Shyam Joshi and you are described as quite a team?

A. Well, the chemistry between us is right. He has an understanding of screenplay and character and does his research. And he has a feel for what I can only call Hindustaniat—an Indian at heart. We are complementary to each other.

Q. Why don't you do films with different, off-beat themes?

A. My problem at the moment is that Sholay's tremendous success has bracketed me in the big box-office league. I have to come up to expectations and subjects with larger mass appeal. Sholay is as much a millstone round the neck as a feather in the cap.

Buniyaad addicts, okays an encore.

Sippy and script-writer Joshi have left a lot of loose ends dangling tantalisingly. A third of the episode is circa 1964 but the rest is set 20 years later. The still endearing Haveli Ram celebrates his 90th birthday surrounded by his children, grandchildren and great grandchildren. Lajoji is not seen and we can presume the lady who gave the life force to Buniyaad serenely left Masterji somewhere down the line. Using a clever literary device, the pater-familias, left with his mountain of memories goes on many nostalgia trips; and takes the viewer with him. In the end are many beginnings; flashbacks to the '60s are like trailers for coming attractions. Says Sippy: "If Buniyaad returns it will be a nostalgia trip for the post-Independent generation."

The month-long film strike has sent the work schedules of the actors haywire. Mazhar Khan ought to have been in the US a week earlier for a show. He waits patiently for his exit cue. Since the group scene for the last episode requires all the characters, a technical solution allows him to finally leave. Neena Gupta has still not turned up. Since many of the actors signed other films, Sippy's assistants juggle dates and shooting schedules. Vinod Nagpal and Dalip Tahil keep disappearing to Ismail Merchant's The Perfect Murder. JB had exited earlier—to Delhi for his M.A. history exams.

But to such an extent has art appropriated life that it comes as a shock to see the Buniyaad khandaan without their screen images. Alok Nath sheds his Haveli Ram clothes and character, relaxing after his takes are over with a gin and lime. Anita Kanwar, her Lajoji image intact—is propped up on a chair in a corner of the large studio, The French Lieutenant's Woman in one hand, a cigarette in the other. Vinod Nagpal has just finished Simon Callow's autobiography and loans it to Mangala (Krutika Desai), who is in the middle of an M.A. in psychology. Satbir (Kanwaljit Singh) is engrossed in Henry Miller's Plexus.

There is life after Buniyaad. But for many, a gnawing sense of insecurity has set in. Says Kanwar: "I feel insecure. In fact I am even more insecure than I was earlier. Buniyaad for me has meant a year of sure work. Now there is the spectre of unemployment. What will I do next?" Kanwar has already distanced herself mentally from Lajoji. "Earlier I was so absorbed by Lajoji that I used to be frightened about how I would get over the character. Now I am tired of playing

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Eating together: the last supper an old woman. It is not easy to have lines on my face and grey in my hair day after day. It has worn me down."

The talented Krutika echoes her: "There was regular work for eight months, suddenly I do not know what is in store for me. When we were doing the 70th episode, I realised that there were only 30 left and it would all be over."

Satbir welcomes a change but also senses insecurity round the corner. "I have already begun to wonder who will sit in Room 9. I have begun to notice the smallest of things here. Even lunch time was a great ritual. It will be gone. When JB came to my room to say goodbye I barely looked up, I was reading my script. But then he said: 'It was great working with you', and he had tears in his eyes. I never realised until then that people would have to go." For film and theatre personality Dalip Tahil (Kulbushan), it means the end of a way of life. "Buniyaad has become a part of me. There will be a void when it ends. I would work with Sippy even on a Super 8 film."

Nobody has been left untouched by the serial or by Sippy, whom they almost worship. Screen roles spill into their lives: vestiges of the characters cling to the real persona. Mazhar Khan talks of ladies getting out of their cars at red lights and telling him, "Puttar, you are doing so well." And some of Roshan Lal's character seems to have rubbed off on him. "I've changed as a person after playing Roshan Lal. I have always been ambitious, but I was always a talker and lazy. Now I have become a doer."

Soni Razdan and Vinod Nagpal seem to have the toughest time shrugging off their screen persona. Says Nagpal, who plays the villainous Shyam Lal: "When the take is over the others rush to the video monitor to see how they have done. I can't bear to look at myself." Adds Razdan, the brittle and bitchy Lochan in the serial: "Everybody hates me, I keep getting asked why I am so mean to Lajoji?" Lochan's mother (Sarita Sethi) does not have it any easier. "Even friends tell me they never knew I had this negative side. Frankly, in Buniyaad, I've lost my identity. It is so strong and overwhelming; people have forgotten everything I've done before this."

There is nothing but love and respect for Haveli Ram and Lajoji. Alok Nath is deluged with letters seeking advice and offers of roles. Buniyaad, he admits, has been "the best thing that has ever happened to me but I don't want to get into the groove of playing old men".

BUT whatever its effect on the cast, its effect on the television public has been nothing short of phenomenal. Viewership never dipped below 70 per cent. In the North, it touched 93 per cent. "At least some people put down their guns in Punjab on Tuesday and Saturday nights," says Executive Producer, Amit Khanna. Over 20 million people in the country let the Gaindamal aulad into their homes twice a week.

Buniyaad undoubtedly found a vacant niche in the Indian mindscape. Video cassettes of the episodes began to replace the pickle jars and papadams which mothers sent their children in California, Vancouver, London or Dubai. In Lahore and other Pakistani cities within transmission range, nearly a million viewers tune in to Buniyaad.

The reasons are obvious; it revolves round the family, drips with melodrama and has all the necessary hooks. Crucial to its success is Joshi, India's foremost long distance writer. Not only has he mastered the rules of the soap opera, he has his time, place, and historical references right. The characters are rooted in a milieu painstakingly researched; the accents are right, the clothes look right and so does the furniture.

Moreover, for the pre-Partition generation of north Indians, Buniyaad was a journey to the times and places they had to leave behind, an Indian Roots: the language peppered with Punjabi phrases. Lahore for that generation was still a magic word. For the younger generation it provided an opportunity to discover the past of their parents.

More important, it was a journey to the times when there were still idealists and heroes; practically each family could find one on his family tree. The Independence movement had brought out the best in people fighting for a common cause. Looked at from the more cynical India of today, overpopulated with the scheming Shyam Lals and the on-the-make Roshan Lals, the soap opera was a return to a paradise lost. At its best, before it degenerated into cliches, Buniyaad had tried to depict the changing scene in the country as well as the change in the values of a nascent India, capturing in its slowly unfolding canvass its progress and the ensuing conflicts with tradition through the story of one family. Appropriately enough Buniyaad ends in 1964, the year of Jawaharlal Nehru's death, the end of an epoch which Joshi seems to lament.

The serial fails to fulfil its initial promise of a tryst with recent history: Partition and its aftermath. Recent history was supposed to be the axis of the story but ended as a mere backdrop. Doordarshan put down its censoring foot: no riot scenes, no refugee camps, no discussions about Mahatma Gandhi.

Nevertheless, Buniyaad has been an enduring phenomenon. Tuesday and Saturday evenings will never be the same again. Even as Fairfax and Bofors simmer juicily on dining tables and dhabas across the country, people will still be asking: Will Prince marry Mangala? Did Lajoji die? Who is the heir to Vrishban's fortunes—Kaka or Mangala's little daughter?

—MADHU JAIN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Sintex - The only reliable and time-tested READYMADE WATER TANKS

For every water storage application under all Indian conditions.

SINTEX has proved its performance against all the tough and rough Indian conditions for more than a decade now. Dotting the Indian scene with lakhs and lakhs of installations-from Kashmir to Kanyakumari and Kutch to Kohima-Sintex Tanks are proving popular for all water storage and carriage applications.

Made by a unique moulding process on computer aided machines. Sintex Water Tanks offer a set of advantages unbeatable by others.

★ Lightweight ★ Easy to install ★ Strong and Durable ★ Maintenance-free ★ 100% Leakproof and Rustproof ★ Most Hygienic ★ Available in wide range from 100 lits. to 20,000 lits capacity in different shapes ★ Backed by excellent installation and after sales service through a wide network of dealers.

For further information contact:

SINTER PLAST CONTAINERS

Plastics Division: The Bharat Vijay Mills Ltd.,
KALOL (N. GUJARAT) 382721.
Phone: (02764) 2228, 2274, 2352, 3144, 3145.
Gram: "SINTEX", Telex: 0121-296 BVM IN.

Sintex - The World's largest selling moulded polyethylene Water Tanks

OFFICES AT

AHMEDABAD : 179, New Cloth Market, Ahmedabad - 380 002, Tel : 365157/361045 Gram : SINMOULD. ● BARODA : 10, Vishwakunj Society, Near MIG Quarters, Kareli Baug, Baroda - 390 001, Tel : 556406. ● BOMBAY : 18, World Trade Centre, Cuffe Parade, Colaba, Bombay - 400 055, Tel : 211653/217869, Gram : ROTOPLAST, Telex : 3171 SINT IN. ● BHOPAL : E-4/115, Arera Colony, Bhopal - 462 014, Tel : 65894. ● CALCUTTA : 230 A, Acharya Jagdish Chandra Bose Road, Calcutta - 700 020, Tel : 434596, Gram : ROTOMOULD. ● DELHI : GF-3, Osian Building, New Delhi - 110 019 Tel : 6445911/ 6431188 Gram : SEAMLESS, Telex : 31 62338 SEAM IN. ● HYDERABAD : 6-3-856, Ameerpet, Hyderabad - 500 016, Tel : 220821. ● JAIPUR : Plot No. E-40, Jamuna Nagar, Sodala, Ajmer Road, Jaipur - 6, Tel : 64713. ● MADRAS : 123, Angappa Naicken Street, 3rd Floor, Madras - 600 001 Tel : 20070, Gram : ROTOPLAST, Telex : 41 8189 SPC IN.

Bidhan-SP-111A

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SPICMACAY

Reviving the Gurukul

RUSTAM Vania, 19, has no background in classical music or in Indian culture. His Parsi father is in the defence services and his Bengali mother speaks Punjabi more fluently than she does Bengali. Rustam has never experienced anything even remotely traditional. But today, he is reaching out to grasp his roots. Ruffling his hair nervously, he explains why he wants to go on the Society for Preservation of Indian Classical Music and Culture among Youth (SPICMACAY) summer scholarship which will plant him in the home of a guru for a month where he can experience, close up, the guru-shishya parampara in the classical arts. To him, this will mean a peep-hole to a tradition he has only watched from afar. He has no credentials and no previous knowledge of classical music. He only shares with other people of his age a curiosity about Indian classical traditions.

Rustam is just the kind of candidate SPICMACAY is looking for: uninitiated yet inquisitive. Ten years ago, SPICMACAY was formed with the explicit purpose of countering the unthinking rejection of traditional culture by the youth. This novel scholarship scheme is a new dimension in this effort and Rustam was just one of the 30 students selected from the scores of aspirants who applied.

The scholarship, which promises a live-in exposure to the traditional gurukul system, has struck an enthusiastic chord not only in the students, who came swarming for the interviews despite their ongoing college exams, but also among the artistes who see this as a last chance of preserving traditions that threaten to go extinct. Those who will be gurus to the devoted shishyas this summer include some formidable names: Suryamukhi Devi, Leela Samson, Gangubhai Hangal, Kelucharan Mahapatra, Zia Mohinuddin Dagar, Padma Subramaniam, Sanjukta Panigrahi, Kalamandalam Nair, B. Rajam Iyer, Balram Pathak, S. Ramanathan, D.K. Pattamal, Trinath Maharana and Ram Chatur Malik.

They admit that a month is not enough to learn the first alphabet of the arts. Yet it would reinforce some of the values of the guru-shishya parampara. Says SPICMACAY Vice-Chairman Kiran Seth: "There has to be a re-examination of this system if our cultural traditions are to survive." Leela Samson, the noted Bharatnatyam dancer who plans to take two students into her fold, agrees. "The idea is not to give finishing touches or to enhance the art form," she says. "The idea is to gain from living in the guru-shishya environment."

Eating together: devoted shishyas

Rehearsing at the gurukul: living in

For the majority of the candidates, it was precisely this mystic excitement of living in a gurukul environment that was most appealing. Priya Kanungo wanted to see the kind of dedication the system promised. Joyeeta Dutta wanted to see a system of learning untouched by urban distractions. And Uday Lambat simply wanted to learn about Indian culture which he knew nothing about. To them, a "guru" was an ideal sadly lacking in today's schoolteachers and college lecturers with their interminable strikes. "A guru is the highest person you can look up to," said Abha Gandhi, a final year student at Jesus and Mary College, who wants to learn the values of discipline and obedience this environment promises after the military regimen she underwent in her NCC days. Others want the opportunity to live in a gurukul, preferably in a village. The applicants ranged from 13-year-olds, who came with their parents, to medical college interns.

The entire programme is being coordinated by Amreeta Lulla, a psychology student from Delhi University. She came into contact with the classical arts only last year when the scholarship scheme was still in its experimental stages. Totally ignorant of any classical art form, Amreeta went to Suryamukhi Devi's gurukul in Manipur where she followed the routine to the last detail, wearing a Manipuri dress and eating rice—the staple diet—which she couldn't digest. That month changed her outlook on classical traditions from curiosity to conviction. She is now one of the forces behind SPICMACAY.

In the world of culture, SPICMACAY has already become a big name. It has a Lec-Dem (Lecture-Demonstration) series spread out in schools and colleges all over the country, and it stages over 250 concerts in 100 towns and cities every season. The gurukul scholarship scheme is part of phase two of the SPICMACAY goal: having aroused curiosity through widespread performances in the classical arts, it aims towards reviving dying traditions on the strength of this interest.

—TANIA MIDHA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

didates, it itement of nt that was go wanted he system ed to see a d by urban pat simply an culture
. To them, lacking in ollege lecple strikes.
n you can lhi, a final ry College,
es of disci-
e this envi-
s after the she under-
ays. Others
nity to live erably in a applicants
-year-olds,
eir parents,
interns.
gramme is l by Amrnology stu-
University. ntact with only last olarship sc-its experitally ignoal art form.
Suryamun Manipur
ed the rou-il, wearing and eating et—which gest. That er outlook tions from tion. She is ces behind

of culture, already bet has a Lecemonstra-chools and ry, and it 100 towns
he gurukul
phase two g aroused ad perfor-
s, it aims ions on the

NIA MIDHA

Shirts & Trousers make good sense together

Available only at:

Charagh Din
THE SHIRT PEOPLE

Wodehouse Road, Colaba, Bombay.

NOWHERE ELSE

There are no branches or dealers & sub dealers.
No agents or representatives appointed by us.

AMOL BOSE ADVTG. 2987

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Confidence is the ability to respond

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

the needs of the future.

ESCORTS

A commitment to leadership.

In telecommunications, agriculture, transport, construction and road building machinery.

Escorts has always thrived on competition, responding rapidly to changing consumer needs. Developing product technologies and production processes with world leaders like Ford (USA) for tractors, Yamaha (Japan) for motorcycles, Mahle (West Germany) for pistons, JCB (UK) for excavator/loaders, Ransomes & Rapier (UK) and Faun (West Germany) for cranes, Kayaba (Japan) for suspension struts, Bilstein (West Germany) for gas pressure shock absorbers, Jeumont Schneider (France) for EPABX, to name a few. Unrivalled customer service has been a major factor in their success.

Escorts today, is among India's top ten engineering companies with 12 manufacturing plants, 14,000 employees and a turnover of nearly Rs. 400 crores. A leading manufacturer of tractors, motorcycles, earth-moving equipment, piston assemblies, shock absorbers, railway equipment, etc.

Commitment to the Future

On the anvil for the next four years is a massive investment of Rs. 170 crores aimed to more than double fixed assets and turnover. Investments, for expanding the capacity of all Escorts' plants in response to increased licenced capacities approved by the Government, and to cater to increasing demand.

Widening the range of productive and economical, agricultural machines.

Tapping a whole new area of road construction equipment.

And, a major diversification into electronics.

Bringing the future closer to reality.

ESCORTS LIMITED

Regd. Office : H-2, Connaught Circus, New Delhi-110 001.

LOOK AT OUR PAST, SHARE OUR FUTURE.

ESCORTS

AWAIT AN ANNOUNCEMENT!

CLARION-D 552-A

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Meeting your needs. All under one roof.

Special steels; seamless tubes; commercial and precision welded tubes; ball and roller bearings. And, of course, the usual mild steel sections... we have all you need at Tata Steel. The one-stop shop that caters to diverse needs. Smoothly. Efficiently.

A Company with the comprehensive capability it takes to serve industries as diverse as Transport and Mining. Oil and Defence. Construction and Power.

Where marketing does not end with the sale of its many products.

Where scientists constantly develop newer grades of special steels to meet sophisticated demands.

And design custom-tailored products that save valuable foreign exchange.

Tata Steel. A multi-product Company with a single aim. Your satisfaction.

TATA STEEL

The first and still the foremo

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

TIS-6535

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

HMV

Old is Gold

REMEMBER those old 78 rpms lying stacked away in the garage? Old forgotten hits that haven't been heard since the mid-'60s when the sleeker, slimmer long playing records came along with their stereo superiority? For many people, now in their 40s and 50s, their sudden reappearance on the market is occasion for a real old-time high. Inder Khanna, 54, a Delhi businessman remembers relaxed evenings, sitting in the verandah while film tunes floated on the breeze: Aana meri jaana meri aana Sunday ke Sunday. "That's the way it was," he said, "just unrushed, happy times."

Recently, someone presented the Khannas with a cassette bursting with old film music that brought back memories of their youth and the forgotten pleasures of going to the cinema. "We hadn't heard these songs for years and years, they disappeared with the old life," he said. Now the market is suddenly flooded with nostalgia. C. Ramchandra, G.M. Durrani, Noor Jahan, Shamshad Begum, Mohammed Rafi, Suman Kalyanpur are all back on the racks, bringing memories of a time when the living was easier and the music less synthetic.

It is also bringing HMV—the oldest recording company in the country and the only one with exclusive rights to almost all the film singers—a lot of money. Last year, playback singing completed 50 years in India and to commemorate the occasion, HMV decided to package the past in a series of cassettes and tapes. So great has been the response to old film music that an excited HMV President Pradip Chanda said: "We will make more money this month than we have in the past five years. We're close to that gold-mine."

For a company that almost closed down a couple of years ago, this is a remarkable comeback. For the last five years, HMV has suffered setback after setback. Its overheads were skyrocketing, piracy almost killed it and the only thing the company seemed to be recording were losses. Last year, cumulative losses stood at a staggering Rs 17 crore. Fifty years of playback singing happened just in time to pull the dog-and-gramophone company out of the red. "This is a tribute to the film classics," said Sanjeev Kohli, national manager, artistes and repertoire division. "The revival started last year and will continue all of '87."

Kishore Kumar and Lata Mangeshkar in an early concert: immortal music

The market is suddenly flooded with nostalgia, bringing back memories of a time when living was easier and the music less synthetic.

For the past several years, HMV had been busy coping with the pressures of current demands, man-in-a-rush music that came and went with the whim. It had no time to even look at its catalogue of copyrighted artistes and songs. It almost exclusively owned Lata Mangeshkar, Asha Bhosle, Hemant Kumar, Mukesh, Geeta Dutt and all the old time greats. What it had not realised was that consumer requests for old numbers had been piling up. "What we are doing now," as Chanda says, "is catering to that craving."

The collection, which is being released in phases, is spread out over several records including 50 Years of Playback Singing, Magic Moments, All Time Greats, Yaadon ki Manzil. It takes off right from the first playback song ever recorded—Kit gae ho khewanhaar by Saraswati Devi. Nostalgia-lovers can once again listen to the charged energy of Kanan Devi's Toofan Mail, the quiet passion of G.M. Durrani's Neend hamari

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

khwab tumhare, the unabashed fun of Suraiya's Ek tum ho aur ek main hun, the irresistible lilt of Asha Bhosle's Koyi aaya dharkan kaisi hai and the seductive appeal of Rafi's Khoya khoya chand. "They still give me goosebumps," said Amrita Dhawan, 32, a housewife. Gul Khan, who is 26 but an avid collector of the oldies said: "When I heard Duniya hamare pyaar ki yunhi jawaan rahe, my God, I sat up. Such music is forever."

Customers are obviously tired of today's trite lyrics and the emptiness of oversynthesised pop. Says Chanda: "Good creative film music doesn't happen anymore. It's all a take-off." While HMV will continue to service current demands, the response to the goldie oldies has taught the company just how powerful an intoxicant nostalgia can be.

When the HMV ship started sinking, corporate titan R.P. Goenka was brought in as chairman to steer it out of the red. The company then made two smart moves. First, it figured out that this project could be handled at marginal costing. All the music already existed with them, just waiting to be breathed back to life. Second, it put it all together. Old hits had been floating in and out of the market, but no one had gift-wrapped it the way it's been done now. HMV will bring out roughly 100,000 pieces in each title. In the first six months, the company had sold 40,000 pieces already.

Old may be gold, true, but it is nevertheless irreparably tarnished. Many of the songs sound like those scratchy 78 rpms tucked away in the garage. Which in fact is exactly what they are. When HMV decided to pull the past out of its hat, it found, funnily enough, that it had the rights but not the records. "We had to literally go hunting around for people who might still have some of their 78s left," said Kohli. So, much of the music on the nostalgia collection sounds like violins playing in the foreground while someone is popping corn in the back.

But, as Chanda explains: "It is not just an audio experience, people want to close their eyes and listen to their past." The real treat is for the music collectors who haunt the galis of Chandni Chowk for rare records. Said Masroor Jahan, 47, an Urdu writer, when she heard old favourites like Dilwaale, Hawa mein udta jae, Mere piya gae Rangoon: "I used to sing these songs in school." And her son, Gul Khan, says: "My mother and I sit and hear the same songs together. I can feel her emotions. Music has bridged a generation gap for me." And bridged a financial chasm for HMV.

—SIMRAN BHARGAVA

NARMADA PROJECT

Churning Controversy

GRANTED environmental clearance by the Rajiv Gandhi Government last month, the Narmada Sagar and Sardar Sarovar dams in Madhya Pradesh and Gujarat respectively are churning up controversial waters. The dams, which will jointly cost Rs 10,000 crore, form the heart of the Narmada Valley Development Project, the largest and most ambitious river valley scheme in the country.

Politicians in both Madhya Pradesh and Gujarat have hailed the clearance as the "dawn of a new era". But environmentalists insist that the socio-ecological damage will be far greater than in any other comparable project. The dams will inundate a total of 1.12 lakh hectares of land—the biggest submergence that has ever taken place in the country—and lead to the largest human displacement (1.25 lakh people) caused by any project in the world.

Seen in its entirety, the mammoth river project envisages the construction of 29 major, 135 medium and a staggering 3,000 minor dams in Madhya Pradesh alone. According to government claims, the two dams, when completed, will irrigate 19 lakh hectares , benefiting about one crore people, and create an installed power generation capacity of 2,250 MW, which will earn the states some Rs 2,000 crore a year by the sale of electricity alone. The irrigation is expected to produce some 80 lakh tonnes of foodgrains annually (gross value: Rs 445 crore), besides increasing the production of cotton, sugarcane, vegetables and fruits. Moreover, the dams are supposed to check floods, generate pisciculture and employment in the area and supply water for domestic and industrial use. "The project," says Madhya Pradesh Chief Minister Motilal Vora, "will change the face of the state."

That, unfortunately, is exactly what environmentalists fear will happen. And certainly not in the way that the Government envisages. According to them, the scheme will lead both states to an ecological disaster. Their apprehensions centre around the phenomenal human cost: about 1.25 lakh people in 435 villages of Madhya Pradesh and Gujarat will be displaced and the township of Harsud in the district of Khandwa will be completely wiped out. Kalpavriksha, an environmental action group, charges that "people have been sacrificed on the altar of political and economic expediency."

Narmada Valley Development Authority Chairman Sushil Varma maintains, however: "Our topmost priority will not be construction of the dam but rehabilitation of displaced persons." But the fact is that there just isn't enough land available in Madhya Pradesh to rehabilitate all the people displaced. Gujarat is offering refuge, but according to a survey carried out by the National Institute of Urban Affairs, only 5 per cent of the affected families are willing to move. Varma hopes to purchase land for the displaced in the command area at market

The Narmada at Omkareshwar: ambitious project

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ADITYA ARYA

e, but the threatened villagers point to fact that people displaced by dams there have still not been given alter- e land.

The Narmada Sagar and Sardar ar dams will also cause the largest mergence recorded in the country, 1 lakh hectares, inundating, in the ess, 45,000 hectares of rich rain ts and 40,000 hectares of fertile black n soil and pastures and orchards. e long-term implication of the ecologi- damage is enormous. Some of the ntry's best deciduous forests (estimated value: Rs 330 crore), will be completely destroyed and the Forest Research Institute computes the total environmental loss from the region at the rate of Rs 1.2 crore per hectare for 50 years. The World Rainforest Action Network has decided to pressurise the World Bank against funding the Narmada project.

THE state Government has promised to afforest twice the area of land coming under submergence and has prepared a plan for compensatory afforestation of 90,000 hectares of denuded and degraded forest land at a cost of Rs 162 crore. But what environmentalists want to know is whether this artificial forest can ecologically compensate for the rain-fed, natural forest. Moreover, it will take the Government 12 years to afforest the area and another 30-40 years for the trees to mature. Meanwhile, the submergence of such a vast tract of forest will increase all kinds of human pressure on adjoining forests. Ecological predictions are that such pressure will lead to silting in the river and decrease the lifespan of the dams. Varma admitted that the danger was there but it could be dealt with. "We have undertaken three pilot projects to prevent silting in the catchment area," he said.

Apart from the forests, an estimated 23 km of railway track (cost of relaying—Rs 80 crore), about 85 km of roads, 45 km of telephone lines, 19,000 buildings and 3,310 drinking water wells will also be submerged.

Adding further weight to the ecological argument is the grim warning issued by seismologists at the National Geophysical Research Institute, Hyderabad, that the gigantic dams that are proposed to be built on the river Narmada may trigger earthquakes in the seismologically active river valley. An earthquake with a magnitude of 7.0 on the Richter scale struck and damaged the Koyna Dam in Maharashtra—a region that was totally non-seismic before the building of the dam. The Narmada dam—which at 914 sq km will be the largest man-made lake in India—may trigger quakes even more powerful. "The Government is playing with fire," warned the Madhya Pradesh Geological Association. Varma admits the existence of seismicity but argues that "there are measures to fight it".

Further, according to a study conducted by the Indian Science Institute, almost 40 per cent of the total command area—one lakh hectares of black cotton soil—would suffer from chronic waterlogging. Water-logging increases salinity and renders soil infertile. Project spokesmen, however, claim that they intend to avoid water-logging by digging wells and installing enough tubewells to draw out the excess water.

Whatever is ultimately decided in the case of the Narmada Valley Development Project, the debate has highlighted the opposing concerns of the forces of government and those of environmentalists. Ecologists think that the region could be paying too high a price for its development. Varma, on the other hand, while contending that "development and environment are not contradictory", also makes the official stand clear: "Poverty and environment cannot go together." And there lies the rub.

—N.K. SINGH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RADIATION

Row on Rays

IT is one of the more bitter battles to have divided the scientific community in recent years. Across the country, amid claims and counter-claims, researchers are advocating the peaceful uses of the atom while medical scientists are opposed to its use fearing risks from radiation. The issue: how safe is it to eat food that is passed through a shower of atomic matter in order to disinfect it and increase its shelf life?

For more than 10 years, advocates of food irradiation—nuclear bombardment with gamma rays and electrons, to sterilise or kill substantial amounts of bacteria—were kept at bay. All evidence pointed to the alarming health risks—like cancer and other forms of cell damage—in consuming irradiated food. Even the pressuring by Bhabha Atomic Research Centre (BARC) scientists and the Department of Atomic Energy did not convince Health Ministry officials who refused to clear the use of irradiation technology, keeping public health and safety as the overriding priority.

Early this year, atomic scientists appeared to have notched up a victory when they got the go-ahead from the Health Ministry to irradiate food meant only for export. The Commerce Ministry, the Spices Export Promotion Council and the Marine Products Exports Development Authority had argued that spices and shrimps have high export potential and foreign buyers prefer irradiated hauls to preserve food quality longer. The argument also ran that irradiation would improve the blending quality of spices and restrict the salmonella bacteria that spoil shrimps in cold storage.

But by last fortnight, criticism of the decision had started mounting. "The reservations about food irradiation all over the world should not be lightly brushed aside," warned Dr C. Gopalan, former chief of the Indian Council of Medical Research (ICMR) and president of the Nutrition Foundation of India.

Research findings by the National Institute of Nutrition (NIN), Hyderabad, on the harmful effects of freshly irradiated wheat fed to mice and men, in the mid-'70s, had indicated that irradiation can cause malignant changes in the blood cells. Its observations were reconfirmed by laboratories in West Germany and the UK. Indignant BARC scientists bitterly contested the NIN findings. But the intervening expert technical committee appointed by the Government, and headed by Dr M.S. Swaminathan, left the issue unresolved. Dr P.V. Sukhatme, a statistician, and Dr P.C. Kesavan, a geneticist, who were later appointed to investigate the data did not recommend clearance of irradiated food for human consumption.

Undaunted by the set-back, BARC scientists continued with their laboratory research on irradiation on ham, salami, cocktail sausages, legumes, pepper, chilli, corriander, turmeric and mangoes, all of which can be preserved for a longer time and exported. They were convinced the technology had a future with small countries like Thailand, Indonesia and Malaysia, joining bigger users like the US and China. However, most of the 30-odd countries using irradiation technology continue to harbour reservations about the process due to possible long-term health hazards. Even in the US, where the technology was pioneered, food preservation through radiation is largely meant for experimental uses like space research. For instance, American astronauts on the Appollo mission consumed irradiation-treated ham.

"This is a technique with definite advantages and some difficulties," says BARC Director Dr P.K. Iyengar: "If there are takers for irradiated spices, shrimps, onions or potatoes, why should we not export these items?" A joint team of the Food and Agriculture Organisation, International Atomic Energy Agency and the World Health Organisation has said that food irradiated up to an average of one mega rad is safe and does not pose any toxic hazards. BARC doses are far below this limit.

Yet, as NIN Director Dr B.S. Narsing Rao says: "There is no simple way to find out whether foods have been irradiated, and even if it is known, the exact dosage cannot be calculated as in the case of pesticide residues in foods." BARC's only defence is that international guidelines are followed in keeping irradiation levels down. Iyengar says that progress has been slow as irradiation is wrongly associated with induced radioactivity: food does not become radioactive, just as dental and chest X-rays do not make teeth and lungs radioactive. But health officials have held that the process should be regarded as hazardous until proved safe. Equally important is the fact that irradiation has not been shown to be a commercially viable alternative to chemicals in food preservation and fumigation.

BARC is nevertheless going ahead with its plans to take up techno-economic studies on food irradiation in some villages and develop a mobile irradiator to cut down on transport costs and huge storage facilities. But, for the moment, for a population already exposed to a wide range of toxins, malnutrition and food adulterants, the hazards of irradiation of their food is something they can do without.

—AMARNATH K. MENON

Illustration by AJIT NINAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Variety. That's what Mercard is all about. Be it buying expensive sports goods. Executive class flying. 5 star dining. Antique shopping. Jewellery. Toys. The list seems endless. You can really do so many things with Mercard.

Mercard. It has a way of becoming part of your versatile life style.

Money Talks
Mercard Talks Easier

Location Courtesy: Welcom Group, Chola Sheraton, Madras.

Mercantile Credit Corporation Ltd.
Credit Card Division

Bombay: 308, Vikas, 3rd floor, No.11, N.G.N. Vaidya Marg (Bank Street) Fort, Bombay – 400 023. Phone: 2863640 ● New Delhi: B-201, Ansal Chambers-3, Bhikaijicama Place, New Delhi – 110 066 Phone: 671040 ● Bangalore: 108-109, Commercial Street, Bangalore – 560 001, Phone: 573541 ● Hyderabad: "Sagar View" 3rd Floor, 1-2-524/3, Domal Guda, Hyderabad – 500 029. Phone: 235680 ● Madras: "South India House", 36-40, Armenian Street, Madras – 600 001. Phone: 25221.

PROFAD/MERCARD/528/87

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A fabric so beautiful you can't call it by any other name!

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

LINK ADS/SM/279/87

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

STANROSE®
SUITINGS

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

JAMINI ROY

An Indian Sensibility

HE was an art machine who churned out an incredible 20,000-odd paintings in his lifetime, producing over 10 paintings daily during his prime and never selling any for more than Rs 350. He chose the 'low road'—through the common folk art of Bengal—to achieve his artistic aims and championed the ordinary middle class as the upholder of art, but ever increasingly it was the rich and the powerful who thronged to him. He rejected his training in western art and searched obsessively for Indian roots, and yet it was foreigners who bought most of his works. He believed that ordinary people were more important than governments—he had once refused an invitation to Delhi from the then prime minister Jawaharlal Nehru to receive an award—but Indira Gandhi declared him a "national artist" and after his death in 1972 ordered that a part of his house be preserved and turned into an art gallery.

Jamini Roy, the artist, nevertheless managed to attain a basic goal: international recognition for producing truly timeless works of art. And last fortnight exhibitions in Calcutta, Bombay and New Delhi commemorating his 100th birth anniversary, once again testified to this growing recognition. Another telling indicator is the ever increasing value of his works. In one Calcutta gallery, last fortnight, one of his oil paintings depicting a Santhal woman with a child sold for Rs 50,000. In the West, his paintings have of late changed hands for upwards of $ 10,000 (Rs 1.29 lakh), because the export of this "national artist" is banned.

"He could have been a millionaire many times over if he had wanted to," says the artist's youngest son, Moni Roy, who has inherited a part of the rambling house in South Calcutta's Ballygunge Place, built by his father in 1949. Moni and his three brothers had also inherited

(Clockwise from top) Santhal Woman and Child; Three Pujarinis; Mother and Child; Blue Boy: timeless works

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

...700 paintings and 700 sketches ...which they have been gradually ...over the years. One particularly ...example of the artist's line drawings ...sold by the youngest son for as much ...35,000.

...day, Jamini Roy paintings are ...by the National Gallery of Mod... New Delhi, the Academy of Fine ...Calcutta and a few private collec... The supply is chiefly from the surviv... of the artist and about 15 families ...ated with him, who both bought ...were gifted the pieces.

...Jamini Roy's works would have had ...better market, had it not been for the ...fakes floating around," laments ...hoot Art Gallery's Dr Prakash ...wal. A major problem, explains ...wal, stems from the belief that the ...'s son Amiya (Potol) Roy produced ...fakes before his death last year. A ...number of Jamini Roy paintings ...repetitive subjects—stylised an... goods and women—consequently ...as little as a thousand rupees. Many ...paintings were at best sketched by ...ist and then given to Amiya for ...ing. These are the ...kes', says Kejriwal ...ly experts can tell ...from a genuine work.

...n the artist had per...alised that his simple ...(a Bengali folk art) ...could be copied and ...sign his paintings only ...time of handing them ...a buyer. Panchanan ...the artist's faithful ...who helped him mix ...recalls that there ...over a thousand un...paintings in the house ...Jamini Roy fell seri...ill in 1970. Until his ...Panda would bring ...intings to sign during ...riods when his condi...improved. "He signed ...ds of paintings but ...now there are many ...gs in the house with...his signature," says ...But experts say that ...of the unsigned paint...will sell since they repre...more complex and ...ible-to-imitate styles.

...ugh Jamini Roy painted fast, he took weeks to think of themes which he would work out through rough sketches done late at night while lying in bed after his 7 p.m. dinner. Once he found a theme, he would express it through a series of related—and often very similar-looking—paintings. Moni recalls that during an exhibition at his Baghbazar residence in 1943, "seven foreigners all fell for one particular painting and all of them were determined to buy nothing but that one." The artist solved the problem by making them wait while he did seven different paintings—each of them on the same subject and only slightly different—and sold them to the astonished but pleased foreigners.

Jamini Roy could afford to be prolific because of his total mastery over his lines. In the years following his conscious decision to break with the western style of painting—which he had successfully practised till the age of 35 mainly through portraiture—Jamini Roy developed an entirely new, personal style, rooted in the Patua folk style.

So impressed was French art critic A. Herve Masson with Jamini Roy's works that he promptly counted him amongst the "greatest contemporary masters", comparing him with the great Fauvist, Henri Matisse. Other European critics were equally impressed , calling him the artistic "Prophet of India". For, here was a style that looked Indian, instead of being merely an Indianised version of western artistic modes. Moreover, it was the first time that an Indian artist had succeeded in evolving a technique and style to express apparently primitive, almost crude forms.

It would not have been difficult for Jamini Roy to maintain a less rigorous regime, painting less and charging more. His reputation had been firmly established by the late '30s and from then on had started the flow of celebrities to his house. Even Mahatma Gandhi visited him in the early '40s to see for himself the artistic ascetic working with fanatic fervour in a simple house in North Calcutta's crowded Baghbazar area. Among his famous fans was also the late Mrs Gandhi.

"My father was interested in ensuring that people who bought his works were genuinely interested in art and would take good care of them," says Moni Roy. There were occasions when Jamini

...(from top) Jamini Roy; ...ing Flight to Egypt; ...tempera work

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Roy turned down offers from the 'upper class society-types' interested only in acquiring his works for their snob value. At times he even bought back his paintings from people who did not take proper care of them.

The Jamini Roy Art Gallery opened last September—seven years after the Left Front Government acquired the portion of the house where the artist had worked. Unfortunately, his studio is now an office for the gallery, furnished by an ugly rexine covered table and a large, dusty file rack. The state Government maintains the 227 paintings bought from his sons and periodically displays them at the gallery.

Bengali Woman: personal style

It is this collection that provides middle class art lovers access to Jamini Roy's works for, as the recent exhibitions at Calcutta's Birla Academy, the Chitrakoot Art Gallery and Delhi's Dhoomimal Art Gallery showed, most of the artist's works are privately owned and inaccessible to the general public except on special occasions. This is ironical because Jamini Roy deliberately kept down the price of his paintings in order to encourage middle class art lovers to buy and display paintings.

—INDRANIL BANERJIE

ANDHRA PRADESH

Wage Verdict

THE labourer is worthy of his hire—even if he does happen to be a convict. In a landmark verdict last month, Justice P.A. Choudary of the Andhra Pradesh High Court has declared that a prisoner has the constitutional right to earn his living and more important, that the state Government is obliged to give him work and pay for it.

Till now, convicts in most state prisons have been working at various jobs; carpenters, weavers, blacksmiths, painters and cobblers, but have never been paid a decent wage. Four years ago, prisoners in Kerala jails took the issue to the state high court demanding a wage of Rs 8 a day. The court agreed but the Kerala Government stayed the fiat by appealing to the Supreme Court.

But the Andhra Pradesh case is likely to finally establish the standards for prisoner's work and the wages they can earn. The case itself was brought to the court in March 1985 by Bhaskar Vijaya Kumar, 26, a final year law student at the Andhra University, Vishakhapatnam. Kumar, who visited the Central Prison while preparing for his criminology paper, was appalled to discover that prison administrators were paying a pittance of 50 paise a day to an unskilled worker and Re 1 to a skilled one. "It was disgusting to find the law abused in an institution intended to reform those who did not follow it earlier in their lives," he says.

Kumar promptly petitioned the high court and charged the state with violating its constitutional obligations: "The state is perhaps contributing indirectly to aggravating the poverty of some prisoners' families by not providing the convicts the increased minimum wage."

The state retaliated by questioning Kumar's right to raise the issue since he was not an affected person, a stance Justice Choudary overruled. The Government then contended that all expenses on the prisoners—including food, clothing and medical facilities—had to be computed in determining the wage and that the total cost would exceed the standard minimum wage for workers outside jails. Choudary, however, called the payments "woefully inadequate" and directed the state Government to constitute a committee of penalogists, sociologists and economists to fix a scale of wages which would be fair to both prisoners and those doing the same jobs outside.

The judgement was obviously long overdue. But the irony is that Andhra Pradesh pays one of the highest wages to prisoners and has, in fact, revised wages twice in the past eight years—a skilled prisoner gets Rs 3 a day and an unskilled one Rs 2 a day. And, according to state Prisons Directorate officials, since another Rs 8 a day is spent to meet their living expenses, prisoners cannot complain of injustice. But most other states have so far been paying a pittance and prisoners are nothing more than slave labour. The new judgement finally promises to offer adequate compensation to prisoners toiling in the dark reaches of the country's prisons.

—AMARNATH K. MENON

Kumar (left) and Justice Choudary

The landmark verdict of the Andhra Pradesh High Court, by which the state Government is obliged to provide a prisoner work and pay for it, is likely to finally establish the work and wage standards for prisoners.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

VINITO

PURE MARBLE WALLSTYLING

Wall Displayed

Vinito. Pure marble tiles designed specially for walls. An exclusive collection that reflects the quality of your merchandise.
Selectively quarried marble from captive mines. Processed to precise dimensions and a mirror finish by computerised machinery from Italy. With Italian-trained expertise.
Vinito. A matter of style.

OFFICES / INSTITUTIONS / HOTELS / SHOWPLACES / STORES / HOMES

Manufactured by:
VINEET UDYOG LIMITED
Udyog Vihar
Sukher, Udaipur 313 001
Rajasthan. Tel: 27719

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

LET'S TAKE
LET'S TAKE MU

DU

Maruti Radial Tyres. Only from Dunlop. For the ultimate in travel luxury—'Radial Class'. Another first from a company with a plethora of firsts to its name.

Dunlop. First tyre and rubber company to establish operations in India in 1898.

First to make tyres for aircraft, and still the only one.

First to manufacture extra-large earthmover tyres in India.

First to manufacture hi-tech steel cord belting in India.

First to introduce nylon two-wheeler tyres.

First to introduce Tyre Service Centres in India.

The list goes on.....

Dunlop the largest tyre and rubber company. Where innovation is a way of life.

Dunlop. Started first. Remains first.

DUNLOP

FIRSTS MARUTI RADIALS

Dunlop is Dunlop. Always ahead.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

◆ What extends Rajiv Gandhi's range and keeps him roving? Right: his spankingly new silver grey Range Rover Vogue—gifted by the King of Jordan, in the exhaust wake almost of the Mercedes 500 SEL he gave the year before. But the new vogue took the car-happy prime minister on a bumpy ride; several questions are being asked about his Brezhnev-like fad. Why had Rajiv imported the jeep in the name of the special protection group chief, bypassing the customs duty rule that all heads of government must follow? Why did he accept such gifts (Malaysia is rumoured to be presenting him yet another)? What was wrong with a swadeshi car? If Rajiv's political career goes into reverse gear, his automobile addiction could backfire rather badly.

◆ Slava Zaitsev looks as if he will break into dance any moment—spiky upturned hair, florid pink Christian Dior scarf flung with measured abandon round the neck and offset by earthy exuberance—but it is only design that this talented one-man Soviet fashion industry breaks into. The man behind the Zhivago look in the West might add a touch of India to Soviet haute couture. Here to organise a textile exhibition and fashion shows for the Festival of Russia in India later this year, his sketch pad overflowed with ideas. Says Zaitsev: "The potential (for fashion) was always there in Russian folk traditions."

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Rajiv with Rover: car happy

JYOTHI VENKATESH

Jayaprada: sisterly love

PUSHKARNA

Zaitsev: deft designs

◆ Jayaprada is in the family way. But in her case, it is dynastic succession. The perfect beauty has launched her first film as producer: and brother Shriram Kumar makes his debut. Her other brother is already in films and this time the family cast do a Tamil and Telugu version of Rocky. The movie has Shriram in the role Sunjay Dutt played in the Hindi version. Says Jayaprada: "Acting runs in my family. Besides myself, my brothers are both equally good in acting. I have launched the film to give a break to my brother, Shriram."

◆ Sunset Boulevard now crosses Carter Road. Talk in tinsel town is that middle-aged enfant terrible Mahesh Bhatt's just-completed film Kaash is based on the rise and fall of Rajesh Khanna and has a coup de grace: Dimple Kapadia plays the superstar's estranged wife; the superstar is Jackie Shroff. But Bhatt denies taking many a leaf from Khanna's turbulent life: "My film is about the trials of a superstar who falls out of grace. Mine is an inspired subject about a father and a son and of an estranged wife." Parallels with persons living or separated are purely coincidental.

Jackie and Dimple: Silsila II

JYOTHI VENKATESH

◆ From the schoolroom to the studio, wasn't a long distance. And to a national award, the step was even shorter. For Monisha Unni—at 16, perhaps the youngest actress ever to win the best actress award, for the Malayalam film Nakhakshathangal (Nail Marks)—the fact that it was her first film was great.

Unni: youthful success

But the unpretentious star gives the credit to director Hariharan. "I simply did what I was told to," she says.

She is still only in the 10th standard, reads Nancy Drew and Agatha Christie and insists: "I will not do any intimate scenes or wear revealing clothes." Brave new words.

CC-0. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

car happy

at middle-le Mahesh
just-com-film Kaash
sed on the
and fall of n Khanna as a coup de mple Kapasuperstar's
e superstar ut Bhatt dea leaf from nt life: "My rials of a su-out of grace.
red subject
a son and of ." Parallels
ng or sepa-
pincidental.

oolroom to a long disa national was even sha Unni—
e youngest vin the best r the Mala-

l success

akshathanga
e fact that it was great.
entious star to director ply did what
e says.
y in the 10th
Nancy Drew
stie and indo any intiar revealing
ew words.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

13020

13019

13018

13017

FOCUS

The Agony

The devastati
Meerut and its a g in their inter
s a warning th
een allowed to ther Meeruts c

COVER STO

Flying thro

Rajiv Gandhi'
Satish Sharma i ersy over his la
he Prime Minist
n the man and n exclusive int

SPECIAL R

NTENTS

APITALOOK.....
HE FORTNIGHT
OVER STORY
he Agony of M URRENT EVENT
haran Singh: D
radi Commissio Muddying the dar Pradesh: D
nakkar Commi
Shrouded in S ssam: Minority adhya Pradesh
erala: Laboured
PCA: Lotus Blos
unjab: Discoura
amil Nadu: Cen
PECIAL REPORT
aryana Electio
A Delicate Bal
EFENCE
Main Battle Tank
Chinks in the

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

FOCUS THIS FORTNIGHT

The Agony of Meerut

The devastating riots that swept through Meerut and its adjoining areas were frightening in their intensity. The abnormal death toll is a warning that communal tensions have been allowed to reach a dangerous level and other Meeruts can erupt elsewhere.

COVER STORY 30

A Delicate Balance

The Haryana elections will be crucial. INDIA TODAY commissioned psephologist Prannoy Roy to analyse election results in Haryana over the past 10 years and pinpoint the most important factors that will determine the outcome.

SPECIAL REPORT 74

Chinks in the Armour

Contrary to optimistic statements in Parliament, India's prestigious Main Battle Tank project still has serious design flaws according to the latest evaluation tests carried out by Army Headquarters. Costs have also escalated.

DEFENCE 78

Flying through Turbulence

Rajiv Gandhi's pilot friend and close aide Satish Sharma is the latest focus of controversy over his lavish life-style and his role in the Prime Minister's establishment. A report on the man and the controversies along with an exclusive interview.

SPECIAL REPORT 90

A Communal Coup

The military takeover in peaceful Fiji by Lt-Colonel Rabuka threw out the allegedly "Indian" Bavadra government and replaced the island's democratic system with a new one that will ensure Fijian control, seemingly for all time to come.

GLOBE TROTTING 102

India's Vanishing Wildlife

The past three decades have seen the systematic decimation of India's once-rich wildlife. Species after species has moved onto the highly endangered list. Even wildlife preserves have become areas of conflict. A report.

SPECIAL FEATURE 128

CONTENTS

CAPITALOOK 22
THE FORTNIGHT THAT WAS 27
COVER STORY
The Agony of Meerut 30
CURRENT EVENTS
Charan Singh: Death of a Rural Voice 43
Tyagi Commission: Muddying the Waters 49
Bihar Pradesh: Desperate Measures 53
Thakkar Commission: Shrouded in Secrecy 54
Assam: Minority Moves 56
Madhya Pradesh: One More Son 61
Kerala: Laboured Issue 63
PCA: Lotus Blossoms 66
Punjab: Discouraging Start 68
Tamil Nadu: Censor Scrape 73
SPECIAL REPORT
Haryana Election Analysis: A Delicate Balance 74
DEFENCE
Main Battle Tank: Chinks in the Armour 78
STATENOTES 80
SPECIAL REPORT
Satish Sharma: Flying through Turbulence 90
GLOBE TROTTING
UK General Elections: Campaign Craft 96
Fiji: A Communal Coup 102
NEIGHBOURS
Sri Lanka: Final Battle 104
TRADE WINDS 105
BUSINESS
Devaluation: Diminishing Returns 106
R.P. Goenka: Surprise Move 108
Super-computer: Stalemate 108
ITC: Tax Trouble 113
Beer Industry: Hung Over 115
Parry: Over Haul 116
HSL: In the Dock 117
Binny: Jockeying for Control 118
Mangoes: Bitter Harvest 119
Advertising: Creative Hard Sell 120
Economy Monitor 125
The Markets: Looking Up 126
SPECIAL FEATURE
Ecology: India's Vanishing Wildlife 128
SPORTS
PMG: Selling Sportsmen 138
CRIME
The US: Prize Catch 142
LIVING
Trekking: The Great Escape 144
CHANGING SCENE
Pondicherry: Au Revoir 150
SNAPSHOT 156
MEDIA
TV Companies: Slow Fadeout 159
EDUCATION
Bangalore: Lingual Lesson 161
SCIENCE
Superconductors: New Energy 164
EYE-CATCHERS 168

Cover photograph by RAGHU RAI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

This is just a glimpse of fulfillment in Kashmir

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Can you imagine a valley of cherry temptations

Summer and Kashmir melt into golden freshness, bringing forth a world of irresistible temptations. The meadows turn into a carpet of flowers and orchards get laden with cherries and almonds.

It's time to indulge yourself, to experience the pleasures of Paradise. Come, bite into luscious freshness, lose yourself in flower-spangled valleys.

Come, now is the time to be in Paradise — to savour an experience that goes beyond all your imagination.

J&K TOURISM

For details contact or write to: The Director of Tourism, J&K Government, Srinagar Tel: 72449, 73648, 77224
After office hours: 77303, 77305 Grams: JAKTOURISM
Telex: 375-207 TSM IN or J&K Tourist Offices at:
Ahmedabad Tel: 391043 Bombay Tel: 216249
Calcutta Tel: 225790 Hyderabad Tel: 236686
Jammu Tawi Tel: 48172, 44527 Madras Tel: 562335
New Delhi Tel: 345373, 343400 Extn: 2379

Kashmir
you can't have enough of it!

Akshara/ITDC

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

In Hong Kong, you can!

In Hong Kong you can find more fun, more variety and more excitement packed into one cosmopolitan city than anywhere else on earth.

You can shop for the newest fashions or the latest electronic goods. You can enjoy regional Chinese food, authentically prepared and always fresh. You can pick a winner at the night races, or dance till dawn in pulsating discos.

You can fly to Hong Kong on Cathay Pacific, Hong Kong's airline, with 4 flights a week from Bombay. You can travel in Rolls Royce comfort, pampered by the most gracious service in the air. So you'll enjoy a relaxing journey and arrive in the best possible shape.

For more information contact your travel agent or Cathay Pacific Airways at Taj Mahal Hotel, Bombay. (2029112|3|9561|5691.)

HONGKONG

Arrive in better shape

CATHAY PACIFIC

The Swire Group

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIA TODAY
THE COMPLETE NEWSMAGAZINE
VOLUME XII NUMBER 11
FOR THE FORTNIGHT JUNE 1-15, 1987

EDITOR
AROON PURIE

EXECUTIVE EDITOR T.N. NINAN
PICTURE EDITOR RAGHU RAI
FEATURES EDITOR INDERJIT BADHWAR
DEPUTY EDITOR DILIP BOBB
SENIOR EDITOR PRABHU CHAWLA

CORRESPONDENTS

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENTS RAMINDAR SINGH, SHEKHAR GUPTA
NEW DELHI PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI, RAJ CHENGAPPA, MADHU JAIN, SREEKANT KHANDEKAR, TANIA MIDHA
AHMEDABAD RAMESH MENON
BANGALORE ANITA PRATAP
BHOPAL N.K. SINGH
BOMBAY M. RAHMAN
CALCUTTA INDRANIL BANERJIE
HYDERABAD AMARNATH K. MENON
LUCKNOW DILIP AWASTHI
MADRAS S.H. VENKATRAMANI
PATNA FARZAND AHMED
TRIVANDRUM SREEDHAR PILLAI
LONDON RAMESH CHANDRAN
NEWS COORDINATOR RADHIKA ROY
ART DIRECTOR M.G. MOINUDDIN
CHIEF OF PRODUCTION SHIRLEY JOSHUA, ANURADHA KAPOOR
COPY DESK SIMRAN BHARGAVA, ANN NINAN
CHIEF PHOTOGRAPHER BHAWAN SINGH
PHOTOGRAPHERS PRAMOD PUSHKARNA, PRASHANT PANJIAR, NAMAS BHOJANI
CARTOONIST AJIT NINAN MATHEW
CARTOGRAPHER B.K. SHARMA
LAYOUT ARTISTS ANUP GUPTA, PEALI DUTTA GUPTA
MARKETING DIRECTOR MOHINI BHULLAR

ADVERTISING MANAGERS

DELHI NAGINDER RISHI
CALCUTTA MEERA PAUL
MADRAS R. ANAND
BANGALORE S.J. NAIDU
GENERAL MANAGER CHANDER RAI

EDITORIAL OFFICE LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. F-14/15, CONNAUGHT PLACE NEW DELHI 110001. PHONE: 3315801-4, 3314745 INTO IN CABLE: LIVMEDIA. NEW DELHI ● SUBSCRIPTION: INDIA TODAY SUBSCRIPTION DEPARTMENT, POST BOX 26 FARIDABAD HARYANA ● TRADE CIRCULATION: INDIA CIRCULATION MANAGER, F-14 CONNAUGHT PLACE, MIDDLE NEW DELHI PHONE: 3313076-8. TELEX: 31-62634 INTO IN ● ADVERTISING OFFICES: 28 A&B JOLLY MAKER CHAMBER II, NARIMAN POINT BOMBAY-400021. PHONE: 2026152, 2029326, 2024284 TELEX: 11-5174 THOM IN. CABLE: LIVMEDIA. BOMBAY ● 1-2-273 AND 351323. TELEX: 31-2651 THOM IN. CABLES: LIVMEDIA CHANDIGARH ● FAGUN CHAMBERS, 26 COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF CIRCUS, NEW DELHI-110001. PHONE: 352378, 352379 AND 351323. TELEX: 31-2651 THOM IN. CABLES: LIVMEDIA DELHI ● 24 IST. MARKS ROAD, BANGALORE-560001 ● 2 MADRAS-600105. PHONE: 477188, 477770, 479163, 479164 ● 12 CATVEREST 46C CHOWRINGEE ROAD, CALCUTTA-700016 ● 443398, 447726, CABLE: LIVINMEDIA, CALCUTTA ● 1987 LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. ALL RIGHTS RESERVED. REPRODUCTION IN ANY FORM IS PROHIBITED. PUBLISHED BY CHANDER RAI FOR LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. NEW DELHI AND PRINTED AT THE PRESS INDIA LTD. FARIDABAD HARYANA ● INDIA TODAY DOES NOT ARE RESPONSIBILITY FOR RETURNING UNSOLICITED PUBLICATION MATERIAL. ●

COMPLEX CURE

Your cover story ("A Risky Gambit", May 31) is an excellent journalistic piece with a critical analysis of the complex situation in Punjab. The need of the hour is to avoid a further alienation of the Sikhs and replace violence with love.

Kanyakumari — G. DAVID MILTON

■ President's rule in Punjab is a right move. But it is unfortunate that this decision was not taken earlier—in which case the situation would now have been under control.

Ludhiana — CHARANJIT SINGH

■ President's rule provides a chance to the ruling party to enhance its falling credibility. Rajiv's words to Barnala: "You and your government will be judged by the firmness with which you act," ironically applies to himself now.

Madras — T.R. SRIDHAR

■ With elections in neighbouring Haryana round the corner, Rajiv Gandhi has only reinforced the suspicion that he is more concerned with election success than with long-term stability in Punjab.

Ahmedabad — M.V. RAVINDRAN

■ It is tragic that the Government continues to ignore the country's interests, for the sake of petty politics.

Gwalior — SANJEEV RAINA

■ Your conclusions on Punjab are biased as you seem to be concerned only with the ways that the administration appeases the 'Sikh psyche'. But what about the sentiments and plight of the non-Sikhs in Punjab who constitute almost 48 per cent of the population?

Delhi — PARJAN KUMAR JAIN

■ Before President's rule, Punjab was ruled by two B's—Barnala and Balwant Singh, and now after the imposition of President's rule, it is ruled by two R's—Ray and Ribeiro. But will both be able to free Punjab from the two M's—the militants and the military?

Amritsar — KAMAL JIT SINGH AHLUWALIA

ERODING VALUES

Kudos for your editorial ("Disintegrated Circuits", May 31) which rightly highlights the decline of national institutions. This problem is compounded by the deterioration in moral values in public life due to individual self-interest.

Coimbatore — N.P. LAKSHMINARAYAN

CORROSIVE CULTURE

Your article ("Criminals in Congress", May 31) gives a vivid picture of the situation in Madhya Pradesh where the Congress(I) has been winning elections only by money-power and goondaism. It is a sorry comment on the current state of affairs that any honest police officer or bureaucrat who tries to oppose these elements is transferred to other places.

Bhopal — ADIL FEROZ

■ The pathetic picture of the two-year-old boy with acid burns illustrates the fact that ours is a sick society, motivated by greed for power and material gain.

Bangalore — G.I. D'SOUZA

SPEAKER'S SERMON

Your interview with Tamil Nadu Assembly Speaker P.H. Pandian exposed the man ("Legislature is Supreme", May 31). Such interviews allow a deeper understanding of our politicos.

Madras — S. RETNASWAMY

■ Peoples' representatives are elected by the people and are for the people, but they do not discharge their duties gratis. They get huge perks, a fat salary and a pension to boot. So it is amazing to see Pandian's logic that the media should distribute their publications and theatres should screen films for free.

Madras — T.M. SUNDARARAMAN

TEACHERS' TRAVAIL

College teachers today ("Moonlighting Mania", May 31) face innumerable problems. When the so-called 'makers of the nation' lead such a miserable life, it is hard to expect that the careers of students will not be affected. The Govern-

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

An issue of confidence.

Over 50% return in just one year

	Rs.
Here's how :
Investment in one Debenture	350.00
Return
Sale value of 5 Equity Shares @ Rs. 50* on 31st December 1987	250.00
Interest for 6 months on Rs. 350 @ 12.5%	21.87
Sale value of further 5 Equity Shares @ Rs. 50* on 30th June 1988	250.00
Interest for 6 months on Rs. 175 @ 12.5%	10.93
Total	532.80
Less your investment	350.00
Net Return	182.80

* Market price of Equity Share Rs. 50.25 as on 13th April, 1987.  These Shares would be entitled for pro rata dividend for 1988.

CLARION D 558

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ESCORTS

A track record of regular Bonus Issues, ghts Issues, consistent high dividends ... d now a future of promise!

scorts is one of India's top ten eering companies with 12 facturing plants, 14,000 ployees and a turnover of nearly 00 crores. A leading facturer of tractors, motorcycles, ving equipment, piston ngs, shock absorbers, railway ment, etc.

w projects under mentation include: Electronic with Jeumont Schneider ce), Road Construction ery with Dynapac (Sweden), pic Front Forks with Kayaba Hydraulic Mobile Cranes an (West Germany).

fidence Multiplied

reholders' confidence stems e fact that Rs. 1000 invested in today worth nearly Rs. 2 lacs 8 Bonus Issues and 3 Rights sistent high dividends have dded to this confidence.

itment to the Future

now, Escorts is on the d of major expansion and sation aimed to more than s turnover and fixed assets. r part of this Rs. 170 crores ent will come from internal n of funds.

Highlights

- Annual turnover of nearly Rs. 400 crores. Ranks amongst the top ten Engineering Companies.
- Rs. 170 crores capital outlay on expansion and diversification into new areas — Assets and Turnover expected to double by 1991.
- Fully Convertible Debentures. 50% conversion on 31st December, 1987. Balance 50% conversion on 30th June, 1988.
- Conversion of Debentures into Equity Shares at Rs. 35/- per share against market price of Rs. 50.25 on 13th April, 1987 on Delhi Stock Exchange.
- First Public Issue since 1960.
- Holding of Equity Shares on full conversion in marketable lots of 50 shares or multiples thereof.
- Consistent Dividend record. 22% Dividend maintained for the last 4 years.
- Equity Capital of Rs. 21.40 crores includes Rs. 19.43 crores from Bonus Shares.
- 100 Equity Shares in 1960 have grown to 3808 Equity Shares now valued at Rs. 1,90,400 at a market price of say Rs. 50/- per share through 8 Bonus and 3 Rights Issues.
- Easy liquidity — listing at Ahmedabad, Bombay, Bangalore, Calcutta, Delhi and Madras Stock Exchanges.
- Scope for Capital appreciation.

Issue of 10,00,000— 12.5% Secured Fully Convertible Debentures of Rs. 350 each aggregating Rs. 35 crores.

Write for application forms to:

Managers to the Issue:

CHAMPAKLAL INVESTMENT & FINANCIAL CONSULTANCY LIMITED
Regent Chambers, 208, Ceremonial Boulevard, Nariman Point, Bombay-400 021

Grindlays Bank p.l.c.
Merchant Banking Division,
H-2, Connaught Circus, New Delhi-110 001.

J.M. Financial & Investment Consultancy Services Pvt. Ltd.
114, Himalaya House,
23, Kasturba Gandhi Marg, New Delhi-110 001.

ESCORTS LIMITED
Regd. Office : H-2, Connaught Circus, New Delhi-110 001.

LLY CONVERTIBLE DEBENTURES

LOOK AT OUR PAST, SHARE OUR FUTURE.

ESCORTS

ISSUE OPENS ON 10TH JUNE, 1987.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

What do you do if your wallet with $ 5000 in Thomas Cook MasterCard® Travellers Cheques goes down the Niagara Falls?

First, relax.

Your money isn't going anywhere. Just head for the nearest phone and call Thomas Cook MasterCard on the Anytime Line – the round-the-clock telephone service – and you'll be guided to the nearest refund office. (With over 100,000 refund points worldwide, there's sure to be one near you. Wherever you are.)

An Emergency Refund can be provided, on the spot, to see you through the next 24 hours – the time normally taken for a complete replacement. So, you see, it's 'regain without pain'.

Better purchasing power. Worldwide.

It's simple.

For instance, if you're visiting the US, you can use your Thomas Cook MasterCard Travellers Cheques as cash. They have purchasing power at full face value. On the other hand, when you encash any travellers cheque, you may be charged a tidy service fee.

See the difference?

Thomas Cook MasterCard Travellers Cheques are available in 12 currencies. So you can carry them in the currency of the country you're visiting. And thanks to the backing of MasterCard, the US-based worldwide credit card giant, and leading European banks (symbolised by the ETC mark) you're a welcome customer anywhere on earth.

With all this going for you, shouldn't you carry Thomas Cook MasterCard Travellers Cheques on your next trip?

For more information, do ask your banker. He'll be glad to advise you.

Thomas Cook

MasterCard

Travellers Cheques

The Right Choice

everest/87/TCIL/199

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ment must make a genuine attempt to improve their working conditions.

Muzaffarpur — RAJ KUMAR JHA

■ Sky-rocketing rents and the dizzying rise in prices since the salaries of university teachers were last revised in 1973 have led to the present scramble to make both ends meet. And because of the delay in implementing the Mehrotra Committee report, less competent people will continue to join the profession.

Delhi — VINOD CHOWDHURY

■ In spite of the perspective taken by your article, I am convinced that there are hundreds of Delhi college lecturers who, regardless of their 'poverty', would not like to change places with a senior government officer or company executive. Still, the Government's indifference towards bettering their lot is wrong.

New Delhi — DAMODAR AGRAWAL

■ A lecturer is much better off than a gazetted officer. A young college lecturer gets the same emoluments as a young gazetted officer but works fewer hours per day and gets longer vacations.

Bharuch (Gujarat) — DR S. KUMAR

LASTING LESSONS

SPICMACAY ("Reviving the Gurukul", May 31) has been doing good work. But it needs publicity to make it more effective throughout the country.

Muzaffarpur — YASHWANT PARASH

CURTAIN CALL

Buniyaad ("Bringing Down the Curtain", May 31) enlivened every Tuesday and Saturday TV for so long that it is going to be sorely missed. The director deserves all praise for his authentic portrayal of the partition sequences.

Jamshedpur — B.N. BOSE

■ Kudos to Ramesh Sippy for extracting the best out of the Buniyaad team. At the same time, I do agree that the serial failed to fulfil its initial promise of a tryst with recent history. Historians took a back-seat in correcting the aberrations of Mandi House.

New Delhi — SOMNATH DHAR

RUTHLESS RAIDERS

It is unfortunate that the press thinks that anyone who is arrogant with the business community, like V.P. Singh, is pious ("Repressing Reforms", May 31). I wish Rajiv Gandhi would constitute an inquiry to probe the high-handedness of officials during raids ordered by the former finance minister.

Calcutta — PANNA LAL MUNDHRA

MARUTI MANIA

Your article on Marutis ("A Brash New Culture", May 31) was interesting but it seemed to attribute road recklessness to the advent of Marutis. From my own experience, Indian drivers are maniacs who are gifted driving licenses from corrupt road officials. They're unsafe in any car.

New Delhi — NIRAJ DAWAR

■ Here are some more puns recently spotted on Marutis—the newest rage on the roads: 'I am a baby Merc', 'I am small and sweet and a ride with me is a real treat', 'Some babies don't stay at home'!

Secunderabad — ANOOP AGARWAL

■ It is ironical that an article about increasing deaths on the road—which begins with the ghastly incident of Kapoor's family dying when their Maruti crumpled against a small tree—should be followed by a story which has youngsters raving about the new peppie Maruti culture.

New Delhi — RADHA KRISHAN

SMOKING GUN

Congratulations on your exhaustive coverage of the Bofors scandal ("Bofors and After", May 15). Had it been any other country, the Government would have resigned at once.

Comtai — DIPANKAR PATTANAYAK

■ The disclosures made in the cover story pose vital questions concerning the security of the country vis-a-vis defence acquisitions. It would be a dangerous mistake to handle this unprecedented situation in a clumsy and inept manner.

Kottayam — V.K. SATHYAVAN

PEACE CALL

The special report ("The New Offensive", May 15) brought to the fore the plight of the Sinhalese and Tamils in Sri Lanka. India should step up its mediation efforts to bring peace to the strife-torn country. Terrorism in any form has never succeeded and will never be able to achieve anything but grief and despair for the victims' families.

Aurangabad — HONED TUNKIWALLA

FIGHTING FIT

Ribeiro is right in his interview ("No Chance for Success", May 15) that no fight against terrorism can be won unless the hearts of the public are won. It is high time the Government realises the complexity of the situation and gives him a free hand in tackling terrorism.

Karimnagar — K. SRINIVAS

■ Ribeiro has done a great job in fighting terrorism. It is a pity that politicians who are not doing anything themselves to curb terrorist activities are becoming a hurdle in Ribeiro's path.

Bhilai Nagar (MP) — B.S. SUBRAMANAYAM

KILLERS ON WHEELS

Your special feature ("Death on the Roads", May 15) was a real eye-opener. Easy availability of licenses, lack of road planning and poor enforcement of regulations are the main reasons for this escalating tragedy.

Gurgaon — MANDIP KAPOOR

■ Your traffic story was an excellent survey of the terrible rise in accidents. Every year, Gujarat alone loses as many people on the road as the number who perished in one Bhopal tragedy. The authorities should take offenders to the places where they can see the horrific effects of such accidents and educate them about the effects of rash driving.

Ahmedabad — NARENDRA THAKKER

WELCOME VERDICT

The Supreme Court's verdict ("Historic Win", May 15) has ended the long-drawn deadlock on the role and status of district police chiefs. They are now directly responsible to their immediate superior in the police bringing to an end the bureaucratic raj.

Cochin — S.K. NAIR

■ The historic judgement has shaken the whole country and given a new dimension and image to the police.

Bombay — D.S. SOMAN

HIGH-HANDED

Your report on New Vrindavan in West Virginia ("Palace of Intrigue", May 15) shows how unfair the US Government is towards a religion that is attracting thousands of Americans and inspiring them to adopt a new way of life.

Ratlam — M.R. SISODIA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INVESTING IN GROWTH?

USE OUR MONEY

Need ready capital to develop your business or industry? Achieve real results through Trustwel Inc., specialists in business and industrial finance.

We can advance you term loans at easy rates of interest against mortgage of immovable property – land, buildings, factory and project finance. And we have loans tailor-made for a variety of needs. For business expansion or diversification. For new ventures or new projects. For additional working capital or to purchase existing property.

Come to Trustwel Inc. We're on your side.

TRUSTWEL INC.

1217, Prasad Chambers, Near Roxy Cinema,
Opera House, Bombay-400 004.
Phone: 8114848, 8114849

Trust us. We'll help you build a better life.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A Deadly Confrontation

ALIGARH in 1978, Jamshedpur in 1979, Moradabad in 1980, Hyderabad in 1981, Meerut in 1982, Bhiwandi in 1984, Ahmedabad in 1985, now Meerut again. And the canker is spreading. All of Uttar Pradesh has been a communal powder keg these last several months. Gujarat has been transformed from a peaceful, industrious state, to a place where communalism has taken deep and seemingly permanent root. Punjab has a problem of a different sort, fundamentalism has raised its head in Kashmir, unlikely states like Kerala see communal politics in full bloom, and openly communal forces test their strength at the polls in one state after another.

It is not a new problem—the first recorded communal riot in the country dates back to 1714—and Meerut is not the worst that the country has seen. As many as 1,500 died, for instance, in the 1969 riots in Ahmedabad, and even more in the anti-Sikh riots in Delhi in 1984. But never before has the country witnessed such a prolonged period of tension of this nature, nor such a dangerous and rapid spread of the communal virus. Religious places have become major foci of dispute, and religious issues have come to the forefront in several ways (the Muslim women bill, for instance). The 'Hindu backlash' has been a political talking-point for three years and more. Large rallies have been organised by bodies associated with one community or another. As the tension mounted and was sustained, a Meerut almost had to happen. And if temperatures aren't lowered, it will almost certainly be another town tomorrow.

Illustration by AJIT NINAN

Several questions now need to be asked, and answered. What should be done to reverse the surging tide of communalism before it swamps the country? Why did the administration fail in Meerut, although notice had been served (so to speak) with a smaller riot a month earlier? What are the emerging contours of the problem?

It was easy to argue, before Independence, that the occasional communal riots were the result of the British policy of divide and rule. Now the reality is known to be more complex, taking in both the communalising of politics and the politicisation of religion, the jostling by different communities for a better share of the cake, the tensions created by cases of mass conversions, and the emergence in the forefront of organisations and leaders who speak only for their community. And a country that prides itself on the secular character of its politics has no effective answer to the menace.

Certainly, it is the mishandling of issues by the Government that has partly resulted in today's situation. The Ramjanambhoomi-Babri Masjid issue should not have been allowed to fester in the manner that it has, and the Muslim women's bill brought about a further divide, with a reliance on fundamentalist opinion as opposed to more forward-looking schools of thought. For good measure, secular political parties have not hesitated to team up with communal counterparts, lending them a certain respectability. And although it was obvious even a year ago that tension was building up, little was done to defuse the situation.

Some of the old responses to the problem are now obviously inadequate. Tired bodies like the National Integration Council (though well-intended) have proved to be ineffective, and traditional strategies like peace marches have fallen into disuse. Periodic reviews at the highest levels have resulted in decisions to draw up lists of sensitive places, to form special peace squads, and so on. All of this, quite apparently, has had little effect. Even in Meerut, a town with a history of violence of this kind and a riot as recently as a month ago, the administration withdrew police forces too quickly, a mistake that was repeated in Delhi last fortnight.

A solution must of course include gearing the administration to be more sensitive to such flashpoints, and to take advance action. But corrective measures must go well beyond this. Culprits who indulge in rioting have so far been getting away scot-free, despite the ritual appointing of commissions of inquiry. This record in enforcing the law must change. Religious processions (which often provide the flashpoint for riots) cannot be banned in all cases, but they should be discouraged. Public address systems should be prohibited in places of worship, and the encroachment on public land for building places of worship prevented. The police itself is often affected by the communal virus, and the only effective solution is to have a proper mix of communities in the recruitment of policemen. In the field of education, textbooks and syllabi must be carefully screened to weed out any overlay of communalism. And in politics, the Communist Party of India (Marxist) has shown the way in Kerala by refusing to have truck with any of the communal parties, and others should do the same. They also must choose candidates for elections carefully so as to pack Parliament and the assemblies with people who have a secular outlook.

The initiative for all this must come from the top. And the leadership must be seen to be serious, not issue empty threats as Rajiv Gandhi did on Meerut, only for the riots to continue for five more days. Chief ministers like Bir Bahadur Singh must accept the responsibility of failure. The country needs to be reassured that the Government is serious about tackling the communal curse.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INTRODUCING A PROJECT ENGINEERING COMPANY WHICH HAS IMPLEMENTED THE FINEST INTERNATIONAL TECHNOLOGY IN INDIA, EVEN BEFORE IT STARTED

Consider a project engineering company which has made its mark as a pioneer in the field of high technology projects, even before its inception.

Jaykay Tech.

Begun over 15 years ago as the projects wing of a major industrial group, Jaykay Tech has implemented some of the world's most advanced technology in a wide range of diversified projects.

Jaykay Tech now offers some of the most comprehensive project consultancy and engineering services in fields as diverse as synthetic yarn and fibre, chemicals, petro-chemicals, thermo-plastics, cement, thermal power plants and non-conventional sources of energy. The company undertakes complete turnkey ventures from the inception of the idea to the commissioning of the plant.

Jaykay Tech's other strengths include an impressive infrastructure, over a hundred enterprising project professionals, a constantly updated project-related computer databank, the ability to fabricate its own high-tech mechanical equipment ... all of which add up to a complete package of turnkey services for your project.

All this from a Company which has a unique portfolio of prestigious hightech projects.

For a company that has just begun, Jaykay Tech sure has come a long way!

JAYKAY TECH

SERVICES, CONSULTANTS, ENGINEERS & CONTRACTORS

Jaykaynagar Kota 324 003 (Raj.) INDIA
Phone: 25470-79, 25501-05 Telex: 0305-202 JK-IN Gram: JAYKAY

JAYKAY

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

AXIS/JKT/002

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SAVE RS. 39/-

Every fortnight INDIA TODAY gives you the complete perspective on subjects determining the nation's destiny.

Can you afford to miss out?

Here is my annual subscription of Rs. 105/- by Cheque/M.O/D.D

No. _____

Please mail my copy to:

Name _____

Address _____

_____

City _____

State _____

Pin Code _____

INDIA TODAY
THE COMPLETE NEWSMAGAZINE

Mail to:
Living Media India Pvt. Ltd.
Subscription Department
Thomson Press Building
P.B. No. 69, Delhi-Mathura Road
Faridabad 121007 (HARYANA)

• Conspiracies are being hatched and they have their godfathers abroad. We will teach them such a lesson that they will remember their grandmothers.

■ RAJIV GANDHI, at the New Delhi Congress(I) rally

• Arms are a political commodity—we accept that.

■ ANDERS CARLBERG, president, Nobel Industries, in The Times of India

• The conversation stopper is to ask economists and businessmen to name one Rajiv reform fully enunciated, fully implemented and producing results. Some cite tax policy. Most answer with a long pause.

■ EMILY MACFARQUHAR in The Economist

• It is the turn of the south.

■ RAJIV GANDHI, on the next presidential candidate, talking to newsmen

• Now if killings continue in Punjab under President's rule will Buta Singh resign or will Zail Singh dismiss the Government?

■ S.S. BARNALA in The Sunday Observer

• The main issue is to catch economic offenders.... The Thakkar Commission will not look into this. They are deviating from the issue.

■ V.P. SINGH in his speech at Allahabad quoted in the Indian Express

• Any negotiation with the Chinese will be quite stiff. So far it seems to have been a case of an irresistible force meeting an immovable object.

■ A.P. VENKATESWARAN in Frontline

• Yes I have lost. I accept that I have lost to the media. Very comprehensively.

■ AMITABH BACHCHAN in Gentleman

• Both the President and PM are relying on the proverbial method of leaks and planted stories to fight their battles.

■ S. NIHAL SINGH in Sunday

• This approach (power-through-ballot-or-bullet) is on our priority list.... We have more ruffians than the Congress(I) and all we have to do is to form another wing called the "super-riggers".

■ KANSHI RAM, president of the Bahujan Samaj Party, in Surya India

• When you don't have a job, it's important that you still look like an actress. You must not ever look as though you need the role even if you're starving.

■ ANITA RAAJ in The Telegraph Colour Magazine

• No one ever expects the Indian team to win. Certainly not the Indian press.

■ KAPIL DEV in Sportsworld

CC-0. Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Transasia unfolds a timeless creation in pure new wool.

Galaxy
Deluxe

Woolmark
(पशम)

PURE NEW WOOL PILE

Experience the splendour.
Elegance, style and sophistication sprawled out at your feet.
Galaxy Deluxe wears the Woolmark.
The internationally recognised symbol guaranteeing the matchless qualities of pure new wool - exceptional durability and easy maintenance, rich colours and looks that last for years.

TRANSASIA

TransAsia Carpets

In collaboration with Besmer of West Germany.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

It takes three wings to carry the outdoors to the indoors.

ASP-OGI-113B/87

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CROWN

CROWN
10,00,000
TVs sold
NOV. 86

A performance that speaks louder than words.

TOXXI XXIOIILI XXLIIXI XILL XILLIXII XILI LIIXIILI XII XIIIXII XIIL XIO LI XII LIIXII XIIXIO LIIXOU XIIXIIU XII OUXII XIIOI XIIO XIIXO LIIXOU UXII XIIO XIIO XILI XIILU XIIU XIIXI XII LIXII XIIOU XIIXO LIIXOIIX XILI LIIXIILI XII XIIIXII XIIL XIO LIIO XII LIIXII XIIXIO LIIXOU XIIXIIU OUXII XIIOI XIIO XIIXO LIIXOU XI UXII XIIO XIIO XILI XIILU XIIU XI

CROWN-TV

At home with more people than any other TV

Model displayed: CT 701 MNR.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BRIDE COLLECTOR

Cartoons by AJIT NINAN

■ These days, a girl can never be too sure about the bona fides of her prospective spouse, even if her parents are the ones who screen him. There was this young man from Madras, Harikrishnan, who developed a penchant for marrying nubile, pretty women. The first one, Chandrika, he married in 1981 but soon tired of her—and his two kids—and sent her crying back home.

When playing on everyone's sympathies at his so-called 'divorced' state began to pall, he decided to remarry. This time, the victim was to be his paternal cousin. The wedding date was set; the festivities began.

But beware the wrath of a spurned wife! When Chandrika got wind of the dastardly plot, she went straight to the police. They finally caught up with their prey—only half-an-hour before he was to be joined in unholy wedlock—and unmasked his marital past.

The prospective bigamist was then whisked away by the cops, but he made a quick escape by promising he would live happily ever after with Chandrika. And the jilted bride was married off to another 'eligible' bachelor from among the invitees. Finally, all's well that ends well.

MONKEY'S SHARE

■ There was an unusual animal that invaded the stock-market last fortnight, causing palpitations of quite a different kind. Usually, it is an arena where excited investors out-scream one another in order to make a killing. And there is little that can unnerve these financial wheeler-dealers besides the rise and fall of stocks.

Two kinds of species frequent the exchange—the bulls, who keep the markets charged with their aggressive stance, and the bears, who hug their gains close to their chests. Into their domain at the New Delhi Stock Exchange, sprang a meddlesome member of the primate species—a monkey.

Bounding onto the trading floor, the ludicrous intruder had the other erstwhile inhabitants snorting and grunting in nervous rage. Chaos broke out as the long-tailed creature swung above cowering heads, grinning in mischievous abandon. The monkey business carried on till fate intervened in the form of a bandarwalla passing by. Unperturbed by the ape's antics, he netted his catch. And the usual pandemonium reigned again in the financial circus.

ASININE TRICKS

■ Some marriages are made in heaven. Especially those that are performed in order to propitiate celestial deities. A pious villager of Kuzhipirai in Pudukkottai district found a rather novel way of appeasing the revered rain god, whose wrath was conspicuous by his continuing absence.

In the hope that it would amuse his heavenly superiors into showering the village with manna, Somaram brought an asinine couple—a male and female donkey—to be wedded at the Vinayaka temple. He even persuaded the priests to bend the prescribed rituals to suit the occasion.

Amid much fanfare, and crackers, the villagers gathered around, a special pooja was performed before the rain deity on behalf of his four-legged devotees. Then followed a joyous procession, so that the braying newlyweds—the bride bedecked in a saree and a thaali hanging from her neck, and the groom in a dhoti and towel—could bless the entire village. Sweets were distributed thereafter. And with this mortal act to appease the immortal gods, the Kuzhipirai villagers celebrated their faith in the fertile results of animal wedlock. Ass yet, the gods have failed to oblige.

LADIES FINGERS

■ The travails of public travel in a big city are common. Whether in buses or trains, which are invariably packed tighter than sardines, there are always the dextrous pickpockets to look out for.

These inhospitable creatures have a special hunting ground among the hapless train travellers from in and around the suburbs of Bombay. And their quick hands work best during rush hour, when the trains stream out of Churchgate station, carrying the teeming multitudes.

The pickpockets are now spreading their nets wider than before—into the hitherto safe haven of the ladies' compartments. Having recruited and trained women in the light fingered art, they have now unleashed them on an unsuspecting female public.

Crowding into the doorway of the ladies' compartment of local trains, they wait till the train stops and the stampede to get out begins. And by the time the train glides out, the unfortunate travellers find that they have been divested of their necklaces and ear-rings, and, in some cases, their hand bags. The signs stating 'Ladies First' could have taken on a new and ominous meaning.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SAVING A FEW RUPEES ON YOUR ROOFING SHEETS COULD BE AN EXPENSIVE MISTAKE.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Of course you can buy a cheap brand of A.C. roofing sheets, and save yourself some money. But don't be surprised when, in a few years, it shows up as an expensive mistake.

Because cutting corners, as you know, can never substitute quality.

Quality in Experience.

At Everest, we don't sell cheap A.C. roofing sheets. As pioneers, we have always given you the best.

A fact that has stood the test of time for over 50 years. For clients like Larsen & Toubro, Reliance, Hindustan Lever, Bajaj Auto, Dunlop, Indian Railways, BHEL and hundreds more.

Quality in Research.

Our 'no compromise' policy begins at our R&D centre. Stringent evaluation to determine the best grade of fibre and cement.

Continuous testing of the fibre-cement mix. Specially developed fibre orientation technology for precise and even distribution of fibre.

Adding up to enhanced strength that is consistent across every sheet.

No wonder our testing standards are 25% higher than ISI.

Quality in Service.

In service too, we don't cut corners.

The Everest 'Code of Practice' which lays the standard norms for correct product usage is, in fact, something the entire industry swears by.

Our technical service personnel are at your beck and call to help with design and installation. And to recommend the right products and accessories. Absolutely free of cost.

Quality in Versatility.

Our technological base allows us to make specialised designs for specific projects.

Like our dust-proof design for Kinetic Honda. Special gutter design for Bajaj Auto. Special curved sheets for Kerala Road Transport. And many others.

You'll find the largest product range available with Everest, for a complete roofing system.

A choice of 3 roofing sheet designs. The widest range of gutters and roofing accessories.

And, of course, we have extensive coverage with 4 factories, a country-wide network of sales depots, stockists and dealers to ensure instant delivery and service.

To be able to give you all this, we've had to pay a price. A price that's understandably, a bit higher.

For us. And, naturally, for you.

But when you think about it, it's a small price to pay for the sake of your reputation.

And, of course, your peace of mind.

EVEREST

FIBRE CEMENT PRODUCTS

50 YEARS WITHOUT COMPROMISE.

EVEREST BUILDING PRODUCTS LTD.
(A MEMBER, TURNER AND NEWALL GROUP, U.K.)

Ashok Bhawan, 93 Nehru Place,
New Delhi-110 019. Tel: 643 2568/643 2569

Zonal Sales Offices: • Block 'D' Shivsagar Estate, Dr. Annie Besant Road, Worli, Bombay-400 018. Tel. 493 8234/493 8236
• Podanur P.O., Coimbatore- 641 023.Tel: 24116/24117 • Everest House, 948 Napier Town, Post Box 70, Jabalpur-482 001.Tel. 25216/25217.
• Everest House, Taratolla Road, Garden Reach, Calcutta-700 024.Tel: 45 2001 /45 2002.

Enterprise/D/EV/14

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Sole Target

● For the last several weeks, the Prime Minister's Secretariat has been engulfed by a stormy debate on the public posture to be adopted regarding Vishwanath Pratap Singh. The moderates have been advising Rajiv Gandhi to softpedal the issue and to rein in the more vociferous Congressmen who have been abusing the former defence minister in public. They have argued that attacking the former finance minister will simply give him more public credibility and keep him in the limelight, in the same manner that the Janata government treated Mrs Gandhi, who then made her spectacular comeback in the 1980 general elections. They say that if these tirades continue, Singh will be forced to aggressively retaliate in defence.

In the event that he is expelled from the party, the Congress(I) will be split down the centre. But so far, the hardliners, led by P. Shiv Shanker—the wily lawyer from Andhra Pradesh, who has firmly re-established himself at the core of Rajiv's inner circle—have prevailed. Shiv Shanker was also the man behind the recent paranoic Congress(I) Working Committee resolution about the destabilising foreign hand and he had successfully resisted several attempts from within the Prime Minister's Secretariat to soften its tone.

Preferred Customs

● Even as the country's domestic politics have changed, so also have the priorities of its would be civil servants. There was a time when the cream of the intellectual crop, freshly out of college, would make a bee-line to compete for the foreign service with the central services being given only cursory attention. But not any more. According to Union Public Service Commission sources, most entrants to the civil services have begun to mark customs as their first preference. Income tax follows a close second. The Indian Police Service and the Indian Administrative Service vie neck-to-neck for third place, with the foreign service limping way behind. One official said that the probable reason was the incentive schemes in customs and income tax—in the form of bonuses for catching smugglers and tax evaders—which are more attractive. The foreign service seems to have lost its glitter because of the widespread impression that the foreign office is politicised and demoralised.

Cartoons by AJIT NINAN

Pep Talks

● In his tough street talk to the masses, from New Delhi's Boat Club lawns, Rajiv Gandhi indirectly warned Uncle Sam that if the US continued to give arms aid to Pakistan, he would teach them such a lesson that they would remember their grandmother (unki nani yaad diladoonga). This has, not unexpectedly, resulted in a backlash of criticism that it was unseemly of the prime minister to talk like a goonda at a pep rally. He has now been advised to revamp his entire public relations approach and to place greater reliance on seasoned politicians for his public relations thrusts.

The search is now on for a politician who will be charged with rendering public relations counsel to Rajiv and dealing informally with the press. The appointee will be given a formal designation along with the rank of minister of state.

Rajiv is also considering recording regular informal 'fire side chats' for Doordarshan. The plan was first conceived in early January. But then followed the first of what was to be a series of mistakes by the prime minister. Foreign secretary A.P. Venkateswaran was sacked during a televised press conference and in the wake of the resulting outcry, Rajiv had to drop the TV plan. But now, with the heat still on, it is being reconsidered.

Nyet Yet

● It might turn out to be a faux pas instead of a pas de deux. The Russians plan to send the Bolshoi ballet—their best team that is—to Delhi for the Festival of the Soviet Union in India which begins later this year. But there is one big hitch: the Siri Fort Auditorium, where they are to perform, does not have an orchestra pit.

The Russians have said: Nyet pit, Nyet ballet. The Indian authorities have still not decided whether or not to make the requisite changes. An obstacle could well be the high cost involved: the 1,200 lights alone that are required would cost over Rs 2 crore. The Russians have even offered to send their own sophisticated electrical switching apparatus which controls the lights. As time is limited, the Indians will have to quickstep their way to the finish unless they want to be out of step. The auditorium, now a recognised white elephant, gave Rudolph Nureyev some unhappy landings when he performed with the Opera de Paris ballet a few years ago.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Sintex - The only reliable and time-tested READYMADE WATER TANKS

For every water storage application under all Indian conditions.

SINTEX has proved its performance against all the tough and rough Indian conditions for more than a decade now. Dotting the Indian scene with lakhs and lakhs of installations — from Kashmir to Kanyakumari and Kutch to Kohima — Sintex Tanks are proving popular for all water storage and carriage applications.

Made by a unique moulding process on computer aided machines, Sintex Water Tanks offer a set of advantages unbeatable by others.

* Lightweight * Easy to install * Strong and Durable * Maintenance-free * 100% Leakproof and Rustproof * Most Hygienic * Available in wide range from 100 lits, to 20,000 lits. capacity in different shapes. * Backed by excellent installation and after sales service through a wide network of dealers.

For further information contact:

SINTER PLAST CONTAINERS
Plastics Division: The Bharat Vijay Mills Ltd.,
KALOL (N. GUJARAT) 382721.
Phone: (02764) 2228, 2274, 2352, 3144, 3145.
Gram: "SINTEX", Telex: 0121-296 BVM IN.

Sintex - The World's largest selling moulded polyethylene Water Tanks

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

LET'S TAKE
LET'S TAKE

Take Hi-Tech

Take Aircraft tyres. Hi-tech that brought the first Airbus into India from Toulouse, France. With tyres made in India. By Dunlop. Hi-tech that makes Dunlop the only aircraft tyre manufacturer in India.

Hi-tech that has resulted from four major collaborations in Japan and U.K. Hi-tech that gives you superior tyres for every type of vehicle on the road.

And now from Dunlop, Steel Cord Belting.

Dunlop hi-tech. You can't get higher.

Take Firsts

Take Maruti Radials. First from Dunlop. And the best from Dunlop. Elegant Radial Class Travel. Hardly surprising from a company with a list of firsts to its name.

First tyre and rubber company to establish operations in India. First to make tyres for aircraft, and still the only one. First to manufacture extra-large earthmover tyres. First to introduce Tyre Service Centres in India. First to manufacture hi-tech steel cord conveyor belting.

The list goes on...

Dunlop. Started First. Remains First.

Take Size

Take the Number One. Dunlop India—the only Indian Company listed in the published list of the world's top 30 tyre and rubber companies.

No. 1 in India. The world says so.

Take range. No. 1 again. Farmer or Jet fighter. Car tyres or Earthmover tyres. It's Dunlop all the way.

Dunlop. Started No. 1. Remains No. 1.

DUNLOP

LEADERSHIP DUNLOP

Dunlop is Dunlop. Always ahead.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

• For Information Only

"Only one thing sounds better... hearing it live."

RX-XE550F

Portable Hi-Fi Component System with 4-Band Radio

- Quartz PLL Synthesizer Digital Tuner with FM Auto Tuning
- 20 Preset Tuning (FM/MW/SW_1/SW_2 Each 5-Station) and Memory Scan
- Gigantic 330W (PMPO) Output Power
- 7-Band LCD Spectrum Analyer and 10-Band Graphic Equalizer
- Honeycomb Acoustic Flat Diaphragm Woofers and 3-Way, 8-Speaker System
- Auto-Reverse Rec./Play, Dolby* and Blank Skip Function

*"Dolby" is a trademark of Dolby Laboratories

"There's one name I rely upon when it comes to selecting a portable Hi-Fi component system: National. And that's because National combines the most advanced audio technology to provide unparalleled purity and realism of sound. The National RX-XE550F features 330 watts (PMPO), a matching 3-way, 8-speaker system, precision quartz PLL synthesizer tuning with memory scan, an LCD spectrum analyzer and turntable/CD player input. They all add up to dynamic, multiple-source sound quality with push-button ease. All National products are backed up by National's full-service network. That's why my audio choice should be your audio choice: National."

Mithun Chakraborty

FULL SERVICE National NETWORK

National Authorized Service Centres in India

Esquire Distributing & Servicing Co. Pvt. Ltd. (For video-related products only)
• Unit No. 1A & 1B Ground Floor, Rehmat Manzil, 75 Veer Nariman Road, Churchgate, Bombay 400 020 Tel: 234226/230311

Associated Electrical Agencies (For audio/video products only)
• Anugraha Apartments, "B" Block, Ground Floor 19, Nungambakkam High Road, Madras 600 034 Tel: 485655

Indus Airconditioning Pvt. Ltd. (For home appliances only)
• 371, Cadell Road, Prabhadevi, Bombay 400 028 Tel: 4303719/4309270

National

CC-0. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Hysteria and Hate

HYSTERIA and hate fanned the embers of the fortnight that was into a menacing glow. At a party rally in New Delhi, Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi hyped the hysteria with shrill and shallow warnings of external destabilisation and threatened to teach foreign grandmothers a lesson. Less than two days later, the communal conflagration in Meerut, barely 70 km away—and simultaneously in Delhi itself—proved that the real forces of destabilisation were purely domestic in nature. Meerut's communal curse was, in essence, as shrill a warning of the real threats to the country as the ruling party's portrayal of the imaginary.

BHAWAN SINGH

Rajiv hyped hysteria with shrill and shallow warnings.

Meerut was a disaster waiting to happen. If Meerut's agony stretched interminably into nine hate-filled days before sanity reluctantly returned, it was an ominous indication of the hair-trigger that India's communal gun now rests on. This was not just the most destructive riot in the town's dark communal history but a mirror to the ugly face that fundamentalism has been allowed to acquire.

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Meerut reflected the ugly face that communalism has acquired.

Ethnic hysteria and hate had ghostly echoes in neighbouring Sri Lanka where, ignoring New Delhi's belated warnings, the Jayewardene Government launched its make or break assault on the Tamil militant redoubt in Jaffna. Whatever the outcome, the desperate lunge for a military solution is certain to disfigure the island forever and drag New Delhi into its violent vortex.

On another neighbouring front, the hysteria over the tightening military embrace between Islamabad and Washington had its diplomatic echoes in the New Delhi visit of Soviet supremo Mikhail Gorbachev's point man, Anatoly Dobrynin. At a subliminal level, the Dobrynin visit was a crucial reassessment of the relationship viewed in the light of altered realpolitik.

SHYAM TEKWANI

Colombo launched its final assault on the Tamil militant redoubt in Jaffna.

The diplomatic tightrope that New Delhi currently walks also had its domestic parallel in the announcement of the long-awaited Eradi Commission report on the sharing of river waters between Punjab and Haryana. The flood of statistics failed to smother the fact that the disbursement—and the Government's over-sensitivity to the coming elections in Haryana—gives further encouragement to the invisible forces in Punjab to preach their sermons of bile and betrayal and alienate the more moderate elements in the state.

Creative Eye

The Dobrynin visit was a realistic reassessment of Indo-Soviet ties.

Similarly, another disbursement announced during the fortnight—the allocation of tickets to Congress(I) candidates for the Haryana elections—encouraged further political instability. The resignation of a minister from the state Cabinet and the number of rejected candidates who have filed nominations as independents, indicate that the political mood is one of defiance and dissidence.

That defiance had its most visible manifestation in Uttar Pradesh where ousted defence minister V.P.Singh has ploughed a ragged furrow. The current instability in the political system was cruelly exposed by the state Government's panic-stricken moves to curb Singh's movements.

In that sense, the fortnight was an image of the probable course of future events. The communal and political eruptions were testimonials to the fact that the Rajiv Gandhi Government lacks direction and decisiveness. The true tragedy is that it is a time when the country needs those qualities the most.

—DILIP BOBB

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

bajaj

brings you an elegant range of low-cost Decorative Luminaires.

BJML -420

BJM - 120

BJGL - 240

BJL - 240

BJP - 240

BJML - 240

Versatile lighting systems designed for universal indoor applications, created to harmonise with any architectural feature and interior decor in offices, banks, show rooms, etc.

Bajaj offers a total integrated lighting service from the designing to the electrification and installation of lighting fittings on a turnkey basis for any indoor/outdoor location.

For details write to:
Lighting Project Services
Bajaj Electricals Limited
45-47 Veer Nariman Road
Bombay 400 023.

Heros' BE-778 B

bajaj

The lighting people since 1938.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

FLYING CABLES IN THE AIR?

Start with an Exceptional Material.

Introducing DU PONT'S KAPTON. A tough wire and cable insulation used in the most demanding environments. Like aerospace.

KAPTON is truely amazing! It is extremely tough. Light weight. Stubbornly resists radiation, chemicals including solvents and oils and can withstand wild fluctuations in temperature. A true 200° C insulation.

When your wire and cables are exposed to the most adverse conditions, make sure they can withstand more than they should. With KAPTON.

It's a polyimide film that provides an exceptional insulation for wire and cables.

We believe in using the finest material. And the latest technology. So you can get the best out of our products.

What's more, when you choose our material, our technical service starts working for you. Helping you select the most suitable, cost effective material for your wire and cables.

After all, KAPTON is just one out of the widest range of insulating and jacketing materials for wire and cables available today. From DU PONT.

For more information on the widest choice of insulating and jacketing polymers for wire and cables, call on DU PONT.

Yes! Please send me more information on DU PONT'S polymers for wire & cables

Name_____

Title_____

Company_____

Address_____

Tel Nos._____

Interest_____

DU PONT FAR EAST INC.
25, Maker Chamber VI, Nariman Point,
Bombay 400 021 Phone: 202 7712, 202 9986.
Telex: 11-4230 DUFE IN

Distributors

INDMAG PRIVATE LIMITED
Chemical Division
"Corinthian" 5th floor;
Off. Arthur Bunder Road, Colaba,
Bombay - 400 005. Phone: 231129, 231603.

SPEER 08 101 87 A

DU PONT

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Communal Riots

The Agony of

AS is almost always the case, last fortnight's bloody communal carnage in Meerut began with an insignificant event. On May 16, Ajay Sharma, a resident of Kotwali, was gunned down in a land dispute—something hardly unusual in that area. A case was registered and the police rounded up four people. Following the leads they provided, a police posse, with some back-up from the Provincial Armed Constabulary (PAC), went on the night of May 18 to arrest Yameen from Hashimpura.

The resistance to the arrest was stiff, particularly since it was the ramzan period and the police had ill-timed their entry to reach around Iftar, the time when Muslims break their roza for the day to eat the evening meal. The police tried to force their way in, and in the melee three PAC men were dragged into the lane and their rifles snatched. Initially, it was only a fight between the police and the Muslims. But the affair soon assumed communal colour as a roadside stall—owned by a Muslim, but rented by a Hindu—was set ablaze and a shop owner nearby, Shashi Bhushan was stabbed to death.

In the confusion during the melee, somebody came onto the loudspeakers of the Imiliyan mosque calling all "believers of the faith" to come out and protect their religion. Predictably, this brought not just the Muslims out but also the Hindus. According to District Magistrate Radhey Shyam Kaushik, echoes of this announcement were heard from masjids in neighbouring localities too, and soon it was a free-for-all on the roads. "Nobody knew who was killing whom and who was burning what in the dark. All we could see was fire at night and smoke in the morning," recalled Mehboob Mian, as he huddled in his room in Hashimpura.

In that first round alone, 15 people were killed and more than 350 shops and three petrol pumps reduced to ashes. Indefinite curfew was clamped in the area and the army conducted a flag march later that afternoon. Yet the arson had spread. By the next day the rioting had affected nearly every part of the city. Even places like Shastri Nagar, Saket and Civil Lines, which had never been affected by riots, reported incidents. Curfew was clamped throughout the city.

Soon enough, the violence spread to the walled city of Old Delhi, where eight people were killed in 24 hours and scores injured. And all of Uttar Pradesh, where the majority of India's Muslims live, became a high-tension communal wire threatening to spark off conflagrations of unimaginable dimensions. Over the next few days, Modinagar witnessed an exchange of fire in which two people were killed, four people died in a bomb explosion in Bulandshahr, another blast sent the army rushing into Hapur, and reports of tension flowed in from Ghaziabad, Muradnagar, Muzaffarnagar and Moradabad. Prohibitory orders were enforced in 36 districts, and a complete ban on public meetings was imposed throughout the state.

For the next 10 days, the only movement at daybreak in Meerut was that of men in helmets and war fatigues with Sten guns slung over their shoulders, inching their way out of their shelters and climbing aboard convoys of trucks. At night, the deserted streets were taken over by stray dogs chasing police vans and jeeps. Meerut's six lakh terror-stricken residents remained shuttered and bolted within their dwellings, as more than 13,000 members of the army, paramilitary forces and armed police laid siege to their city in the hope of stamping out the violence in every mohalla and bylane.

What had turned one of the busiest and most frenetic towns in north India into a ghost town, that resounded day and night to the rumbling of police trucks and the tramping of military boots, was the Bodies lay strewn all over the

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

of Meerut

PRAVEEN JAIN/Sunday Mail

ver the treets when the dust settled. Over 150 people lost their lives, and 1,000 were injured.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

unprecedented communal frenzy in which more than 150 people died and 1,000 were wounded. More than Rs 20 crore worth of property lay destroyed, and business losses until the end of the fortnight were estimated at Rs 50 crore. A city which had thrived on jobs provided by tailors' scissors, handlooms, and sporting goods had almost overnight, it seemed, abandoned its peaceful tools of trade and taken up guns, bombs and knives.

The gruesome and bloody carnage suggested parallels with New Delhi's holocaust in 1984 and Ahmedabad's homicidal war of 1985. Barely two months earlier, police batalions had patrolled Meerut's streets following riots in which 12 people were killed. But in the first week of May, in what turned out to be a fatal blunder, the local administration, believing the situation to be normal, withdrew the extra police force. When the fighting broke out barely 10 days later, on May 18, the district administration found itself virtually crippled in its reaction because of the shortage of reinforcements. As heavily armed and slogan-shouting mobs belonging to both communities began fighting pitched battles, the 500-strong district police, immediately available, found itself hopelessly unequal to the task of containing the violence. By the time reinforcements were deployed, the damage had been done.

The withdrawal of the extra police contingents was particularly perplexing as, during the previous two months, intelligence reports had indicated that members of both communities had begun to stockpile huge quantities of arms. The state intelligence bureau had been constantly feeding reports to the Home Ministry that the threatened show of force over the never ending Ram Janambhoomi-Babri Masjid issue could precipitate communal trouble in sensitive districts, particularly in Meerut, Rampur, Moradabad, Kanpur, and Allahabad.

The administration had also done absolutely nothing about local intelligence reports that had warned of a communal colour being put on Ajay Sharma's death, and which asked for intensive patrolling of areas affected by the April riots. But not only did the administration ignore these warnings, it even released those detained for disturbing peace in the previous riots. The administration had no clue about the level of preparations that were on "in case of a spark". Indeed, the evidence, both mental and physical, was overwhelming. There was a relay of announcements from places of worship, organised mobs in hundreds on the streets, and plentiful use of firearms. Yet the police and administration appeared oblivious of all the action.

The excuses continued till Home Minister Buta Singh, after a tour of the riot-affected areas, castigated the administration for not being geared for the riots. At that point, state Home Secretary Mata Prasad conceded: "It is no doubt our failure." Union Home Ministry sources confirmed that the state administration was taken by total surprise when the "unprecedented and un-anticipated violent activity in May" broke out.

One major cause of the flare-up, say Home Ministry sources, was the incompetence of the district administration. Its police officials were suspect, most of its inspectors and sub-inspectors had been sent to Meerut under political pressure from other parts of the state, and even the city Superintendent of Police B.K. Chaturvedi—who was finally transferred out and replaced by B.K. Gupta along with Varanasi's senior superintendent of police, G.L. Sharma, flown in as additional senior superintendent—was considered a controversial official. Although no changes were made at the civil administration level, the district magistrate was rendered virtually redundant when Minister of State for Home, Surender Singh Chauhan, pitched camp in Meerut and proceeded to take charge of the situation.

But as the riots continued even after the mobilisation of additional forces, Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi summoned Chief Minister Bir Bahadur Singh to New Delhi for emergency consultations. Talking to newsmen at the Iftar dinner hosted by Union Tourism Minister Mufti Mohammed Sayed, Rajiv admitted that "communal conflicts were posing a grave danger to the country" and disclosed that he would visit Meerut the next day to take stock of the situation. But the following day it was Buta Singh who helicoptered to Meerut for a three-hour visit to the city. He ordered the confiscation of all arms, house-to-house searches and the immediate arrest of all 'bad characters'.

In silent outrage, the residents

The administration was also asked to re-establish communication with community leaders, and political leaders were instructed to form peace committees. These directions were given only after Union Minister for Urban Development Mohsina Kidwai complained to the prime minister—following her own visit to Meerut—that the district administration was treating the ordeal as a law and order problem and had failed to take such steps as convening regular peace meetings between community leaders.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Maliana buried their dead, defenceless targets of the PAC's wrath.

For the first time in Meerut, house-to-house searches were conducted in all the sensitive localities, including Sohrab Gate, Jali Kothi, Shahpir Gate, Gudri and Kotla. The searches, conducted on a massive scale, involved a complete cordoning off of entire localities by the army, which would position itself in every lane, on rooftops and at every entrance to the locality. Then announcements would be made over the loudspeaker asking all male members of the house to come out with their licensed arms. Hundreds poured out and were escorted to nearby compounds. Then the CRPF women companies would move into houses and search the entire area.

There were large-scale seizures of firearms, including telescopic guns, pistols, single and double barrel guns and rifles with plenty of ammunition. Within a week, more than 2,500 people were arrested in Meerut alone, which has a total jail capacity of just 800. Detenus had to be shunted off to jails in Fatehgarh and Agra.

But just as things appeared to be returning to normal, there occurred a massacre that will probably go down in police history as one of the worst cases of police brutality. The news of this caused fresh eruptions in neighbouring areas in the state. Maliana, a small cluster of villages 5 km from Meerut, had not yet come under curfew. A PAC platoon had been sent there to keep the tension under control. The area has a population of around 35,000, of which 4,000 are Muslims. At 2.45 p.m. on the afternoon of Saturday, May 23, the PAC contingent arrived. Joined by some Hindu residents, they began burning down Muslim houses. It took them precisely two hours to complete the task they had assigned themselves. At the end of those two hours, nothing stirred in Maliana as people sat huddled together, gripped by fear as the stench of smoke and human bodies rose about them. Those who ran out to escape the inferno were showered with gunfire by PAC men positioned on rooftops. Scores fell to the bullets.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

This happened just 70 km from the capital, but news of the massacre began to filter through only on Sunday evening. Monday morning's newspapers carried the official toll of "seven killed in police firing". In silent outrage the survivors pointed to charred parts of bodies in burnt houses. They pointed to blood trails and marks showing that bodies had been dragged out of houses down the lane. The PAC unit was quietly withdrawn and the army sent in, but officially the toll remained seven. Army officers admitted on condition of anonymity that they had personally counted over 50 bodies when they had arrived in Maliana.

While officially Meerut remained calm for the third day running and Id passed off peacefully, the reminders of the brutal killings in the town were still floating down the Ganga canal 30 km away. The Government said 16 bodies had been recovered from the canal, but once again the unofficial toll was far higher. All the bodies were naked, many had bullet injuries in the back of the head or burn marks on their backs. In a two-hour drive along an 8 km stretch of the canal, from Muradnagar to Massooree, INDIA TODAY reporters saw two bodies floating down the canal.

Shaheed of Nahal village said the bodies had been floating past for the previous eight days. He had counted 40 bodies in one day. Yusuf Mian, an irrigation department worker of Jhal Massooree, claimed to have seen 10 bodies a day in the canal for four days. But the most gruesome account came from Mehdi Hassan, a contractor who runs six atta chakkies at the canal weir at Jhal Dasna. Hassan, who supervises his chakkies by the canal the whole day, said that on May 26 he had counted 9 bodies and many more in the preceding days. At times, four or five bodies together would come floating down and get stuck in the iron grating across the channel weir. They would get the Irrigation Department's bhangi to pull the bodies out with a hook and dump them in the canal beyond the weir gate.

What made this potentially explosive

Hundreds of men were bundled

BIR BAHADUR SINGH

"We never expected this"

THE 52-year-old Uttar Pradesh Chief Minister Bir Bahadur Singh is known for his political acumen and ability to survive crises. But last fortnight when communal violence in Meerut—for the second time in less than eight weeks—threatened to spread to other parts of the state, he was faced with the worst political crisis since he took office 20 months ago. Singh, who has recently been flying all over the country in search of new capital, found himself confined to the riot-torn city for a week. Curiously, the high death toll hardly seemed to have affected his morale. He spoke to visiting politicians and journalists with confidence, giving the impression that nothing new or serious had happened there. Senior Editor PRABHU CHAWLA talked to him for more than an hour. Excerpts from the interview:

Q. What do you think was the cause of the riots?

A. I can't give you a specific answer on this now. I have ordered a CID inquiry. But I must clear the impression that it is the worst-ever riot. In 1982, the riots continued for over two months and more people were killed then. We have been able to restore normalcy in Meerut in less than two weeks.

Q. How many were killed then?

A. I don't have the exact figures with me but the toll was definitely higher.

Q. Do you also agree with the Union Home Minister Buta Singh's view that the riots were pre-planned?

A. I can only say one thing. Both the communal and antisocial elements exploited the religious sentiments of the people to create a law and order problem.

Q. It is believed there was tension in Meerut since the last riot. What preventive steps did you take?

A. We never expected this. It had cooled down. But now it appears that plans were quietly being made. The CID and the Administration always maintained that nothing would happen. They had arrested the antisocial elements.

Q. The state is acquiring a bad image now.

A. I don't know why only Uttar Pradesh is making headlines. It is not the only state which is affected.

Q. On the Ramjanambhoomi-Babri Masjid issue, you have been accused of following a pro-Hindu line.

A. This is an absurd allegation. Did I take any personal or administrative decisions in this case? Courts in the country are independent and can't be forced to work on communal considerations.

Q. What have you done as chief

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BHAWAN SINGH

of their houses for search operations and entire colonies were screened.

minister in this regard?

A. I have given directions to restructure the entire police force, including the PAC, in the state. Their training programme is being reworked so that the policemen acquire a secular outlook. Special battalions are being raised in which all the communities will be proportionately represented. We are also reviewing school books to see that they are free of communal content.

Q. But politicians always pander to communal elements during elections.

A. That is not true of our party. We don't encourage communal elements. We believe in the protection of the rights of the minorities.

Q. But your state police is full of communal elements.

A. The entire force is not communal. We are looking into some specific complaints and will take stern action.

Q. It seems that you are losing grip not only on the administration but on your cabinet colleagues as well.

A. I don't think this is true. I enjoy the full support of my party and the Cabinet.

Q. Don't you feel that your image as a business-like chief minister suffered?

A. No. I meant business when I took over. I took disciplinary action and dismissed senior officials. I directed all my cabinet colleagues to be in office by 10 a.m., and not to leave the city without my permission.

Q. But the law and order situation has worsened.

A. Absolutely not. In fact, it is the best during the last five years. There have been no gang killings, roadside robberies, daylight murders and dacoities. Ours is the most peaceful state today.

Q. As far as the communal situation is concerned, is the worst over?

A. Yes. But we have to guard ourselves against any eventuality. It can be done through dialogue and persuasion. We are going to sort out the Ramjanambhoomi-Babri Masjid conflict with the help of local people.

Q. Is there no immediate threat to your leadership?

A. Yes, I believe so. I enjoy the full support of the party high command and have complete freedom to handle any political and administrative situation. There is no political crisis.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

was the fact that the Ganga canal runs through predominantly Muslim territory through Ghaziabad district which adjoins Delhi. Inevitably, communal hatred was spreading into the rural countryside too.

But in Lucknow, M.C. Dwivedy, PAC deputy inspector general, the de facto chief of the force, insisted that he knew nothing of any massacre at Maliana. And there was no official information on which company from which batalion, and under the charge of which officer, was sent to Maliana. But as the bodies started floating down the canal and the tethered

BHAWAN SINGH

The bodies were grisly testimony to police brutality cord of tolerance came close to snapping once again, the chief minister finally announced a judicial inquiry.

But the PAC brutality was not the only element that cast its deathly pall over Meerut. In many ways Meerut today resembles what many Delhi localities looked like in the aftermath of the November 1984 riots. The town is pock-marked with burnt-out shops and houses, charred skeletons of dozens of buses and trucks still litter the main roads. And there were clear signs that some organisation and preparation had gone into fuelling the uncontrollable communal frenzy which swept the town.

But when compared to Delhi in 1984, there was one significant difference. In Meerut, both communities seem to have been gripped by a junoon (madness) and struck out at each other with equal ruthlessness. Selected Muslim shops in Hindu areas were looted and burnt down while Hindu shops in Muslim areas met the same fate. In past riots, the fringe elements of both communities and goondas were involved. This time almost all the Muslims are ranged against all the Hindus. "Political party labels have ceased to have any meaning in Meerut. Today, you are either Hindu or Muslim," said Mirajuddin Ahmed, 28, president of the Meerut Youth Congress, drawing a picture of a communally polarised society.

There was little scope left for humane behaviour, as two doctors belonging to the two communities discovered to their cost. Dr Atul Bhatnagar is a well-known surgeon who runs a nursing home in the town. Many of his Muslim patients were awaiting treatment when a Hindu mob surrounded the nursing home and demanded that the doctor hand over all the Muslim inmates of the nursing home. Bhatnagar refused and spirited away his Muslim patients to a hospital. The mob vented its anger on the nursing home itself, causing extensive damage.

A less drastic fate met Dr Sirajuddin Ahmed, who donated blood, a rare AB group, to save the life of a young Hindu, Rishi Ram, who had been grievously injured by a police bullet. The blood saved Rishi Ram's life but Ahmed was abused and pilloried by his own community members for saving the life of a Hindu.

Hakim Saifuddin Ahmed, a recipient of the Padma Shri and honorary physician to many presidents, including Zail Singh, said most of the nafrat (hatred) between the two communities had been caused by the Babri Masjid and Ramjanambhoomi action committees. "It has become so bad that if two buffaloes get into a fight, one will be labelled Hindu and the other Muslim," he said.

But why Meerut? There were several answers. With its proximity to Delhi, the town is particularly susceptible to national communal politics emanating from here. Every ripple in the capital is first felt in Meerut. "Any activist from Delhi with a few hours to spare, slips in to spread his message," said a political worker.

There is also acute trade rivalry in Meerut, known for its textile trade as well as local crafts like scissor-making. In textiles, it has traditionally been the Hindus who have owned the factories, and Ansari Muslims who have provided the labour force. The friction between the owners and workers adds fuel to the fire each time there is a communal flare-up. Demographically, the six lakh population of the city is divided almost equally between Hindus and Muslims. And they are both equally prosperous. The tensions are inevitable as each is intolerant of the other's well-being. Add to all this a weak administration, and the weight of the Babri Masjid dispute. A flare-up was inevitable. After last fortnight's carnage, confidence building was clearly important.

And the postponement of Rajiv Gandhi's planned visit to Meerut was a negative signal. "Why didn't Rajiv come here? Why does he only go visiting tribal areas?" asked a caustic official in Meerut. But prime ministerial visits apart, there was little doubt that communal tension could not be eased in the state and several parts of the country without a way being found to untangle the Babri Masjid issue, or taking cover behind the fact that it is a court matter. And there was equally little doubt that unless determined efforts were made to turn the tide against communalism in politics, with political parties taking the lead, the communal problem would continue to fester.

—INDERJIT BADHWAR with TANIA MIDHA, PRABHU CHAWLA, RAMINDAR SINGH and DILIP AWASTHI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

COMMUNALISM

Danger Signals

ON March 30 this year, the green lawns of New Delhi's stately Rajpath were carpeted by a very different kind of covering. For the first time in the nation's independent history, more than three lakh Muslims from all over the country had lined up on that stretch, shoulder to shoulder, to demand justice and an end to organised discrimination against their community. Though the crowd was disciplined and peaceful, the speeches made by their leaders, among them Imam Bokhari of Jama Masjid, were fiery and provocative. And when the throngs returned to their homes, they took back the message that they must henceforth begin to fight for what they believed was their due.

A week later, Ayodhya—the site of the Ramjanambhoomi-Babri Masjid dispute—was witness to yet another massive congregation of the faithful. In this dusty town, over one lakh Hindus had gathered to vow to 'protect' the birthplace of Rama. They too gave vent to rabble-rousing denunciations and took a mass pledge that those present would go forth and liberate the birthplaces of all the Hindu gods.

These were not just simple religious gatherings. They were the culmination—indeed the apotheosis—of a simmering and carefully nurtured religious and cultural feud that threatens to divide the country into intolerant communal hate groups. That the two rallies, groupings of religious armies, had hit home with telling effect became evident as the two communities began fighting each other in different parts of the country, often at the slightest pretext.

A systematic build-up of the communal campaign had in fact been witnessed over the past several months. The Babri Masjid Action Committee had passed a resolution last month that the Muslims would take a vow on the last Friday of Ramzan—May 22—to wrest possession of Babri Masjid. If this didn't work, they said, the Muslims would go in for namaz en masse to the Babri Masjid in Ayodhya. On the other hand, the Bajrang Dal had planned 'Jan Jagaran' yatras in different parts of the state from May 20. The organisers had announced that it would go ahead with the plan even if the Government banned these yatras. The Babri Masjid action committees formed in every district had started enrolling volunteers from all over the state from the first week of May for the march to Ayodhya to capture the masjid. Meanwhile, the Vishwa Hindu Parishad had started a parallel movement of organising 'balidan jathas' to prevent the Muslim activists from entering Ramjanambhoomi. The confrontation was predictable.

Yet, almost like the lull before a storm, 1987 had begun with little or no communal violence. But the number of people who have died in communal clashes this year already exceeds the total for all of 1986 (186). No major riot had occurred before March, when the Muslim rally was held. But by May 28, the death toll from the communal madness had begun to climb inexorably. Major riots broke out in Gujarat, Uttar Pradesh and Delhi, and the tension spread to Maharashtra.

Delhi reflected Meerut's anger. Shortly before that, the sleepy Gujarati town of Bharuch saw Hindus and Muslims fight pitched battles, leading to the death of two people. The state Government, still reeling after the 1985 communal violence, alerted the entire state lest the trouble spread. In Maharashtra too, preventive steps were taken to arrest the spread of the fire.

The tension was palpable almost everywhere. Home Minister Buta Singh declared last fortnight that "religious intolerance is alien to the Indian way of living," but it seemed as if the opposite had become true, that communalism had, indeed, become the Indian way of life.

Close to 4,000 people have been killed in communal riots during the 1980s. That is almost four times the figure for the 1970s, which had seen a relative lull after the Ahmedabad riot of 1969, which saw 1,500 people being killed.

Certainly, the ranks of the communalists and their supporters have swelled. Communal organisations, numbering less than a dozen in 1951, have grown to

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Delhi echoed the Meerut riots, till curfew was imposed

SUMAN DUBEY

Rajiv visited Ahmedabad but delayed going to Meerut

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

over 500 now, with an active membership that, according to government estimates, runs into several millions. Even as the number of religious-based organisations has grown, their leadership has been taken over by affluent and articulate personalities, replacing semi-literate or religious heads. One example is Syed Shahabuddin, the Janata Party member of Parliament, who was once a member of the Indian Foreign Service. In Hindu organisations too, former chief secretaries and director-generals of police have taken over the leadership of the militant Vishwa Hindu Parishad. The Uttar Pradesh unit of the parishad, for example, is now headed by S.C. Dixit, a former director-general of the state police.

In Bihar, early this year, a Hindu organisation named the All India Nationalist Hindu Forum was floated, boasting among its founders K.N. Singh, former chief justice of the Patna High Court. And in the south, young professionals—engineers, college teachers, doctors and advocates—have joined mushrooming communal organisations. Says P. Thangabalu, a Congress(I) Rajya Sabha member from Tamil Nadu: "Suddenly one finds that attachment to a communal organisation is not considered to be a bad thing." Added a senior Supreme Court advocate: "Why shouldn't people join communal organisations? It seems to make them instant leaders and gets them important positions in politics and government."

People with established criminal records, or who are suspect in the eyes of the police, have started using community leadership as a tool to gain respectability. Haji Mastan of Bombay is one example of a man who, during the last four months, has addressed over 50 meetings of his community in Delhi, Gujarat, Uttar Pradesh and Maharashtra. In Ahmedabad, a candidate with a criminal record won the recent municipal election from four constituencies, and his victory procession led to violence twice in the city. In both Meerut and Delhi, many people with criminal records have taken over the leadership of local 'Hanuman senas' and 'Shiv senas', using them not only as shields to protect themselves against police action but also as crutches of respectability.

Because of the growing participation in religious rallies and functions, more and more districts are becoming communally prone. The number of districts affected by communal violence grew from 61 in 1961 to 216 in 1979. And according to one estimate, over 250 districts (out of a total of around 350) are affected by these tensions now.

But analysts say that the most important factor behind the growth of communalism has been electoral considerations. Most parties pander to minority votes in pursuit of vote banks. By one reckoning, Muslims can win only 10 seats all over the country on their own strength, but their votes—if polled as a block—can influence the outcome in at least 200 other contituencies.

Predictably, it is Uttar Pradesh that has borne the brunt of the problem. Ever since the opening of the Ramjanambhoomi temple on February 1 last year, more than 50 small and large communal riots have taken place, killing over 60 people and leaving more than 600 injured. This was before Meerut.

According to another secret study by the Uttar Pradesh Government and the Delhi administration, over 100 small communal incidents took place during the last two years over land disputes alone. In fact, a Union Home Ministry report has noted the unprecedented spurt in the construction of religious buildings throughout the country, and warned that this "may lead to violent situations if not controlled". In fact, it was this danger that prompted the passage of an act making encroachment on public land a cognisable offence in Delhi. But the law has never been implemented. Says a senior Home Ministry official: "The number of religious buildings poses a great threat to communal harmony. The greater the number of buildings, the greater will be the number of processions, meetings and use of public address systems."

The number of religious buildings in Delhi alone has risen from barely 560 in 1980 to over 2,000 now. In Uttar Pradesh, the number of large religious buildings registered with the local municipalities has risen from 4,000 to over 6,700 last year. In fact, a simultaneous and massive renovation campaign of all dilapidated mosques gave rise to rumours of money flowing in from the Gulf, and fresh tension. Soon Hindu organisations launched a fund-raising campaign for their own buildings.

But whether it is renovating buildings or religious processions that lead to communal conflagrations, the growth in the number and membership of communal organisations, or the new respectability they have begun to enjoy, the signs point to one stark fact: the steady spread of the communal virus.

—PRABHU CHAWLA and INDERJIT BADHWAR

PRASHANT PANJIAR

The rally crowds were told that they must now fight for their due

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Feeling on top of the world!

A range of exclusive new designs,
in a smart new fit and style – shirts from Snowhite.

Shirts that make business sense
From Snowhite

NEW DELHI: 8-D, Connaught Place, Tel : 352762; South Extension, Part-I, Tel : 624009;
Arya Samaj Road, Karol Bagh, Tel : 569507 SHIMLA: 5, The Mall.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE SUPERLATIVES

VIMAL®
A RELIANCE PRODUCT

DRESS MATERIAL

VIMAL
The Official Fabric for

Fabric PERFECTION ONLY VIMAL

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Binatone

3 YEAR QUARTZ GUARANTEE

on Colour Picture Tube

The result of Binatone's latest Quartz technology breakthrough—QCFS*. A unique invention that protects your colour picture tube all the time, scientifically proved by Binatone's R&D both in London and Japan.

No wonder more and more TV buyers are asking for Binatone Quartz TVs everyday.

So buy the latest. Buy the best.
Buy Binatone Quartz.
You won't find a better deal.

Q QUARTZ | C COLOUR | F FILTER | S SYSTEM

Binatone

Built better to last longer

For further details, contact your local dealer and in case of difficulty contact- Binatone Electronics Private Limited, 23/4788-90 Ansari Road, Darya Ganj, New Delhi-110002.

*Worldwide patent pending. Copyright reserved.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Arms Communications—416

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE HIGHEST IN YOU EXPECTS IT

THE BEST IN US OFFERS IT

After putting up with mediocrity for years, now contemplate pure excellence in awe.

A fabled land of marble and glass that compares with the best abroad.

A breath-taking triple-height, see-through lexan dome that spans over a consumer paradise.

Escalators and gently sloping ramps that criss-cross a multi-level shopping mall.

A ritzy restaurant with a grand-stand view of the neon-lit shopping mall.

Soft notes of piped music that float around a temperature-controlled ambience.

Wide marbled corridors that lead on to spacious, cross-ventilated column-free offices.

All combining to form a temple of commerce, an altar to the consumer.

SWAPNALOK

IT IS WHAT IT MEANS

92/93 S D Road
SECUNDERABAD
-500 003 (A.P.)
Phone : 823777

A Kaveri Projects Limited Venture

Hyderabad's incomparable business centre

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PRASHANT PANJIAR

Son Ajit (centre) and family members by Charan Singh's body: a chapter ends

CHARAN SINGH

Death of a Rural Voice

HE died as he had lived, a broken and bitter man, the ultimate power he had so desperately craved, ever elusive, the party he had cultivated, in a shambles and his last days spent in pain and immobility. But to many, Charan Singh, 85, epitomised the politics of India—the hunger for power, the pettiness, the self-destructive contradictions and above all, the reluctance to accept political reality.

More than anything else, throughout the half century of his political life, the man they called the king of the Jats remained something of an enigma. A man of fiercely-held principles and ideology, Charan Singh was also the master manipulator, willing to switch sides at a moment's notice if it suited his political ambitions. His personal life-style was simple, reflective of his peasant background, yet there burned in that lean frame a remorseless desire to reach the ultimate seat of power—prime minister of India, an ambition he was to fulfill all too briefly and under the most dubious of circumstances. He wanted political immortality. He died a symbol of failure and self-aborted ambitions. Even when he knew his political dream was a mirage, he clung on to power, stubbornly refusing to abdicate in favour of younger and more energetic leaders.

Yet, when he passed away last week after a long and painful illness, it symbolised the end of a political era. He was among the last of a breed that is now almost extinct, a breed that spearheaded the freedom movement, inspired by giants like Lokmanya Tilak and Mahatma Gandhi, and was the political inheritor of independent India. For a man whose career was marked by violent fluctuations, the end came as something of an anti-climax. He had been confined to a wheelchair since he suffered a paralytic stroke on November 29, 1985.

He had been flown to the John Hopkins Institute in the US for treatment in March 1986 and was there for about a month. But the treatment did not seem to have done him much good. According to son-in-law J.P.Singh, medical superintendent of Delhi's Ram Manohar Lohia Hospital, who attended to him over the last months of his illness, Charan Singh was a "very good patient and a great fighter" and never strained himself after his stroke. Though a bitter man after the Opposition was virtually wiped out in the 1984 Lok Sabha elections, he seems to have learnt to live with the situation and also his illness as time went by. During the last six months, he had begun to withdraw into himself and talked very little although his mind, according to Singh, seemed alert. Interestingly, though, he said nothing in public about the fact that the Lok Dal, the party he created, was being torn asunder in a succession struggle.

On May 28, when he returned from being wheeled around the garden by a nurse at 6.30 p.m, his condition seemed normal. Soon after dinner, he went to sleep. When J.P.Singh returned home from a wedding, he received a call at 11.30 p.m. saying that Charan Singh was unwell. Dr Singh arrived along with a colleague, Dr K.K.Malhotra, a consultant in medicine, just before midnight. The octogenarian leader was already on oxygen. An electrocardiogram (ECG) was taken and it seemed satisfactory though the patient seemed to be in some discomfort. Two other doctors joined them.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

But an hour after midnight, suddenly the curves traced by the ECG machine turned into a flat line. Over the next hour-and-a-half, the doctors made desperate attempts to resuscitate him, but finally gave up at 2.25 a.m.

The next morning, the late leader's sprawling Raj-style bungalow was crawling with hundreds of people. Traffic had been diverted from the wide avenue that is Tughlaq Road. A phalanx of photographers stood in a row in the room, overlooking the rear lawn, in which the Jat leader's body lay in state, as people streamed by in a steady line. In an adjoining room, the women of the household and their visitors sat gloomily on the floor, while the VIPs covering a wide spectrum of the current political leadership filed past.

The homage was, however, hardly in keeping with the image. Few politicians have led so active a political life—and so controversial. Born into a peasant family in Meerut district, Charan Singh did his post-graduation from Agra University in history but, having also obtained a law degree, opted for a legal career. In 1925, he married Gayatri Devi who became a constant companion through the roller-coaster ride that his political career eventually became. After a brief legal practice he joined the Indian National Congress in 1929 and between 1932 and 1936 served as vice-chairman of the district board, Meerut. In 1935 he was elected to the Uttar Pradesh legislative assembly as a member of the Congress Party. By now, he had edged close to leaders like Govind Ballabh Pant who appointed Singh as his parliamentary secretary in 1946, a post he held for the next five years. His immediate ambition, however, was the chief ministership of Uttar Pradesh. He realised his dream in 1967 when he formed a splinter group called the Jan Congress and crossed over to the Opposition in the Assembly which regrouped under the banner of the Samyukta Vidhayak Dal (SVD) with Charan Singh as the leader. His political switch had been perfectly timed. The C.B. Gupta government was replaced by the SVD and Charan Singh was sworn in as chief minister.

But in a development that was to characterise his later career, the SVD experiment failed because of intra-party squabbles and lasted less than a year. In 1968, seeing his political future in threat, Charan formed another party, the Bharatiya Kranti Dal (BKD). In the subsequent state elections in 1969, the BKD emerged as the second largest party in the Assembly and Charan Singh as an undisputed leader in his own right. And with the Opposition unable to reach an understanding and the Congress unable to command majority support, Charan was appointed chief minister in February 1970, but once again for a brief spell of six months before the state was brought under President's rule.

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Charan Singh after finally becoming prime minister in 1979: burning ambition

But his political appetite had now been whetted and his ambitions expanded correspondingly. In 1974, he joined other opposition parties in their bid to form a "national alternative" to the Congress under the banner of the Bharatiya Lok Dal (BLD). Charan's election as chairman of the BLD placed him for the first time as head of a multi-state party but brought him no immediate gains. He, along with other leaders, was arrested during the Emergency.

Mrs Gandhi's surprise announcement of general elections in 1977 succeeded in finally getting the opposition parties together under the banner of the Janata Party and they formed the first non-Congress government ever at the Centre. Charan Singh was denied his ambition of becoming the prime minister with the election of Morarji Desai and had to be content with the number two job, that of home minister and later, finance minister for a brief period. But his personal ambitions undermined the government. He resigned from the Janata Party in April 1979 and revived the BLD under the name of the Lok Dal. The resignation of his followers hastened the fall of the Janata government, and with the aid of his political enemies, the Congress (I), he finally realised his life-long dream of becoming the prime minister. It was never destined to last. Mrs Gandhi paid him back in his own coin by withdrawing her party's support and the government quickly collapsed. Charan Singh was asked to continue as caretaker prime minister till the next elections in January 1980.

The Janata Party was routed in the elections and Charan Singh's Lok Dal also split into a rival group headed by Karpoori Thakur. Between then and his illness, Charan tried desperately to establish himself as a leader of the Jats but his burning ambition and cantankerous nature ensured that he would never rise again to the heights he had dreamt of.

Though a man who commanded respect and even fear, Charan's strong differences with his cabinet and political colleagues and his blinkered anti-urban economic ideology—symbolised by his presentation of a disastrous budget as finance minister—were the main stumbling block in his desire to achieve political greatness. By his passing away, Charan Singh leaves behind a disputed legacy and an even more disputed political career.

—DILIP BOBB with SREEKANT KHANDEKAR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

VINITO

PURE MARBLE WALLSTYLING

everest/87/VU212

Wall in a day's work

Vinito. Pure marble tiles designed specially for walls. To give your corporate visitors an impressive reception. Selectively quarried marble from captive mines. Processed to precise dimensions and a mirror finish by computerised machinery from Italy. With Italian-trained expertise.

Vinito. A matter of corporate image.

SHOWPLACES / INSTITUTIONS / HOTELS / STORES / OFFICES / HOMES

Manufactured by:
VINEET UDYOG LIMITED
Udyog Vihar
Sukher, Udaipur 313 001
Rajasthan. Tel. 27719

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Behind the strongest foundations there

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

HIMACHAL TOURISM

All the alpine flowers on our various circuits, take pleasure in inviting you to stroll among the fragrance of wild roses, asters, pansies, primulas.....
And everytime you bend and see their fresh and cheerful faces, you'll be glad you came to Himachal.

Venues :
Circuit 1 : Parwanoo-Barog-Chail-Kufri-Narkanda-Sarahan-Shimla
Circuit 2 : Dalhousie-Khajjiar-Chamba-Kangra-Jawalamukhi-Dharamsala-Palampur-Joginder Nagar-Bilaspur
Circuit 3 : Kullu-Manikaran-Kullu-Manali

Dress :
The higher you go... the more the woollens

For more information please contact Tourist Officers at : New Delhi : Chandralok Building, 36, Janpath, New Delhi 110001. Phones : 345320, 352104. Bombay : 36, World Trade Centre, Cuffe Parade, Bombay 400055, Phone : 211123. Madras : 28, Commander-in-chief Road, Madras 600005. Phones : 423214, 472966. Calcutta : Flat 1C/3, Camac Court, 25, Camac Street, Calcutta 700016. Phone : 446847. Chandigarh : SCO. 1048-49, Sector 22 B, Chandigarh 160022. Phone : 26494. Literature available at Ahmedabad at, Tourism Corporation of Gujarat Ltd.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ERADI TRIBUNAL

Muddying the Waters

CONTRARY to its name and expectations, the Punjab accord, in the last 22 months of its existence, has generated plenty of discord. In Punjab, it was rejected by one faction of the Akalis and the bulk of the militants while neighbouring Haryana protested it had got the short end of the stick. Instead of clearing the path for the accord's implementation, the Mathew, Venkatramaiah and Desai commissions further complicated issues that were complex to begin with. Last fortnight the report of the Eradi Tribunal, set up to decide Punjab's and Haryana's share of Ravi-Beas waters as part of the accord, muddied the waters further. It reduced Punjab's share, doubled Haryana's allocation and left Rajasthan's share unchanged.

Not surprisingly, the report raised howls of protest in Punjab, where almost every political party rejected its findings. Former chief minister Surjit Singh Barnala warned that the Akali Dal(L), which he heads, would mobilise grassroots support for a protest movement against the Eradi award. The Akali Dal(L) General Secretary Manjit Singh Khaira accused Eradi of trying to doctor the accord while former finance minister Balwant Singh predicted that, if implemented, the findings would deprive 40 per cent of Punjab's irrigated land of water. "The Majha and Malwa areas will be turned into another Rajasthan," he charged. Even CPI(M) politburo member Harkishan Singh Surjeet complained that Eradi had needlessly injected fresh complications into the waters issue.

And though Haryana welcomed the Eradi verdict, there was some doubt whether this gift of additional water would boost the flagging prospects of the embattled Congress(I) in the June 17 elections to the state legislature.

In fact, the Ravi and Beas rivers have proved to be waters of discord for Punjab and Haryana ever since 1966 when the two states were carved out of the undivided Punjab. At that time, the composite state of Punjab was using 7.2 million acre feet (MAF) of water from the river system. After reorganisation, each state laid claim to a major portion of the water and several Centrally-appointed committees failed to find a solution. Then the Central Government issued a statutory order on March 24, 1976, in the midst of the Emergency, dividing the water 50:50 between the two states. Each state got 3.5 MAF and the remaining 0.2 MAF was allocated to Delhi. (One acre foot of water means one acre of land covered by one foot of standing water.)

Map by B.K. SHARMA

By reducing Punjab's share of the Ravi-Beas waters and doubling Haryana's, the Eradi report has only inflamed passions in Punjab.

The then chief minister of Punjab Giani Zail Singh, however, appealed to the Centre to revise the "unjust" award as it would upset the state's farm-based economy. With his letter Zail Singh appended a resolution passed by the leaders of all parties in the Vidhan Sabha saying that "some areas of Punjab already being irrigated for the last 15 years...will be denied irrigation in order to make up the quantity of water to be made available to Haryana". A year later, Zail Singh's successor Parkash Singh Badal took up the plea. He informed the Centre that Punjab had already developed irrigation facilities to use 5.94 MAF of the 7.2 MAF of Ravi-Beas waters that had been allocated to the composite Punjab. In July 1979, the Punjab government filed a suit in the Supreme Court asking that the 1976 notification of the Central Government dividing the Ravi-Beas waters be struck down. Haryana filed a counter-suit asking the court to direct the Centre to implement the 1976 award.

While these suits were pending, the Congress(I) returned to power in Punjab and chief minister Darbara Singh signed a tripartite agreement with his counterparts in Haryana (Bhajan Lal) and Rajasthan (Shiv Charan Mathur) in the presence of prime minister Indira Gandhi. The surplus Ravi-Beas waters, re-estimated at 17.17 MAF, were apportioned with Punjab getting 4.22 MAF, Haryana 3.50 MAF, Rajasthan 8.60 MAF, Jammu and Kashmir 0.65 MAF and Delhi 0.20 MAF. This agreement required both Haryana and Punjab to withdraw their Supreme Court suits. But then, in July 1985, came the Punjab accord with Clause 9 referring to the sharing of river waters. It said: "The farmers of Punjab, Haryana and Rajasthan will continue to get water not less than what they were using from the Ravi-Beas system as on July 1, 1985....The claim of Punjab and Haryana regarding their share in the remaining waters will be referred for adjudication to a tribunal to be presided over by a Supreme Court judge....The decision of this tribunal will be binding on both parties."

When the Akalis came to power in Punjab in October 1985, they got the Vidhan Sabha to pass a resolution declaring the 1981 agreement as redundant. When the tribunal headed by Justice V. Balakrishna Eradi of the Supreme Court started its work, Punjab took the plea that on July 1, 1985, it had drawn 13,336 cusecs, Haryana 1,843 cusecs and Rajasthan 6,216 cusecs of Ravi-Beas waters. When multiplied by 365 to get the annual usage Punjab's usage came to 9.655 MAF of water, Haryana's to 1.334 MAF and Rajasthan's to 4.5 MAF. Since this usage had been protected by the accord, Punjab said the tribunal could adjudicate on the remaining 1.69 MAF of water.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Haryana protested. It argued that water usage should be gauged not by a single day's drawals but by the average water used over the previous year. Since there had been two breaches in the Bhakra main canal in that year the average of the last four years should be taken. The tribunal also held that Punjab's stand was not realistic. "The words used 'as on 1-7-1985' would clearly indicate that it is not the discharge at the canal heads on that particular day that is material. The expression 'as on' indicates the terminus date." As Justice Eradi explained: "We interpreted the wording 'as on July 1,1985' to mean a period ending on that day. It is the accepted judicial interpretation. So we took the figures from the Bhakra Beas Management Board of actual discharges of water at the canal heads and drew up a five-year average." The actual use of water over this period was: Punjab 5.406 MAF, Haryana 1.62 MAF and Rajasthan 6.09 MAF. In its final verdict the Eradi Tribunal awarded Punjab 5 MAF, Haryana 3.83 MAF and left Rajasthan's share untouched. "Haryana gained 2.21 MAF but it will start drawing the water only after the Sutlej Yamuna Link (SYL) canal is built," stated Eradi.

The tribunal rejected Punjab's contention that non-riparian Rajasthan had no right to any of the Ravi-Beas waters. "In a country like India the riparian theory is not accepted because there is no fixity of state boundaries. Under our Constitution state boundaries can be changed and a state can even be abolished. So no state can claim ownership of waters," Eradi said.

The response from the Akalis was understandably bitter. Said Khaira: "The award means that we will get less water than we were using. The calculations are deliberately misleading. This is an attempt to doctor the accord, and a complete negation of the terms of reference of the accord. The governor should not accept it."

But experts welcomed the verdict. "The award is the best the tribunal could do under the circumstances. It tried to arrive at a fair decision," said Dr Y.K. Murthy, former chairman of the Central Water Commission. The former chairman of the Narmada Control Authority M.N. Venkatesan said the tribunal had done a good job in making a fresh allocation. And B.B. Vohra, chairman of the Advisory Board on Energy sought to correct the mistaken belief that more water was synonymous with greater prosperity. "Irrigation has not been an unmixed blessing. It takes its toll in the form of salinisation and waterlogging. In Punjab half a million acres of land is waterlogged," Vohra said.

Eradi with the report: controversial

PRASHANT PANJIAR

> "Frequent disputes regarding river waters arise, introducing political tensions... making just solutions difficult...as in the present case."
> ERADI TRIBUNAL REPORT

Eradi and other experts agreed that the additional water allocated to Haryana cannot be utilised till the SYL canal is completed. And there is no saying when that will happen though, in political terms, the focus in both states will shift to the canal. There are signs that the Bharatiya Kisan Union and the All India Sikh Students Federation (AISSF) may revive the agitation they had launched some time ago in Punjab against the digging of the canal. As it is, most Punjab farmers feel that their interests have been sold down the river by the Centre. And Haryana will increase pressure on the Centre to complete canal construction while Punjab is under President's rule. Without the canal, Haryana cannot use its full quota of water.

The Akali government in Punjab had probably expected an adverse verdict from Eradi and that may be why it did not raise too much of a row about its dismissal. "We knew that the report was going to go in favour of Haryana and we had already told the Centre that we would not be able to accept it. We are going to reject the report," admitted Balwant Singh. Apart from the Akalis, others also feel that the release of the report was so timed that the Centre could send a not-so-subtle message to the voters of Haryana. Eradi says he had nothing to do with the timing of the report's release. "We submitted the report on January 30. Why it was held up is something on which I cannot comment." But Eradi rued the fact that heading such a tribunal was a thankless task. "Unfortunately whatever one does nobody is satisfied."

Thankless or not, Eradi and the two fellow judges on the tribunal—justices A.M. Ahmadi and P.C. Balakrishna Menon—muddied the disputed waters some more by discovering additional water (amounting to 1.11 MAF) which neither state had been aware of. This, Eradi said, was the water flowing into the rivers through tributaries and streams downstream of the rim station where flow measurements are normally taken. It added this additional water, 1.11 MAF, to the Ravi-Beas pool which enabled it to raise Haryana's allocation. But as the Eradi report says: "Frequent disputes regarding the distribution of river waters arise, introducing political tensions resulting in further aggravating the dispute thereby making just solutions through negotiations difficult...as in the present case." It would, therefore, not be surprising that, despite its noble objective, the Eradi award may further inflame existing political passions in Punjab and Haryana.

—RAMINDAR SINGH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

When we say the Atlas Copco heavy-duty portable Screw Air Compressors increase productivity and decrease costs, we're not just spouting hot air

Take a look for yourself at the features that put the XA/XAH screw compressors ahead of the rest.

- Advanced technology for optimum reliability.
- Fully automatic operation.
- Fail-safe security.
- Quality air.
- XAH 210 is built for high air pressure applications.
- Excellent towing characteristics.
- Fuel efficient.
- Large-capacity fuel tanks.
- Few parts to stock and replace.
- Easy to maintain.

APPLICATIONS

	Water-well drilling	Mining	Construction
XA 320 680 cfm @ 100 psi	As a package with the 6" Down-the-hole rigs.	As a package with 6" Blast-hole drills.	For rock drilling with Atlas Copco heavy-duty drifter BBC 120 F or in DTH application.
XAH 210 445 cfm @ 150 psi	Gives more wells at lower costs as a package with 4" Aqua-drill or any water-well drill. Also used with 6" DTH hydraulic rigs.	Increases drilling rate up to 60% in combination with the Atlas Copco BVB-25-10 and Cop-4 Hammer.	Increases drilling rate up to 60% in combination with the Atlas Copco BVB-25-10 and Cop-4 Hammer.
XA 190 400 cfm @ 100 psi	As a package with 4" rigs.	Provides compressed air to hand-held rock drills/other pneumatic tools.	Provides compressed air to hand-held rock drills/other pneumatic tools.

The XA/XAH Series Screw Compressors

The Atlas Copco product range includes Air and Gas compressors (reciprocating and screw type), Rock Drills; DTH Hammers; Mechanised Drilling Equipment; Aquadrills; Lubricators; Grinders, etc. We also offer a complete range of Sandvik rock drilling tools perfectly matched for our equipment. We cater to most of the requirements of the mining, construction, water-well drilling and industrial sectors.

And, Atlas Copco products are backed by an efficient spares and service network across the country— whenever you need it.

For further information contact:

Atlas Copco (India) Ltd.
Registered Office: Mahatma Gandhi Memorial Building, Netaji Subhash Road, Bombay 400 002. Phone: 315623
Regional Offices at: Bombay • Delhi • Calcutta • Madras • Secunderabad

Atlas Copco

CHATRA-B AC 2

No. 1 in air technology, the world over

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Say goodbye to tiredness the tastiest way

NEW Campco

WINNER The family health drink that keeps you ahead

Now, get the perfect combination of great taste and good health. In every cup of new Campco Winner. Rich chocolate taste. And all the zip and verve of glucose, minerals and vitamins. To give your family that something extra.

A delicious chocolate drink.

From India's largest, most modern plant.

Campco Limited
Mangalore

R K SWAMY/CU/4923

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Photographs by S. PREMI

V.P. Singh at rally site: unruffled

UTTAR PRADESH

Desperate Measures

IN at least one way, communal violence has come as a blessing for the Uttar Pradesh chief minister. He tried to put these to good use to contain V.P. Singh, former Union defence minister by preventing him from addressing a state government employees rally in Lucknow on May 27.

On May 24, when the state administration relayed wireless messages to all communally sensitive districts, imposing a ban on public meetings and rallies, the district administration of Lucknow promptly issued a press release saying that the proposed employees' rally would be covered by the ban. This, despite the fact that Lucknow has no record of communal disturbances.

The administration got into the act soon after the rally was announced on May 14 and tried to split employee ranks. B.N. Singh, president of the State Employees and Teachers Coordination Committee, criticised V.P. Singh's coming, saying that there was "no need to involve politics and politicians in our struggle". However, soon afterwards, Mandhata Singh and Lallan Pandey, both members of the presidium of the State Employees and Teachers Confederation, justified the step, arguing that V.P. Singh had been called not because of political reasons but because he is "a good person and a man of principles".

It was an exhibition of raw state power. On rally day, heavily armed policemen not only cordoned off Lucknow's large Begum Hazrat Mahal Park, but made doubly sure that no one could enter the grounds by using state roadways and police vehicles to block all entry points. Their preparations resembled those required to face an armed mob. Lathi-wielding policemen shooed away the thousands who had turned up to attend the rally and arrested 30 people, apart from 10 employee leaders who were taken into custody, both before and after the rally attempt.

Policemen blockading Lucknow ground

An unruffled V.P. Singh drove around the park, viewing the elaborate arrangements, before returning to his Raj Bhawan Colony residence. While the state administration may have succeeded in achieving what it had set out to do, Congress(I) circles feel that the real gain has been the former minister's, whose stature has only risen because of the blatant state obstructionism.

Bir Bahadur Singh also tried to keep support for V.P. Singh, within the party, under control by reportedly proposing a cabinet reshuffle in which he suggested dropping several of the eight ministers—including Transport Minister Sanjay Singh and Energy Minister Sunil Shastri—who sympathised with V.P. Singh. The reshuffle, apparently postponed under New Delhi's instructions, was expected in the light of the warm welcome accorded to V.P. Singh by Congress(I) leaders and workers at Lucknow, Kanpur and Allahabad.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

During the fortnight, the battle also shifted to Allahabad, V.P. Singh's home town and Amitabh Bachchan's constituency. Last fortnight, newspaper readers across the country were surprised to find an item, datelined Allahabad, saying that the former defence minister had been expelled from the Congress(I) following the adoption of a resolution by the local party unit.

The man behind this attempt—which failed—was Ashok Bajpai, the son of Union Minister of State for Welfare Dr Rajendra Kumari Bajpai. Ashok's resentment springs from the fact that V.P. Singh, as state party chief, had denied him a ticket in the last assembly elections because of his alleged involvement in several scandals. Predictably, he is now an ardent Bachchan backer.

Ashok first tried to push a resolution for V.P. Singh's expulsion on May 19 at a meeting of city Congress(I) office-bearers. When that failed, another similar attempt was made at a meet of district party workers on May 24 in which the former minister as well as a local MLA, Satish Jaiswal, were expelled from the Congress(I)'s primary membership for six years. The meeting was neither authorised nor attended by any central observer. Only 2,000 of the 10,000 workers expected to participate showed up and, what is more, none of the nine local MLAs attended. This, and the fact that most of the district office-bearers stayed away, only went to demonstrate the power that V.P. Singh continues to enjoy in Allahabad despite the organised campaign within the party against him.

The move was apparently aimed at serving as a warning to V.P. Singh followers state-wide, that their continuing support to him would invite severe disciplinary action. Many Allahabad workers carried the impression that Ashok's plan had the backing of central party leaders. But the whole scheme backfired and showed up the organisers badly when the AICC(I) General Secretary Nawal Kishore Sharma issued a statement in New Delhi the same day saying that the district unit did not have the authority to expel any MP or MLA.

While the drama of trying to contain V.P. Singh in Uttar Pradesh is likely to continue in the coming weeks, the former minister can rest assured for now in the knowledge that nothing the state administration or Bir Bahadur Singh have done so far has succeeded in tarnishing his image in the slightest. On the other hand, it has usually had the opposite effect.

—DILIP AWASTHI

THAKKAR COMMISSION

Shrouded in Secrecy

NO sooner had the two-member Thakkar Commission begun its probe into the Fairfax affair than it landed itself smack into the lap of controversies that are threatening to heat up further. Former defence minister Vishwanath Pratap Singh, the inquiry's most obvious target, has already requested that the commission's work be conducted in full public view, while S. Gurumurthy of the Indian Express is insisting that he be allowed to be present during the hearings. Observers find it curious that Gurumurthy, who is at the heart of the controversy since he was accused of introducing Fairfax to the Finance Ministry, has not even been called as a witness.

Noted lawyer Fali Nariman led the initial legal attack in a hard-hitting article in the Indian Express against the commission's procedure. He wrote: "Secrecy breeds suspicion and suspicion (however ill-founded) ultimately breeds contempt. The highest court in the land has the highest reputation to live up to—it simply cannot afford to expose itself to suspicion in whatever capacity its justices are called upon to function." Thakkar's first report—on Mrs Gandhi's assassination—is still a national secret. But its findings have already been used by a section of the media to cast aspersions on top government officials and dignitaries, including the President.

When Justice Thakkar, and his colleague, Justice Natrajan, were appointed to the (Fairfax) commission in April, the Government announced publicly that they would operate from the Supreme Court and submit a report within three months, which would be placed before Parliament. But the commission is neither functioning from the Supreme Court nor conducting an open inquiry. It is operating furtively from the well-guarded residence of Justice Thakkar. And early

Thakkar

Natrajan

Justice Thakkar's residence: in-house inquiry

PRASHANT PANJIAR

The fact that the Thakkar Commission is operating furtively from Justice Thakkar's residence, makes it clear the report will face a problem.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Wadia

Gurumurthy

Bhure Lal

V.P.Singh

last month, the press was barred entry.

The commission had also advertised for affidavits from anybody who possessed useful information. But even before the closing date for filing affidavits, it began summoning key officials for recording their statements. Predictably, the first one was Bhure Lal—the formidable former enforcement director. He was served a notice on the evening of May 4, while on sick leave, directing him to appear before the commission next morning. This left him with no time to consult counsel or to study relevant documents. And he was questioned first by Justice Thakkar, in the absence of Justice Natrajan. Later, they questioned him together for three hours.

The commission has now sent a detailed questionnaire to Nusli Wadia (Bombay Dyeing), V.P. Singh, the CBI and other Finance Ministry officials. In response, the finance secretary filed a voluminous affidavit that is likely to form the basis of the inquiry. And the CBI too submitted its documents—including the alleged forged letters to the commission.

The contents of the communications received from the commission are nearly identical. Some of the questions reportedly being asked by the commission are:

- Why did the Enforcement Directorate engage Fairfax?
- Who authorised its engagement?
- What was the role of Gurumurthy in hiring Fairfax?
- Was Nusli Wadia connected with Fairfax in any manner?
- Did V.P. Singh approve Bhure Lal's visit to the US or not?
- Why didn't V.P. Singh and former revenue secretary Vinod Pandey put their approval in writing for hiring Fairfax?
- Were the antecedents of Fairfax examined before hiring it?
- Was the Indian Embassy in the US involved in this or not?

The inquiry is zeroing in on the role of V.P. Singh, Bhure Lal and Vinod Pandey and the Government has made it obvious that it will play the role of an adversarial prosecutor.

Nariman is not the only one critical of the secrecy in which the commission has enshrouded itself. V.P. Singh, in a short reply to the commission, has also requested an open inquiry. Singh told INDIA TODAY: "Since the commission was born out of a public debate and is exercising the whole country, it would be better if its work was done in public. We will fully cooperate with the commission in conducting its proceedings."

Legal experts agree that only an open inquiry can reveal the credibility of the arguments being offered for and against the hiring of the foreign agency. Said an advocate connected with one witness: "Since none of the parties, including the Government, has to hide anything, let the media and the public watch the proceedings of a commission whose findings are going to affect the entire gamut of investigation against those who have taken Indian money abroad."

What irks legal sources is that the Thakkar Commission has begun to follow the Shah Commission's procedures. Justice T.P.S. Chawla had quashed the proceedings of the Shah Commission on the ground that no commission could assume the role of "an investigator, interrogator or inquisitor or conduct a fishing or a roving inquiry." According to the Commissions of Inquiry Act, the persons who are likely to be affected by the findings of a commission or whose conduct is being probed are entitled to be given a notice to be present during the proceedings and shown all the documents. And they have the right to cross-question witnesses and deponents. The recording of oral evidence can start only after the perusal of affidavits. But in this case the oral evidence began 12 days before the date of filing affidavits expired.

It has become quite apparent that the battle-lines are now drawn. As expected, the inquiry is zeroing in on the role of Singh, Bhure Lal and Vinod Pandey. And the troika has decided to fight back in unison. Senior advocates like Soli Sorabjee and Nariman have volunteered their services for defending the former defence minister and the officials who worked with him when he was finance minister. Recent moves made by the Government have made it obvious that it will play the role, not of a neutral party giving information, but that of an adversarial prosecutor of V.P. Singh and his former subordinates. That the Finance Ministry's affidavit was not shown to Bhure Lal or Vinod Pandey, who as government officials have the right to examine it under the Commissions of Inquiry Act, is proof of this development.

Still, last fortnight, the Finance Ministry agreed to request government counsel to "assist" Bhure Lal and Vinod Pandey. But what shape this vague promise will take is yet to be determined.

The other targets are Nusli Wadia, Gurumurthy and Fairfax Chairman Michael Hershman. Wadia was out of the country and had not replied to the commission's notice. And Gurumurthy wrote to the commission through his advocate that he would like be summoned. But whether this is likely to happen is still anybody's guess.

The real fire-works are likely to start when the commission begins its actual proceedings, after going through the scores of statements and affidavits filed before it. Since legal questions are already being raised about its procedures, the commission will have to tread very carefully to safeguard its credibility.

—PRABHU CHAWLA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ASSAM

Minority Moves

ASSAM'S tribal and minority leaders have taken their war against the ruling Asom Gana Parishad (AGP) to a new battlefield: New Delhi. The AGP too has not been far behind. Since the first week of May, representatives of the AGP have been camping in Delhi, trying to blunt their adversaries' campaign and swing Central opinion in their favour.

The AGP, whose support base has been dwindling since late last year, was particularly desperate to prove its credentials and dispel the charge of discrimination and chauvinism that has been levelled against it by the state's tribal and minority groups. And the indications are that it has won the first round.

"The Centre has assured us that it will not encourage the separatists," says Chief Minister Prafulla Mahanta. However, the AGP's demand for the amendment of the Illegal Migrants Determination (By Tribunals) Act to facilitate the detection and deportation of foreigners has not won Central support. Instead, the Union Home Ministry has suggested

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

"The Centre has assured us that it will not encourage the separatists (the tribal and minority groups)."

PRAFULLA MAHANTA
Assam chief minister

BIHAR

Disc Drive

THE Bihar Government is poised to hurl itself into the 21st century. Well, almost. Chief Minister Bindeshwari Dubey, taking a byte out of his leader's apple, has launched an ambitious disc drive—to computerise one of the most backward states in the country. Most of the state's 40 departments and 49 public sector undertakings are to be computerised at a cost of Rs 10 crore. The aim: wipe off the stigma of being one of the worst-run states, speed up development and spruce up the Government's image.

The plan, which will take a few months to be implemented, will include the setting up of local area and wide area networks. The Finance Department will be linked to all the 40 treasuries in the state (cost: Rs 1 crore) and the Police Department geared to fight crime with data fed into a central system. Other departments and state undertakings will have smaller systems (cost: Rs 10 lakh-Rs 15 lakh each) and divisional commissioners, heads of department and collectors will be encouraged to use personal computers.

The computerisation plan has been in the works for the last two years but Dubey decided to press the fast forward button last month. To speed up the processing, the Government also plans to set up a new directorate of computers and introduce computer courses at the undergraduate and post-graduate levels in engineering colleges and polytechnics. Says R.K. Singh, deputy director (computer planning) of the Department of Science and Technology: "The whole exercise is aimed at creating a computer culture in the state."

Critics of the scheme, however, recall Bihar's initial encounter with computer culture. The Irrigation Department, which was the first to acquire a computer in 1979 to monitor the progress of irrigation projects, had made little use of it. The computer had become more of a showpiece. Finally, in the absence of a maintenance contract with the dealer, it fell into disuse.

Then, in 1980 the Government decided to computerise the Police Department. A computer cell was set up and a blueprint drawn to define its functioning. A post of inspector general modernisation-cum-director, computers, was created. Surprisingly, the lone computer that was bought became operational only recently. However, the officials who continued to be posted to the cell were mostly policemen who were out of favour.

The fate of the bilingual computer system in the chief secretary's office was no different. Its idleness made one incumbent, K.K. Srivastava, use it as a Hindi word processor. Later, it was returned to the dealer.

Doubts were naturally voiced about the new plan's utility. Said Shivaji Sinha, a former inspector general of police: "This is like adding insult to injury. When people can't get safe drinking water, villages and towns have neither roads nor electricity, and when the Government cannot protect the people from such diseases as jaundice, how can it talk of computers?" And, in the light of past experience, the Bihar Government may have taken a bigger byte than it can swallow. —FARZAND AHMAD

Government office: computer culture

K.M. KISHAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

The Oberoi, Bombay

Now there's a hotel that is truly one of the most luxurious in the world. The Oberoi, Bombay. Located in the heart of the business district, each of our exquisitely styled guest rooms is appointed with the finest furnishings and fabrics. There's a personal butler to attend to your every need. And our exclusive Executive Centre features the latest office equipment available 24 hours a day. At The Oberoi, Bombay, you'll discover the best the world has to offer.

The Oberoi

BOMBAY, INDIA

RESERVATIONS THROUGH YOUR TRAVEL AGENT, LRI (NEW YORK) 800-223-0888 (LONDON) 01-541-1199 STR (FRANKFURT) 069-230-304,

AUSTRALIA, EGYPT, INDIA, INDONESIA, IRAQ, NEPAL, SAUDI ARABIA, SRI LANKA

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

There's more to Spar

They are anti-slip too!

Take a second look and you'll discover that Spartek Floors are also...

- Absolutely scratch-resistant • Stain-proof • Fire and heat resistant • Easy to maintain and clean • Simple to lay even on existing floors and ready for live-in use within 4h

...s • Various 305mm x 203mm dream shad... this plus th... ...ly incomp... ...tek Floors ...ing and a...

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

e to Spartek Floors than just good looks..

India's largest selling ceramic floor tiles

...ors • Various size options — ...5 × 305mm, 305 × 203mm, ...3 × 203mm, 203 × 101.5mm, in a range ...dream shades.

...this plus the breathtaking beauty that's ...ly incomparable.

...rtek Floors — Good-looking, hard-...ing and a lot of good sense.

SPARTEK

Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Someday all cameras will be like the Minolta 7000.

MINOLTA

The Minolta 7000 has changed SLR photography forever with an astonishing standard of technical innovation. It gives you Minolta's Hi-Tech autofocus with computer controlled accuracy, so fast and precise that it becomes an extension of your eye, even in flash photography. Automatic Multi-Program Selection. so intelligent that it automatically makes all exposure decisions and settings for you, even selecting the right program for the Minolta AF lens you're using. Fully automatic film control that ends film loading. winding and rewinding worries. Touch control operation that assures quick, precise settings for all camera functions. And the world's widest array of AF lenses, from 24mm to 600mm. All in all, the Minolta 7000 lets you capture the split-second experiences of life as they happen, instantly, accurately and exactly the way you see them. Someday all cameras will be like the Minolta 7000. But for now, this is the one to own.

The Hi-Tech Autofocus SLR

7000

Minolta Camera Co., Ltd. 30, 2-Chome, Azuchi-Machi, Higashi-Ku, Osaka 541, Japan

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

an alternative and simpler method of registering complaints against foreigners. The state Government has been asked to issue special forms free of cost to any resident of Assam wishing to complain against a suspected foreigner. These forms will be submitted to the local superintendent of police who will investigate the complaint and then forward it to the nearest of the 20 "foreigners" tribunals in Assam.

However, the United Minorities Front (UMF) has tried to take the wind out of the AGP's foreigners-issue sails. Its delegation, which met the prime minister in Delhi, charged that the foreigners issue was a mere AGP bogey raised for the sole purpose of harassing the minorities. To drive home its point, it stated that of the 2,45,167 cases of suspected foreigners investigated by the police between December 1985 (when the AGP assumed power) and January 1987, only 7,771 were forwarded to the tribunals, and of these, only 528 persons were declared foreigners. "So where are the lakhs of foreigners the AGP has been shouting about?" the UMF President Golam Osmani queried.

At the same time, another delegation, comprising the United Nationalist Tribals Liberation Front (UNTLF), the Autonomous State Demand Committee of Assam, the Zomi National Congress of Manipur and the United People's Party of Mizoram met the prime minister and acquainted him of the AGP Government's "evil intentions" against the state's tribals and minorities. They warned the prime minister that a paralysing agitation crippling the entire North-east would be launched in late June this year if their demand for immediate Central rule in Assam's tribal areas was not fulfilled. "We also tried to explain the AGP's dangerous policy of evicting thousands of tribals from their forest homelands without providing any alternative," says UNTLF Chairman Benai-Khungur Basumatari.

But though they may have failed to convince Delhi, the tribal leaders have not lost hope. At home, the AGP Government's support remains far from complete, and one indication of what the future might hold was provided last fortnight at the Kacharigaon reserve forest. When government officials with armed police and elephants went to evict tribal encroachers on forest land, they suddenly found themselves surrounded by a silent hostile army of almost 10,000 tribals. Clearly, the battle will continue on home ground.—INDRANIL BANERJIE

MADHYA PRADESH

One More Son

YET another son is rising on the political horizon of Madhya Pradesh. He is Arun Vora, the 25-year-old offspring of Chief Minister Motilal Vora. Propped by his powerful father, Arun has already become a VIP in his home town of Durg: he lays foundation stones of government buildings, presides over public functions and generally gets things done in the "public interest".

Arun performing puja at an official function: new power base

He has also come to hold several important offices, many of which came his way after his father became the chief minister two years ago. Besides being the district chief of Youth Congress(I) in Durg, he is a shareholder in the family daily, Amrit Sandesh, as also its correspondent, and director of a transport company, Durg Travels. He is also 'chief patron', 'patron' and 'chairman' of a host of local organisations. "Everyone is out to rope him in so that they can collect funds in the name of the chief minister's son," says CPI Durg District Secretary Rajkumar Gupta.

But his favourite activity remains laying foundation stones. The entire Durg-Bhilai belt is littered with them, each bearing the inscription "laid by Durg District Youth Congress President Shri Arun Vora". He is estimated to have laid foundation stones of at least 50 buildings in the area, most of them being government or government-sponsored constructions.

Earlier this year, Arun laid in a day, 10 foundation stones for community centres to be constructed by the Durg-Bhilai Special Area Development Authority (SADA) in the rural areas of Durg. Recalls an eyewitness: "He travelled in a caravan of about a dozen government-owned vehicles. There was a pilot jeep in front and another following him." At about the same time, he also presided over an official loan distribution camp organised by the Rural Development Agency. The function was attended, among others, by the town's mayor and the district collector.

Because Arun with his Youth Congress(I) post has no locus standi at such official functions, he has become the target of opposition attacks. Says District Janata Party chief Pradeep Choube: "What is objectionable is that he has been made chief guest even at government functions, with important district officials and public figures waiting on him."

And though Arun concedes that government organisations had started inviting him after his father became the chief minister, he adds hastily: "Basically, I am invited to functions because of my personal rapport with the people."

However, there is no denying the fact that Arun's extra-constitutional role often creates embarrassing moments for the authorities. Once, addressing a public gathering in a Durg village, a Congress(I) leader announced a grant of Rs 10,000 from the chief minister's fund on behalf of Arun. "He did not ask me before making the announcement and I did not know what to do," says Arun. What happened eventually? "The villagers got the money," he replies.

Eight months ago, it had been the statement of Bhajan Singh Nirankari, the chief minister's confidant and chairman of SADA, that had caused an uproar. The statement—"Since Voraji is not present, you should consider Arun Vora as the chief minister"—reportedly made at a public meeting sparked off a demonstration by the Janata Party and the CPI in front of the collector's office. "We also sent a tape of the speech with a letter of protest to Vora but there was no

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Music to your ears!

Gujarat's incentive scheme for the electronics industry

Just cast your eye over a few interesting features of the incentive scheme. They are sure to strike a responsive chord in you.

Highlights of the incentive scheme

Subsidy	Sales Tax Incentives	Interest Subsidy
You can claim subsidy up to 30% of fixed capital investment with a ceiling of Rs. 30 lakhs. That's quite a packet!	You can avail of sales tax deferment up to 100% of fixed capital investment. For your benefit, we've even done away with the amount ceiling!	Claim interest subsidy on term loan up to 25% of your fixed capital investment with a ceiling of Rs. 20 lakhs.	Sales Tax slashed to 1% And now... GSIC becomes the distributor for ET&T electronic components... an added advantage!

The quantum of these incentives will vary with the location of your industry.

Every nook and corner of Gujarat is included under this incentive scheme. Even large cities. At one stroke we've eliminated your problem of getting qualified personnel!

Gujarat's definition of fixed capital investment is the widest. From technical know-how fees to R&D equipment, all can be included under this definition. An unexpected bonus!

And if this is not enough, consider the increasing prosperity of the people, due to thriving industrialisation and agriculture. There's a vast market out here, just waiting to be tapped.

Add to all these incentives, Gujarat's excellent infrastructure and what do you get? A state where you can place your finger on any point and yet be sure of getting everything—from subsidies to rail and road links, excellent communication lines and a total lack of red tape. What more could you ask for?

Power cut exemption for five years

If your unit is located in specified backward areas, it will be exempt from power cuts for five years.

Just contact iNDEXTb and get your project going.

iNDEXTb Industrial Extension Bureau (A Govt. of Gujarat Organisation)

Nanalal Chambers, Ashram Road, Ahmedabad - 380 009.
Phone : 402390, 402397/8/9 Telex : 0121-229

The Chief Development Officer/Development Officer
Gujarat Corporations, Khetan Bhavan, 1st Floor
198, J. Tata Road, Churchgate, Bombay 400 020.
Phone : 222474, 222165, 222087, 222146 Telex : 011-4329

Calcutta : Mr. C.M. Patel, Phone : 274529, 274691

Shilpi 2 GC3/87

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

reply," says CPI's Gupta.

Arun was involved in yet another controversy last year when he applied for accreditation with the state Government as the Amrit Sandesh correspondent and his uncle, who edits the daily, recommended him though he didn't qualify. Under the rules, only working journalists are given accreditation and Arun is a shareholder in the paper he works for. The application was ultimately rejected, but not before it had caused much consternation in the fourth estate.

In fact, his efforts to ride two horses—politics and journalism—at the same time, lead to several ludicrous situations. During press tours, avoiding the company of fellow journalists, he travels in an official car, much to the amusement of others. Above all, he avoids attending opposition press conferences possibly due to the attacks on his father. Arun concedes he was over sensitive earlier. "But now I've reconciled myself to the situation," he says.

Now he has also started going to nearby towns like Rajnandgaon, Dongargarh, Dalli-Rajhara and Balod to address social gatherings at government colleges and to inaugurate community markets. People in Durg believe that Arun is being projected at the behest of his father who wants his younger son to succeed him in public life. This is not really surprising since most of the chief ministers in the past appear to have done the same thing. Blood is obviously thicker than water.

—N.K. SINGH in Durg

KERALA

Laboured Issue

TWO months is generally enough of a political barometer to get the measure of a new state Government. By that yardstick, the E.K. Nayanar Ministry in Kerala seems to have made a flawless take-off. After many years, a coalition government has settled in without any major controversies or infighting—the bane of earlier state governments.

That success is all the more creditable considering that the Congress(I)-led Opposition has been desperately searching for an available handle to tarnish the image of the ruling Left Democratic Front (LDF) Ministry. And more so since elections to the Kottayam and Vamanapuram assembly seats are scheduled for June 2, which is considered a key test for the new ministry. Admitted former home minister Vayalar Ravi: "We have to win in at least one of the places to keep the LDF on a tight leash. If we lose both seats, it will be a great setback."

The state Opposition—the Congress(I) and the United Democratic Front (UDF)—is depending on the traditional Achilles heel of the LDF—the powerful Centre of Indian Trade Unions (CITU). Union bosses and workers have an unholy reputation in Kerala, with innumerable instances of them using violence to terrorise the population. They have, over the years, been labelled the thugs of the Marxist party. Whenever the LDF has been in power, the CITU has been a source of embarrassment.

But this time, the Marxist Government is taking no chances. It has sent out circulars to all CITU units in the state warning them that the Government's image depends on their dealings with the public. Says Trivandrum district Secretary of the CPI(M), K. Sreedharan: "We will not allow CITU members to indulge in anti-social activities by using their relationship with the CPI(M) as a cover." The party is obviously serious about keeping the union on a tight leash. Last month, it suspended Thomas Abraham, a lawyer in charge of the Vanchiyoor unit of the CITU in Trivandrum, for his failure to take disciplinary action against two erring union members who beat up a doctor on the main road in Trivandrum. Union notice boards in markets and major transport stations now carry names of members who have been suspended for misbehaving with the public. As M.M. Lawrence, LDF convenor and an all-India secretary of CITU, said: "Today, CITU workers are politically conscious and would do nothing to tarnish the Government's image. The CITU has always been the favourite whipping boy of right-wing papers and the Opposition."

> "Karunakaran can't talk of insecurity (due to the CITU). In Meerut, people are being butchered. What is the Congress(I) doing?"
> E.K. NAYANAR
> chief minister, Kerala

That statement is not without meaning. Already, the Opposition has launched an anti-CITU campaign following a minor incident, in the state secretariat, involving a dispute over the unloading of some desks and chairs. CITU head load workers had declared their right to unload the articles and demanded Rs 10 per piece as 'attimari' charges. 'Attimari' is the so-called right of CITU workers to load or unload articles on or from trucks or buses in markets—whether one wants their services or not. Brushing aside the incident, Nayanar commented it was only a dispute between the workers and the contractors who had brought the furniture. Other minor incidents involving similar disputes have taken place.

The Marxist leadership, however, believes that right-wing newspapers and the Opposition, led by former chief minister Karunakaran, are blowing up the issue on the eve of the two assembly elections. "Karunakaran has no right to talk about people feeling insecure in the state. In Delhi and Meerut, under the nose of his boss Rajiv Gandhi, hundreds of people are being butchered in communal riots. What the hell is the Congress(I) doing about it?" said Nayanar. But the Opposition's CITU-targeted pre-election campaign clearly shows that they have little else to criticise the LDF with. That alone is enough to give Nayanar and his new Ministry plenty of encouragement.

—SREEDHAR PILLAI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

From Razakar to reservations, awaiting a common cause, for the people of AP

From Razakar to reservations
From Ambani to Ambica

Deccan Chronicle Group has given the people of Andhra their oldest English newspaper. They have left their stamp in the State's history. From Razakar, right up to the present. The voice heeded in every AP home. The secret of this success? Reporting of regional news with authenticity and promptness. Everything everyone would like to know... from the crowded markets to the changing movies, from celebrity visits to sports events.

No advertiser entering the AP market can afford to ignore the Deccan Chronicle. It provides advertising mileage at its best. Even its classified columns have become a byword — dating back to the very first issue, in May 1938.

Yes, equipment and infrastructure has changed, to keep pace with the times. The latest in typesetting, pagenation and offset printing. But one thing remains unchanged... the traditional trust that readers have in the Deccan Chronicle. Loyal, eager readers, unwilling to settle for anything less than the regional fare provided, by the 'voice of AP'. Andhra's industrialists and trade choose it — use it — to communicate with Andhra readers. They are indeed invaluable — imparting life into the articles, with up-to-date commercial and financial news.

GOLDEN JUBILEE 50 1938 1987

Reach for Andhra with the DECCAN Chronicle Group

Published simultaneously from Hyderabad and Visakhapatnam. Soon to be published from Vijayawada and Nellore.

Imageads/DC/10187-2

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Wouldn't you like your child to grow up and be successful tomorrow?

May be a scientist.
May be a musician.
May be an engineer.

But, to help him be prepared for tomorrow's world, you must be prepared to understand that computers are an indispensable part of his future. In whatever field, in whatever career. His life will be lived in a world full of computers.

So you can help your child get ready.

By getting him a home computer today.

It's easier to learn about computers if you have a home computer at home. It helps you bridge the gap between ignorance and knowledge about the way computers function.

It can teach you BASIC — the first language to know in computers. It can teach your children Maths or Geography or other subjects in an easy, entertaining way. It can help you keep your household and office accounts. It can entertain and educate you. With hundreds of intelligent games that help you develop your decision-making abilities.

And it costs so little, every family can buy one.

Yes, a home computer is an important part of every modern home today. Because it helps you and your children bridge the gap between today and tomorrow.

Come to Computer Point for more information and a free demonstration of the utility of home computers.

And start feeling at home with computers.

Right away!

Did you learn to use a calculator before you learnt to add?

Sista's-1439/87

COMPUTER POINT

• Bangalore: 43, Dickenson Road Tel: 578718/578452 • Bombay: 227, Dr. Annie Besant Road, Worli Tel: 4936716/4930543 • Calcutta: 5, Camac Street • Cochin: Nedumchalil Chambers, Mullachery Canal Road, Ernakulam • Hyderabad: Regency House, Greenlands Road, 680, Somajiguda Tel: 229123/229374 • Madras: 92, G. N. Chetty Road, T. Nagar Tel: 441192 • New Delhi: F-41, South Extension Part I Tel: 624370/698548

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

imageads/DC/10187-2

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

IPCA

Lotus Blossoms

LOTUSES are blossoming everywhere. By some curious coincidence, the major share in Ajitabh Bachchan's pharmaceuticals company in Bombay, IPCA, is owned by an investment company called Lotus Investments Private Limited, in which Ajitabh, 39, is a director. Coincidentally, Lotus also happens to be the code-name for the Swiss bank account that Swedish Radio has alleged huge pay-offs were made into for the Bofors deal with the Indian Government. And with Ajitabh having shifted to Switzerland, the list of coincidences does seem a bit startling.

If this served to focus attention on the company that Ajitabh has left behind in India, there also appear to be some major discrepancies in Amitabh Bachchan's claim in recent press interviews that his brother had left behind a Rs 40-crore company. Ajitabh would have to possess the miraculous powers his brother displays on the screen to have increased IPCA's turnover to this level from the Rs 15 crore it recorded in 1985. In fact, the 37th annual report of the company, which was presented at the annual general meeting last fortnight, clearly shows that IPCA's turnover in 1986 was slightly over Rs 17 crore and that its profits have dropped sharply.

Both Madhukar Chandurkar and Prem Chand Godha, the two managing directors of the company, find it difficult to explain Bachchan's statement. But they also steadfastly refuse to speak on any aspect of IPCA's functioning. Chandurkar and Godha, through two investment companies, together control 48.7 per cent of IPCA's shares, with the other major chunk of 49.5 per cent being controlled by Lotus Investments.

In fact, after the pharmaceuticals company was granted permission in March last year to capitalise Rs 30 lakh from its general reserve of Rs 52.5 lakh, the break-up of equity shares in the company ran thus: Amitabh Bachchan (1,000): Jaya Bachchan (1,000): Ajitabh Bachchan (1,000): M.R. Chandurkar (1,000): P.C. Godha (1,000): Lotus Investments Pvt Ltd (2,97,000): Chandurkar Investments Pvt Ltd (1,49,000) and Kaygee Investments Pvt Ltd—controlled by Godha—(1,49,000).

However, this was not the pattern of the shareholding when the company was acquired from its earlier owner, Balubhai Chuilal Shah, a Burma-returned businessman. A board meeting in October 1975 had appointed Amitabh, Ajitabh, Jaya, Chandurkar and Godha as directors. At the time of acquisition, the major equity was held in Amitabh's name (54,000 shares), and Ajitabh and Jaya with 19,000 and 20,500 shares respectively, were the other two big shareholders, while Godha and Chandurkar had 500 shares each. The 1,000 preference shares were split between Amitabh (566) and Ajitabh (434).

It was after the Bachchans took over the floundering small-scale pharmaceuticals company, which was set up by an Englishman in Bombay in 1949, that IPCA shifted its registered office to 48, Government Industrial Estate, Kandivili West, a distant Bombay suburb where it has its main manufacturing unit. But under the Bachchans, IPCA has expanded considerably thanks to a steady injection of loans from Canara Bank (the company's present debt stands at Rs 3.5 crore). IPCA has now set up a second unit at Ratlam. Besides, the Bachchans have set up Mexin Medicaments at Silvasa (in Daman), the products of which are also sold through IPCA. The company also has an active export division, having sold formulations worth nearly Rs 1 crore last year, and winning the Chemexcil award for small-scale companies.

A company official says that it was after 1978 that IPCA started doing well. "Progress has largely been due to our

IPCA Laboratories: suspicious success

By some curious coincidences, the major shares in IPCA are held by Lotus Investments, in which Ajitabh is a director.

NAMAS BHOJAN

Ajitabh

Amitabh

Jaya

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

success in finding a niche in the highly competitive pharmaceuticals market, and with 250 medical representatives throughout the country, we have been able to get doctors to accept the new medicines we introduced in India," says the official.

IPCA's biggest success has been with the antacid 'Perinorm', which is now widely used for heartburn conditions. Besides this, the company makes medicines for chest infections and vitamin syrups for both adults and children. All these formulations, company officials claim, are a product of its own R & D Department.

THE popularity of IPCA's medicines has certainly been reflected in its balance sheet, with the company maintaining steady profits for the last six years. But curiously, IPCA's profits suddenly shot up in 1985, a phenomenon for which company officials give no explanation, especially considering that in 1986 profits are back again to earlier levels.

After a modest Rs 5.33 lakh profit in 1981, IPCA turned in a much better performance in 1982 recording a Rs15.27-lakh profit, followed by Rs 12.19 lakh in 1983 and Rs 10.51 lakh in 1984. But in 1985, company profits spiralled to Rs85.85 lakh, even though the turnover recorded only a 30 per cent increase from Rs11.86 crore in 1984 to Rs 15.43 crore in 1985.

The pharmaceuticals firm's performance in 1985 was particularly remarkable, considering that labour trouble in the Kandivili unit in September led to an extended lock-out which lasted well into the next year. Even so, profits went up by 800 per cent and income by 30 per cent, of which Rs 37 lakh also came from assisting another small pharmaceuticals company in exporting its products, a service which IPCA, with its owner's high-level connections, is likely to extend further in the coming years.

Though both Chandurkar and Godha are doing all they can to ensure that the company keeps a low profile, IPCA first gained notice for its celebrity ownership when Amitabh Bachchan fell grievously ill and was hospitalised. Now once again, for different reasons, the company's link with the superstar MP has become a matter of public scrutiny. And with the company chairman comfortably ensconced in Switzerland, the spotlight may continue to remain on the pharmaceuticals company.

—M. RAHMAN

LAST WORD/RAJINDER PURI

Choosing a President

PEOPLE are sick of the PM-President controversy, so the Congress(I) is taking extra care in choosing the next President. People don't know it, but right now Rajiv Gandhi's trusted men are interviewing scores of applicants for the President's job. I was invited to join the interview board. The applicant walked in and took his chair.

"Can you tell us why you want to become President?" was the first question.

"I'm having trouble with my landlord," the applicant replied promptly, "I would like to live in Rashtrapati Bhavan."

A murmur of satisfaction went around the members of the board. One senior member leaned forward and asked: "We would like the new President to be aware of the world situation. Can you tell us the main threat to the country today?"

"Of course," the applicant said. "The main threat to India today is from Jaichand and Mir Jafar!"

The board members nodded approvingly. "Can you tell us what are your reading habits?" another member asked.

"I only read speeches written for me," the applicant said.

"Have you ever read the Constitution of India?" the member persisted suspiciously.

"Never!" the applicant said loudly.

"Good," the chairman said approvingly. "What about writing? Do you ever write letters?"

"Never," the applicant said emphatically, "I only write my signature, that's all."

"Ah," said a young member, "but how well can you do that?"

"I am very proficient at that," the applicant said. "Try me, I can sign blindfolded."

"What is your view of the Postal Bill?" the chairman asked.

The applicant hesitated. "Normally I don't bother about such questions," he said, "but frankly I am not quite satisfied with it."

"Why not?" several members asked indignantly.

"I would have liked the scope of the bill to be enlarged to include phone tapping and permitting the Government to bug anyone's residence."

The board members looked surprised. "That's a very good suggestion," the chairman acknowledged. "Tell us," he said, casually, "which is your favourite foreign city?"

"I would like to visit Paris, I guess," the applicant said wistfully.

"Aha!" the chairman said, triumphantly. "So you love to travel, is it? For a moment you almost had us fooled, we thought you were just right for the post."

The applicant sighed and said, "I slipped badly there, didn't I?" and walked towards the door. He turned around and said in a puzzled voice, "Can I ask you one question? Why do you need a President?"

"Isn't that obvious," the chairman snapped. "Because we respect the Constitution of India, that's why!"

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PUNJAB

Discouraging Start

EXACTLY one week after Punjab came under President's rule, three people were killed in the Tarn Taran area. The manner in which they were killed is the best example of how little difference Julio Ribeiro's 'free hand' has so far made to the law and order situation.

The first to die was a journalist in Tarn Taran. He was shot dead around 9 a.m. in full view of a CRPF picket. His killers walked away, taunting eyewitnesses to catch them. When people tried to get the CRPF men to move, they refused, saying this was not their job. Later the same day, CPI(M) leader Deepak Kumar Dhawan was waylaid riding on his scooter near Sanghe village. His killers, mounted on a black horse, asked him to try and run but shot him as he attempted to. Finally, a doctor was also shot in broad daylight, in Badala village, after which his killers calmly strolled off across the fields. There were eyewitnesses to all three killings but nobody was prepared to talk.

This, according to Ribeiro, is the crux of their problems. "We are simply not getting enough information about these people and we cannot do anything without information," he said.

In the countryside, those who still have the courage to talk to strangers say that the reason they do not give information is that the security forces have yet to prove they are stronger than the terrorists. The terrorist information network still seems far superior to that of the police and informants are wiped out with a brutality that silences anyone else. So in the villages, the present deployment of 30,000 paramilitary troops statewide has changed nothing.

But the police is determined to believe otherwise. Said a senior police officer in Chandigarh: "The number of killings have come down (compared to April) by nearly 50 per cent and we have also succeeded in killing many more terrorists." But this claim is not substantiated by facts. Whereas 29 people were killed before the Akali government was dismissed on May 11, in the fortnight since President's rule was imposed, 27 people have been killed.

Photographs by PRASHANT PANJIAR

Ray inspecting grain: in charge

Ribeiro, who had earlier stated that if he were given a 'free hand' it would dramatically improve things, now speaks in slightly different tones. Asked what special measures he was now taking, he said that they had already been doing everything they possibly could do. He has spent the past few weeks touring rural areas in the hope that mass contact will help build the people's confidence in the police.

Almost the only new measure Ribeiro has taken since President's rule, has been to arrest two former Akali Dal ministers and over 900 youth. This has led to allegations from the Akalis that he has unleashed a wave of repression. Said former chief minister S.S. Barnala: "Many people have come to us with complaints that they are being threatened by the authorities. They are also arresting our party workers. Instead of fighting the terrorists, they are fighting those who are fighting the terrorists."

The arrest and alleged torture of former minister for cooperation Prem Singh Chandumajra is being cited as yet another example of the new repression. According to former finance minister Balwant Singh, who met him before he was produced in court in Patiala, Chandumajra complained of having been hung upside down and beaten. The police is tight-lipped about the torture charge but Ribeiro sticks to his claim of Chandumajra's links with terrorists.

If Ribeiro is discovering the problems of finally being where the buck stops, Governor Ray is also finding out what it is like to be in Punjab's hot seat. When Ray moved into Barnala's office in the Chandigarh secretariat, he found that the state's wheat crop had been severely damaged and in the terrorist-infested districts of Amritsar and Gurdaspur the damage was over 80 per cent. Ray spent several days with senior officials to assess crop damage before setting out for Amritsar to view the situation and announce a relief package.

The Central Government compounded the problems of Punjab's new ruler by choosing precisely this moment to announce the Eradi Commission report which, on the face of it, appeared to favour Haryana. The Akalis seized the opportunity to arouse hysteria over it. Said Balwant Singh: "Forty per cent of Punjab's irrigated land will become unirrigated due to this award.

The Akalis plan to hold a series of meetings at the village and district level to make people aware of 'the injustice to Punjab'. But so far, they appear to be more concerned with the 'repression'. The question of repression has united the various factions of Sikh opinion. Even Akal Takht Jathedar Darshan Singh Ragi, who had earlier refused to condemn President's rule, now says that he is very upset by the arrests of Sikh youth and by the continuing 'fake encounters'. Condemnation of the arrests and encounters has also come from the 'unified' Akali Dal and from the two factions of the AISSF. So ironically, one of the immediate effects of President's rule has been to unite moderate and extremist Sikh opinion for the first time since Operation Bluestar.

—TAVLEEN SINGH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

You don't become an acknowledged success like Satish Mehta without recognising a good business deal when you see one. That's why he lost no time signing on the dotted line for his Diners Club card. For frequent travelling in India and abroad and checking in and out of hotels, Satish finds it makes perfect business sense.

But what really clinched the deal was the package of extras that went with the card: Free flight insurance, commission-free travellers' cheques, attractive discounts at hotels abroad, personal cheque cashing facility, a generous purchase bonus. And something that has special value in his Book — a consolidated statement of account every month.

Satish Mehta has succeeded in business by putting his cards on the table. That goes particularly for his Diners Club card!

Enterprising businessman Satish Mehta puts his Card on the table

Diners Club
Welcome to our world
Diners Club India Pvt. Ltd.
Raheja Chambers,
213 Nariman Point,
Bombay-400 021.

LINTAS DC 131 2417

For details contact The Sales Division: □ Bombay Tel: 244949 □ Delhi Tel: 602565 □ Madras Tel: 475112 □ Bangalore Tel: 56[illegible] □ Hyderabad Tel: 82674 □ Calcutta Tel: 447280.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Your painter will tell you that different parts of your home need different paints

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

You can sum up all your painting needs with just two words: Asian Paints

When you're getting ready to paint your home, you'll find that you need more than just one type of paint.

An emulsion or a distemper for walls. An enamel for doors, windows and metal. A wood finish for furniture.

And primers and undercoats for each finish. Put together that makes for quite a variety of paints.

But, if you know your budget and the shades you want, just tell your painter, "Asian Paints", and relax.

Because, Asian Paints has a quality paint for every need.

There's Apcolite 100% acrylic emulsion and Tractor distemper for your walls. Apcolite synthetic enamel for doors, windows and metal. And TouchWood clear wood finish for your furniture.

Each one designed to give each part of your home a look of lasting freshness.

A paint in any shade, for every budget

No matter which paint you choose, Asian Paints offers you the shade you want.

You'll also find a paint that makes the most of your budget. Giving you exceptional quality at affordable prices.

Which is why more homes have been decorated with Asian Paints than with any other paint.

Because, each of those home-owners knew, that with Asian Paints, they were getting more for their money.

asian paints

Money well spent

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

OBM/9796

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TAMIL NADU

Censor Scrape

THE script would never get past the censors. A former matinee idol becomes chief minister and promptly gives himself powers to censor all films and film publicity material even remotely critical of legislators or the state Assembly. Or, for that matter, anything that suggests legislators are anything less than humble servants of the people. Moreover, the chief minister is cast as the hero of the film and not the villain.

The censors, as it turned out last fortnight, didn't even come into the picture. The M.G. Ramachandran Government in Tamil Nadu requisitioned that role for itself by pushing through in the state Assembly in almost indecent haste, two bills on the last day of the budget session that could only belong to a C grade film plot. Said K. Manoharan, leader of the DMK in the Assembly: "The MGR Government was so keen on rushing through the legislation that cyclostyled copies of the proposed bills were circulated to MLAs on the eve of adjournment of the session and the bills were bulldozed through."

By virtue of the first bill—the Tamil Nadu Cinemas (Regulation) second amendment bill—the state Government armed itself with the power to ban films derogatory to legislators, which commit contempt of the Assembly, and which are likely to incite the public against legislators. The Government also empowered itself to ban those films that had been certified by the Central Board of Film Certification, commonly called the Censor Board. Producers and exhibitors of such films, in the state Government's view, could be punished with three years imprisonment and a Rs 5,000 fine.

The second bill provided for compulsory pre-censorship of all publicity material, not just of films. It envisaged the constitution of two censor boards in the state, one for clearing film publicity material, and the other for non-film publicity material.

Even by MGR's quixotic standards, the bills stretched the limits of legislative freedom. Said Soli J. Sorabjee, an eminent lawyer and former attorney general: "It's difficult to recollect in independent India, in normal times, a greater onslaught on one of the most precious freedoms guaranteed by the Constitution: freedom of speech and expression."

The apparent provocation for the introduction—and speedy passage—of the bills was the fact that two satirical Tamil films on the conduct of ministers and policemen were enjoying a phenomenal run. The other reason was the fact that the script for one of the films, Neethikku Thandanai is by none other than MGR's arch political rival, DMK President M. Karunanidhi.

Introducing the bills, the Assembly's controversial Speaker P.H. Pandian was, even by his past record, unusually vitriolic in dubbing film makers as "petty and irresponsible persons bent on making money by ridiculing legislators".

But with the passage of the two bills, it was more than just cinema houses that the legislature was being ridiculed in. Not surprisingly, the legislative legality of the bills was also questioned in court. Two separate writ petitions have been filed in the Madras High Court challenging them. S.S. Neelakantan, managing partner of Lalithanjali Fine Arts, producers of Neethikku Thandanai, and G. Venkateswaran, managing director of Sujatha films, distributors of Makkal En Pakkam, have argued in their petitions that the Assembly does not have the power to enact the new legislation. The sanctioning of cinematograph films for exhibition was classified under entry 60 of the Union List in the Constitution. Hence, only the Central Government can frame laws in that regard. There also exists a Cinematograph Act of 1952 under which was constituted the Central Board of Film Certification. Said a leading state lawyer: "There was no need for this legislation as even otherwise the state Assembly has the power to haul up a producer for breach of privilege. The legislation delegates this power to the state Government, which is another unwarranted action."

But Justice S. Sivasubramaniam held the petitions premature as the bills had not yet got the governor's assent to become law. The petitions would be kept on file and taken up once the bills entered the statute book. Curiously, the unseemly speed in piloting the bill through the Assembly was not kept up in its journey to Raj Bhavan, where, sources say, the bills had not reached even 10 days after adjournment of the budget session.

Cartoon by AJIT NINAN

The governor has the option to either withhold assent, retain the bill for consideration or to refer it to the President. But whatever he ultimately does, the MGR Government's anti-media reputation is now securely established. Two years ago, the Government enacted a law to take over all hoardings in the state, whether they were cinema hoardings or being used for political or commercial purposes. That legislation had been stayed by the courts. Recently, a government resolution sentencing Tamil weekly Ananda Vikatan Editor S. Balasubramanian to three months' rigorous imprisonment created such a storm that he was soon released.

Meanwhile, the two films that triggered off MGR's latest legislative quirk are running to packed houses all over the state, leading an AIADMK minister to quip: "MGR should get royalty from these film producers for boosting their business." The same way, he could have added, the business of the other packed house, the state Assembly, was coming under increasing public scrutiny.

—S.H. VENKATRAMANI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

HARYANA ELECTION ANALYSIS

A Delicate Balance

NO election is like any other. And the voter can always behave in an unpredictable way. But past voting patterns do show up the predilections of the electorate. Further analysis of these patterns indicates what it will take for one or the other contending party to win at the hustings.

To understand the Haryana voter and the conditions that will be required for a Congress(I) or Lok Dal victory in the coming Assembly elections in this crucial north Indian state, INDIA TODAY commissioned psephologist PRANNOY ROY to analyse election results in Haryana over the past 10 years, and to pick out the most important factors that will determine the outcome. His report (using research assistance from LOLITA GHOSE and RAJIV THAPAR*):*

If the Congress(I) had to demonstrate its electoral strength somewhere in the Hindi belt, Haryana is the last place it would choose to do so. Quite simply, the voter here has shown in the past that he is much less enamoured of the ruling party than his counterparts elsewhere in the Hindi heartland.

In every election over the last decade, the Congress(I) vote in Haryana has, on an average, been a substantial 10 per cent lower than its vote in other northern states. There was only one exception: the unusual 1984 elections, when the party secured 55 per cent of the vote here. Nevertheless, it was still 1 per cent below the other states' average (see graph).

It is too early in the game to forecast the outcome of the coming elections. However, going by the Congress(I)'s record in Haryana and the indefatigable campaign by the Lok Dal(B)'s star campaigner Devi Lal, the Congress(I)'s task certainly seems to be an uphill one. Yet, oddly enough—because this is not generally known—the ruling party also has some advantages in the inherent arithmetic of the state's electoral scene.

Compared to the 1982 Assembly elections, the Congress(I) needs only a small swing of 1.5 per cent in its favour to win more than half the seats in the Assembly elections and form the government. The Lok Dal(B)-BJP alliance, on the other hand, requires a substantially larger change in the voting pattern: it will need a 6 per cent swing to gain a majority.

On this count, at least, Bansi Lal has an easier task ahead of him than Devi Lal—who, as a result, will have to look for electoral strategies that will make up for this clear disadvantage. And one strategy could be to aim at increasing opposition unity, which will convert the same percentage of opposition votes into a larger number of seats.

The sensitivity of seats to changes in the level of opposition unity is extremely high. A relatively small improvement in opposition unity (see chart for description of the Index of Opposition Unity—IOU), of only 10 points above its 1982 level gets the Lok Dal-BJP alliance close to an absolute majority.

This magnitude of increase in the IOU is, in other states, not difficult to achieve. In Haryana, however, the Opposition has always been fairly fragmented. Even in 1977, when the non-Congress parties

Maps & Tables by B.K. SHARMA

HARYANA'S ELECTORAL RECORD

ELECTIONS ►	ASSEMBLY SEATS / SEGMENTS WON: 1977 Assembly Seats Won	1980 Lok Sabha Assembly Segments Won	1982 Assembly Seats Won	1984 Lok Sabha Assembly Segments Won	% VOTES: 1977 Assembly	1980 Lok Sabha	1982 Assembly	1984 Lok Sabha
					% VOTES
CONGRESS (I)	3	34	36	77	17.2	32.6	37.6	55.0
LOK DAL	*	39	31	10	*	33.5	23.9	19.1
BJP	*		6	0	*		7.7	7.5
JANATA PARTY	75	17	1	0	46.7	28.1	3.2	1.4
CPI	0	-	0	0	0.8		0.8	0.9
CPI (M)	0	-	0	-	0.6		0.4	-
CONGRESS (J)	-	-	-	3				10.5
VISHAL HARYANA PARTY	5	-	-	-	6.0
INDEPENDENTS	7	-	16	-	28.7	5.4	26.5	5.6
TOTAL	90	90	90	90	100	100	100	100

Alliances: * 1977: Lok Dal, BJP & Janata Party contested under Janata symbol.  1980: Lok Dal & BJP contested together under Janata (S) symbol.
1982: Lok Dal & BJP – seat adjustment contested under separate symbols; Janata, CPI & CPI(M) – seat adjustment contested under separate symbols

* Simple average of Congress (I) % votes in Bihar, Himachal, M.P., Rajasthan and U.P.

* The Index of Opposition Unity (IOU) varies between 0 and 100. At 100 the index implies a fully united opposition – i.e. only one opposition party. The IOU is computed constituency-wise as follows:

$$IOU = \frac{\text{Votes of the largest Opposition Party}}{\text{Votes of All Opposition Parties}} \times 100$$

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

were at their most united at the national level, with a national average IOU of 90, the index reading in Haryana was only 62 (see chart). But although the level of opposition unity has historically been low in Haryana, there are indications that with the emergence of the Haryana Sangharsh Samiti in 1985, things may have changed.

The Lok Dal initially grew as the representative of the farm lobby in western Uttar Pradesh and Haryana, as a direct corollary of the spread of the green revolution. Commercialism in agriculture brought rural-urban economic conflicts into sharp focus, as in the share of electricity given for rural irrigation. The Lok Dal sided unabashedly with the farmer against urban interests, and consequently had no electoral base in towns and cities. The Opposition electoral base was further divided as the Lok Dal developed into an essentially caste-based, Jat-farmer party. The low Index of Opposition Unity is a reflection of these divisions in the rural areas as well as of the overall rural-urban divide.

The Punjab accord in 1985 and the conflict of interests between Haryana and Punjab over territorial rights and the sharing of irrigation water provided an ideal opportunity for the Lok Dal to widen its base. Particularly in the rural areas, the Haryana Sangharsh Samiti could use the conflict with Punjab to mobilise non-Jat farmers on a wide range of issues. Although the Lok Dal has still not been able to shed its anti-urban image—which is why it has given predominantly urban seats to the BJP in seat adjustments—it is likely that the level of opposition unity will be considerably higher this time round. This is perhaps the major factor by which it will gain seats in the coming elections.

While a higher IOU may thus be more important than the swing in votes, the two seldom operate separately. The sensi-

SENSITIVITY OF SEATS
TO SWINGS AND CHANGES IN OPPOSITION UNITY
SEATS WON BY CONGRESS (I)

Swing in Votes ▲ SWING ▲ Congress (I) in favour / against	Index of Opposition Unity: LESS UNITED (10 points down)	1982 Level	MORE UNITED (10 points up)
+ 1.5 %	52	45	26
0 % 1982 Vote %	53	36	24
– 1.5 %	48	28	21

SENSITIVITY OF SEATS
TO SWINGS AND CHANGES IN OPPOSITION UNITY
SEATS WON BY LOK DAL-BJP ALLIANCE

Swing in Votes ▲ SWING ▲ in favour of / against Opposition	Index of Opposition Unity: LESS UNITED (10 points down)	1982 Level	MORE UNITED (10 points up)
+ 1.5 %	29	42	45
0 % 1982 Vote %	27	37	45
– 1.5 %	22	30	42

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

tivity tables show how both the swing and the IOU can combine to generate major shifts in electoral fortunes (see tables).

A swing of 1.5 per cent away from the Congress(I) would be more than compensated for by a small 10-point drop in opposition unity. Under such circumstances, the Congress(I) would actually gain 12 seats and win a comfortable majority. On the other hand, a similar improvement in opposition unity would more than counteract a 1.5 per cent swing in favour of the Congress(I) and reduce its strength in the Assembly to only 26 seats. Indeed, the Congress(I) can gain 17 seats—making a total of 53 seats out of 90 in the House—purely on the basis of a 10-point greater disunity in the opposition ranks. In this unusual context, therefore, it would perhaps be more fruitful for the Congress(I) to campaign for the Lok Dal (Ajit Singh)-Janata alliance than for its own candidates!

The reverse is, of course, true for the Lok Dal-BJP alliance and the other opposition parties. Rather than concentrate their efforts on attacking the Congress(I), simple electoral arithmetic suggests they would gain far more by achieving greater cohesion amongst themselves and, thereafter, attack the Lok Dal(A) front. For the Lok Dal-BJP alliance, a 10-point improvement in its level of unity provides greater returns than even a 1.5 per cent swing in its favour. The smoothest path to victory for the alliance is, of course, a 1.5 per cent swing in its favour coupled with a small improvement in the unity level. This would be enough to yield 45 seats and enable the alliance to form the next government.

The peculiar logic of the Haryana scene suggests that the fortunes of both the Congress(I) and the Lok Dal-BJP alliance rest on the significance that Ajit Singh's front attains at the hustings.

In the same way that the opposition parties are undermined by a lack of cohesion, the Congress(I) votes may be eroded by a currently unknown force in Haryana: the Bahujan Samaj Party (BSP). There are two factors, however, that suggest this may not happen in these elections. First, contrary to popular belief, the Congress(I) has not been as dependent on the Scheduled Caste vote in Haryana as it is in some other states. The average vote of the ruling party in the reserved Scheduled Caste constituencies—37.5 per cent—is no better than its average vote in all the constituencies in the state (see table). Second, the BSP has hitherto concentrated its efforts primarily in Uttar Pradesh and is only beginning to make inroads in Haryana. With the election only a few weeks away, the BSP may not have the time to consolidate its vote and create an impact of the kind that many predict.

Perhaps a more worrying factor for the Congress(I) is the fairly significant Sikh vote in Haryana. In at least 14 constituencies, Sikh votes play an important part in the result as they account for over 20 per cent of the electorate (see map). Traditionally, the Congress(I) has done well in these constituencies, with an average vote that has been six percentage points above the state average (see table). If the Sikhs do not vote for the ruling party this time, the impact could be decisive. The Sikh voter, however, faces a dilemma since Devi Lal is advocating a tougher line on Punjab than the Congress(I).

The important Muslim-dominated constituencies in the southern part of the state have been historically weak Congress(I) areas: the party vote here has tended to be about 5 per cent below the state average (see table). From this weak base, the Congress(I) can only hope to do better, since any swing away cannot significantly affect the previously poor record.

When the Congress(I) confronts its traditional rival—the BJP—in urban areas, it will be in the knowledge that so far, the ruling party has done much better in the towns than in the villages (see table). However, there is far greater uncertainty in urban constituencies, which have recorded a high average swing of over 17 per cent in the elections since 1977. On the other hand, the rural seats, where the Lok Dal is traditionally stronger, are less prone to change and are therefore more predictable.

The state of Haryana as a whole, however, is unusually volatile. Although, margins of victory may not be as narrow as they are in some of the other states—take Kerala, for instance—the large swings from one election to the next make seats with even reasonably large margins unsafe (see map). After taking both the size of the margin and the volatile nature of voters for each seat into account, an overwhelming majority of constituencies in Haryana can only be classified as "marginal". Of the 28 "safe" seats, the Congress(I) has the larger share—17 seats—while the Lok Dal-BJP alliance has only 11 seats that can be assessed as reasonably safe.

CONGRESS (I) VOTE %: SCHEDULED CASTES & MINORITIES AVERAGE % VOTE IN 1977, 1980, 1982 & 1984 ELECTIONS)

AVERAGE % VOTE	SCHEDULED CASTE (Reserved)	SIKH*	MUSLIM
CONGRESS (I)	35.7%	41.6%	31.9%
STATE AVERAGE	35.6%	35.6%	35.6%

* 14 constituencies: in which Sikh votes are higher than 20%
 7 constituencies: in which Muslim votes are higher than 20%

URBAN-RURAL DIFFERENCES IN VOTING PATTERN
(Average figures for 1977, 1980, 1982 & 1984 elections)

CONSTITUENCIES	CONGRESS (I) % VOTE	VOLATILITY-AVERAGE SWING
RURAL	36.4	11.8
URBAN	40.8	17.2

Rural: electorate less than 5% urban (28 seats); Urban: electorate greater than 30% urban (16 seats), according to Election Commission, 1972

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

HARYANA

Carving the Cake

AFTER several marathon sessions of mediation, conciliation, reconciliation and head-counting, the Congress(I) high command finally issued a list of 90 candidates who will contest the Haryana Assembly poll against the formidable alliance of Devi Lal's Lok Dal(B) and the BJP. After an internecine battle, the Congress(I) dropped 22 of its sitting MLAs including three ministers—Finance Minister Kartar Singh, Development Minister Colonel Ram Singh, and Minister of State for Cooperation Piara Singh.

Congress(I) high command officials were calling it a consensus list but there was little cause for rejoicing in the camp of Bhajan Lal, former chief minister and now a Union minister, who was recalled to the Centre and his archrival in the party, Bansi Lal, made chief minister. Most of the MLAs who were dropped were Bhajan Lal supporters, many of them defectors who had joined the Congress(I) in 1982 to help Bhajan Lal form a ministry. Many of them are expected to run as independents or even support opposition candidates in a determined effort to try and prevent Bansi Lal from forming a new government.

According to party insiders, no more than 15 to 20 Bhajan Lal loyalists have been given tickets. When the first list of about 70 candidates had been finalised, Bhajan Lal and his supporters found that they had been virtually excluded. It was only after he lodged a strong protest that several of his men, foremost among them O.P. Mahajan from Hissar, were included. In fact, the final session of the nominating board which lasted 12 hours non-stop—into the early hours of the morning—devoted most of its time trying to assuage Bhajan Lal's hurt feelings.

But Bhajan Lal was able to score some minor victories. His wife, Jashma Devi, was nominated from his old constituency in Adampur in Hissar district—a clear indication that Bhajan Lal is keeping the option open for a possible move-back to the state. And he was also able to get the board to reverse its earlier decisions on the seats from the two important constituencies of Nelokheri and Naraingarh.

Naraingarh was a particularly sweet victory. The original nominee for the seat was Lachchman Singh, who had the backing of both Bansi Lal as well as state Congress(I) President Harpal Singh. But for Bhajan Lal, this was like waving a red flag before a bull. Lachchman Singh had been fired from the Bhajan Lal ministry for trying to engineer a revolt against the chief minister when he was away in the US for medical treatment two years ago. Bhajan Lal managed to strike his name off the list of nominees and replace it with that of his own loyalist, Lal Singh.

That the party was in a real quandary about mediating between local bosses was evident in that it violated its own AICC(I) resolution barring the immediate relatives of party officials and legislators from holding party positions in the same state. Bhajan Lal's wife was not the only person thus accommodated: Inderjit Singh, son of Ahir leader and former chief minister Rao Birendra Singh and Paramvir Singh, Harpal Singh's son, have also been selected as Congress(I) nominees. Among the important party leaders chosen to contest are chief minister Bansi Lal from Tosham, Irrigation Minister S.S. Surjewala from Narwana in Jind and Home Minister Tayyab Hussein from Taoru in Gurgaon.

Cartoon by AJIT NINAN

The final selection was perhaps the most arduous political task faced by the party high command. It involved choosing candidates with a proven ability to capture votes and strategies to placate the factions. The original work done by a committee composed of H.K.L. Bhagat, Nawal Kishore Sharma, P.V. Narasimha Rao and Uma Shanker Dixit, who held four secret meetings at Dixit's house that were attended separately by Bhajan Lal and Bansi Lal as well as by Rao Birendra Singh. The District Congress(I) Committees were virtually excluded and applications for candidates were submitted directly by either the Pradesh Congress Committee or Youth Congress. Some 1,500 applications were finally winnowed down to a short-list of 150.

This short-list was provided to Rajiv, who then spent about three hours with Haryana leaders trying to sort out differences. He ultimately decided that the main criterion for selection ought to be loyalty and that Bansi Lal's nominees should be given the lion's share of the seats. The 90 names were then finalised by a Congress(I) Parliamentary Board subcommittee—consisting of General Secretary G.K. Moopanar, Communications Minister Arjun Singh, and Darbara Singh.

High command officials, aware that the Bhajan Lal-Bansi Lal dispute could prove to be a major irritant, say that the current arrangements are the best they could arrive at. But the Congress(I) is hoping this subterranean split within its ranks will be compensated by the split in the Lok Dal and the failure of the Opposition to unite. Devi Lal has refused to reach any accommodation with the Ajit Singh faction on the plea that it is a Trojan Horse for the Congress(I). The Ajit Singh faction is now considering an alliance with the Janata Party and fielding some 65 candidates. What is worrying the Lok Dal and the Sangharsh Samiti is that ailing Jat leader Charan Singh's wife Gayatri Devi is filing her nomination for the Rohtak Parliamentary by-elections. The Congress(I) hopes her entry will split the Jat votes.

The early political winds are still blowing in favour of Devi Lal and his Lok Dal. If the Congress(I) does better than generally now expected, it will be for one reason alone—the Opposition's infighting and inability to unite. —INDERJIT BADHWAR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MAIN BATTLE TANK

Chinks in the Armour

IT is named after one of the greatest heroes in Indian mythology, a decision that, in hindsight, is not without its irony. For Arjuna, as India's Main Battle Tank (MBT) has been called, is becoming something of a mythical figure itself.

For the last 13 years, successive defence ministers and the annual report of the Defence Ministry have held up the MBT project as a shining symbol of India's brave new thrust in defence research, projecting it as among the best tanks in the world (when it makes its operational debut). Speaking on the subject during the defence debate at the tail-end of the budget session of Parliament, Minister of State for Defence Research and Development Arun Singh assured the army that it would be getting a "first-rate product, as it wanted". But what the army wants and what it is likely to get, and more importantly, when, are questions that are acquiring serious overtones.

Investigations into the progress of the project reveal that instead of the formidable frontline tank that was envisaged, the MBT project is fast becoming the most expensive white elephant in the history of the Defence Research and Development Organisation (DRDO). Since the project first started in 1974, scientists and engineers working on the MBT have periodically claimed "major breakthroughs" while developing the six prototypes built so far. But the reality is somewhat different. The army—the prospective users of the tank—refused to approve the latest prototype, after inspection. The latest trial report of the MBT, prepared by the General Staff Branch of Army Headquarters early this year says: "Examinations reveal that there are a number of design and functional areas where the tank does not meet with user's acceptance," adding that "it requires emphasising that these are 'make or break' issues which singly, or in combination, may nullify the effectiveness of the tank as a whole". Even more devastating was the finding that "safety, reliability and maintainability have still not been built into the design".

The expert committee which examined the prototype noted major variations from the General Staff Qualitative Requirement (GSQR) as well as serious design faults. These include:

► The turret and the hull design are not suitable for smooth and safe operation. Said the committee: "The turret overhang hits the driver when in the open up position. Entry and egress of the driver when turret is in frontal position is either not possible, or when possible, very difficult."

► The fire control system is neither integrated nor fitted.

► The present loading rate is unacceptably low and "may necessitate design changes, affecting hull and turret". In its present design, it takes about 15 seconds for loading the "most ready" round and may take even longer in loading subsequent rounds. The report noted that existing tanks like Vijayanta or T-55 have a much higher rate, "making a duel between the Arjuna and either the T-55 or the Vijayanta more than an even chance of success for the latter".

► To achieve a reasonable loading rate, the committee recommended major changes, including reduction of the inboard length of the gun and relocating the ammunition for easy loading. It also found that the present system of "the gun having to come back to a fixed loading elevation to load each round is unacceptable".

► The air defence gun is wrongly positioned: it will have to be operated by the loader which means that in case of an air attack, the main gun will be inoperative for the duration.

► Presently, there are only three ready rounds in the turret area, as against the 12 specified in the GSQR.

► The shape of the turret is "a veritable shell trap".

► The tank's weight has grown from 45 tonnes to over 60 tonnes, seriously affecting mobility.

► The width of the tank has increased way beyond the army's specifications, further reducing its mobility since it will not be able to be transported on normal trains or traverse bridges where it is likely to be in operation.

Arjuna Tank: mythical weapon

► The machine-man interface is still not suited to optimal efficiency. Seats are uncomfortable, do not have an adequate adjustment range and are without proper accessibility to functional controls.

After recording its findings, the report concluded: "We feel that no deviations from the standards laid down in the GSQR are acceptable." It also noted that "the design approach has changed from indigenous manufacture to licensed manufacture of imported sub-systems". More important, it stated that "nothing has been done about systems integration.... Resultantly, the tank cannot be evaluated for mission effectiveness".

That devastating assessment—so much at variance with every single public pronouncement on the subject—is just

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Photographs by BHAWAN SINGH

The MBT's chamber: room for defects

Despite Arun Singh's optimistic statement in Parliament, the army's latest evaluation has pointed out serious design faults in the MBT project.

one of the latest indications that the MBT project still has serious chinks in its armour. 13 years after its conception and despite the largest financial outlay for any single defence research project. The project was sanctioned in March 1974, with an allocation of Rs 15.5 crore. It was to be completed by 1980 by the Combat Vehicle Research and Development Establishment (CVRDE)—a wing of the DRDO—in Avadi, near Madras. By 1979, the Cabinet Committee on Public Affairs was asked for additional funds, which hiked the project cost to Rs 56.55 crore. In 1981, the Government was again approached for additional funds, raising the cost to over Rs 90 crore. Then, in July last year, the DRDO submitted yet another revised estimate, of Rs 292 crore—a 19-fold increase of the original estimate.

Also, not only has the project undergone major technical changes, but it has systematically gone in for more and more imported components, raising the foreign exchange expenditure from Rs 3.7 crore to Rs 89.36 crore. Out of the present financial sanction, the CVRDE has already spent Rs 68.82 crore—including Rs 32.86 crore in foreign exchange—by March last year. The DRDO, in its report to the Cabinet Committee on Political Affairs asking for additional finances for the project, specified the increased number of prototypes and tanks for troops trials, import of engines for them, certain changes brought in by the Army and global escalation in the cost of equipment, as the major factors for pushing up the project cost.

But despite the liberal flow of funds, the prospect of the Army getting the MBT operational by the scheduled year—1990—seems remote indeed. Apart from the factors mentioned by the Army Headquarters' evaluation committee, the key problem is still the engine for the tank. Arun Singh stated in Parliament last month: "We have not been very successful on the engine." He even admitted that if by the end of the decade, the requisite 1,500 hp engine was not developed indigenously, the Government would not hesitate to import the entire engine.

But Arun Singh's statement on the unsuccessful engine development is an understatement. So far, the six MBT prototypes have been fitted with MTU engines imported from West Germany. Admitted a senior official at Avadi: "An indigenously developed engine is just a mirage we are chasing."

It is the elusive search for an indigenous engine that has caused the major delay in the development of the tank. The GSQR had specified a 1,400 hp engine for the MBT. The DRDO undertook the ambitious task of developing a 12-cylinder, 1,500 hp, air-cooled, Variable Compression Ratio diesel engine. But after five years, they were unable to even achieve the basic initial requirement of 500 hp. In 1982, the Defence Ministry was forced to place orders for 42 engines, worth Rs 22 crore to MTU for fitting on the prototypes, and for use in the field trials. But even the MTU engines proved incompatible with the Arjuna prototype. Admiral S.M. Nanda, former naval chief and head of Globe Tech, MTU's Indian representative, says that the reason for the failure was that the Indian order did not specify certain requirements necessary for successful operation in Indian climatic conditions.

The MBT, which was to be commissioned in the army by 1980, has already been delayed by over seven years and even the most optimistic calculations rule out any possibility of its induction in the army before the mid-'90s. That is a dangerous vulnerability. The number of T-72 tanks that suffered engine seizures during Operation Brasstacks is already causing worry in Army Headquarters. The DRDO has been advocating freezing of the MBT design, so as to go ahead with the production schedule. But Army Headquarters has so far managed to insist on the specifications given in their original GSQR. Senior DRDO officials also refused to comment on the tank's design faults on the plea that the project is in the secret category.

Already, with the T-55s on the verge of being phased out, the army has upgraded its plans for the purchase and licensed manufacture of T-72s and T-72 spares. Another ambitious plan for retrofitting the existing Vijayantas, called Project Bison, is also currently underway. These moves suggest that even the army is becoming increasingly sceptical of the operational viability of the MBT in the context of its overall strategic planning. The DRDO may have achieved some success in the 120 mm rifled gun and the Kanchan armour for the MBT, but it is still a far cry from being an integrated frontline system for the use of the army till the turn of the century. In fact, right now, judging by the army's own assessment, the MBT is about as effective as Arjuna's original chariot.

—DILIP BOBB with SHEKHAR JHA in Dehra Dun and PRABHU CHAWLA in Avadi

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Surprise Showing

APPEARANCES are deceptive. When the Tamil Nadu Chief Minister M.G. Ramachandran agreed to unveil the bust of S.V. Aditanar, the late founder of the largest circulated Tamil newspaper Daily Thanthi in central Madras last fortnight, MGR-watchers expected him to pull his now familiar stunt: agreeing to be the master of ceremonies and then not showing up at the last minute. In any event, MGR is not exactly a lover of the press.

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

MGR: special favour

But this time, the chief minister pulled a surprise. Dutifully, even happily, he presented himself for the Daily Thanthi function, which turned out to be a glittering, high-profile affair. And MGR even announced that an important road in central Madras would be renamed after S.P. Aditanar.

The chief minister's critics were aghast. Had he suddenly developed a soft corner for the press? Only at first look. The second look gave a different idea. The Daily Thanthi was one of the very few newspapers which had refused to participate in the one-day boycott of the Tamil Nadu Legislative Assembly organised by the press to protest against the sentencing of Ananda Vikatan Editor S. Balasubramanian by the Assembly for publishing a cartoon that had lampooned ministers and legislators. And generally the paper, with its circulation of 3.25 lakh, has been pro-government. This was simply MGR's way of saying thanks.

Copying Caper

AS if repeated postponement of examinations, delayed results, irregular courses and student strikes were not enough, the Bangalore University has now been struck by a new menace: mass copying. More and more students are resorting to cheating and any effort of the invigilators to check them is being met with ugly opposition. The principal of Kolar Government Boys College was recently attacked when he caught a student copying. And, in another incident, the chief of the vigilance squad was assaulted. Finally, to maintain the college's credibility, the principal was forced to cancel the examinations.

BHAWAN SINGH

Alva: worried

So severe is the copying menace that even the Government has been forced to sit up and take notice. A worried Minister for Higher Education Jeevaraj Alva has now declared that the state Government may promulgate an ordinance making copying a cognisable offence and declaring university campuses and examination centres as prohibited areas. The threat is a potent one and should bring the student community to its senses. As it is, the sincere students are confronted with the spectre of finding more and more appointment advertisements carrying the dreaded notice that Bangalore University students need not apply. Already this notice has made its appearance in a few advertisements and does not bode well for Bangalore University students.

A Troubled Couple

RELIGIOUS orthodoxy has no soft spot for matters of the heart as a newly-wed couple has learnt to its dismay in Tenali, Andhra Pradesh. Ever since Dr Mary Michael, 28, a Roman Catholic, got married to A.S. Venkatachalam, 30, an orthodox Brahmin, at the civil registry in Vijayawada last June they have been under religious pressure. Last fortnight the Education Department ordered a probe into the charges of harassment levelled by Mary against the college where she worked as a Hindi lecturer—Jesus Mary Joseph College. In the name of religious belief the college virtually made them go through fire. Mary was summoned several times to the college principal's room and advised that she should ask Venkatachalam to embrace Christianity and get properly married in a church. She was also reminded that she had got the job because she was a Roman Catholic. Afraid that Mary may lose her job, the couple sought the help of local activists and also wrote to eminent publicmen. The campaign worked and a probe was ordered.

Venkatachalam and Mary: distressed

Political Coup

BIHAR Chief Minister Bindeshwari Dubey may not be a keen administrator but he certainly knows how to ingratiate himself with the Centre. Dubey's latest political coup has been his success in persuading a group of 17 independent MLAs in the Assembly to join Congress(I). This has immense symbolic importance at a time when the Congress(I)'s image is at an all-time low and, if anything, the talk is of an impending split in the party with Congressmen standing ready to bolt their organisation.

KRISHNA MURARI KISHAN

Dubey: shrewd move

The shrewd leader he is, Dubey even arranged for 10 of the 17 MLAs to meet Rajiv Gandhi in person in New Delhi where they gave him a written pledge that "under the present situation only the Congress(I) can lead the country". The legal spadework is now being done to find a way for a formal merger without violating the anti-defection law. Among the advice the MLAs have been given is to form a new party and seek recognition from the Election Commission before being allotted seats on the treasury benches. Ironically though, the solution to the anti-defection law in this case could well wind up giving ideas to Congressmen who are potential defectors.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SONY®

Jimmy Connors and family

My family. And my best friend.... Playback Handycam

The playback Handycam is one friend my family never goes anywhere without. It's so light and compact. And it's fully automatic, so it couldn't be easier to use. All you do is point and shoot to get perfect pictures, anytime, anywhere. There's even a zoom with macro function to get right in close. And because it's 8mm video, the picture quality and the hi-fi sound are just incredible. What's more, you can get up to three hours of recording and playback in PAL or 2 hours in NTSC on one single cassette. See your family through a friend's eyes. The Handycam.

Just hook up the CCD-V30 to any TV for instant playback

With a Handycam, everyone can.

Handycam

Video 8

SONY SERVICE CENTRES IN INDIA. CRESON ELECTRONICS LTD.

BOMBAY: Tel.6300775/6300976 MADRAS: Tel.472989/473159 BANGLORE: Tel.222554 DELHI: Tel.673519/670347 COCHIN: Tel.368165 CALCUTTA: Tel.446110

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Gujarat, the land of giants like GSFC and GNFC...

now presents another industrial giant

Gujarat Heavy Chemicals Ltd.

a Rs. 245 crore project co-promoted by GIIC.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

jarat. The country's second most ustrialised state. Hub of hardcore conomic advance. Home of the corporate
s. Abode of myriad successful projects.

C – Catalyst of Growth

C, the flagship of industrial Gujarat, has eadded Gujarat's phenomenal industrial velopment, both as financier and promoter, r close to 20 years. As a development ancer, GIIC ranks first among all the State ustrial Investment Corporations in India—ing to date assisted over 2,600 industrial its with loans exceeding Rs. 300 crores ich, in turn, have generated investments of ound Rs. 1,000 crores.

C – Pioneer of the Joint Sector

romoter, GIIC has been the pioneer of joint sector concept in India... with over projects involving an investment of 1,240 crores. GIIC enterprises cover vital varied fields and, in many ventures, GIIC collaborated with such internationally ted companies as Mitsubishi, Krupp,
N, Linde, ICI and Goodrich.

GHCL : Colossus of the Chemical World

- Located in Gujarat, the state with the most favourable industrial climate and many successful projects.
- Promoted by GIIC and DALMIAS — eminent promoters of several large ventures.
- Largest joint sector project in the country with an investment of Rs. 245 crores.
- A highly cost-efficient 1200 tonnes per day Soda Ash plant providing unmatched economies of scale with the largest stream designed capacity in the country.
- State-of-the-art proprietory 'dry-liming' technology from world renowned AKZO ZOUT CHEMIE of Netherlands.
- Critical equipment from KLOCKNER INDUSTRIE ANLAGEN, West Germany—world leaders in chemical plants.
- Highly automated and modern plant with unique technological features.
- 'Perfect Energy Balance' between steam and power, resulting in lower energy costs.
- Abundant and captive reserves of all major raw materials in the vicinity of plant.
- Doubly assured power supply—captive 11 MW power generation to meet the entire needs of the plant plus 100% standby arrangements.
- Assured market: demand continuously growing at a compound rate of 9% p.a. over the last 30 years.

GIIC's Largest Venture—GHCL

And now, GIIC, jointly with DALMIAS and in technical collaboration with world leaders AKZO of Netherlands and KLOCKNER of West Germany, promotes its most ambitious venture to date: GHCL—a mammoth Rs. 245 crore project to manufacture 1,200 tonnes per day of Soda Ash.

India's production of Soda Ash lags far behind consumption, and the demand-supply gap is expected to increase from the current 1.9 lakh tonnes to 5.9 lakh tonnes by 1990-91. Significantly, the country had to import about 2 lakh tonnes of Soda Ash last year. GHCL thus enjoys a very happy market situation.

A Bright Future for All

Indeed, the prospects are happy not only for GHCL—but for the entire country too. GHCL will also generate direct and indirect employment/business opportunities for several thousands. From every viewpoint, the GHCL project is a monumental landmark — for GIIC, for the people of Gujarat and for the country as a whole.

Gujarat's gift to the nation

GHCL

Gujarat Heavy Chemicals Ltd.

Regd. Office : Mistry Chambers (6th floor), Khanpur, Ahmedabad-380 001
Head Office : 20 Community Centre, New Friends Colony, New Delhi-110 065

Sobhagya/95/87

India's largest joint sector project

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Presenting

To find watches like these, you don't have to Titan brings

Rs.398

Rs.554

Rs.579

Rs.1,138

Rs.1,034

Rs.579

Rs.605

Rs.755

Rs.569

Rs.569

Rs.466

Rs.631

Rs.569

Rs.554

Rs.579

Prices indicated are exclusive of sales tax and local levies.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Titan Quartz

go to Europe, Japan, America or a duty-free shop. them to your city.

Rs.579 Rs.517 Rs.574 Rs.579 Rs.476 Rs.579

The new collection of Titan Quartz Watches from TATA is quite unlike any other you've seen before in India.

Good looking, slim and precision engineered, Titan Watches are comparable with the best in the world.

An international range

There's a Titan Quartz just right for you.

You can make your selection from over 150 thoughtfully designed and carefully crafted watches.

Choose from either the classic elegance of gold with leather. Or the glamour and glitter of only gold. Or the businesslike look of steel. Or even a trendy casual!

Rugged, reliable jewellery

The high-precision Titan Quartz is designed to withstand shock, moisture, heat and dust.

Unlike ordinary quartz watches, Titan Quartz is equipped with a watch movement built to survive years of use.

The movement features metal parts, not plastic; jewels strategically positioned to ensure long life and, above all, sophisticated electronics.

The electronic module in Titan Quartz is designed to extend the life of the battery. The battery, when you need to replace it, will be available at a company approved price.

What's more, every Titan Quartz carries a two year guarantee.

Guaranteed accuracy

Titan Quartz is 60 times more accurate than the best comparable hand-wound or automatic watch.

From now on, you won't settle for anything less than the guaranteed accuracy of a Titan Quartz.

Wide sales network

Titan Quartz will be sold through more than 1200 sales outlets in 245 towns all over India.

These outlets will handle any service requirements you may have.

Titan from TATA

Titan Quartz is a product of the TATA commitment to bring you world class watches in India.

These watches are made in the finest all-electronic watch making facility in the country. This facility has the latest technology from a leading European manufacturer and the best in Swiss watch- manufacturing equipment.

Every Titan Quartz has the TATA guarantee of quality and reliability.

TITAN
QUARTZ

Visit any leading watch shop in your city. Choose a Titan Quartz you'd really like to own, or gift.

You owe it to yourself.

Titan Watches Limited Sona Towers, 71 Miller Road, Bangalore 560 052.

OBM/9879

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

You're eighteen, not exactly Ryan O'Neal, but what the hell.
There's college. Bikes. Hamburgers. Movies. Blue jeans. And pocket-money.
She's seventeen. Pony-tailed. Pretty. Brown-eyed. Cute as a button.

It was the Philosophy Society's Christmas party.
Streamers. The Beatles. Confetti. Pizza. Madness. Sandwiches. And her.
You straightened your tie, cleared your throat, took a deep breath, and said, "Would you like to dance?"
Her answer made you believe in Santa Claus.

From McDowell
CONTAINS NO FRUIT JUICE OR FRUIT PULP

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"I think I'll have a Thril," you said.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Wrap up the competition

With Sunpac
The packaging revolution with unique advantages

Introducing SUNPAC. The lightweight, high strength Hollow Plastic Corrugated Sheets that have numerous advantages over wood in packing and insulation applications.

The versatility of SUNPAC with easy cleanability, printability, non-toxicity and durability for multitrip gives you sizeable freight advantage and superior attractive packing protection.

SUNPAC is available in a range of beautiful colours that add life to your products and enhance their appeal. Let SUNPAC do the selling of your products!!!

SUNPAC. Use it and reuse it.
Contact us for more useful information.

caprihans
INDIA LIMITED
B Block, Shivsagar Estate,
Dr. Annie Besant Road, Worli,
Bombay 400 018. Tel: 492 [illegible]
Branches • Calcutta • Delhi • Madras • Bangalore
• Hyderabad • Ahmedabad • Tellicherry
• Ghaziabad • Jaipur

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Politics of Compromise

THE Eradi panel's award on the division of the Beas-Ravi waters between Punjab and Haryana is, on the whole, just. Punjab will now be entitled to at least 1.7 million acre feet (MAF) more water every year than it has actually been using in the period 1980-85. 'At least' because the Eradi panel has left 0.7 MAF of water unallocated, and Punjab should get at least 0.4 MAF out of this too.

Thus Punjab could end up with a total of 7.7 MAF, against its actual usage of 5.604 MAF. Even with the existing amount of water, its agricultural output has been growing rapidly. The lack of water has not therefore been a constraint on growth. In these circumstances, the availability of another 1.7 to 2.1 MAF provides a sufficient cushion to meet any conceivable future need.

But despite this, Barnala felt constrained to reject the award. He did so because he could not sell its virtues to the people. And he could not do this because neither the Sikhs nor the Hindus in the state trust him and his party any longer.

That is why, however repugnant the dismissal of his government may be, it had become a political necessity. Barnala's government had become an anomaly. It was backed by a stable majority in the Vidhan Sabha, but no longer commanded appreciable support among the people. It had thus become a roadblock to political change.

I do not wish to suggest that this is why the Centre declared President's rule in Punjab. On the contrary, over 800 arrests and Union Home Minister Buta Singh's comments suggest that the main purpose was to bring the law and order situation under control. The Haryana elections and the fact that Haryana is the main beneficiary from the Eradi panel's award may have also had something to do with it. But President's rule can be used to push ahead with the search for a political solution in Punjab.

This suggestion is anathema to a large section of the public, which stoutly believes that the only way to deal with the Punjab problem is through the unbridled use of force. But a number of responsible political observers have also questioned the wisdom of any such attempt, on the grounds that to deal with militants who condone or inspire the killing of innocents is to appease and indirectly encourage them.

This view is simplistic. Had the Government refused to deal with those who have taken to violence, it could never have brought peace to Mizoram and Nagaland. The essence of the search for a political solution is to judge the right moment for offering concessions in exchange for an end to violence. Such a judgement is always a bit of a gamble. For instance, while Jayaprakash Narayan guessed correctly when he led a peace mission to Nagaland in 1964, and Mrs Gandhi (and later Rajiv Gandhi) also judged correctly in offering an amnesty to the Mizo National Front, Nripen Chakraborty's move to win the support of the Tripura tribals, by limiting the role of the security forces and giving greater autonomy to the tribal districts, was premature and failed.

> "The essence of the search for a political solution is to judge the right moment for offering concessions in exchange for an end to violence. Such a judgement is always a gamble. But any responsible government must explore this alternative before relying on force."

But the alternative, of first crushing terrorism and only then offering a political settlement, is fraught with even greater risks. In Punjab, the one-track approach of the last 12 months, in which the Government has relied solely on police methods to crush terrorism, has only bred more terrorism. Against 78 terrorist killings in 1985, there were 545 in 1986. In April 1987, there were nearly a hundred killings.

Reliable reports indicate that against the average of 10 to 20 Sikhs who were taking amrit every day at Chowk Mehta gurudwara, the seat of the militant Damdami Taksal and a principal recruitment point for terrorists, as many as 200 have been doing so every day in the last few months.

Reliance on force therefore compels you to use more, and still more, force. In the end you get pacification programmes a la Vietnam, Malaysia or Libya. People are herded into guarded villages while army patrols sweep the empty country-side, killing anything that moves. This road does not always lead to disaster. It did for the Americans in Vietnam but not for the British in Malaysia and, at least for some time, for the Italians in Libya, but the cost is frightfully high and its price: genocide or secession. Thus, any responsible government has the duty to explore the alternatives of compromise first.

In Punjab, on the eve of President's rule, there were a number of signs that the militants were ready for such a compromise. The new Unified Akali Dal had succeeded in getting both Baba Joginder Singh's UAD and the Manjit faction of the All India Sikh Students Federation (AISSF) to subscribe to a platform that emphasised the unity of India and the need for a federal polity. The new jathedar of the Akal Takht, Ragi Darshan Singh, had made a number of statements in Amritsar and at various gurudwaras condemning the killing of innocents. Terrorist leaders like Avtar Singh Brahma had hinted at the possibility of a cease-fire. Sunil Dutt had received a warm reception in the Golden Temple. And, most significant of all, when it became clear that Sushil Muni had New Delhi's support, his talks with Darshan Singh were attended by Baba Thakur Singh, head of the Damdami Taksal, the four other high priests, who are all products of this Taksal, and even Avtar Singh Brahma. Nothing could have highlighted better the catalytic role that Darshan Singh can play.

The Government's decision to release 900 detained AISSF militants on good conduct guarantees suggests that President's rule does not signify the end of the search for a political settlement. We must hope that Rajiv Gandhi has the courage to continue with it.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SATISH SHARMA

Flying Through Turbulence

AS Rajiv Gandhi and his government have come under controversial scrutiny, so too have a handful of his closest friends. Among them is Captain Satish Sharma, 41, an airline pilot who abandoned his flying career in 1983 to become one of Rajiv's trusted aides. Sharma has preferred to play it low-key, until recent allegations about his land deals surfaced and forced him into the limelight. A report on Sharma the man, his role in the prime minister's camp and the controversies swirling around him, from Features Editor INDERJIT BADHWAR and Senior Editor PRABHU CHAWLA.

FROM what appeared to be an obscure nook, within the recesses of the prime minister's labyrinthine edifice of political aides, a former Indian Airlines pilot, Captain Satish Sharma, has exploded into controversial prominence, following newspaper reports that his lifestyle has suddenly become luxurious and opulent. Several MPs, including some from the ruling party, have begun to insist that Sharma be asked for explanations, lest the charges become yet another embarrassment for the prime minister. The controversy revolves around three major issues:

► Sharma's acquisition of 10 acres of land on the Delhi-Haryana border last year for Rs 4.50 lakh. According to real estate dealers, the price of farm land in the area was then over Rs 1.25 lakh an acre. So the total price should have been over Rs 12.5 lakh. Sharma is now building a farmhouse with a swimming pool.

► Allegations that he and Rajiv bought prime land together, adjoining Rajiv's family farm near Chhatarpur village, on the Delhi-Gurgaon road, in anticipation that the newly-acquired land would be declared a lal dora (a strip of land around villages where no zoning is allowed and where factories and workshops can be constructed without permits).

► Sharma's import of 3,000 kg of Italian marble tiles for the swimming pool now under construction at his farm.

Sharma insists that every transaction has been "completely above board", and that the charges against him are part of a recent pattern "of attacks on anybody close to Rajiv. These are aimed in the hope that they will weaken him. But this won't happen."

Sharma says that he paid for his farm land by cheque, and that he has bought real estate close to the Delhi-Haryana border, some distance from the swank farmhouses closer to town (one of them being Rajiv's). It is a semi-arid patch, and half the land has an uneven, hilly terrain. All this, Sharma argues, contributed to the low price. Also, this is about the only Satish Sharma has become a target of those in the party who would like to see Rajiv distance himself from his friends.

Sharma in the cockpit: troubled take-off

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Sharma with Rajiv: intimate ties property he has, besides his ancestral home in Secunderabad.

As for the lal dora land, Sharma says this is no more than 2,000 sq yds, and was bought in 1979—when the Janata Party was in power. Some eucalyptus grows on it now. Sharma says he bought the land and advised Rajiv to buy too—some 1,000 sq yds) because he felt the price would appreciate.

In the case of the swimming pool tiles, Sharma says these were gifted to him by his father-in-law in New York, and that he came close to returning them when he was presented with the customs duty bill of Rs 1.9 lakh. "The tiles are ceramic, not marble. And I could have bought them in India for Rs 60,000," he says.

OTHER questions being asked relate to the business run by Sharma's Dutch-born wife, Stera (Capi to friends), and her acquisition of real estate in prime South Delhi locations. But Sharma has answers to these too (see interview).

No matter what Sharma's story is, the reality is that Sharma has become a target not only of Rajiv's opponents but also of people within the party, particularly those who would like to see the prime minister rely more on members of the old guard. As one senior party MP put it: "I think the time for advisers like Sharma is over. What qualifications does he enjoy for wielding the power that he does?"

Unfortunately for him, Sharma is becoming increasingly isolated. His power and influence—stretching out well before the point when he became a nominated member of the Rajya Sabha last July—have been enormous. But while being one of Rajiv's most trusted men, Sharma has functioned more or less as a loner, cut off from Rajiv's Doon School crowd, his advisers in the Prime Minister's Secretariat, as well as from old guard Congress politicos like Commerce Minister P. Shiv Shanker and M.L. Fotedar, who are now his detractors.

> The two pilots are in the midst of heavy weather that they have not experienced before: political turbulence.

And yet Sharma was—and continues to be—an independent power centre, deriving his strength from the trust that Rajiv reposes in him. He has an office at 7, Race Course Road, from where he handles the affairs of Rajiv's Lok Sabha constituency, Amethi. He is, moreover, one of the four people immediately around the prime minister (the others being Fotedar, Rajiv's Private Secretary V. George and V.M. Panikar, a Malayalee MP from Orissa), who help with all manner of odd jobs through the day.

The Amethi work involves speeding up development, keeping the local party unit in gear and dealing with complaints. But Sharma is more than just Rajiv's man-in-Amethi. He is a troubleshooter, a follow-up man, a sounding board, and as an associate remarked, "one of the very few people who mince no words before the prime minister, and call a spade a spade".

"George, get me Satish," that crisp command from Rajiv is repeated a dozen times every day. Sharma then helps out, whether it is to deal with angry MLAs in Amitabh Bachchan's constituency, or to mediate between dissidents and the chief ministers of Bihar and Orissa. Insiders say that Sharma was also asked to monitor the Punjab situation, and that it was he who had advised Rajiv to call off party attacks on V.P. Singh. His is also the controversial job of distributing party funds and liaising with ministries.

Sharma has always been an independent pipeline of information to Rajiv. It is through him that MPs, MLAs and even newsmen express their views, privately or in writing to Rajiv. Many of these missives are complaints against senior partymen, or even against the doings of officials in the Prime Minister's Secretariat.

Still, associates say, Sharma is not a profound political thinker or strategist. Says one: "He is the prime minister's two-way street. He does not allow information to get distorted within political prisms before it reaches his friend." In fact, Sharma is more a confidant and a leg-man than a political adviser.

Essentially, Sharma is a garrulous, happy-go-lucky flier, who likes to drive around in his Maruti van and Contessa, and socialise in the evenings with close friends. His friendship with Rajiv goes back to 1963. Sharma, then 17, was cycling down to the Delhi Flying Club, when a black Hindustan 14 car pulled up beside him. "Hop in," the driver said. Sharma looked incredulous. The car's occupant was Rajiv Gandhi—grandson of the then prime minister—who opened the car boot, shoved Sharma's cycle in,

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INTERVIEW

"I didn't use influence"

FOR the first time since published allegations about Satish Sharma and his land deals and opulent life-style began appearing, he agreed to an interview to tell his side of the story. Sharma spoke to Features Editor INDERJIT BADHWAR and Senior Editor PRABHU CHAWLA in the office of the Aeroclub of India, of which he is president.

Q. Why do you think you have been under attack recently?

A. During the last few months, they seem to be attacking everybody close to Rajiv, not just me, in the hope they'll weaken him in the process. This won't happen. It will just strengthen his resolve.

Q. But as a public figure, don't you think you ought to be answerable?

A. By all means put me under a microscope, but not under a distorted vision as has been happening. I'm ready to be accountable but I have no reason to go on the defensive.

Q. With your recent land purchases and the building of a swimming pool using imported marble at your farmhouse, your life-style has suddenly become luxurious.

A. For one thing, I was never exactly poor. My grandfather, who reared me, was a millionaire in the 1950s and we still have family wealth. My wife is a designer of children's clothes and runs two successful boutiques.

Q. The acquisition of the second boutique in South Extension also raised questions because the pugree usually charged on showrooms there is about Rs 40 lakh. Did you have that kind of money?

A. In my position I was acutely conscious that such questions would be raised. The plain fact is that our space is small—a third of a shop owned by the Royal Safe Company. We got a loan from a bank and paid by cheque the deposit as well as agency fees.

Q. What about your farmland? According to the records, you paid Rs 40,000 an acre for 10 acres of land a year ago, while land prices there were averaging between Rs 2 lakh and Rs 3 lakh an acre six months ago. How did you get it so cheap? Or did you actually pay more and it was not shown?

A. We paid about Rs 5 lakh. And we paid by cheque. The land was cheaper because it is way out. The village Dera Mandi is the last one on the Haryana border (with Delhi). If I had stashes of money, why would I have gone so far out? My former colleagues have bought property in Delhi. But it made sense for me to go out because I knew what I could afford.

Q. But you still paid less than the prevailing rate.

A. Look, the area around is semi-desert. And I was able to buy cheaply because the land is uneven, with five acres level and five acres elevated. And I've seen land registries immediately before and after I bought, and they reflect a similar price to what I paid. Of course, prices have gone up now. That is because a telephone line has come to the area, and prices always go up when people see someone who is well-known buy land.

Q. Are you constructing a luxurious farmhouse?

A. You can see it for yourself. Under the law I can't build more than 1,000 sq ft (on a two-and-half-acre plot). How can anyone build a palace there? So I'm starting gradually by building the basement first, and we'll add as we go along.

Q. What about the controversial swimming pool?

A. Yes, we are building a family-size pool. And why not? Aside from my family property in Hyderabad, this is the only home we will own. This is my only piece of rock.

Q. But reports say it is a luxurious pool for which you imported 3,000 kg of Italian marble.

A. The material is ceramic tile. It was sent as a gift to me from my in-laws, who knew we are building a house. It came through regular customs and I couldn't quite return it without hurting their feelings. I paid Rs 1.90 lakh as duty and penalty on the gift. If I had used Indian tiles for the purpose, they would have cost me only about Rs 60,000. It is obvious that I didn't use my influence in any way.

Q. What about the plot you and Rajiv bought adjacent to his farm in anticipation that it would be declared a lal dora*—an area for which there is no zoning and where people can set up factories without permits? Didn't that require you to use your influence?*

A. This is yet another example of irresponsible reporting. First, the plot is five or six miles away from Rajiv's farm. Secondly, it was already a lal dora when we purchased it in 1979, when we were pilots and neither Rajiv nor his mother were in power. It is a small 5,000 sq yd rural plot that Rajiv and I bought as an investment at about Rs 23 per sq yd.

Q. Most of what you are saying will be held to minute public scrutiny because of your position.

A. Let it be so. I have confidence. Every penny I've spent is from within my known sources of income and savings, and all the transactions have been done openly and by cheque, including all the construction that is now going on at my farmland and which will continue to proceed.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

hoisted the cyclist into the passenger seat and drove off to the club.

They did not meet again for four years. Sharma had returned to his hometown, Hyderabad, to take up flying as a career. Rajiv had returned from England and was accompanying his mother, Indira Gandhi, on a visit to Hyderabad. Sharma called him at Raj Bhavan. "I wondered if he would remember me," he recalls. Rajiv's response on the phone was: "Are you the guy with the crew cut (then Sharma's hairstyle)?" After that, the two never lost touch.

His acquisition of land and commercial space has, inevitably, fuelled speculation about the source of his money.

Sharma's farmhouse (top left); swimming pool; and wife Stera in boutique: vulnerable

Sharma joined Indian Airlines shortly before Rajiv, flying Dakotas initially, and then the two often flew together. "When you've seen someone in the cockpit for those many years, you really get to know the guy," Sharma says. "I've seen him tackle the worst of weather, going through thunderstorms and lightning bolts, and I always marvelled at his coolness."

He began helping Rajiv with administrative chores in 1981, after Rajiv quit his airlines job. Sharma himself resigned in 1983, to become a full-time political aide. Says he: "What did I know of politics? My only concern was helping a friend whom I respected and loved dearly."

Economically, Sharma says, joining politics was not attractive. His financial situation was eased, he says, partly because of help from his mother's family, and by the income from his wife Stera, who worked as a fashion designer for a Dutch company. The daughter of John Scherar, Time magazine's former bureau chief in Brussels—and now the International Monetary Fund's permanent representative to the United Nations—Stera opened up a children's boutique in New Delhi's Archana Arcade. Within a year, the Sharmas say, the shop did so well that they were able to start tailoring factories and open a second store—Balloons—in the capital's plush South Extension.

His acquisition of land and commercial space has, inevitably, fuelled speculation about the source of his money. But Sharma refuses to divulge his wealth, and claims his wife's success is a strong factor in his ability to maintain his life-style and make investments. He also says that his relatives, including his in-laws, have been generous with their help.

To start with, he says, he was not exactly poor. He was raised by his maternal grandfather, Amarchand Sharma, who left Punjab for Hyderabad at 14 to get a civil engineering degree and became later, one of the biggest contractors in the area. Sharma proudly points to his grandfather as the builder of India's first siphon spillway dam, Sarla Sagar in Andhra Pradesh. "As early as the '50s, we had a new car, and my grandfather was a millionaire."

Asked about the qualifications he has to be an adviser to the prime minister, Sharma shrugs and says: "He is a friend and a fellow-flier. Whenever he needs my help, I'm there." As proof of his capability as an organiser and "go getter", he points to what he believes will be his legacy: India's flying clubs and their achievements since he became president of the Aeroclub of India. Rajiv had assigned Sharma the task of resuscitating the flying clubs in the country. And it is Sharma's blueprint, which included the purchase of 28 new Cessna Aerobat planes for 25 clubs, that is being implemented today.

But whatever their achievements as lovers of flying, the two pilots are in the midst of heavy weather—political turbulence for which the flight manuals have no answers and for which they have not been trained.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

LIC's unique Group Gratuity Scheme benefits employer and employee

"..because I know it gives me full life cover. So my family gets gratuity based on my full employment term... even if something happens to me before that term is up.

And because I can count on ready payment whenever my gratuity should fall due.

And because I feel secure, knowing my gratuity is in LIC's professional hands."

"..because it saves me a lot of financial and managerial problems. No clerical and accounting bother.

And because it offers better benefits under the recent Cash Accumulation Plan. And because my premiums are allowed as expenses in IT assessment.

And because I can rely on speedy settlement of gratuities due... which is good for employee morale. And because it more than offsets my liabilities with an accumulating asset."

LIC's Group Gratuity Scheme.
The easy, economical, efficient way to handle employee gratuities.

योगक्षेमं वहाम्यहम्

Life Insurance Corporation of India

For details, contact the nearest LIC office

GEC/LIC/LIC/17/1/86

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

QUICK.

Design expertise makes new GEC Ventilair a 3-minute marvel.

Three minutes flat!

That's all it takes for the new GEC Ventilair Fan to clear stuffy air in your kitchen or bathroom.

What's more, Ventilair does its super fast job ever so quietly. Thanks to the computer aided design of impellers which ensures minimum air-cutting noise, and increases air delivery.

And, to make doubly sure, new GEC Ventilair is fitted with anti-vibration pads and double ball bearings. So that all you hear is the sound of silence.

In addition, a die cast aluminium body and cold rolled cold annealed steel blades keep GEC Ventilair free from corrosion. For years.

And most important, new GEC Ventilair consumes a minimum of power – just as little as a 40 W lamp.

That's GEC design expertise at work for you. Clearing your kitchen or bathroom of stuffy air in 3 minutes flat! Quietly.

New GEC Ventilair
Clears your kitchen or bathroom of stuffy air in 3 minutes flat. Available in two sizes: 230 mm and 305 mm.

GEC Ceiling Fans
Goldline, Whispair, Classic. Available in ten sizes and a choice of two colours. Backed by 70 years of international experience.

GEC Exhaust Fans
Choose from 16 types — ranging from 305 mm to 915 mm. For all domestic, commercial and industrial applications.

GEC Air Circulators
Pedestal or brackets — a choice of six types.

New GEC Cooler Fan
510 mm. Specially designed for desert coolers.

New GEC Table Fan
400 mm. Oscillating type.

GEC Centrifugal and Axial Flow Fans
For ventilation. And process applications in power, steel, fertilizer, marine, mining and off-shore installations.

GEC

GEC Fans. All you hear is the sound of silence

95A

Trade Mark GEC Permitted User — The General Electric Company of India Limited

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

UK GENERAL ELECTIONS

Campaign Craft

WITH the polling day just 11 days away, independent observers and commentators in Britain seem unanimous in their view that the first major public gaffe in the current, frenzied general election campaign was committed by Margaret Thatcher herself. Pondering over the future, she felt she could not only win this election but the following one too. And she added: "I could go on and on and on." Even the Tory faithful cringed at this statement as her political opponents recoiled at her "amazing arrogance" and roasted her for her "authoritarian instincts". Liberal Party leader David Steel arraigned her for trying to make herself "leader for life". It also earned her yet another nickname: "mama doc". After eight years of untrammelled Thatcherism, many quailed at the millennial prospects she offered. The fierce criticism of Mrs Thatcher's overconfidence notwithstanding, the fact remains that she is well on course to spearhead the Tories to a record third successive term.

When the June 11 election date was announced a fortnight ago, opinion polls gave the Conservative Party a handsome 14-point lead and predicted an easy win. But two weeks into the campaign, the Tories now suddenly have more of a fight on their hands. The Labour Party's election machine has put up an exceptionally sophisticated show to edge to within four points of the Tories. Labour, Britian's main opposition party, has moved light years away from the professional shambles of Michael Foot's campaign in 1983, whose manifesto was acidly described as the "longest suicide note in history".

This time, the Alliance—comprising the Social Democratic Party and the Liberal Party—came fastest off the blocks. Since 1983, the Alliance has established itself as a permanent presence in British politics. But despite a slow start and a startlingly hostile press, Labour has edged closer to the Tories, making them understandably nervous.

The Labour Party's change in fortunes has been essentially pegged to a superbly-packaged TV campaign and has come at the expense of the Alliance led by those two messengers of moderation, Dr David Owen and David Steel. The Alliance is thus facing a tougher and more dispiriting struggle than many of its members had expected. To many British commentators, Neil Kinnock in 1987 has reminded them of Mrs Thatcher in 1979: ruthlessly geared to TV, going for pictures at well-attended meetings, hecklers conspicuously absent, with friendly voters and kissing friendlier babies with panache.

London Picture Service

MARGARET THATCHER
Conservative Party

London Picture Service

NEIL KINNOCK
Labour Party

Labour has produced the most capable, efficient and glossy campaign so far in its long history. Little wonder then, that the press here has described its campaign as owing more to Madison Avenue than to the memory of Keir Hardie. In fact, this is the first election run along American lines, with stylishly-packaged TV ads in the form of party election broadcasts and glossy literature flooding voters' houses. From the early-morning Good Morning Britain, to the late-night current Newsnight, there are analyses, interviews, computer forecasts and talk shows. Election broadcasts usually send viewers fleeing to their kitchens. This time, they have aroused exceptional interest. The Tory broadcast pressed hard on the pedals of patriotism and freedom. The spirit of enterprise, it claimed, won for Britain the last war, raised profitability, cut taxes, reduced the power of the state, and produced bonny babies.

Conceived by Saatchi and Saatchi, it showed shots of the Battle of Britain, and attempted to espouse the Tory ideals—thrift, hard work, self-reliance and a firm belief in Victorian values. But it simply did not work. It just showed a ceaseless capacity to annex British history and patriotism. Said one viewer: "The unabashed jingoism simply went over the top." It wasn't just the Union Jack or the implied claim to have won the Second World War single-handed, but the issues were not clearly stated.

In contrast, the Labour Party's TV campaign has been described as "brilliant" and "outstanding". It simply concentrated on one single personality: Neil Kinnock. Presidential in tenor, and devised by two Oscar-winning talents—Colin Welland and Hugh Hudson (of Chariots of Fire)—its masterly appeal broke new ground. It showed Kinnock, the man and leader, his origins and political rise, his message, his family, his passion and his feeling for the poor. It also had a series of endorsements from

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

You can enjoy the same cooker that's the favourite in America's top department store

The Hawkins Futura has been exported to leading department stores in the United States of America. This success is based on unique consumer benefits and product design that has been awarded patents in the United States of America and the United Kingdom.

In actual cooking trials the Hawkins Futura on average proved 46% faster than microwave cooking.

The Hawkins Futura's beautiful, jewel-grey Satilon finish combines the advantages of quick-heating aluminium with the non-tarnish quality of stainless steel.

The fingertip control provides safe, automatic, direction-controlled steam release.

Enjoy cooking in the world's latest and best pressure cooker – the Hawkins Futura.

Twenty-nine traditional Hawkins models are also available from Rs. 180* upwards.

Hawkins Futura pressure cookers on display in a Bloomingdale's store in New York. Bloomingdale's is America's leading department store chain for high-quality products.

Hawkins®

FUTURA™

The New Generation pressure cooker

* Maximum recommended retail price excluding all taxes. Check with your nearest Hawkins dealer. If you need further information write to: Hawkins Cookers Ltd., Dept. No. 102, P.O. Box 6481, Bombay 16. ® Registered Trade Mark © 1987 Copyright by Hawkins Cookers Ltd. ™ Trade Mark Patent pending.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Siddhanta eGangotri Gyaan Kosha and eGangotri

FUJI CHIFFON SAREES

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Product value flows from corporate values at Tata Tea.

As the world's largest tea company, we bear special responsibilities.

To set an example. To define standards. To point the way for the rest of the industry to follow.

Commitments that we're uniquely equipped to discharge. With our operations running from planting through processing to packaging and marketing, there's so much we can do to benefit so many.

For the consumer, the widest range of the finest teas at the most affordable prices.

For the industry, and indeed for the nation's economy... new ways, new technologies, new examples to help catalyze growth.

For the worker, comprehensive programmes encompassing housing, health, education, recreation, family planning...

There's a vision at work here, extending far beyond mere commercial obsessions. A quest for excellence in every area of operation. A preoccupation not just with leaf tea and dust tea... but with humanity

TATA TEA LIMITED

Making a difference.... differently

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

personalities like Barbara Castle and James Callaghan (including one from Dennis Healey saying: "Like Gorbachev, he has a nice smile but steel teeth").

Kinnock's rallies have also been stage-managed to the last rose petal. The Labour leader, who has a reputation for verbosity, has sternly kept quiet in front of the print media but in some rallies, his speeches have displayed the evangelical fervour that makes him an outstanding orator. Says a Welsh academic: "Kinnock is only 45 but he has a strongly romantic view of history." He has set himself formidable tasks for this election: to transform the national mood from one of greed and individualism to solidarity between the well-off and those living in the misery of old age, poverty and the dole queues.

THE Alliance campaign has been strangely sterile. It had Rosie Barnes, no doubt an attractive candidate who recently won a stunning victory against the Tories in Greenwich, waffling on TV for 10 minutes. This, despite being crafted by a man accepted in British advertising circles as the successor to David Ogilvy—David Abbot.

Many observers have remarked on a serious strategic miscalculation of the Alliance—of not paying enough attention to Labour and concentrating its flak on Mrs Thatcher and the Tories. Despite possessing Dr Owen, an impressive parliamentary performer, the Alliance's support has been steadily dwindling. In its opening press conference, the Alliance dismissed the Labour Party as not even worth discussing and outlining "tactical voting", that is, you cast your vote for the candidate most likely to defeat the Conservative. Now it finds itself facing the prospects of being squeezed out by the two front-runners.

A remarkable facet of these elections is the lack of debate on an intellectual level. The endless arguments about socialism have not thrown up any new insights. Instead personal attacks and "ugly smears" dominate the show.

If issues are to be analysed, education is unmistakably the dominant one. It is one of the three subjects—with jobs and the health service—which will influence the British voters' choice of party. Every dimension of it has an electoral resonance. The schools system is at the heart of the debate. Whoever wins will need an agenda for reform. Teachers have already threatened to make June a time of discontent.

Mrs Thatcher's mission has been to "kill socialism" from Britain while the Labour Party wishes to eradicate Thatcherism. She dismissed the Labour manifesto as the "iceberg manifesto—one-tenth of its socialism visible, nine-tenths beneath the surface". Her tactics have been to stand by her record—especially on the economic front. The Tories speak glowingly about privatisation and the record 8.5 million individual shareholders in Britain. Their dictum has been that the conquest of inflation would clear the path to economic recovery and this, by contrast, required strict monetary control and cuts in borrowing.

However, as the The New Statesman pointed out editorially in a recent issue that also featured a cover report on "100 reasons not to vote Tory", any incoming government must prepare Britain for the 1990s, when the oil revenues begin to decline and it must also decide on fundamental foreign policy choices—to be more European or Atlanticist. It argued that it was wrong to blame Mrs Thatcher for all that had happened to the country. After all, she did not arrange for Argentina to invade the Falklands. But she has indeed presided over the rise in unemployment—estimated between three million and four million. It has also divided Britain along class lines, encouraging private greed whilst remaining indifferent to public squalor.

Still, Labour's manifesto has been a disappointment. Few proposals are concrete, fewer still are costed. Where it has a fluent line is in whingeing recitation of the evil Mrs Thatcher has done to Britain. The campaign has injected fresh vigour and vitality into the party ranks. But, as leading commentator Brain Walden pointed out, perhaps with some exaggeration: "Labour's progress in the opinion polls has not been advanced by any new fangled yuppie-oriented froth about greenery or the Third World or the challenge of the 21st century. Good old collective bribery, class hatred and the envy of the rich has done the trick."

If a Conservative victory, albeit with a reduced majority looks likely, what is more certain is that the face of the next British Parliament would be drastically altered. The next House of Commons could have several black faces—the first time since three Indian Parsis, Naoroji, Bhownagree and Saklatvala—graced the chambers. The probables are Russel Profit, the controversial Bernie Grant, Paul Boateng, and Diane Abbott. Amongst the Indian-origin candidates, Keith Vaz, contesting from Leicester east, has a reasonable chance. Others like Zerbanoo Gifford and Praful Patel, despite their high-profile, have a tough fight on their hands.

As the high-pressure electioneering draws to its last stages, the Tories and the Alliance have been taking a closer look at the Labour campaign, and perhaps even adapt some of its positive aspects. In its film on Kinnock, it shows the Labour leader remarking about his wife Glenys: "I am married to a woman of high intelligence, and immense warmth and independence." Somehow, it does not seem likely that Mrs Thatcher could make similar remarks about her husband Denis. —RAMESH CHANDRAN

DAVID OWEN
Social Democratic Party

DAVID STEEL
Liberal Party

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

FIJI

A Communal Coup

TIME: 10 a.m. Date: May 14, 1987. Place: Parliament House, Suva, the capital of Fiji. The scene: opposition MP Taniela Veitata has the floor. "Peace and harmony is the governing principle on which the Fijians have been running their lives since the advent of Christianity. This is in contrast to what Mao Tse Tung believed: that political power comes out of the barrel of a gun."

Enter Lieutenant-Colonel Sitiveni Rabuka, no. 3 in the Royal Fijian military, gun in hand, with 10 soldiers, all similarly armed. "This is a military take-over. Lie down and remain calm," he shouts.

In the next 10 days, Fiji's political system is shattered. After long and tortuous negotiations, the colonel's basic aims are given respectability and the allegedly "Indian" Bavadra government is overthrown and replaced by a new political system to ensure ethnic Fijian control, seemingly for all time to come.

Until new elections are held, Fiji will be run by an Advisory Council split into an administrative committee and another to revise the constitution. Both these committees are chaired by Brigadier Rabuka (the colonel has promoted himself). The constitution committee is to ensure that two-thirds of the lower house seats as well as the jobs of the prime minister and the governor-general should be compulsorily reserved for ethnic Fijians.

Last fortnight's coup thus simply confirmed what most Indians have known during their 108 years in Fiji—they are second-class citizens and will remain so. Since the arrival of the first Indians to the islands as indentured labourers, they have been ruled by the British for 96 years and the Fijian-majority alliance party government for 12 years. The only Indian-majority government, the Labour Party and National Federation Party coalition, was ended by the coup only six days after being officially sworn in by the governor-general.

While protesting over the seizure of power, the Indians will probably sullenly accept their fate and return to a life that is pretty much the same as it was before 10 a.m. on May 14. On the surface, it seems Fiji's Indians have a Hobson's choice. Either remain under the control of ethnic Fijians or leave the country.

Many Indians are contemplating the latter course. "Fiji is ruined and I want to leave," was a common catch-cry among Indians in Suva over the past fortnight. Many of those with family ties in other countries—the US, Australia, Canada and New Zealand—were making desperate attempts to expedite applications to migrate or obtain visitors' permits.

The Fijian Government Passport Office says there has been a "drastic" rise in passport applications since the riots in the capital, when ethnic Fijians attacked Indians and looted their shops. Suva's biggest photographic shop, Caines Photofast, developed passport photographs for more than 250 people last Friday: about 230 were for Indians. "Its been absolutely incredible," a staff member said. "There are whole families planning to leave Fiji."

Map by B.K. SHARMA

However, most Indians neither have family ties nor money to even dream of a new life in another country. And despite the coup, many will not leave Fiji because they have been extremely successful in business here. One businessman with substantial retail interests in Suva, Abdul Jalar, said: "I would be foolish to leave all this."

Most of Fiji's successful Indians, like Jalar, have had to carve their success from business rather than the land. It is enshrined in the Constitution that ownership of land will remain mostly with the ethnic Fijians. So, though there are now more Indians than Fijians—347,455 against 330,441—83 per cent of the land is under Fijian ownership. This has meant that most Indians have to rely on shopkeeping, working in the sugar-cane industry, general business and farming land obtained on long leases from Fijians. They have also had to concentrate on becoming better educated.

With the election of an Indian-majority government, Fijians increasingly have feared the next step will be losing ownership of their lands. A former alliance cabinet minister, Apisai Tora, who had been detained by the deposed Bavadra government on charges of inciting racial hatred before the coup, voiced the feeling of many ethnic Fijians. "Since our generosity has been rejected (by not being re-elected), we would like to have these leases back. And let us state quite clearly that when these leases come up for renewal, in the '90s, they will not be renewed. Our population is increasing and we will need these blocks of our most fertile land to improve ourselves, and those who do not want our chiefs should vacate our land."

It was sentiments like these which enabled Colonel Rabuka and the Fijian-

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RICK STEVENS Sydney Morning Herald

Indian prayer meeting in Suva:

dominated army to succeed in taking over the country. Now the announcement about new elections and the ruling council bring anger and resentment from the man who will carry on the fight on behalf of the Indians and those Fijians who believe in true democracy.

Dr Bavadra says the council is "stacked heavily" in favour of the alliance party which was defeated at the elections. There are only three Indians on the council—deposed deputy prime minister Harish Sharma, Chairman of the Fiji Trade and Investment Board Mumtaz Ali and President of the Fiji Employers' Consultative Association Colonel Paul Manueli.

Sharma and Dr Bavadra are the only representatives of the new government, yet there are 14 members of the former alliance government, including the long-time prime minister Ratu Sir Kamisese Mara. Rabuka also is a council member.

When Dr Bavadra questions the fairness of decisions that would come from such a group, he may have well been considering the track record of one ethnic Fijian member, Alipate Qetaki. It seems that Fiji's Indians would have good cause to feel uneasy about the appointment of Qetaki, a Suva lawyer. In the Fijian magistrate's court in Suva, Qetaki put forward an amazing argument in the defence of seven youths charged with attacking Indians and looting their shops in the riots. He claimed that the court had no jurisdiction to hear the charges because of the military coup. Instead, his clients should be tried by a military tribunal. He said the coup had removed the Constitution and all its powers. Both the magistrate hearing the charges, James Sabharwal, and the Chief Magistrate, Howard Morrisson, strongly rejected Qetaki's argument. Sabharwal said the governor-general was still the head of state as the Queen's representative and the court sat with all the authority vested in the magistrates by the Queen.

With the governor-general giving in to coup leader Colonel Rabuka and the great chiefs, it seems fairly certain that the short-lived Indian summer in the South sea island of Fiji will never be seen again.

Thousands of Indians have been angered by Qetaki's approach. After the riots, they had been looking to the courts to show that law and order still applied to the streets of Fiji. Yet, the next day, Qetaki was appointed to the council to advise the governor-general.

The mood of the Indians seems to have gone through four stages during the coup. In the days immediately following the seizure of power, there was disbelief, but also a calmness which astonished visiting journalists. As worshippers were pushed out of the street leading to the house where the Bavadra government was held, they were softly singing Fiji's national anthem and many were smiling. A group of Indians told an Australian journalist: "We are peaceful in Fiji. We would never take to violence."

By early last week, the Indians began to be decisive. They boarded up virtually all the Indian shops and stayed in their homes in silent protest, when not holding public prayer meetings. One Indian leader, Abdul Ali, said: "We have lived together for more than 100 years in harmony and can continue to do so. But if they take away our voting rights, we take away our commerce." The Indian cane cutters refused to harvest the sugar-cane crop—Fiji's most important crop.

The next emotion was fright as the riots erupted in Suva. Indians were beaten up and their cars and property damaged and stolen. Because of the closure of the newspapers and censorship of the radio stations, this fear spread quickly up and down the coast with Indians not knowing whether to believe stories about what was happening in Suva. Even after the release of the Bavadra cabinet, many Indians outside Suva believed they were still imprisoned and being tortured.

Now, the initial anger and fright have been replaced with a simmering frustration that will continue for years, no matter what happens. The Queen herself has been unable to do little, except perhaps prevent Fiji from turning the opinion of the great council of chiefs away from a proposal to make Fiji a republic.

Although the governor-general, as the Crown's respected and loved representative, has managed to provide the most powerful opposition to the military regime, he has conceded to Colonel Rabuka being on his advisory council. Any changes to the Constitution will guarantee permanent Fijian supremacy. The six days of Indian-majority rule will never be seen again.

—MICHAEL LAURENCE and GIRISH KUMAR in Suva

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SRI LANKA

Final Battle

WHEN the Sri Lankan armed forces, under instructions from Minister for National Security Lalith Athulathmudali, and armed with a carte blanche from President J.R. Jayewardene, launched a final all-out military offensive to recapture Jaffna from the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam (LTTE) last fortnight, there was an air of inevitability about it. For nearly two years the whole of Jaffna peninsula was under the complete control of the LTTE. So it was only natural that after the failure of the protracted efforts to find a negotiated solution to the ethnic problem, the Sri Lankan Government should have decided to push through the military option in the north. Said a top National Security Ministry official in Colombo: "Our army is now making a spirited attempt to ensure that the Sri Lankan Government's writ again runs in the northern peninsula."

For nearly a month, Colombo made massive preparations for this final military onslaught on the north. If the Sri Lankan Army succeeds in recapturing Jaffna, the backbone of the Tamil militant movement will be broken. According to informed sources in Colombo, over 20,000 troops were gradually massed for the military offensive. This was four times the estimated military cadre strength of the LTTE.

Last fortnight, Colombo took the final plunge and began the strike in the north. In a well-planned action after organising its troops, Sri Lankan Air Force planes and helicopters whirred over Jaffna, dropping thousands of printed leaflets announcing the immediate imposition of a 48-hour curfew. Within two hours of that warning, in a concerted action, troops moved out in columns from all the nine military camps in the peninsula, where, by and large, they had remained confined for the last couple of years. The advancing soldiers opened mortar and artillery fire on LTTE positions, while air force planes and helicopter gunships, providing air cover to the marching troops, pounded Jaffna town and its suburbs. And all along the Jaffna coast, naval gunboats shelled intermittently.

According to A.S. Balasingham, the spokesman of the LTTE in Madras, over 100 innocent Tamil civilians were killed on the first day of the assault. "Nine gunboats have been continuously shelling the north-eastern coastal belt. We are of course putting up a stiff fight but innocent civilians are getting killed in large numbers. Indiscriminate aerial bombardment is also taking a heavy toll," said Balasingham.

However, Sri Lankan armed forces seemed to be selective in their attack this time, hitting only at identifiable terrorist targets and bases. The first objective that the forces concentrated on was cutting off Vadamarachi town—a notorious militant hideout—from the rest of the Jaffna peninsula. Vadamarachi is the native place of several key militant leaders like Velupillai Pirabakharan, Kittu, and Mahttaya of the LTTE, and V. Balakumar of the Eelam Revolutionary Organisation of Students (EROS).

The leaflets warned civilians to move into temples, schools, and theatres temporarily, and stay far away from militant bunkers and camps. According to sources in Colombo, even in Jayewardene's message to Indian Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi sent through Sri Lanka's High Commissioner in Delhi, Bernard Tilakaratne, the President had taken pains to assure India that his army would hit only terrorist targets.

SHYAM TEKWANI

Sinhalese soldiers in Jaffna: strong strike

> The assault seemed to indicate that it was only a question of time before the Tamil's last bastion in Sri Lanka fell to the army.

The assault seemed to indicate that it was only a question of time before the Tamil's last bastion on the island fell to the army. As a result of the infighting among the militants—in particular the LTTE's war against the Eelam Peoples Revolutionary Liberation Front (EPRLF)—the Sri Lankan Army and home guards virtually control the east.

Tamil militants and Delhi can only blame themselves for the present state of affairs. The fratricidal war among the militants has ensured the Tigers' isolation. "The Tigers are responsible for 10,000 Tamil militants not being able to wield the gun and fight in northern Sri Lanka because they have banned other militant groups, except for the EROS, from functioning in Jaffna," said A. Selvam, the leader of the Tamil Eelam Liberation Organisation, which was practically wiped out in Jaffna by the LTTE in April 1986. Comments L.K. Theeswaran of the EPRLF: "The fratricidal attacks launched by the LTTE on others were a prominent factor in weakening the Tamil militant movement as a whole."

Having caught the Tiger by the tail, Jayewardene is unlikely to let go. But the greater danger is that New Delhi may decide to intervene if the killing of innocent Tamils continues. The cabinet and the service chiefs have already discussed the option. But in the larger diplomatic context, any form of armed intervention will be a bigger disaster than anything the present government has done so far.

—S.H. VENKATRAMANI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ARRESTED AUCTION

THE Bangalore-based Chamundi Mopeds may not be up for auction after all. The Mehtas, who promoted the Rs 22-crore project, are having second thoughts about hawking the cash-strapped company (total losses: Rs 8 crore). They have now invited their technical collaborator, Peugeot of France, to invest in Chamundi. Another option being considered is to rope in a partner who would bring in funds, and a London-based non-resident Indian is mentioned in this connection.

Six months ago, the financial institutions and banks which lent Chamundi Rs 15 crore recommended the two-wheeler outfit be sold. Bajaj Auto and Mahindra executives even toured the plant over a month back. But the Mehtas now feel they can make a go of it as the Karnataka Government recently granted Chamundi major sales tax concessions, permitting the vehicle's price to be reduced.

FACE-LIFT

THE country's Rs 50-crore lifts market is heading for a face-lift. At least one new company is entering the business, and established manufacturers sensing competition are busy updating their technologies. In the north, the Usha Telehoist stable of firms has entered into a collaboration with West Germany's Thyssen to promote a joint venture. The new company is expected to produce up to 500 lifts and escalators a year after production is kicked off in October 1988. In Gujarat, Bharat Bijlee, which already turns out lifts, has signed an agreement for technical collaboration with a Swiss outfit who will share its established expertise in the business. And in Madras, Best & Crompton has got together recently with a Finnish company. With all this imminent competition, market leader Otis is also investing more capital in updating know-how. The burst of activity in the industry is partly attributed to growth prospects. It is expected that the market will more than double in the next couple of years.

CHILD'S PLAY

UNIT Trust of India (UTI) certainly believes in catching them really young. In a drive to promote its Children's Gift Growth Fund, the state-owned financial institution is flooding hundreds of maternity homes and clinics across the country with brochures publicising the scheme. And once the mums are out of the maternity homes, they too can climb onto the UTI bandwagon. After a media blitz invited housewives to drum up business for the company, some 11,000 of them wrote in seeking to become UTI agents. All the applications are likely to be accepted.

FOREIGN FARE

HOTEL Corporation of India, the Air-India subsidiary that runs the Centaur group of hotels, is planning to wing its way overseas. The company has proposed investments to the order of Rs 30 crore in two hotels in London and Singapore, cities where Air-India regularly spends sizeable amounts of foreign exchange on crew accommodation. The proposals are part of the corporation's ongoing eighth plan exercises. The Centaur group is hopeful that the Government will clear the plans for the hotels overseas as the group has fared well in the recent past, with revenues steadily on the upswing.

OIL TURMOIL

HAPPY days are over vis-a-vis oil imports. Throughout this decade, India has been able to contain its oil import bill: first, by a trebling of domestic crude production during the sixth plan period and then, with the help of the collapse of international oil prices. Now, however, with domestic production levelling off at about 31 million tonnes, and global oil prices rising again, the oil import bill will increase dramatically. Last year, the bill was no more than

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

Rs 3,050 crore. This year, the figure is expected to be Rs 5,000 crore, an increase of 66 per cent. This is so despite the fact that physical imports have risen only modestly for crude (from 15.6 million tonnes to 17 million tonnes) and have fallen for petroleum products (from 3.7 million tonnes to 3 million tonnes).

MATCH POINT

ITC, the cigarette giant, is now planning to diversify into safety matches. Initially, the company will only be marketing matches manufactured by small-scale companies in Tamil Nadu, and test marketing has already begun in a couple of states. Later, the company proposes to organise cooperatives of match-makers and, if quality is assured, to promote its own brands of matches. The diversification is seen as logical as ITC can use its existing distribution network (with as many as one million retail outlets) to sell the matches. Earlier attempts to use its marketing strength, by selling items like tea, had not worked out as suppliers could not provide the required quantities to feed the trade pipeline. This time, however, ITC feels there should be no supply bottle-neck.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE RUPEE

Diminishing Returns

SIX years ago, the International Monetary Fund (IMF), while negotiating the grant of a $5 billion (now Rs 6,435 crore) loan to India, had suggested that the Government follow a "realistic exchange rate policy" for the rupee. Since that time, the rupee has lost 40 per cent of its value against both the dollar and the deutschmark, 10 per cent against the pound, nearly 60 per cent against the yen, and 15 per cent against the French franc.

Even as government economists argued that this 'devaluation' had been unavoidable and was delivering results (in terms of increased exports), reports last fortnight about the World Bank demanding a further 25 per cent devaluation sparked off another controversy.

Traditionally, devaluation has been a dirty word in India, especially after the disastrous experience with a 1966 devaluation of the rupee (which was done under World Bank pressure). And the Government itself has devalued the rupee steadily over six years, not overnight as in 1966. But however carefully the rupee's external value has been reduced, the devaluation issue was pushed firmly to the forefront last fortnight, with opinion divided on the merits of what has already been done, and what needs to be done in the future.

Any devaluation of a country's currency makes its exports cheaper abroad, and imports more expensive at home. Logically, exports are supposed to get a boost, and imports to come down. But critics argued that the country's trade deficit this year would be about the same as a few years ago (more than Rs 5,000 crore), even as government spokesmen said the policy was beginning to yield results now, with exports picking up.

A government economist pointed out that India's rivals in export markets had, in fact, devalued their currencies even more, so that they gained in competitiveness against the rupee. The examples that were cited were of Bangladesh (which is scoring in jute), Hong Kong (a rival in garments), and South Korea (in construction and engineering goods). Compared to 1979, even France and West Germany have devalued more than India, he pointed out. "We shouldn't treat the rupee's exchange value like virginity, as something that cannot be touched." Another economist argued that India has been having a higher level of inflation than several other countries, and that if Indian exports were not to get out-priced as a result, some degree of devaluation was unavoidable on a continuing basis.

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

That was logical, and several exporters were enthusiastic votaries of what the Government had done. Said Jatin Mehta, chairman of the Gem and Jewellery Export Promotion Council: "You get better value for your exports, and the rise in our exports last year was partly because the rupee was devalued." But devaluation is not without its costs, and the critics highlight this, arguing that the Government policy has not delivered results.

A lower value for the rupee is meant to make imports more expensive, and thereby discourage imports. But, said one dissenting Planning Commission economist: "The problem is that most of our imports are of bulk items like oil and fertilisers, which are essential. So they will be imported anyway, irrespective of the price. And because they get more expensive, they result in inflation at home."

On other counts too, the results so far have been mixed. Devaluation and the IMF loan were part of a larger strategy to tackle India's balance of payments problem with a liberalised policy package. But the latest confidential forecasts show that the trade deficit (after dipping last year because of lower oil prices) will keep increasing for the next decade. Loans to service this deficit have to be repaid, and the debt servicing burden has gone up from barely 8 per cent of foreign exchange earnings five years ago to around 24 per cent this year—well above the 20 per cent danger mark.

In the business world, meanwhile, opinion seemed to be mostly critical of the devaluation. Inevitably, companies complained of higher costs in a host of areas (ranging from component imports to royalty and know how payments), warned of

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"The authorities are devaluing the rupee more than necessary."

R. SESHASAYEE
executive director, finance, Ashok Leyland

"The rise in exports last year was because the rupee was devalued."

JATIN MEHTA
chairman, gem and jewellery Export Promotion Council

...increased burdens in re-...ing foreign loans, and ...ned about the uncer-...ties that have flowed ...sharp and unex-...ed changes in the ...pee's exchange rate. A ...ernment economist ...ribed all this as "the ...ally bitter taste that is ...hallmark of any good ...dicine", but there was ...getting away from the ...blems that corporate ...utives were faced ...

Several companies ...ch have been affected ...the bigger import bills ...the light commercial ...icle manufacturers) ...been screaming in protest. Said ...ber Goodearth Chief Executive Subodh ...gava: "Since September 1985, the ...of our component imports has gone ...by Rs 75,000. Of this, Rs 70,000 is ...use the rupee has lost against the ..." Vehicle costs have gone through ...roof, raising the break-even point in ...city utilisation (in Eicher's case this ...up from 40 per cent to 60 per cent in ...last six months), while the market has ...ched. Another sufferer was Karnataka ...Bearings, whose Rs 12-crore expan-...project has ended up costing Rs 24 ...because the rupee has been deval-...against the yen as well as the mark. ...the company's Managing Director ...Mehta: "Our liability has gone up. ...is a no-win situation." For Maruti ...g, the rupee devaluation has pushed ...the project cost, in terms of foreign ...ange, from Rs 89 crore to Rs 110 crore. ...aging Director R.C. Bhargava says ...ponent import costs in turn have ...up by 67 per cent compared to 1982.

"That's pretty stiff," said Bhargava. Added Pradeep Saxena, vice-president of American Express: "The devaluation policy is damaging industry more than it is helping exports."

Meanwhile, each dollar of repayment has to be earned with more rupees now than before. For instance, the National Thermal Power Corporation finds that because of the rupee losing ground vis-a-vis the pound, its cost of servicing a loan taken from Britain has already gone up by Rs 55 crore. Said Finance Director P.S. Bami: "This means our project cost will go up, and because we have to recover costs, the electricity tariff will go up." Added M.K. Jhawer, managing director of Usha Telehoist (which finds its raw material imports costing more as the yen has risen in value): "In certain items, when you have no alternative but to import, you are in a very tight corner."

Even those who were once in favour of devaluation now feel that enough is enough. Abid Hussain, member of the Planning Commission and the author of the 1983 proposal for an 'aggressive' exchange rate policy, argued last fortnight that devaluation of the rupee had been taken far enough, that it wouldn't help in today's difficult trade climate, and that "quality and effective marketing are far more important factors for promoting Indian exports. The concept of devaluation has been devalued". His views were echoed by R. Seshasayee, executive director of Ashok Leyland, who said: "The authorities are getting a little paranoid and devaluing the rupee far more than necessary. It will help promote some part of India's exports, but the price advantage may not be significant in other commodities." In areas like computer software or project exports, he added, marketing was far more important.

Even though devaluation has more critics than votaries, the policy has clearly helped in many cases. Eicher has been able to export profitably to Bangladesh and West Germany, while several companies have been forced to speed up their indigenisation programmes and cut down on their imports. And, with import values going up in rupee terms, the Government has also earned more from customs duties (which are usually charged ad valorem).

Nevertheless, even pro-devaluation experts felt that the rupee was now reaching its proper level. Argued foreign exchange consultant A.V. Rajwade: "The devaluation over the last three or four years was aimed at reaching the real exchange rate; from now, changes will be determined by relative inflation in India and outside." That runs counter to the latest World Bank prescription, but it may well be the Government view also, for the rupee has held reasonably steady over the last few months. And as a government economist said: "We have drastically reduced the difference between the official price of the dollar and the black-market price. So we are roughly at the level where we should be." But the next few months will show whether the World Bank has been able to convince the Government that a few more doses of admittedly bitter medicine are called for.

—T.N. NINAN and PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

R.P. GOENKA

Surprise Move

TAKEOVER wizard Rama Prasad Goenka is now allowing someone else to take over from him. Come July 1, he will hand over the chairmanship of his group of a dozen companies to older son Harsh. Younger son Sanjeev will be one of three vice-chairmen (the other two being professional managers). Goenka will confine himself to the recently-acquired Gramophone Company of India (GCI), and the Rs 1,400-crore Haldia petrochemical project.

Barely 57, Goenka can still look forward to at least a decade more of being at the helm. His sons are only in their 20s. However, explains Goenka: "First, I want to let my son run things himself when I am still available to give advice. Second, I want to give a fitting reply to the criticism that I have only indulged in takeovers, and that I have not set up new projects or nurtured sick units."

R.P. Goenka

Harsh Goenka

Sanjeev Goenka

That explains his decision to concentrate on Haldia and GCI. Goenka says: "Haldia is not a venture, but an adventure"—the single largest project ever undertaken in India's private sector. And he has ambitious plans for GCI, a troubled unit badly in need of resuscitation. The plans include recording cassettes of Vedic chants, and a recitation of the Quran.

Several of his friends still believe that Goenka is not serious about his 'retirement' plans, but the tycoon says he has been planning such a step for some time. He intends to resign from the chairmanship or board of several companies that he took over in spectacular raids or through negotiated deals, or which he set up on his own (including Searle India, Kamani Engineering, Murphy India and Deccan Fibreglass). But he will keep the Ceat Tyres chairmanship for a while longer.

Once Harsh takes over as group chairman, he is expected to become as peripatetic as his father, and Sanjeev (who looks after Dunlop) will get charge of India Polyfibres, a telephone cable project in Rae Bareli and some other companies. Goenka, however, denied reports that the group itself would be restructured.

The Rs 1,000-crore group (with profits last year of Rs 75 crore) might, instead, get more active in its expansion plans. Goenka has been lying low for the last couple of years ("I was scared of V.P. Singh"), and has also been strapped for cash because he has had to pay Rs 43 crore to the Government to get off Singh's blacklist of tax-defaulting companies. Now he will have to fork out Rs 80 crore as his contribution to the share capital of the Haldia company. All this, plus the loss of political clout in recent years, has stilted his planned forays into such areas as electronics and telecommunications.

But this might now change. Goenka scored some personal mileage last month as the outgoing president of the Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry (FICCI), when (for the first time in a decade) he got the prime minister to inaugurate FICCI's annual jamboree. He also announced last fortnight that he was taking on the work of modernising the Delhi-Jaipur highway. But he rejected a proposed takeover of the troubled Nirlon outfit even though son Harsh was in favour. "I will take the tyre cord unit separately, if they offer it," he explained. "The rest of it doesn't make sense."

Company insiders as well as the rest of the business world will be watching to see how what is widely seen as a premature experiment succeeds. This is particularly so amidst reports (which Goenka flatly denies) that there is tension between him and his partners in the Dunlop takeover, the Chhabrias.

—T.N. NINAN

SUPER-COMPUTER

Stalemate

IN the chandeliered ball-room of the Willard, Washington's most prestigious hotel, located near the White House, Indian captains of industry and representatives of some of the biggest multinational corporations in the US gathered last fortnight to work out ways of improving Indo-US commercial ties. But unexpectedly, the shadow of Cray Corporation's super-computer loomed large over the entire conference, at times almost obstructing all other issues from view.

Rahul Bajaj and Vinay Bharat Ram had questions only on the super-computer when Frank Carlucci, President Reagan's national security adviser, appeared for the conference's closing session. Earlier, R.P. Goenka also focused on the same super-computer when Robert Dean, Reagan's special assistant on national security, took the microphone. "I have always resisted the idea that the super-computer was the flagship of our relationship," Dean said. But there was no getting away from the sticky stalemate on the issue.

The American side argues that the Cray XMP-14 is good enough for India. "It is our understanding that, with this computer, the quality of weather forecasting in New Delhi will be better than in New York," said Robert Peck, assistant secretary of state for near-eastern affairs. But Indian officials say this model will take seven hours to process six hours of Insat data, whereas the Cray XMP-24 can do the job in two hours.

Contacted over long-distance telephone at the Cray Corporation's Minneapolis headquarters, company spokesman Rob Gaertner said the difference between the two machines was that the XMP-14 had one processor, whereas the XMP-24 had two. Both have the same memory capacity, of four million words. Added Gaertner: "While in the past it has not been possible to upgrade one system to the level of the other, it is possible to do so now." The two systems cost $7 million (Rs 9 crore) and $9 million (Rs 11.5 crore), respectively, and upgradation will cost about $5 million (Rs 6.4 crore).

US officials use the upgradation argument to urge that India settle for the XMP-14. But with India digging its heels in, even a super-computer will fail to predict the final outcome.

—SHEKHAR GUPTA in Washington

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

UNISTAR.
Keeps industries on the move.

The versatile cable. UNISTAR

• PEX Power Cable LT/HT/EHT • Flamuni Cable FRLS/FS/HF. • PILC Cable MIND/Draining. • PVC Power and Control Cables • Elevator Cable PVC/Rubber • Railway Signalling and Loco Cables • Aircraft Wiring/Air Field Lighting Cables • Mining Cables Fixed and Trailing • High Temp. Cable Silicone/Fluoroplastic • Oil Exploration Cables (Rig and Data-Logging) • Welding Cables GP & HR • Ship Wiring Cable • Nuclear Radiation Resistant Cable • DC HV Cable Precipitator/X-Ray • High Frequency Cables Audio/Video/RF/Cable TV, Microwave • Multi Pair Screened Instrumentation/Data Cable.

AMA-UC-291X

UNISTAR® CABLES AND CAPACITORS

The all pervading element in industries.

UNIVERSAL CABLES LIMITED P.O. Birla Vikas, Satna-485 005 (M.P.) Tel. 2551, 2562, 2708 Telex No.: 0766-202 UCL IN.

BOMBAY: Industry House, 159, Churchgate Reclamation, Bombay 400 020. Tel. 202 6340, 202 8019, 202 3170 Telex: 011-3732 BRLA IN.

CALCUTTA: 27-B Camac Street, Calcutta 700 016, Tel. 44 4351, 446198 Telex: 021-7653 RMCO IN.

NEW DELHI: UCO Bank Bldg. Parliament Street, New Delhi 110 001 Tel. 384851, 382750 Telex: 031-62046, 031-62047.

BANGALORE: 5, Palace Cross Road, Bangalore 560 020. Tel. 362674, 368179. Telex: 084-653.

MADRAS: 20 Greams Road 1st floor, P.B. No. 737, Madras 600 006 Tel. 472427, 477551 Telex: 041-428.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

WHEN YOU MEAN BUSINESS

Officewear this season takes on a more comfortable stance. In smart, sensible shades. Like grey, dark blue interweaves, beige and brown.

Jacket styled on loose, flowing lines. Cutaway shawl collar. Single hang-button front. Single bone pockets.

Trousers have double outward pleats on either side, both in front and back. Side seam pockets.

Striped silk tie on dark shirt and diamond tie pin complete stylish work ensemble.

A lot of course depends on the fabric. Choose only the best. Only Vimal Suitings. The season's hottest fasnion news.

VIMAL®
A RELIANCE PRODUCT

POLYRICH
Suitings

VIMAL SUMMER

Digitized by Sarayu Trust Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ENSATIONS

RELIANCE CUP 1987

Reliance CUP 1987
The cricket event

VIMAL
The Official Fabric for Reliance Cup 1987

Fabric PERFECTION ONLY VIMAL

Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Geared for growth. In step with you.

Contemporary. Innovative. In tune with the times. That is Tata Steel.

Where modernisation and expansion are an ongoing process. To reinforce and broaden the technological base.

With the latest in metallurgical know-how.

With a constant upgrading of technical skills.

With new processes to optimise energy.

Where an unceasing effort to update plant facilities gives you the latest in quality products.

Tata Steel. The Company that keeps pace with your needs. However sophisticated they are.

TATA STEEL

The first and still the foremost.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ITC

Tax Trouble

TOBACCO giant ITC was all set for a platinum jubilee bash this year. But far from celebrating, it will have to don sackcloth and ashes. Following a swoop by tax sleuths on its factories and dealers in mid-February, the Rs 1,000-crore cigarette manufacturer faces tax demands of a punitive Rs 803 crore. After scrutinising about 5,000 documents seized from the company and its dealers and quizzing several witnesses, excise officials have charged the Calcutta-based outfit with a king-size tax fiddle.

There could be worse to come. Taxmen reckon that ITC owes the exchequer an extra Rs 300 crore, taking the tally to an astonishing Rs 1,103 crore—more than four times the company's net worth.

That notice has still to be served on ITC, but Chairman Jagdish N. Sapru snapped: "It is a ridiculous show cause notice that has been given to us. The company does not have Rs 800 crore to give the Government. It never had. Our sales net of excise are barely Rs 250 crore."

ITC will certainly go under if the Directorate of Revenue Intelligence (DRI), which orchestrated the raids, makes its charges stick. Specifically, the Finance Ministry's investigative wing alleges that ITC fixed retail cigarette prices at a level higher than the price printed on packets, the difference escaping the tax net by flowing back to the company through a complex system of dealer deposits. ITC circulated "effective" or real price lists to its dealers, and the DRI has obtained such lists.

Excise officials also claim to possess evidence that ITC compelled retailers to charge more than the printed packet price by squeezing their margins. In fact, trade margins dropped to just 10 paise per 1,000 cigarettes, on all brands. Durgapur wholesale dealer Radhe Shyam Agarwal told the DRI: "I feel that the price strategy of Messrs ITC is such that retailers are bound to sell over and above the printed price."

"It is true that we squeezed the trade margin, and that the trade charged more than the printed price," admits Sapru. "But the excise people should realise that we have been forced to do so in order to survive. Our option was to close down. And we have been pointing this out to the Government over the years." He has a point. Nearly two years ago, the Government introduced a new excise structure that left wafer-thin profits for manufacturers, forcing them to trim retail margins. But as far as the DRI is concerned, the key question is whether this practice meant breaking the law. And the Finance Ministry's investigative wing has little doubt about the answer.

But the ITC chairman argues that his company did not hawk cigarettes to wholesalers at more than the printed price, implying thereby that retailers were the culprits. He also adds that the effective price list was meant for internal purposes to assess what consumers actually spent on cigarettes and did not reflect company prices.

The DRI demurs. They point out that, after the latest budget shifted the basis of taxation to cigarette length instead of its printed price, the effective market price has become the same as the printed price in most cases. As for the retailers being guilty (and not the company), excise men had in fact arrested Calcutta retailers last year for peddling cigarettes above the printed price, but documents seized showed that ITC had instructed its executives and dealers to help bail out the retailers. The DRI also brandishes the testimony of distributors suggesting ITC rigorously policed them to ensure their compliance with its higher unofficial prices, sending them written but unsigned instructions. Worst of all, a company document showed that the cigarette giant had fixed the real sale price of a forthcoming filter blend higher than its printed price, even before it was kicked off—which it could not have forecast if retailers had been the villains.

Indeed, taxmen now believe they have a strong case against the company. But Sapru has a valid point that the Government's actions are at variance with what it told the Public Accounts Committee (PAC) last year. A Central Board of Excise and Customs member gave a clean chit to the deposits obtained by cigarette firms from their dealers.

At that time, the excise authorities put ITC's rival GTC Industries in the dock, charging the Sanjay Dalmia-owned outfit and two of its Hyderabad-based suppliers with evading excise duty of as much as Rs 5.74 crore from October 1985 to April 1986—taking GTC's total alleged tax dues to over Rs 68 crore—simply as cigarettes were retailed at higher prices than the packet price. Taxmen alleged that the extra cash was either funneled back by distributors to GTC or spent on advertising and other expenses.

A few months later, excise officials charged the Calcutta-based New Tobacco Company with evading over Rs 28 crore in taxes by clandestinely removing cigarettes from factories and by floating concerns that collected from wholesalers more than the sums mentioned in invoices, in the guise of service charges.

While their guilt or innocence may finally be decided by the courts, the charges against cigarette companies stem essentially from an unrealistic tax policy that has now been dumped. In any case, where will the money to meet the tax dues come from? ITC does not have the cash to fork out over Rs 1,000 crore. Clearly, a compromise will have to be negotiated. The alternative could well be an industry leader going up in smoke.

—INDRANIL BANERJIE

RANJAN BASU

ITC Chairman J.N. Sapru

Following a swoop by tax sleuths on ITC's factories and dealers in mid-February, the cigarette manufacturer faces tax demands of a punitive Rs 803 crore.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

DHANALAKSHMI

Attractive Interest and Excellent Service

ACCEPTS FIXED DEPOSITS

Managed by corporate achievers.

Consistent 18% dividend right through.

More than 100% all round growth.

Rated as one of the best financially managed companies.

- Interest paid from day one.
- Advance interest cheques offered.
- Fixed, Cumulative and other attractive schemes available.

More than 463 branch offices spread throughout the country

For the details contact:

DHANALAKSHMI CONSOLIDATES TRUST LIMITED (DCTL)
Regd. Office : Shivalaya Buildings, Madras - 600 105
Corporate Office : Esplanade, Madras - 600 001
Phone : 24045, 23584, 474019, 476402,
Telex : 041-6950 DCTL IN Cable : DHANIVEST
Or agents/brokers

Design : Perceptions

DHANALAKSHMI CONSOLIDATES TRUST LIMITED (DCTL) 226, Nariman Point 53 Bajaj Bhavan Bombay 400 021.
Phone: 2024907, 2022087, 2023210 Telex: 011-3187 MOON IN.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

DHANALAKSHMI CONSOLIDATES TRUST LIMITED (DCTL) 4/1 Deshbhandu Gupta Road Chambers 212 Pharganj New Delhi 110 055.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BEER INDUSTRY

Hung Over

AFTER years of spiralling sales, the party seems to be suddenly over for India's brewers. This summer, for the first time, there was no shortage of beer anywhere in the country, bringing home the chilling possibility that drinkers may have finally begun to choke on the high prices of the golden liquid.

Traditionally, brewery executives were besieged in summer by irate wholesalers clamouring for lager. The wholesalers would then extract up to Rs 10 extra per crate, from retailers desperately trying to meet the demand from thirsty drinkers. But this year, the tables have been turned. Says Shekhar Wagh, general manager of Hindustan Breweries: "It has been a very quiet summer for all the breweries. And when the demand plummets with the monsoon, the beer industry will be faced with a terrible crisis."

For the last five years, breweries coasted along as the beer market expanded steadily, by about 12 per cent annually. Drinkers seemed to be quaffing beer faster than it could be fermented. And with the demand outstripping supply by nearly 30 per cent, there was inevitably a chronic beer shortage. Also, the typical beer drinker was very undiscriminating, guzzling even third-rate, hastily produced lagers with outlandish names, as long as the bottle was chilled. All that has now changed, and brewers estimate a fall of at least 15 per cent in sales in 1987, even as the opening of new breweries has resulted in a glut.

This sudden surfeit of beer has left many in the industry befuddled as to what went wrong. "Usually, from March onwards, we are in a complete flap trying to meet the demand. Now, for the first time in 10 years, there is any amount of beer available, even in north Indian breweries," says U. Huq, general sales manager of Shaw Wallace.

Brewery executives give a variety of reasons for this glut. Freak rains have led to an unusually mild summer in many states. And there has been the campaign against liquor in Punjab, a major consumer of beer between March and June. But it isn't so much Sikh fundamentalism as the Government's thirst for extracting revenue from liquor sales, that has hit beer companies the hardest.

Following the Andhra Pradesh excise hike in March, Karnataka has hiked its sales tax on beer this summer and Orissa has begun taxing beer brought in from other states. Andhra Pradesh has also effected a steep rise in licence fees for beer outlets, raising the retail shop price of better known brands to as much as Rs 15 a bottle—almost twice the price four years ago. Bangalore and Andhra Pradesh have the second and third largest beer markets, after Bombay, and both have seen the sales graph hiccup.

"It has been a quiet summer. During monsoons, there will be a terrible crisis."

SHEKHAR WAGH,
general manager, Hindustan Breweries

Work at a distillery: summer surfeit

STUDIO CONCEPT

"There's a 5-year cycle. We're now in bad years, but 1989 should be a boom year."

D. MURUGESAN, chief executive, Associated Breweries

The excise shock in Andhra Pradesh came after Mohan Meakin, a major producer, flooded the state with beer from the new Mohan Breweries and Distilleries set up in Madras, in partnership with a local business magnate. And in Sikkim, Danny Denzongpa is starting his Yuksom Breweries, while some troubled breweries in the north have been revived. Increased production has combined with unexpectedly low sales to create an industry crisis.

This is clear despite the absence of precise statistics: most breweries hesitate to give sales figures, and even the All India Brewers Association pleads ignorance. Part of the problem is that while most breweries are licensed to produce 62,500 hecto litres per year (eight lakh dozen bottles), they have been producing 100,000 to 150,000 hecto litres annually, for the last three years. "If there's a complaint, the Government conducts an inquiry. But nothing comes of it. So every brewery sees its licence as permission to produce blindly," says a brewery manager.

To this flood of frothy lager, Mohan Breweries added another 150,000 hecto litres annually. And while prices have risen, quality has suffered due to overproduction. Some breweries tried to overcome consumer resistance by introducing new brands. But overproduction will persist due to the entry of new breweries.

Some experienced brewers are confident the sales slump is temporary. Says D. Murugesan, chief executive of Associated Breweries: "There is a five-year cycle in beer sales. We are now in the bad years, but 1989 should again be a boom year." But many breweries may discover that the heady days of unlimited beer sales are finally over.

—M. RAHMAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PARRY

Overhaul

M.V. SUBBIAH has much to celebrate. Three years after he moved over from his family-controlled Tube Investments (India) to E.I.D. Parry as vice-chairman and managing director, Parry is readying to kick off a bicentennial jamboree next April. More important, the once-losing Parry's fortunes are on the upswing. Flab has been shed, new products have been launched, and sales and profits are expected to be up by some 10 per cent and 15 per cent respectively by the month-end when the company's financial year closes. What is more, around Rs 200 crore is to be invested over the next five years in existing areas of business.

The sunny outlook marks a dramatic change because the company had been in the dumps for years. E.I.D. Parry was off the dividend list for a decade till 1985-86, and had piled up losses of Rs 5 crore till the year before. The work-force was bloated, wages were 40 per cent to 50 per cent higher in some Parry units than was the industry norm, productivity was low and management controls were lax. "The company's problems were more internal than external, because its products enjoyed a good image in the market," explains Ajit B. Mantagini, a Parry vice-president.

To halt the slide, the financial institutions exercised their 28 per cent equity muscle in the diversified group—taking in the units of sugar, confectionary, fertilisers, sanitary ware, engineering products—and brought in a professional manager to run it. But he got caught in a controversy over the chief executive's rights.

When Subbiah's older brother, M.V. Arunachalam, had moved in as non-executive chairman earlier, the institutions were still virtually the major presence in the company. Finally, four years ago, the Government invited the family to buy Parry's 14 per cent overseas holding. This it did, quickly bolstering it with 10 per cent bought from the market.

Enter Subbiah, with a tough-guy reputation (he had sacked 170 violent employees during a strike at Tube Investments). "When I walked into Parry, a union leader told me: 'Don't try your tricks here. A year later, he opted for voluntary retirement," chuckles the Parry managing director.

As Subbiah tells it, he was a hatchet man for the first two years. And he wielded his axe with a vengeance. Employee strength, which once ran to over 6,000, was pruned by 40 per cent after a voluntary retirement scheme was launched. Nearly all those who received a golden handshake were workers and supervisors (the bill: Rs 6.5 crore), but five top managers were forced out too. New men were brought in at the senior rungs, so much so that 25 of the 30 executives above the general manager level today, have been with Parry for less than five years.

PRASHANT PANJIAR

"A union leader told me: 'Don't try your tricks here.' A year later, he took voluntary retirement."

M.V. SUBBIAH
managing director, Parry

SHYAM TEKWANI

Parry House: dramatic turnaround

Nor was this all. Unprofitable lines of business were hived off. Parry represents a number of other firms, but some of this agency business was simply not lucrative and clients wanted to distribute their own wares. For instance, a Kirloskar company ended an agency arrangement worth almost Rs 20 crore to Parry, while HMM, the Horlicks people, terminated a similar agreement last June, valued at Rs 12 crore. Company officials insist that the parting of ways was mutual and smooth, pointing out that HMM absorbed 40 Parry salesmen.

Then, tight controls were clamped on the use of inventories and funds. "There were no controls on working capital or stocks," maintains M.V. Wagle, a top finance executive of the Tube Investments group, who put in a stint as group vice-president of Parry. Stocks used to be rotated three times a year instead of the desirable 6 or 10 times, adding to costs. And interest payments chewed into profit margins because funds were not used efficiently enough. One indicator: in the past, a Rs 18-lakh overdraft limit was never enough during peak times of the year. Now the company manages with Rs 13 lakh.

The new management also took a hard look at costs. "Obvious wastages occurred in travel, where, for instance, there was a free-for-all," notes a senior executive. And at the factory level, production bills were stratospheric because equipment was obsolete. In the ceramics division, for instance, the newest kiln was 25 years old, leading to high fuel bills. "Power and fuel account for 30 per cent of the cost of production," says Mantagini, "and we've gone in for modern kilns that use naphtha and liquefied petroleum gas as fuel."

Some of the belt tightening was cosmetic. All top executives began flying economy class with Subbiah setting an example. "People begin to watch what you're doing, and once they do, they say that this man means business," he explains.

Finally, the management was thoroughly overhauled. For starters, an effort was made to provide monthly operating results within a fortnight to a manager, instead of the two-and-a-half months it used to take. Apart from such details, centralised systems were dismantled. Functions such as materials management and procurement used to operate independently, but these were brought under "strategic business units" or independent profit centres, each of which now operates as a company within a company, under a vice-president. This offers the advantage of helping responsibility to be fixed. Equally important, the group's overheads are now spread among these units. Each has to make enough money to cover the overheads before fresh expenditure is sanctioned.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The results of all this were visible last June when the company declared a 10 per cent dividend, after notching up a pre-tax profit of Rs 2.30 crore (it was in the red the year before). The profit is perhaps small beer, but it was made on a reduced sales volume of Rs 149 crore.

Company executives and Subbiah argue that a good portion of the change that has taken place at Parry is in its culture and that this is percolating down the line, citing here the fact that all employees at a Pune electrical connectors unit wear the same uniform and eat lunch at the same canteen.

Excellence gurus Peters and Waterman would no doubt be extremely pleased, but it is clear that the turnaround at Parry has also taken a toll. Hiving off agency businesses has told on the outfit's sales figures. They have yet to bounce back to the highs of the past. But with proposals for huge investments before the board of directors, the springboard is taut and ready.

—PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI in Madras

HSL

In the Dock

WHEN President Zail Singh unveiled a plaque to mark the inauguration of the Rs 40-crore covered building dock complex at the Hindustan Shipyard Limited (HSL) in Vishakhapatnam last month, the 8,000-odd employees cheered enthusiastically. But there was less cheer in the boardroom, where the HSL bosses had before them a report that pointed to the dock project as a scandal, and where decisions have to be taken on how to revive a company that has accumulated losses of a staggering Rs 100 crore.

Most of HSL's problems are traced to the six-year tenure of former chairman and managing director K.R. Menon, when a modernisation programme was launched. But project costs shot out of control, and the company went deep into the red. Last year, Menon left under a cloud, with the CBI probing his assets.

An internal inquiry by the company turned up devastating findings. But new chairman Rear Admiral S.C. Bindra has received reports, arguing that "there is a use pointing the finger backward", and that officers were looking into the conduct of people who were senior to them. Inevitably, this has caused considerable dissension in HSL, amid allegations that the truth of the charges that have been aired will never be known.

The inquiry reports themselves are damning. They talk of Menon acting arbitrarily and committing the company to wasteful expenditure of Rs 7 crore, of falsifying statements, making incorrect projections to the board and keeping it in the dark. Expenses were incurred without proper sanction and no justifiable technical reason was given for changing the new dock from an open to a closed one. Added cost: Rs 18.58 crore.

The reports stressed that the change was made on the suggestion of a former shipping ministry secretary after a visit to European shipyards. But HSL investigators questioned the rationale for the change. They pointed out that no study was made about the actual number of man-days lost on the hull of a ship being built in the open due to adverse weather conditions, and no attempt was made to understand why shipyards in Europe had covered docks. The inquiry committee emphasised that the cost over-runs were inexplicably high, and that civil works alone had gone up fivefold.

Also, no technical reasons were given for buying a 225-tonne crane, while a 12-tonne crane was repeatedly shown to the board as being a 20-tonne crane. And the board was not kept fully informed on the various foreign collaborations that had been entered into.

Asked for his comments, Menon said: "All this is like blaming the floor for breaking the egg. I took charge of HSL in 1981, when staff morale was low and everybody hoped for better days. I pushed through the modernisation programme to improve the shipyard, and while I have not taken note of all the commas in the rule books, I have never acted against the company's interests."

Several senior executives remain unconvinced. But with Bindra putting the lid on the affair, the truth about why HSL has been a sinking concern is unlikely to surface.

—AMARNATH K. MENON

HSL dockyard: high cost

BHAWAN SINGH

K.R. Menon

With Bindra deciding to shelve the investigation reports, the full truth about charges made against Menon will never be known.

S.C. Bindra

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BINNY

Jockeying for Control

FOR almost six months now, the troubled Binny Ltd has intermittently hit the headlines in the financial press. But hidden from the glare of publicity, it has been the focus of protracted backroom parleys. And push might now come to shove for Binny Chairman S.N. Hada.

Last month, the furious jockeying for the driver's seat at the south India-based textile outfit acquired a new edge. The Tamil Nadu Government wrote to the Department of Textiles in New Delhi, backing the claims of liquor baron Ramaswamy Udayar for management control—implying thereby that the Centre should withdraw support from Hada.

The latest round of lobbying tops a volley of earlier letters written to New Delhi. Some months before, a Binny union leader along with an official of the Congress(I)-controlled Indian National Trade Union Congress separately wrote to the Finance Ministry extolling Hada's efforts at turning Binny round, even as critics charged him with mismanagement. At the root of the manoeuvring for the driver's seat is a simple issue—money. The government-owned banks and financial institutions, along with three state governments, own over half the company's equity. Six years ago, they roped in Hada, a Calcutta-based textile magnate, to run the Rs 139-crore company. He later acquired a 15 per cent overseas holding in Binny, and made efforts to try and staunch the outfit's financial haemorrhaging.

But Binny's textile mills have to be modernised if they are to become viable. The banks and the institutions are not ready to put up all the money for this because Binny is nearly Rs 64 crore in hock to them. So they asked Hada to chip in with 10 per cent of the cost. This Hada declined to do. And the Tamil Nadu Government says Udayar will gladly cough up if given the company.

"The financial institutions have one complaint about Hada. He didn't bring in money for modernisation," says a senior Central Government official. But Hada argues that he has invested in the shares and doesn't have to pump in more money, that the Industrial Development Bank of India (IDBI) is required to put in 80 per cent of the funds, 16 per cent has to come from a government modernisation fund and the company can ante up the rest.

The institutions didn't buy this and began shopping for another promoter. Enter Udayar, known for his friendships with Tamil Nadu's politicians. Last month, the liquor baron was parleying with the institutions. Hada was quick to point out that no final decision had been taken, but a well-informed source said the institutions were "very seriously considering the offer."

Even before these developments, the Madras Labour Union which represents Binny workers wrote to Minister of State for Finance Janardhan Poojari offering to buy any shares the banks were willing to unload. It hopes to raise the cash from a wage award that it expects to come its way. "We've had no response to the offer," says R. Kuchelar, the union's president.

The institutions plainly do not take the offer seriously. And if they are talking to Udayar, it is also because they do not accept Hada's contention that Binny can afford to contribute cash for modernisation because it turned the corner and made a net profit of Rs 1.08 crore last year. An institutional nominee on the Binny board even claims that "the profit is due to the adjustment of excess depreciation of previous years and the sale of real estate." The company's chairman dismisses such suggestions as "bogus".

Hada has also contended in the past that the way out for Binny is to hawk its valuable surplus real estate. The institutions went along with this (roughly Rs 10 crore worth was sold with their concurrence, and property worth another Rs 23 crore still remains) but have now barred further sales. They have listed at least two conditions for any new entrant to run the company: he must put cash down, and must not auction company property.

While Udayar seems to have agreed to these terms, the big question is why he wants a stake in the company at all. Apart from its debt burden, Binny has steadily piled up losses (the tally is now Rs 39 crore). What is more, it recently lost a long-standing defence order—which accounted for 20 per cent of its turnover—to the state-owned National Textile Corporation. Binny made a net profit of Rs 1.[illegible] lakh in the first seven months of last year but could wind up in the red again because its engineering division has been

The Binny gate: cash crunch

"Whatever the Government decides will be my stand. If they ask me to sell my shares, I will do so."

S.N. HADA
chairman, Binny Ltd

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Liquor baron Ramaswamy Udayar is parleying with the financial institutions for control of the South Indian textile company.

cked out for over a year.

Logically, therefore, the company ould not be attractive to any buyer. ut," points out a company official, inny is a status symbol in south India." d some argue that the company can entually stand on its own legs, and that ada has proved this. Almost immedi- ly after taking over in 1981, he cut any's losses to Rs 1.76 crore as against Rs 10.69 crore projected by an institu- nal team sent to study Binny. Subse- ently, the company's accumulated ses were trimmed from around Rs 50 re to Rs 39 crore, and production and ductivity were jacked up. Given ney for modernisation and a profes- nal management, the argument goes, mills can get out of the woods.

One question that surfaces is: will da bow out if the institutions plump for ayar? Says Hada: "Whatever the Gov- ment decides will be my stand. It's an sted company. If they ask me to sell my es, I will do so." He may have no other ion. Loans totalling some Rs 29 crore not carry any interest and the com- y would face an additional Rs 4 crore den if the institutions crack the whip, ightaway putting the company's fi- nces further out of joint.

So the ball lies in the institutions' rt. They are now picking a managing ector for the company (the last one signed a few months ago). With a new repreneur poised to enter the picture, e institutions are clearly bent on weav- g in changes at the top in one of the gest textile groups in the country.

—PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI in Madras

crunch

their concur- another Rs 23 e now barred ed at least two ant to run the sh down, and y property. o have agreed tion is why he y at all. Apart y has steadily s now Rs 39 ecently lost a r—which ac- turnover—to Textile Cor- profit of Rs 1.2 hs of last year he red again sion has been

MANGOES

Bitter Harvest

FOR Mallihabad's mango growers, 1987 has turned exceptionally sour. The region near Lucknow, well known for the dashehari mango—considered one of the most delicious—was last fortnight witness to a struggle to save what was left of a bumper crop of nearly 5 lakh tonnes, valued at Rs 50 crore. The mango crop has been ravaged by a still unidentifiable species of mango hoppers, which has been resistant so far to all insecticides. According to owners of the 5,000-odd mango orchards and scientists studying the phenomenon, the dashehari mango has been sucked dry by the insects, losing its size, taste and appearance. Only a crop of one lakh tonne remains.

A damaged mango: big loss

Mallihabad symbolises the havoc wrought across the state where the hoppers have destroyed more than half the mango crop. However, Mallihabad's plight is by far the worst because production is mainly for commercial purposes.

The insect resembles the mango hopper—the Idioscopus Clypealis—but is twice the size of the variety commonly seen in Mallihabad. The hopper raid is so intense that anyone walking between mango trees is soon covered by a layer of insects. "This hopper has puzzled all our scientists who have been working on mango for years," says Dr K.C. Srivastava, director of the Central Institute of Horticulture for Northern Plains (CIHNP). To identify the species, insect samples have been sent to the Indian Agriculture Research Institute in Delhi and the Institute of Entomology in London, among other research centres.

Researchers are also baffled by the insect's uncharacteristic breeding pattern. Normally hoppers breed during the first two months of the year, during which time growers spray the trees at least three times to destroy the pests. But this year "we discovered this pest on March 12 and were shocked to find it breeding so late in the season," says Dr R.P. Srivastava, senior entomologist in CIHNP. Searching for answers, scientists concluded that the untimely rains and low temperatures prevailing this year might have prolonged the hopper's breeding season.

By mid-April, the hopper had turned active. It started sucking the tender sap of the mangoes, resulting in the drying up of the infested tissue. The hopper also secreted a sweet sticky substance which led to the growth of a fungus—the sooty mould—adversely affecting the trees' photosynthetic activities and stunting growth. Nonplussed by the invasion, Kamil Khan, 65, a prosperous grower in Mallihabad says: "I have never seen anything of this kind before. Even if I spray my fields well, they come from the adjoining orchards and raid my trees the very next morning." Adds Aziz Hasan Khan: "I have spent over Rs 60,000 on spraying pesticides this year as compared to Rs 20,000 at other times. And yet, I cannot export fruit worth more than Rs 1 lakh."

The Mallihabad Mango Growers Association had petitioned the state Government in April that the orchards should be aerially sprayed. But till last fortnight, growers were still to receive any assistance from government agencies. The state Government has not declared the hopper raid an epidemic, although privately, most of the concerned officials admit that it should have been done at least a month earlier. Instead, the Government has been viewing the problem as a routine one. J.B. Singh, joint director of the Horticulture (Mango) Department says: "We have formed two high-power committees to look into the matter. We will decide on the next step when they submit their report this month."

The dashehari mango growers' future does look bleak. Resigned to their fate, Aziz Hasan Khan, the secretary of the association, says: "The insect has not only destroyed the present crop but it has also eaten the new leaf which would have flowered next year. We won't be able to eat a square meal next year." This will prove to be no exaggeration if the state Government does not act quickly.

—DILIP AWASTHI in Mallihabad

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Creative Hard Sell

MANY critics of advertising have called it a waste. Lord Leverhume, the founder of Lever Brothers, once said he believed one-half of the money he spent on advertising was wasted. It is a feeling I have often shared, but for a different reason: it is my belief that a great deal of advertising does not work hard enough, does not have a cutting edge.

In India, at least until recently, it did not matter. Most marketeers operated in sellers' markets—there were six-year waiting lists for Bajaj scooters, cooking medium brands like Postman and Dalda commanded a premium at festival time, and consumers were used to buying alternatives when they didn't get brands they wanted.

Now, this has changed dramatically. Today, there are over 20 manufacturers of two-wheelers, over 40 marketeers of TV sets with national advertising budgets, and scores of brands of detergent powders and cakes, textiles, packaged foods, toiletries and readymade garments. This 'explosion of choice' is not restricted to consumer products. There are over 80 companies selling computers, more than 30 brands of photocopiers and some 25 brands of electric typewriters are available in the market. In such a context, it is imperative to question the effectiveness of all advertising.

The failure of over a dozen brands of toilet soap, numerous brands of toothpaste, many TV sets and two-wheelers, launched recently, stands as evidence that such an enquiry will not occur a moment too soon. And there are some key factors that make for the success and failure of advertising campaigns.

Creative Positioning: The first basic factor is whether the sharpness of creative expression is good enough to help a brand stand out amongst the crowd. The classic work in campaigns such as Chivas Regal and Benson & Hedges is now part of advertising lore. But there are examples closer home.

Garden Silk Mills, when it started advertising about a decade ago, had a smaller budget than many others. It was the quality of creative work in its ads that set it apart—this has been maintained. It is no wonder that today, the name is synonymous with the best in sarees. In a recent survey in Bombay, 63 per cent of the women asked rated it their number one choice for special occasion wear.

Courage: A related factor is whether an advertiser has the courage to back such breakthroughs. "Never show your product in less than a perfect light," is the conservative view. But Onida has consistently shown its TV with a smashed screen! And the ad is undeniably outstanding. Also, the advertiser's courage has been well-rewarded. A Bombay survey showed that, once again, the brand that has the highest spontaneous awareness (91 per cent) and advertising recall (77 per cent), has the largest share of the colour TV market.

> "The key test for advertising is whether it is successful in establishing high saliency, relevant for launch strategies. It is at this stage that a brand must establish top of mind awareness. Low-key launches often mean low-key market share."

Marketing Savvy: Good, closely-checked, finely-tuned homework can often produce the critical difference. Cameras, for instance, have been made and advertised in India for many years. But the market had remained stagnant for over a decade. The usual reasons quoted were the high cost of cameras and film and the absence of facilities for cheap, quick processing and printing.

It was not until recently that Photophone realised that there was a large market-in-waiting for a camera, provided you made it a fun thing. The entire campaign was evolved on this understanding, resulting in a marketing equation: Cameras = Hotshot = fun. Photophone and Hotshot have expanded the market over eightfold in the past five years. And they have over a 50 per cent share of it. Their success has led to the emergence of a whole new infrastructure for quick, inexpensive processing!

Re-examining the obvious: With the emergence of a multitude of brands, the distinctions between competing products are bound to blur. The existence of product-inherent USPs (Unique Selling Propositions) will, therefore, be rare. The answer in such situations may well lie in re-examining the obvious to help a brand get a large share of mind.

Some years ago, while examining how to advertise KLM, the agency realised it could be positioned as 'The Reliable Airline' on the basis of the many pre-flight tests it carried out. The result: a successful campaign and a long-term position. The marvel of this strategy was that all airlines carry out these tests; they are standard procedure. But everyone had missed the obvious, until KLM utilised it.

Promise toothpaste had a similar success. All toothpastes contain clove oil, but Promise was the first to use it in advertising. Today, Promise and clove oil have become synonymous and the brand has the second-highest market share. It is the only toothpaste in recent times to have established a significant share against the Colgate colossus.

Front of mind, front of share: This link between top of mind awareness and brand share is well-known. Research has repeatedly shown that few consumers recall more than seven brands and most recall only two or three. Various studies, including some at Stanford University, have shown that in many such markets, top of mind awareness is the single most important measure of market share. The key test for advertising then becomes whether it is successful in establishing high saliency. This has particular relevance for launch strategies. It is at this stage that a brand must establish top of mind awareness. Low-key launches often mean low-key market share.

Examples are easy to come by. Maggi noodles were launched with this understanding. So were Maggi sauces. Liril, Vicco Turmeric Vanishing Cream, Nirma. All have obtained high top of mind awareness and high market share.

The lesson for the '90s is clear. If consumers think of a brand first, they'll pick it off the shelf first.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Pinsel and Sentinel.
Now together. To bring you diskettes world leaders put their data and trust in.

Two names that stand for quality and reliability now come together.

Pinsel, a part of the progressive and innovative Jayant Dalal Group of Companies.

And Sentinel Technologies Inc., one of America's largest and leading manufacturers of diskettes.

Bringing you the same quality diskettes that major corporate houses all over the world insist on.

The Sentinel Standard

Pinsel Diskettes are manufactured on the same lines as Sentinel's.

On the same machines.

Using the same raw materials.

With the same burnishing process that provides an advanced degree of surface smoothness allowing for maximum head to media contact.

And meeting the same rigid standards.

These diskettes are available in two sizes – 5¼" and 8".

In single, double or high density with or without reinforced hubs.

The Cover Story

In bringing you a world-class diskette Pinsel has looked at both the sides.

The inside. And the outside.

Because a jacket is as important as the disk it protects.

Every Pinsel Diskette comes to you sealed in a carefully manufactured static-free jacket.

Lined with a non-woven, self-cleaning material that maximises the cleaning action and minimises wear.

Pinsel jackets are manufactured in-house, to tighter tolerances than industry standards providing the ultimate in media protection and overall diskette performance.

Shades Ahead

Along with world-class quality, Pinsel Diskettes offer one significant difference.

Colour.

Available in Medium Blue, Light Blue, Green, Yellow and Red, besides Black.

Offering the unique advantage of colour coding your data for easy identification.

The Pinsel Promise

Each Pinsel Diskette is 100% error-free not only on all tracks but also between tracks, to ensure the highest level of operational integrity.

So confident is Pinsel of the quality that it's put it down in writing.

A guarantee assuring flawless performance for as long as you own it.

Of course there's still another way to ensure that you're getting a world-class diskette.

Check with IBM, Wang, Honeywell, Commodore....

AVAILABLE IN 5 COLOURS, BESIDES BLACK.

PINSEL Diskettes.
Only the best in the world can match them.

Pinsel Computer Products Ltd., Jehangir Building, 133, M.G. Road, Bombay 400 001. Tel: 270833/272442. Tlx: 011-3426
Branches: Universal Building, 2/2A, Asaf Ali Road, New Delhi 110 002. Tel: 274466/278335. Tlx: 031-63131. • 46C, Chowringhee Road, Calcutta 700 071. Tel: 431518/447907. Tlx: 021-2435. • 50 Kasturi Ranga Road, Madras 600 018. Tel: 453449/453076. Tlx: 041-6295.

everest/87/PD/237

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Maruti owners can now travel

DUNLOP

Radial Class

From Dunlop,
the first and only radial for the Maruti.

DUNLOP
Radial Car Tyre

Dunlop is Dunlop.
Always ahead.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

It looks like marble...

feels like marble...

but is better than marble...

What is it?

It's WILDON cultured marble building products.

Now manufactured in India in technical collaboration with Wildon Industries Inc., a wholly owned subsidiary of the world-renowned FORMICA Corporation of USA.

Wildon cultured marble building product has the satin low lustre finish of natural marble. It has all the class, and elegance of marble. With the strength, benefits and economy of an ideal building product.

Made for the first time in the country with American collaboration.

It gives walls, and window sills a distinctive touch. Adds class to a reception or work area. It's ideal for vanity and kitchen counter tops, and bath tubs and surrounds.

What's more, it's chemical and stain resistant too, for years of enduring elegance. Can be supplied in any width and dimensions — and, for the discerning, can be 'custom-made' too!

WILDON W

WILDON INDIA LIMITED

6-3-655/12/A, Ground Floor,
Somajiguda, Hyderabad 500 482.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The more important the meeting, the more important the airline.

Flying on Lufthansa means reaching your business appointment on time.

Lufthansa

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE ECONOMY MONITOR

MONEY supply is still way above target, and much of this goes to the government sector. Exports have surged, imports are steady and the trade balance is down. The rupee has appreciated, bears still rule the roost on the stock-markets and gold prices are going through the roof.

All data are seasonally adjusted. Current trends are computed on the basis of six months (weekly data) or two years (monthly data) figures. The quarters referred to in the text are calendar year quarters.

Though wholesale prices seem to be under control, the last month saw an increase of over 1 per cent.

During the first quarter of 1987, consumer prices rose by 1.7 per cent. It remains to be seen how the budget will affect prices.

April saw a marginal easing of bank credit to the private sector. Nevertheless, it remains almost 5 per cent points behind money supply.

Money supply is growing well above target. Against a 16 per cent trend last year, the current trend is above 18 per cent.

There has been a 33 per cent growth in exports in the first quarter of 1987, but imports shot up in March. Overall the trade gap has shrunk.

The rupee has appreciated by 2.2 per cent over the last month. Going by this trend, the Government seems to have reversed policy.

A further 4.4 per cent fall in share prices in the last month has spread even more gloom at the bourse.

Gold prices have increased sharply, this may have been money flowing out of the depressed stock-markets.

WHOLESALE PRICES

Growth of items in April 1987

	% Growth
Tyres	36.89
Plywood	35.79
Onions	16.46
Fish	15.71
Boilers	14.84
Utensils	14.59
Cotton Seed	13.29
Gram	11.13
Oranges	9.45
Biscuits	9.09
Cigarettes	9.07
Tobacco Raw	8.22
Barley	8.17
Art Silk & Artificial Yarn	7.47
Power-Driven Pumps	6.54
Camel Back	6.27
Eggs	5.95
Cotton Raw	4.48
Groundnut Seeds	3.92
Goundnut Oil	3.83
Tobacco & Other Tobacco Products	3.52
Handloom & Powerloom Products	3.43
Tea	3.35
Groundnut Oilcake	3.31
Coffee	3.28
Pipes & Tubes	2.83
Solvent Extracted Oil	2.7
Ragi	2.68
Gingelly Oil	2.37
Masoor	2.26
Logs, Timber & Bamboo	2.24
Iron Ore	2.03
Furnace Oil	1.67
Bajra	1.59
Synthetic Fibres	1.49
Bananas	1.45
Tapioca	1.4
Woollen Cloth & Woollen Khadi	1.39
Lubricating Oil	1.3
Kerosene	1.29
Board	1.13
Diesel Oil	1.07
Polythene Moulding Powder	.99
Aviation Spirit	.93
Petrol	.93
Phosphatic Fertiliser	.92

Of the 139 series considered, 67 of them with a total weight of 39.32 had a positive growth and 72 of them with a total weight of 47.30 had a negative growth.

SELECTED INDICATORS

	1987	1986
Petroleum Crude
Thousand Tonnes, April	2,541	2,588
Petroleum Refinery Products
Thousand Tonnes, April	3,772	3,316
Fertiliser
Thousand Tonnes, April	500.8	377.2
Letters of Intents
Numbers, April	111	105
Industrial Licences
Numbers, April	46	53

Compiled by THE POLICY GROUP/ICIM

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE MARKETS

Looking Up

THE financial institutions finally returned to centre-stage in the trading ring. The result, last fortnight, was an end to the panic and some steadiness on the market. But other buyers remained hesitant, fearing that an upturn may still be some distance away. And the markets remained weak, lacking in confidence about the future. Without the support of the institutions, The Economic Times share price index would have continued to drop, instead of managing to hold its own as it did.

The institutional buying—announced in advance, at a meeting called by the finance secretary in New Delhi—was selective, and handled carefully in order to avoid losses in a market that could still plunge downwards. After all, companies continue to announce disappointing results, reflecting lower profits and often reduced dividends.

Nevertheless, it was a change to see that if several shares continued to lose ground, several other shares gained in value too. Among them were key units like Bajaj Auto, Century Enka, Mahindra & Mahindra, Orkay and Southern Petrochemicals. DCM gained because a court order allowed the company to go ahead with its plans to make money out of its real estate. But Tata Steel lost ground despite the Government clearing its bonus issue proposal. Tata Engineering lost too.

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

Some of the decisions taken by the market authorities and by others helped in arresting the decline. For instance, some shares were moved onto the forward list, and these quickly attracted buying support. Then, the Reserve Bank announced a slightly more liberal policy regarding bank finance for sharebrokers. And the Government itself announced tax reliefs for light commercial vehicle manufacturers. Coming after the relief announced earlier for the polyester industry, this suggested that the Government was now more alive to problems being faced by the industry.

Some of the the stability was also brought about by the mildly reassuring political news from New Delhi. But the earlier decision of the market authorities to lift the ban on short-selling, brought about fresh pressure from the bears, who (despite all the favourable pronouncements) continue to have the upper hand vis-a-vis the bulls.

There is little doubt that the market is going to be very choosy in the coming weeks. Though there will be good pickings available at the reduced prices that now prevail, weak shares will be subjected to careful scrutiny before anyone puts his money down. In the context of a slight industrial slowdown and a squeeze on profits, this is only to be expected. What it means for the market is the absence of any real hope of an immediate return of buoyancy.

ACTIVE STOCKS

	1987 HIGH	1987 LOW	CLOSE 22.5.87	Change in Fortnight
Ashok Leyland	35.50	28.00	35.00	3.00 +
Associated Cement	241.50	170.00	173.00	8.00 –
Atlas Copco	150.00	105.00	130.00	12.00 +
Associated Bearings	810.00	500.00	725.00	65.00 +
Avery India	169.00	132.00	132.00	13.00 –
Bajaj Auto	4925.00	3950.00	4375.00	25.00 +
Baroda Rayon	260.00	205.00	228.75	5.00 –
Bata India	160.00	120.50	129.00	7.00 –
Bayer	785.00	600.00	750.00	15.00 –
Bharat Forge	79.00	63.00	79.00	8.00 +
Blow Plast	126.00	92.50	101.00	2.00 –
Bombay Dyeing	78.00	40.50	74.25	3.25 +
Britania Ind.	190.00	145.00	167.00	10.00 –
Brooke Bond	101.00	77.00	92.25	1.75 –
Ceat Tyres	70.00	48.00	65.00	nil /
Century Enka	1160.00	850.00	960.00	80.00 +
Chloride India	148.00	71.00	71.00	14.00 –
Citurgia	70.00	53.00	70.00	1.00 +
Colgate	391.25	327.50	372.00	9.50 +
DCM	39.00	23.00	35.00	12.00 +
Dunlop	77.75	71.25	72.00	0.50 –
E.I. Hotels	56.00	41.00	46.00	3.50 +
Escorts	84.00	42.00	43.00	5.00 –
Finolex Cables	190.00	114.00	180.00	2.50 +
Food Specialities	188.50	126.50	128.00	23.00 +
Garware Nylon	36.00	20.50	21.00	1.50 –
G.E. Shipping	23.00	16.00	22.50	4.50 +
Gujarat St. Fertilisers	183.50	120.00	128.00	7.00 –
Grasim Ind.	95.00	80.00	88.00	2.50 –
Hind. Aluminium	126.00	71.00	104.50	3.50 –
Hind. Cocoa	262.50	205.00	205.00	10.00 –
Hindustan Lever	212.00	165.00	180.00	6.00 –
Hindustan Motors	35.35	22.70	22.90	1.35 –
Hind. Dorr	407.50	295.00	365.00	25.00 –
IEL	61.50	45.00	54.00	4.00 +
Indian Organic	78.00	51.00	63.00	6.00 +
Indian Rayon	76.50	51.00	58.25	4.25 –
Indrol	510.00	215.00	228.00	12.00 –
Ingersoll-Rand	352.50	272.50	341.25	1 25 +
ITC	78.00	40.00	49.00	5.00 +
J.K. Synthetics	93.50	47.00	53.25	0.75 –
Kinetic Engineering	312.50	220.00	235.00	7.50 –
Kirloskar Cummins	97.50	67.00	95.00	2.50 +
KSB Pumps	375.00	220.00	365.00	3.75 +
Larson & Toubro	100.00	67.00	71.00	0.50 –
Lipton	79.50	60.00	71.50	nil
LML Ltd.	32.00	13.00	16.00	0.50 +
Madura Coats	73.00	66.00	71.50	1.00 –
Mahindra & Mahindra	55.00	38.00	55.00	11.00 +
Motor Industries	400.00	335.00	335.00	22.50 –
Mukand Iron	81.00	63.50	78.00	1.50 +
National Organic	577.50	435.00	450.00	nil
Nirlon	26.00	11.00	15.00	1.00 +
Orkay Silk Mills	115.00	30.00	36.00	1.00 +
Peico Electronics	57.25	36.00	41.50	1.50 +
Otis Elevator	215.00	155.00	210.00	5.00 +
Ponds	375.00	295.00	315.00	5.00 +
Premier Auto	30.00	21.00	23.00	1.00 –
Ranbaxy	135.00	79.00	81.00	6.00 –
Raymond	79.00	64.00	72.00	4.00 –
Reckitt & Colman	200.00	160.00	163.00	4.00 –
Reliance Industries	277.00	118.00	136.00	nil
Rechardson Hind.	326.25	210.00	325.00	15.00 +
Shriram Fibres	36.00	24.00	24.00	4.00 –
Sandoz	140.00	70.00	77.75	2.25 –
Siemens India	144.50	68.00	80.00	7.00 +
SPIC	53.50	36.50	43.00	2.00 +
Tata Steel	1207.50	945.00	1002.50	22.50 –
Telco	665.00	415.00	425.00	130.00 –
Vulcan Laval	62.50	45.00	60.00	5.00 +

WORLD VALUE OF RUPEE

COUNTRY	CURRENCY	UNIT	Selling Rates Rs	TT Buying Rates Rs
Australia	Dollar	1	9.1627	9.1110
Austria	Schilling	100	102.0143	101.1547
Bahrain	Dinar	1	33.6223	33.5742
Bangladesh	Taka	100	42.3536	42.2960
Canada	Dollar	1	9.4524	9.3765
Denmark	Kroner	1	1.9055	1.8909
Egypt	Pound	1	9.3900	9.3200
France	Franc	1	2.1413	2.1253
Hong Kong	Dollar	1	1.6307	1.6197
Indonesia	Rupiah	100	0.0700	0.0700
Iran	Rial	100	18.0100	17.9832
Italy	Lira	100	0.9900	0.9800
Japan	Yen	100	9.10	8.95
Kenya	Shilling	1	0.7942	0.7739
Kuwait	Dinar	1	46.4032	46.2389
Malaysia	Dollar	1	5.1623	5.1117
Mauritius	Rupee	1	1.0210	1.0000
Nepal	Rupee	1	0.6020	0.5990
Netherlands	Guilder	1	6.3278	6.3165
Pakistan	Rupee	1	0.7399	0.7200
Singapore	Dollar	1	6.0287	5.9804
Spain	Peseta	1	0.1001	0.0998
Sri Lanka	Rupee	1	0.4422	0.4300
Sweden	Kroner	1	2.0451	2.0292
Switzerland	Franc	1	8.7250	8.6598
Tanzania	Shilling	1	0.2200	0.2100
Thailand	Baht	100	50.2432	49.0000
UK	Pound	1	21.3720	21.2426
USA	Dollar	1	12.7150	12.6350
UAE	Dirham	1	3.2620	3.2336
USSR	Rouble	1	20.2720	20.2230
W. Germany	Deutschmark	1	7.1633	7.1123

These rates were supplied by The Bank of Tokyo Limited, New Delhi and quoted between the banks on 22.5.87.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Polyplex.

A material change... towards better living.

Invest today in the products of tomorrow.
That's the Polyplex philosophy.
And it makes good business sense.

Take Tensilised Polyester Film.
It has an astonishing range of attributes and applications. Yet is produced in only 5 countries... by just 10 companies worldwide. Now this new wonder material will soon be manufactured for the first time in India – by Polyplex.

A many-splendoured pioneering venture. Providing the material for change to better products.
Stimulating industry and employment.
Saving foreign exchange.
Transforming the very substance of a host of items that are part of daily living.

Yes, Polyplex is proud of its project.
And sure of its prospects!

POLYPLEX

CORPN. LTD.

75 Amrit Nagar, Behind NDSE -I, New Delhi-110003
Phones: 611307, 619694 Telex : 31-63380

The future---with confidence

Sobhagya/93/87

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ECOLOGY

India's Vanishing Wildlife

SNOW LEOPARD

"THE sun had not long risen, and the foliage of the trees and the slender fronds of the bamboos cast long shadows across the glade. Here stood three or four herds of spotted deer, some browsing on the grass, some standing on their hind legs to pluck the young shoots from the bamboos; a herd of nilgai was on the bank of the water course; a pair of four-horned antelope were feeding beneath a banyan tree: monkeys, with grey-fringed black faces, were clinging to the trees; pea-fowl in numbers were not far from a pool in the nullah; two wild dogs, which should surely have caused the disappearance of all this game, stood unconcernedly in the middle of the glen; there were before me the tracks of a tiger and a leopard; and a bear, climbing in search of honey, had scored deep marks with his claws on the bole of a tree.

Farther up the hillside, a sambar belled loudly; perhaps the tiger, which was not far ahead, passed that way; the nearest hinds uttered shrill barks of alarm and soon all disappeared like spectres in the shades of the forest."

Photographs by RAJESH BEDI

SIX decad
R.G. Bu
his book
Deccan, the su wildlife. Like forests, the w shed, never t plain, which view of the wi into endless t crane fields. H village herds o bare glades. T
the frightened roar of the ti langurs—all
tant dream,
raucous cawi barking of the a tractor. An everywhere.

From the Himalayas, to rest India and the south, In been relentles
Deprived of t ruthlessly poa are now maki
last stand in parks and 254

RE

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SIX decades after Brigadier-General R.G. Burton recorded this scene in his book, Sport and Wildlife in the Deccan, the sun is slowly setting on India's wildlife. Like spectres in the shades of the forests, the wildlife Burton saw has vanished, never to return. The vast Gangetic plain, which offered him a magnificent view of the wild, has now been converted into endless tracts of wheat and sugarcane fields. Houses have replaced trees. Village herds of cattle graze sullenly on the bare glades. The distant howl of the jackal, the frightened yelp of the deer, the deep roar of the tiger, the chattering of the langurs—all these have faded like a distant dream, only to be replaced by the raucous cawing of the crows, the noisy barking of the dogs and the steady chug of a tractor. And, above all, people, people everywhere.

From the rocky mountains of the Himalayas, to the vast grasslands of central India and the sparsely forested hills of the south, India's once rich wildlife has been relentlessly pursued and destroyed. Deprived of their original habitats and ruthlessly poached, India's wild animals are now making what could well be their last stand in the country's 59 national parks and 254 sanctuaries.

Yet this large number of reserves really means that all the country's wildlife is now crammed into an ecologically insufficient 4 per cent of the country's geographical area, occupying hardly 15 per cent of the rapidly dwindling reserved forests. "What is left for the animals today are small islands of protection in a vast ocean of human habitation," says H.S. Panwar, director of the Wildlife Institute of India, Dehra Dun. And even in these sheltered islands, increasing conflict between the wildlife and the people living around the area threatens to demolish the animals' last fortresses.

In fact, so systematically has India's wildlife been decimated that while only 13 species were in the Central Government's endangered list in 1952, the number went up to 41 species of mammals, two species of reptiles and 18 species of birds by 1972. Since then, the Government had been forced to periodically revise the list and, by November last year, the number of endangered mammals had shot up from 41 to 70, reptiles from two to 16 and birds from 18 to 38. "That number is only going to go up," warns J.C. Daniel, curator of the Bombay Natural History Society (BNHS). A despondent Thomas Mathew, chief executive of the World Wildlife Fund's campaign in India, adds: "We are fighting a

GOLDEN LANGUR

HANGUL

MONAL PHEASANT

MARBLED CAT

RED PANDA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

losing battle. Despite all the propaganda about saving wildlife, it just hasn't got into the minds and souls of our people."

Species after species has fallen under the farmer's plough or the poacher's gun and is heading rapidly towards extinction. There are examples everywhere. The snow leopard was once the lord of the upper Himalayas. Its range spread from Kashmir to Bhutan, where it roamed the rocky heights at night, preying on wild sheep and goats. Its soft grey coat, dappled with rosette-shaped black dots, made it the best looking cat in the region. Today, it is visible only on the shoulders of fashionable women—as fur coats. In the wilds, ecologists can confirm its existence only by the pug marks. Optimistic estimates put the present number of snow leopards at less than 300, and dropping rapidly. By the turn of the century, it might, like the Indian cheetah that became extinct in 1948, exist only in books.

In the alpine scrubs of the lower Himalayas, the male musk deer, with its fierce looking canine teeth, is the gentlest creature of the region. But it is still widely hunted for the little gland above its abdomen, whose secretions perfume the cosmetic industry in the West. Each musk pod, when dried, produces between 20 gm and 50 gm of powder and to extract one kg 25 male deers have to be killed. An estimated 50 kg of musk, worth over Rs 3 crore, is clandestinely exported to Japan.

ASIATIC LION

TIGER

While the king of Corbett's India is making a slow come-back in the grassy maidans of Central India, the swamp deer or barasingha is making a quick exit. Hunted for its meat and deprived of an estimated 80 per cent of its original habitat, the barasingha, with its magnificent antlers, is now mainly confined to the Kanha National Park in Madhya Pradesh. The Hispid Hare, that scampered around on the foothills of the Himalayas near Assam, is also heading towards oblivion. The Indian wolf, long treated as vermin and wantonly killed, has quickly moved into the highly endangered list. The common Indian leopard has now become so uncommon that six years ago it was moved into the same highly endangered category.

Deep south, the story is no better. The Nilgiri Thar, the sturdy mountain goat that perches itself acrobatically on the steep grassy downs, faces extinction as it is regularly killed for its meat. The chatter of the black-faced Nilgiri Langur in the trees below is slowly falling silent. The oil from its fat is sold as an all-purpose balm and its flesh relished by poachers. The Indian python, in recent years, has been mercilessly killed for its skin. And the Indian elephant, believed to exist in such large

GHARIAL

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

POACHING

The Big Kill

At Madras and Calcutta, a buyer can choose the kind of snake skin he wants: cobra, python or rat snake. In Trivandrum and Coimbatore, if someone has the right connections, he can have his pick of elephant tusks. In the busy markets of Srinagar, a traveller can name the fur he wants—and can get it. And in Lucknow, there are any number of people willing to get a person venison or even tiger fat.

Despite severe government restrictions, poaching continues to flourish. Every year, an estimated 100 elephants, 30 rhinoceros, 200 musk deer, scores of snow leopards and jackals and over 10 lakh snakes are ruthlessly killed and sold in the booming international skin market. And the prices they fetch show inflationary trends. A rhino horn which is sold for as little as Rs 1,000 in the Guwahati black market fetches as much as Rs 50,000 abroad. A pair of tusks is sold for Rs 30,000 within the country and commands three times the price overseas. Tiger skins, which are sold for Rs 4,000 near Dudhwa, fetch around Rs 10,000 abroad.

The poachers are getting more ingenious. Being avid animal watchers, they use their knowledge with killing effect. At the Kaziranga National Park in Assam they know that the rhinoceros prefers to come back to the same place to empty its bowels. Poachers simply find a rhino dung heap, wait till it comes to the spot and shoot it down. In the Kashmir valley, they wait for the antlered stag's plaintive call for its mate to locate the animal and kill it. And the gangs of poachers are getting more daring and better equipped. At Dudhwa, they put poison in bait and wait till the tiger eats it and dies.

The extensive poaching has resulted in the depletion of several endangered species and is also seriously affecting the genetic balance. Since it is the male elephant that grows tusks in India over 750 have been killed in the past six years. This has brought the male:female ratio down from 1:5 to 1:10.

While poachers are getting more organised, the forest departments continue to be too badly equipped and short of staff to meet the growing threat. In Uttar Pradesh, for instance, to patrol a forest area of 51,266 sq km, there are only 438 wildlife guards. This means that each has a beat of 117 sq km—against the Central Government-prescribed norm of one guard for every 10 sq km. Guards have no option but to either close their eyes to poaching or even better, get a cut from the poachers by conniving with them. R.P. Sharma, the state's chief wildlife warden, candidly admits: "We are ill-equipped to deal with poaching. We have several plans but no money to implement them." Other states face the same problem.

Removing tusks (below); and arrested poacher: trading in death

Government laws have not helped either, with skin and tusk traders finding any number of loopholes to swoop through. Last November, in a bid to check tusk poaching, the Government banned trade of Indian ivory and asked all the dealers to liquidate their stocks within two months.

But the flaw was that since there were over 7,500 ivory carvers in the country, they were allowed to import African ivory. All the traders declared their stock as African ivory and since it can't be distinguished from Indian tusks, trade continues unchecked.

The whole poaching racket is complicated by the fact that Jammu & Kashmir, using its special status under the Constitution, enacted a wildlife law that made a mockery of the Indian Wildlife Act. While illegal trading in big-cat furs and foxes would invite imprisonment in the rest of the country, in Kashmir the offence usually results in only a fine.

And when the Central Government pressured the state to change its laws, it agreed but said that first traders should be given time to liquidate their existing stock. The result: traders declared mind-boggling stocks of 1.8 lakh jackal skins, 85,000 red fox skins and 20,000 various types of furs—more than the total population of wildlife in the country.

Worse, even if and when the poachers are caught, court battles are long-drawn out and very few end in convictions. Says an exasperated forest official: "Statutory protection doesn't make one single dent. Most of the operative parts of the law become unenforceable. In effect, it tells us to go climb a tree."

—RAJ CHENGAPPA,
DILIP AWASHTI
and INDRANIL BANERJI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PANTHER

numbers that it did not need legal protection, has also been pushed into the highly endangered list recently.

Others that find themselves on the present endangered list are the desert fox, the golden langur, the bison, the Marbled cat, the Himalayan Ibex, the Indian dolphin and the sloth bear. And it is not just the animals who are in trouble. Birds like the black-necked crane, the pretty lesser floricans, the monal pheasant and the Jerdon's Courser (recently rediscovered in Andhra Pradesh) are seriously endangered. Among reptiles and amphibians, the Agra monitor lizard and several species of turtles are in trouble while the Ganges gharial, though being bred in captivity, is still threatened. The list has become so long that Vinod Rishi, field director, Sunderbans Tiger Reserve, says: "It would be easier to remember what doesn't need protection."

Only now are ecologists working out the true extent of the damage. Computing habitat details and animal populations for the first time, the Wildlife Institute of India has come out with some stunning findings. The Indian wolf, for instance, has lost 87 per cent of its original habitat; the Indian Gazelle, 88.4 per cent; the sloth bear: 83 per cent and the Hoolock Gibbon

HABITAT

Man vs Animal

TERROR stalks the dozen villages surrounding the Hazaribagh National Park in Bihar after unidentified animals—suspected to be wolves—have killed 122 children since 1980.

In the Billigirirangan hills of Karnataka, a herd of 60 elephants charged to a village pond and drank water thirstily while people fled in surprise.

And, in the foothills of the Himalayas in Uttar Pradesh, villagers live in constant fear of tiger attacks. Already an estimated 422 people have been killed since 1978.

Man-animal conflict, as ecologists call it, is a growing problem that threatens to undo the Government's efforts to conserve the dwindling wildlife resources in the country. Predicts M.K.Ranjit Sinh, India's wildlife preservation director: "The edges of parks and sanctuaries are going to be the main battleground for the future of conservation in the country."

With wildlife in India dwindling to its lowest in the '60s, the next decade saw the Government setting up as many as 14 national parks and 150 sanctuaries. This meant that villagers around the area, who had earlier used the forests to collect wood for fuel and graze their cattle, suddenly found themselves deprived of their traditional rights. And since the surrounding land was already stripped of forest cover, there was no alternative but to go into the forests; and the conflicts began.

Almost all the parks and sanctuaries are in trouble. At the Bharatpur bird sanctuary, frequent clashes have broken out between foresters and villagers over grazing cattle and the death toll stands at seven. At the Dudhwa National Park, where man-eating tigers have become a serious problem, last year the problem worsened when foresters banned the system of "mati" or wood and grass collection rights for the Tharu tribals living in 37 villages around the park. The tribals use the wood and grass for renovating their huts every year. Foresters argued that the influx of 400 carts and thousands of men into the core area of the sanctuary was one of the key reasons why many tigers turned man-eaters. But because as many as 25,000 people depend on the jungle for wood and elephant grass, the problem is turning political. As a local Congress(I) worker said: "If 25,000 voters are being deprived of their rights, do you think our MLA will sit quietly and watch?"

Cattle grazing inside a forest: serious threat

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

India's only ape), 87 per cent.

In fact, habitat loss is one of the major causes of the rapid depletion of wildlife. The first to go were the grasslands and easily conquerable scrub and thorn jungles that dominated the plains, in which roamed the tiger, the cheetah, the blackbuck, the Hispid Hare, the Indian ass, the wild ass, the wild buffalo, the barasingha and several other species of deer. Then fell the woodlands, where the elephants, the leopards and the monkeys flourished. And then followed the high mountain regions, where several rare species of goats and smaller cats lived.

Most of the animals that once roamed vast stretches are now reduced to single habitats. And even though some of them still figure in large enough numbers, they are under the constant threat of extinction. As eminent ecologist Madhav Gadgil points out: "The real threat is homogenisation of habitats. We are losing the mosaic and instead shrinking into a few islands. Catastrophic events like floods and disease can result in the whole species being wiped out."

Examples of single habitats abound. In Manipur's Keibul Lamjao National Park, dense floating vegetation in a lake live the Thamin or the Indian brow antlered deer. Extensively poached by the locals, the deer faced extinction in the '70s, their number dropping to just 14. Although their numbers have since increased to 50, there are signs that the floating vegetation is naturally decreasing, thereby shrinking the Thamin's fragile habitat.

THAMIN

PANGOLIN

Not far from where the Thamins fight for survival, the Guwahati Trunk Road veers into swamp lands beside the Brahmaputra river. On the marshy grasslands on a clear day, herds of rhinoceros can be glimpsed grazing in peaceful unconcern. This is part of the Kaziranga Forest Reserve where the Great Indian one-horned rhinoceros, which once wallowed in the swamps stretching from the lower Himalayas to Burma, makes its last stand. But even in its last refuge, the one-horned rhinoceros is under constant threat. Expanding tea gardens and widespread deforestation have forced other animals like tigers, leopards and elephants to seek refuge in the same sanctuary. While the tigers and leopards now kill and eat straying rhino calves, the elephants chomp their way through much of the tree cover. And rampant poaching threatens to dwindle their numbers further.

And in the undulating hills of the Gir forest, the Asiatic lion fights its last battle

At Hazaribagh, where children are killed regularly by animals, a different kind of problem exists. Forest officials are still not able to ascertain whether it was the wolves that killed the children or vice-versa. Ever since the menace began, the Government launched flushing-out operations, hiring shikaris and even offering a reward of Rs 5,000 for killing the wolves. Over 12 wolves and two leopards were killed in the operations, but the child-lifting continues. Bihar Additional Chief Conservator of Forests N.P. Prasad has the weird theory that the deaths began after the Hazaribagh jail authorities threw unclaimed bodies quite literally to the wolves, giving them a taste of human blood. With no concrete evidence yet, the Bihar Government last week banned the shooting of wolves.

SHYAM TEKWANI

With cattle grazing becoming a political issue, most foresters just turn the other way when cattle are spotted. The result, says an ecologist, is that "now most sanctuaries have 65 per cent cattle and 35 per cent wildlife". As a result of over-grazing, the undergrowth in most reserve forests has been depleted and unpalatable weeds are growing in their place. There is a danger of animals catching disease that afflict cattle, like rinderpest. Apart from that, animals like tigers and leopards start preying on the cattle, leading to even more conflict.

And keeping no buffer zone between sanctuaries and cultivated land is an open invitation to animals to either raid fields or attack domestic animals and people. Near the Palamau reserve forest, elephants frequently raid crops in the 80 villages that surround it. In the Bandipur Mudamalai region, farmers now put up electric fences to keep the elephants out. And in central India, hordes of bar-headed goose swallow freshly-planted seedlings like vacuum cleaners do dust. As ornithologist S.A. Hussain says: "How can you tell the farmer to protect wildlife and let his lands go to hell?"

There are other problems as well. In three-quarters of the sanctuaries the Government is fighting legal battles over resettlement of villages, grazing rights and fuelwood collection. In the Palamau reserve, three villages—Lattoo, Khajnum and Rand—are located in the heart of the core area and officials are finding it difficult to shift the entire population of 552 because they can't find alternative sites.

As the population grows, ecologists predict that the man-animal conflict will escalate to serious proportions. And they are pessimistic of the outcome. Ecologist A.J.T. John Singh says: "In our fight to protect wildlife, we would have only minor victories and major losses."

—RAJ CHENGAPPA, FARZAND AHMED and DILIP AWASHTI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

1922 The fascinating story of cables in India begins...

1987 The fascinating success story continues as...

Incab becomes Incab Industries Limited

65 years ago, the history of cable-making in India began at Jamshedpur, with The Indian Cable Company Limited. The Company became so well known that it began to be known as INCAB for short from 1966.

And now, to reflect its new industrial impetus, INCAB becomes INCAB INDUSTRIES LIMITED.

Incab Industries. What does the name signify?

Simply this — that India's first and foremost cablemakers are gearing up for a future which holds promise of something new.

New attitudes blended with 65 years of rich experience in professionalism, skill and technology. New achievements on the horizon. New challenges to be met. New ways to serve you better.

All summed up in a new name. Incab Industries Limited.

INCAB

INCAB INDUSTRIES LTD.
9, Hare Street, Calcutta 700 001.
Branches at : Ahmedabad, Bangalore, Bombay, Jabalpur, Jamshedpur, Kanpur, Ludhiana, Madras, New Delhi and Secunderabad.
Works : Jamshedpur and Pune

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BLACK BUCK

E. HANUMANTHA RAO

for survival. The once proud lions dominated the grasslands but they were so systematically exterminated that by 1920, their numbers had dwindled to around 50. But with the Gir forest declared a sanctuary, their numbers have now reached a stable 200.

The Indian elephant too is in trouble. Although there are an estimated 23,000 elephants in the country, their habitats have been severely fragmented. The tuskers in the south face a serious threat of poaching. In the north-eastern states, which harbour the largest population of elephants in the country, they are under attack for other reasons. Meghalaya forests, for instance, can support just 750 elephants though the state has over 2,000 elephants. Much of their habitat has been degraded because of the slash-and-burn cultivation followed by the tribals. Deprived of fodder, the elephants have even started raiding crops. BNHS ecologist Ajay Desai, who recently made a survey of the problem, says: "The Asian elephant is slowly on its way out."

Probably the most successful conservation effort in the country was Project Tiger. The king of the jungle once roamed the entire Indian sub-continent but by 1970, tigers had been so rapidly killed off that their total number stood at just over 1,500. Stepping in just in time, the Government banned the killing of tigers and set up nine reserves, enabling their numbers to increase dramatically. By last year, there were 15 tiger reserves harbouring over 1,800 tigers.

Unwittingly, the Government's effort also showed that if the prime predator in the forest is well protected, the rest of the wildlife in the sanctuary also flourishes. Each of the reserves show higher numbers of deer, antelopes, leopards and wild dogs. But if foresters are busy patting themselves on the back over Project Tiger's success, they can hardly be complacent. As Union Environment Secretary T.N. Seshan says: "We know the battle has just begun."

The Government's move to establish more sanctuaries and national parks may protect animals in the short run but it will come into increasing conflict with India's burgeoning population (see box). The primary mistake the Government is making is that, while it cordons off area for wildlife, it does not provide alternative sources of fuel wood and cattle fodder to the deprived villagers.

INCREASINGLY, ecologists are talking of making wildlife protection go hand in hand with the alleviation of poverty. The buzz word now is "rural eco-development". And its key phrases are: find alternative sources of fodder for cattle while establishing sanctuaries, improve animal husbandry methods so that the cattle population dwindles, afforest areas around sanctuaries so that fuel needs of villagers are met and keep your fingers crossed and hope that family planning programmes will finally succeed in halting the galloping rate of population growth. As ornithologist A.R. Rahmani says: "The best conservationist is one with a small family."

Another area of neglect is the census of wild animals. Current government statistics, even at Project Tiger reserves, are at best wild guesses, as ecologist Ullas Karanth exposed recently. Taking pug marks from four captive tigers, Karanth subjected six wildlife managers to a test. None answered correctly. One even put the number at 24. Moroever, Karanth points out that if official statistics were to be believed, the tigers were breeding at an unbelievable 6 to 10 per cent.

The Government conservation effort has also failed to develop a scientific data base on wildlife to help manage the existing sanctuaries. By concentrating on the larger mammals, the lesser known species have been totally neglected. Conservationists are realising how delicate the ecological balance is in the wild. Even the decimation of a minor snake could lead to a chain reaction of extinction and cause the detrimental proliferation of one species.

Fortunately, of late, there has been a growing environmental consciousness, both among the people and the Government. People are beginning to understand that the wiping out of wildlife is not an isolated catastrophe. Along with the animals, forests would denude, rivers would flood and vital top-soil would be washed away. In short, it would be total ecological disaster. As ecologist Rom Whittaker puts it: "Wildlife is just the icing on the cake. Without forests and water resources, we are writing ourselves off." Adds naturalist E.R.C. Davidar: "Habitat destruction will get everyone, including us."

Ecologists shudder to think what would happen by the turn of the century when the population crosses one billion. In Dehra Dun, United Nations expert Allan Rodgers asks: "What would happen when the pushing tide of humanity engulfs the remaining natural areas? Where will the animals go, what will we do then? I think it's frightening." There are very few who don't.

—RAJ CHENGAPPA with bureau reports

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Of Inhuman Bondage

PARAJA
by GOPINATH MOHANTY
Oxford University Press
Price: Rs 50; Pages: 373

THE money-lender's clutches are like a spider's; and for the victim the web is invisible until too late. The passage to inhuman bondage of Gopinath Mohanty's tribal protagonists takes just a moment—the quick clink of the money-lender's coins.

Scores of articles and novels have been written about the stranglehold of money-lenders and of their usurping the rights of tribals. Yet, hardly has any outsider penetrated the bamboo curtain to present these people as individuals. But Mohanty's gripping novel Paraja has succeeded in doing just that: it brings to life the aboriginals living in the Katapura jungles in Orissa. Readers can see the yellow olsi flowers of their hillsides; taste the sweet liquor of the mahua flowers which makes that path to bondage all the shorter; hear the sounds of the tiger-infested jungles, the teasing laughter of the women; and feel the frenzy of their orgiastic harvest festivals.

Paraja is a story of the inexorable descent of the family of Sukru Jani, the "granite-faced" tribal patriarch—poor but proud—into bondage. Destiny sucks him and his sons, Mandia and Tikri, and daughter Jili into its vortex with the tragic inevitability of a Hardy novel. The men are tricked into becoming bonded labourers to the money-lender; and Jili, independent and yearning for love, into becoming his mistress.

The protagonists, the wretched of the earth, are really the victims of a changing world and its see-saw dynamics: from being lords of the jungle they become slaves on their own land—the biggest tragedy being that they are unaware of the process that has made them the dispossessed.

The novel—the translation of which from Oriya to English took over four decades—also studies the encroachment of the world of materialism on the simple life of the tribal. The most telling passages are about the court where an optimistic—and finally defiant—Sukru Jani sues the money-lender for his land only to find his whole world crumble before him. He finds that the court writer and the temple priest, after fleecing him have deliberately misled him about the date of his appearance in court, resulting in the dismissal of the case. Worse still is the final severing of the ancestral umbilical cord from the land which is more than just a means of livelihood for the tribal; the Parajas believe that their ancestors live on as stones on their fields.

The novel, at one level, is about the corruption of the tribals: they betray each other to please the man in power, even if he is way down the ladder. The red turbans or bands of the tax collector or forest guard are enough to chill their simple souls. The loss of innocence is movingly delineated in the change in Jili: she even begins to enjoy her new but fragile status (the new saris, the ornaments, the power) as the money-lender's mistress and is quite indifferent to what he is doing to her father and brothers. Paraja is a lament of this loss of innocence.

Where Jnanpith award winner Mohanty goes wrong in an otherwise compelling narrative is the insertion of explanatory asides which is like the intrusion of documentary footage in a feature film. The social anthropologist in Mohanty often gets the better of the writer in him. For example, the author attempts to define the tribal's perceptions of poverty and its relationship to possessions: "Only, in this primitive world, the individual's wealth is measured in terms of the quantity of grain in his attic. On the surface, there is little evidence of class snobbery or prejudice, but sooner or later its existence becomes inescapably obvious." There are long explanations about the Parajas' various festivals and customs which would be more appropriate in textbooks.

There are however, metaphors and passages of prose that have the power of poetry. The cameo of the headman's bonded labourer, the village idiot, touchingly gross like the hunchback of Notre Dame, remains etched in the reader's mind: "As he made his way back he looked even more monstrous than before, like a gigantic frog that pauses every now and then between bursts of ungainly movement." Or: "He followed Jili everywhere—a hideous shadow, like a black cloud floating behind the moon. The shadow kept its distance, but it was a shadow nevertheless."

Or the relationship between man and soil: "Man does not possess the soil: he is possessed by it. He can grip the soil in his fist, but it laughs, and waits; and one day he drops down, and the soil is enriched. Grass and mandia and rice grow out of him, and they too fall back into the soil.... The soil was rising higher and higher inside Sukru Jani's battered body."

Mohanty's vision is grim indeed. There is no escape for the tribal dispossessed. Unlike Job, Sukru Jani does not even possess the patience to test the gods. In fact, his gods are cruel: "Their tears soaked the earth but were powerless to melt human hearts. And their gods laughed." Nor does he have the comforting cushion of fate: karma is a concept alien to the tribal.

—MADHU JAIN

EXTRACT

From every hill the red tracks came down and converged at the Sahukar's house like the threads in a spider's web, and along these tracks came many a tribesman from the remotest hills. Some brought their wives' ornaments to the Sahukar, wrapped in bits of rag. Others brought the produce from their fields. Others again had nothing to pledge but their own bodies. And the Sahukar's house swallowed everything up, and nothing that entered ever came out again; and the house grew and bulged.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Are you a dynamic young man ... just completed 10+2?

Here's a chance to chart the course of your future... hand in hand with Indian Navy.

1. Eligibility Conditions :-

a) Age:- Must be between 16 1/2–19 yrs (i.e. born between 01 Sep'68 to 01 Mar'71) for Executive Branch and 17 - 20 yrs (i.e. born between 01 Nov '67 and 31 Oct'70) for Technical Branch.

b) Educational Qualification :- (i) Candidates passing 10+2 or equivalent examinations from any recognised Indian University/ Board with first class and securing 65% or more marks for Executive Branch & 70% or more marks for Technical Branch, in Physics, Chemistry and Mathematics (passing in these subjects individually). (ii) Candidates should also have studied English (Core or Elective) either at the X or at the XII Class level and passed a public examination, obtaining atleast 50% marks.

c) Physical Standards :- Candidates must have a height of atleast 157 cms with co-related weight, well developed and proportionate chest with atleast 5cms expansion and have unaided eye-sight (distant vision) 6/6, 6/9 for the Executive Branch and 6/12, 6/18 for the Technical Branch.

d) An unmarried male Indian Citizen

2. Vacancies : Executive Branch - 80
Technical Branch - 66

3. Training Pattern: Selected candidates will be entered as Cadets. On successful completion of training the Executive Branch Cadets will be awarded a B.Sc degree and Technical Cadets will be awarded a B.Tech degree and commissioned as Acting Sub-Lieutenant.

4. The Navy Offers You: On attaining the rank of Midshipman after 2 1/2 years of training the Navy will pay you Rs. 1500/- and on being commissioned as Ag Sub Lieutenant total emoluments of Rs. 2600/- p.m. approximately, which of course, increase as you serve on. Free food and generous outfit allowances, accomodation and allied services at nominal rates, 60 days Annual Leave and 20 days Casual Leave with generous Leave Travel Concessions, Free Medical facilities for self and family including dependent parents, canteen facilities, group insurance cover of Rs. 2 lakhs at a nominal premium of Rs. 200/- p.m., Group Housing Scheme benefits, low-interest rate loans for purchasing a car/scooter and house-building, concession in Indian Airlines flights as per rules, opportunities for higher studies and in-service training at various Institutes of Research and Development.

5. IMPORTANT :

(i) For more details and the application format please see the detailed advertisement which appeared in the leading National Newspapers/Employment News during the months of May/June '87 OR write to the Directorate of Manpower & Recruitment, Naval Headquarters, 208, 'C' Wing, Sena Bhawan, New Delhi-110 011. or ring 3011213 or 3012047.

(ii) Last date for receipt of applications for the Executive Branch & Technical Branch is 15th June'87 and 6th July'87 respectively.

(iii) Separate applications are required to be forwarded if a candidate desires to be considered for both the branches.

INDIAN NAVY
A career par excellence

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PROFESSIONAL MANAGEMENT GROUP

Selling Sportsmen

THE by-line is now as familiar as, well, Sunil Gavaskar. Television viewers now wake up, every Sunday morning, to the announcement: "And now, Sunil Gavaskar presents...." And thereby hangs a commercial tale that has all the ingredients of one of the Little Master's memorable innings.

In 1985, Sumedh Shah, the then executive director of Trikaya Advertising, met Gavaskar and asked him whether he had read What they don't teach you at the Harvard Business School. Gavaskar replied that he hadn't but knew all there was to know about the International Management Group, the $ 500-million organisation that author Mark McCormack had written about. McCormack and his Group, famous as the biggest manager of sports celebrities, have made millions by procuring contracts of product endorsement for celebrity sports-persons like Bjorn Borg, Chris Evert Lloyd and Martina Navratilova. Shah suggested that Gavaskar begin a similar outfit in India. The Indian cricketer, ever the canny businessman, agreed. That partnership was the start of the Professional Management Group (PMG), an organisation which has changed for good the relationship between commercialism and sportsmen in India.

Said Gavaskar: "At that time, my only consideration was that I used to find it too embarrassing to talk figures with people who approached me for advertisements and endorsing products. I was too shy to negotiate terms." He had faced the same problem when Shah approached him for the Thums Up campaign and knew other cricketers felt the same way too. So the idea of forming the PMG appealed to him. "Not only would it be a manager to sportsmen, it would also be an organisation that could read into the fine print in these matters," said Gavaskar, now considered the most hard-boiled bargainer in the business.

Though the partnership with Shah began with immediate effect, Gavaskar himself went touring overseas for the next couple of months. "It was a disaster to begin with," recollect both partners today. Their first assignment involved securing contracts for the Swedish Davis Cup team who were touring India a few months later. The team included three players among the top 10 in the international rankings of the Association of Tennis Professionals—Mats Wilander, Anders Jarryd and Stefan Edberg. "Abroad, these players would charge a quarter of a million dollars to wear a wrist band. We had managed to get them for peanuts at a lakh and a half," remembers Shah. But the response was cold. Numerous rounds of advertising agencies only brought ignorant responses such as: "Is McEnroe also coming?" or "Davis Cup? Isn't Wimbledon the international tennis tournament?" Nobody was interested in the Swedes. The PMG ran into a clean loss of Rs 40,000 in its maiden venture.

Gavaskar returned to India to learn that he was down Rs 20,000 as he was a 50 per cent partner. Said Shah: "He could have turned around and said 'I don't know you'. But all he said was 'These things happen in business. I'll send the money across whenever you need it'."

But having burnt their fingers, both realised that it would be difficult to sell any sport in India, other than cricket. So they returned to the crease and started syndicating newspaper columns beginning with Gavaskar's, which was hawked at Rs 1,200 for a single edition newspaper and Rs 1,600 for multi-edition ones. There followed Ravi Shastri and Bishen Singh Bedi, whose columns sold at Rs 1,000 each, and finally the visiting captains Alan Border, Viv Richards and Imran Khan joined the bandwagon. Imran Khan was the toughest bargainer—his columns were priced at Rs 4,000.

Maintaining a policy of 'only one paper, in one language, in one city', Gavaskar now syndicates his column to as many as a dozen newspapers. Of course, the Board of Cricket Control in India (BCCI) breathes down his neck for violation of regulations forbidding players from writing for the media during season. The board has sought explanations from both Gavaskar and Ravi Shastri on this account. While Shastri has now stopped writing, as he is playing county cricket in England, Gavaskar has requested a meeting to explain his position. According to him, as long as he does not give daily reports of the game during matches, the

(From left) Gavaskar, Shah and Border: big money

Sunil Gavaskar and Sumedh Shah's Professional Management Group has changed for good the relationship between commercialism and sportsmen in India.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Gavaskar with Bedi in the studio: runaway success fortnight onwards. "Sunil Gavaskar Presents...", directed by Aziz Mirza and produced by the PMG, is proving to be a runaway success. Gavaskar, as anchorman, is a sell-out. Having already completed shooting eight episodes of the 13 part serial in double-quick time, Mirza couldn't help commenting to the serial's star that even Amitabh Bachchan didn't have such a busy shooting schedule. Gavaskar was quick on the rebound: "Amitabh who?" he asked.

Of late, the PMG has also been appointed consultant on sports sponsorships to Vazir Sultan Tobacco (VST). The VST group, which has a mammoth budget of Rs 1.5 crore for sports sponsorships, pays the BCCI Rs 15 lakh every year for the sponsorship of the Deodar Trophy and the Ranji Trophy tournaments. The PMG has submitted a detailed proposal to the company on how to draw crowds to the Ranji Trophy matches. "We are trying to use marketing tools to create excitement in the Ranji Trophy," says Shah. They have also submitted a proposal to hold a seminar on cricket, with 16 present and former cricket stars, leading sports journalists and BCCI members participating.

But it is spreading its wings slowly. After a bad start—in the first year, it closed with a loss of Rs 1 lakh—it expects to close this year in October with a turnover of Rs 50 lakh. And once again, the group plans to look beyond cricket. It is now trying to get contracts for P.T. Usha. "It's difficult as, in all other sports, we have to be careful about not disturbing anybody's amateur status," says Gavaskar.

And as for Gavaskar himself, with the PMG's success seemingly assured, there should still be plenty of cricket after retirement, even if it is not out in the middle.

—TANIA MIDHA in Bombay

Sunil Gavaskar

Imran Khan

Ravi Shastri

Syndicated columns: celebrity scribes not be violating the ...d's guidelines. There ...no such curbs on visiting ...ians whose only prob... is how to spend the ...y, paid in Indian ru... for their columns. ...n Border raised this ...tion, Shah of... ...d to teach him ...to spend Rs ...00 in 15 minutes ...hotel lobby. ...iting columns ...come big money. ...the player gets 80 ...cent of the amount, ...gets 20 per cent as ...ission. With this ...gement, Gava... ...is facing the inev... ...charge of riding pig... ...back on others celebrity ...s. "What's wrong ...it? I'm making money for ...as well," he counters sharply.

...indicating columns has, in fact, ...the turning point for the PMG. From ...onwards, the group gained momen... ...and diversified into the endorsement ...ducts—Ravi Shastri and Kapil Dev ...in the greatest demand. Gavaskar ...ued his own advertising, separate ...the group. Today, he commands a ...of Rs 2 lakh for an advertisement much to the envy of professional models. Interestingly, his fee was jacked up as soon as Imran Khan was paid Rs 2 lakh per ad for Cinthol and Thums Up.

From endorsements and advertisements, the next logical step has been television serials. And so, aired from last

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

For a few glorious days forget your earthly bonds.

Take a Welcombreak!

Welcombreak is an exciting getaway for the entire family. Walk down shell-strewn beaches, and travel the timeless deserts. Play golf on velvet greens, or a set of tennis early morning. Or simply revel in the luxury of India's finest hotels. Welcombreak has it all!

Wind-surfing at Welcomgroup Cidade de Goa.

Welcomgroup Mughal Sheraton, Agra

Short Break Rs.1099/-
Long Break Rs.1499/-

- 15% discount on health club and beauty parlour
- Free coupons worth Rs.200/- for recreation
- Swimming pool

Welcomgroup Windsor Manor, Bangalore

Short Break Rs.699/-
Long Break Rs.999/-

- 15% discount on beauty parlour
- Sightseeing optional, at extra cost
- Billiards, golf and tennis on request
- Swimming pool

Special Features :

- 15% discount on all other food and beverage items – except at Cidade de Goa 25% discount on all beverages only.
- Rates for room only for two on twin sharing basis
- Free accommodation for 2 children below 12 years
- Extra bed Rs.100/-
- Special breakfast (exclusive for package)
  Adults : Rs.50/- per person
  Children : Rs.25/- per child (under 12 years)
- Special buffet dinner (exclusive for package)
  Adults : Rs.85/- per person
  Children : Rs.50/- per child
- All service charges & taxes extra as applicable.
- VALID FROM 1ST APRIL TO 30TH SEPTEMBER, 1987

Price valid only on advance reservation of package
Valid for all Indians and foreigners residing in India only

Welcomgroup Umaid Bhawan Palace, Jodhpur

Short Break Rs.666/-

- Free entry to the palace museum and Mehrangarh Fort
- Airport-hotel-airport transfers
- Tours for sightseeing to Mandore Gardens and Jaswant Thara optional, at extra cost
- Swimming pool

Welcomgroup Bay Island, Andamans

Long Break Rs.1110/-
Big Break Rs.1850/-

- Table-tennis, darts and other indoor games
- Sightseeing, fishing and snorkelling, optional at extra cost
- Swimming pool

Welcomgroup SeaRock, Bombay

Short Break Rs.1099/-
Long Break Rs.1599/-

- 15% discount on beauty parlour, Mind and Body Temple
- Tennis and squash facilities
- Swimming pool

Welcomgroup Cidade de Goa, Goa

Long Break Rs.1950/-
Big Break Rs.2850/-

- Gala dinner nite on a luxury river cruiser
- Chauffeur driven car (for four hours)
- Airport-hotel-airport transfers
- Gifts and many other complimentaries
- Swimming pool

Short Break: 2 nights 3 days
Long Break: 3 nights 4 days
Big Break : 5 nights 6 days

CALL WELCOMNET
Welcomgroup Hotels' Instant Reservation Network.

Delhi	3014127, 3010849	Hyderabad	825428	Baroda	323232
Bombay	221121, 220923, 2042286	Bangalore	258030	Ahmedabad	409367
Madras	473691, 479460	Coimbatore	22629	Kanpur	66512
Calcutta	299567, 299659	Pune	65719

Or any Welcomgroup hotel, or your travel agent.

WELCOMGROUP
Palaces, hotels, resorts, indeed!

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A whole new concept in silent air conditioning.

Divide... and cool.

The new Voltas Crystal Split Room Air Conditioner consists of two units.

Now!
Elegant new design.
Enhanced cooling power.

The new 1.5 tonne Voltas Crystal Split Room Air Conditioner is unlike any other. In looks. And in performance.

It comes in two parts. The elegant, laminate-finished particle board Room Unit cools your room in silence. It can be installed at ground level on the floor, or against a solid wall.

The Condensing Unit, which is the noisy part, is kept outside. On a ledge. Or in the balcony. Anywhere up to 5 metres away from the room unit. There's no need to block a window. A 10 cm dia. hole through the wall allows the pipes to connect the two units. So it keeps noise out. Completely!

Want to know more? Just contact your nearest Voltas Crystal dealer. Or us.

VOLTAS LIMITED
Appliances Business Group
19, J.N. Heredia Marg
Ballard Estate
Bombay 400 038

VOLTAS CRYSTAL
SPLIT ROOM AIR CONDITIONER
No.1 in keeping cool... silently!

CLARION/B/V/96/254

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE US

Prize Catch

THE Liberty Shell gas station, perched on the south Atlantic highway where it passes the small New Jersey township of Aberdeen, 40 miles south of New York, is frequented by the 70-odd agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) who live in Aberdeen to beat high New York rents. But last fortnight FBI agents picked up something far more volatile than high-octane petrol as they swooped on the station to arrest Sukhminder Singh and Ranjit Singh Gill, two men considered to be among the most wanted Sikh terrorists in India.

It was an anti-climactic end to one of the most intense joint anti-terrorist operations launched by Indian and American lawmen, with the two alleged fugitives, key suspects in the murders of former army chief General Vaidya and Congress(I) MP Lalit Maken, surrendering without any resistance.

Having followed a desperate escape trial that took them from Illinois in the midwest to California in the west and then back east to New Jersey where they finally ran out of luck, the two terrorists now await extradition proceedings beginning July 14 in a New Jersey court.

Singh and Gill, who had thousands of dollars in their wallets when they were arrested, immediately pleaded innocence although Judy Russell, a government attorney, told the court that they had entered the US illegally. Their host Amarbir Singh, the 26-year-old Sikh owner of the gas station said they had been with him for less than six hours. Sukhminder is his old classmate from Government College, Ludhiana.

The day after the arrest, Maharashtra Police officers flew into the US to help investigations, and officials of the Indian Embassy joined them in putting together an effective case for extradition, and also in retracing the fugitives' escape trail. As Indian officials concentrated their efforts in Chicago, where the terrorists are reported to have found their main sources of support among the expatriate Sikh community, more arrests were being predicted. "This is a major achievement, a landmark case," said a US State Department official.

The arrest came just when the anti-American rhetoric was peaking in New Delhi, and the US Administration was at pains to use the success as evidence of basic American "goodwill" towards India. "It is absolutely wrong to suggest that America in any way wants to Balkanise India. The arrests provide a definite proof to the contrary," a senior State Department official told INDIA TODAY. Beaming US officials also repeatedly referred to similar statements made last month by Michael Armacost, under-secretary of state at the Asia Society meeting in Washington. Opposing Khalistan as a "vulnerable and indefensible entity lacking international support and strategic depth", he talked of the quiet cooperation between the FBI and Indian officials to "detect and apprehend terrorists before they can act".

Vaidya (left) and Maken: killers' trail

The arrest of Vaidya's killers marks a crucial turn in the battle against Sikh terrorists using the US for refuge.

Indian and American officials are, however, disinclined to talk about how exactly the joint operation has been conducted. But high-level sources say a foreign service officer on the Indian desk in the State Department coordinates with officials in the Indian Embassy on a full-time basis on anti-terrorism operations, and transfers operational information to the FBI which has now designated officials specially to deal with Sikh terrorists. Said Lane Bonner, the chief FBI spokesman in Washington: "We regard any terrorism as a serious problem and one of the bureau's four national priorities."

Bonner said that the bureau operates mainly on the basis of information passed on by the State Department. The FBI has established a fairly effective information network among the Sikh community. They also seem to know terrorist sympathisers among the prosperous expatriate community. But under American law there is little they can do against the sympathisers.

This influential ethnic support is part of the reality the officials face now that the initial euphoria of success is over. American officials admit that when it comes to anti-Sikh terrorist operations, New Delhi sets rather exacting standards as to what it expects from foreign governments. Consequently, the key question now is the extradition of the two suspects.

India and the US still work on the basis of a 1931 treaty signed between the United States and the British Government, providing extradition for certain offences—murder being one. Under the treaty, India should pass on the information to the US Administration through diplomatic channels, and then the US attorney has to produce evidence for extradition on behalf of India within 60 days. "In case the court sets aside the extradition case, the Government has no right to appeal. But the defendants have a limited right of appeal up to the Supreme Court," said Robin Frank, an official in the legal section of the State Department. She also stated that the evidence required for extradition is of a lower level than the one required for conviction. "It is the kind you need to get an arrest warrant," she said. On that count the Indian side is taking no chances and officials say they have an open and shut case.

But the battle for extradition promises to be a long-drawn one with the suspects being defended by Michael Kunstler, one of the most expensive and prominent New York lawyers who has figured in several high-voltage cases. Last year he defended another Sikh suspect Gurpartap Singh Birk. Kunstler is being paid by the Sikh Cultural Society. The verdict in New Jersey will set a vital precedent. More than anything else, it can have a crucial bearing on the already fragile Indo-US relations.

—SHEKHAR GUPTA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Long before your saree was so many metres of fabric we thought up its sheerness, the drape of the fall, its soft caress, the brilliance of its hues...

Because all this is determined by the quality of the fibre used for the yarn.

Jailene.

The premium Polyester Staple Fibre imparts the desired feel and appearance to your clothing.

Your dream clothing. Swadeshi Polytex makes it possible.

jailene®

SP

Swadeshi Polytex Limited

creating tomorrow's fibre today.

Sheme/2873

Style courtesy : Kalamandir

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TREKKING

The Great Escape

■ Half-past-five in the evening. As the young clerk walks briskly out of office and weaves her way across the main road, she is abused by an irate driver and then engulfed in a passing lorry's cloud of exhaust smoke. The queue at the bus-stop is 40 minutes long, and the still, hot air is overpowering: even the buildings seem to perspire. The bus groans slowly through the streets, oblivious of the impatience of the sweaty, smelly bodies inside, waiting for release. Caught in the crush, the clerk tries to concentrate on her journey's end: the walk home...she thinks of the cramped flat she shares with two others. Suddenly feeling suffocated, beaten, she closes her eyes.

■ Half-past-five in the evening. The young draftsman from an engineering company stares in awe at the panorama that begins at his feet and stretches down the mountain that falls away beneath him. As his three companions ready for the night, he sits transfixed, looking at the valley more than a kilometre below and the mountains that soar over it on the other side, their summits coated with a thick layer of snow. The view and the calm suddenly overwhelm him. He stretches out on the lush green grass, and using his rucksack as a temporary pillow, closes his eyes.

The trekker as artist and (bottom) learning the ropes over the Beas

SRINAGAR, Manali, Nainital, Mussoorie, Darjeeling, Ooty.... These names, until quite recently, circumscribed the images that holiday-makers carried of their escape into the mountains. Though these hill-stations still entice, thousands every year are now busy fulfilling dreams that go beyond these names, and are just a little less traditional. Bent under the weight of their rucksacks, struggling up deserted slopes, the sweat breaking out on their backs as they try to control the wobbling of their untrained knees, they doggedly raid India's mountains in droves. Trekking, for these thousands, is more than just a holiday; for most, it is one

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

the few adventures that they can act out their otherwise drab, regulated, urban lives. What is more, it can come with additional excitement—be it rappelling (descending a cliff) or the art of crossing a swift-flowing river.

In a sport as disorganised and new as this one, precise figures of the growth in interest are virtually impossible to gain. But the increased determination to go and spend those few days out in the great outdoors, is evident in trends across the entire country.

The Karnataka Mountaineering Association, which began with six members, has been organising local and Himalayan treks ever since it was founded in 1966. After 11 years, in 1977, the membership was still only 45. Today, the association has about 1,200 people on its rolls.

Yuva Shakti, a Pune-based organisation which promotes trekking, was formed just about four years ago, and already has a thousand members. According to Suresh Chauhan, a clerk in the Reserve Bank of India, Bombay, who is a camp leader, Yuva Shakti will send 500 people this summer to Jammu & Kashmir's Kishtwar region, on a fortnight-long trek. And in winter, more than 300 enthusiasts from the club will move around for a week in Maharashtra's Mahabaleshwar area.

Hoshang Master, 40, a Bombay lecturer and a veteran trekker, recalls that eight years ago when he went trekking on week-ends to the neighbouring Sahyadri hills "you had the place all to yourself. Nowadays, you have a hard time avoiding people there: it's so crowded". Master reckons that anywhere between 500 and 1,000 trekkers from Bombay, frequent the Sahyadris every week-end, during the June-November trekking season.

Calcutta, also carried away by the Taking to the slopes near Manali: mid-summer dream

Photographs by PRASHANT PANJIAR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

walking craze, has more than 60 trekking and mountaineering clubs registered with the Indian Mountaineering Foundation (IMF) in New Delhi. This does not include the dozens of informal clubs that have sprouted in city colleges and neighbourhoods.

In Uttar Pradesh's poorly connected Garhwal region, comprising five districts, trekkers were virtually unknown to the locals 15 years ago. By 1977, they still numbered only a thousand annually; that figure is now up to 9,000. Says Deepak Singhal, managing director of the Garhwal Mandal Vikas Nigam, which runs 46 rest-houses and tourist bungalows: "We expect a 15 to 20 per cent annual growth in trekking traffic."

The National Cadet Corps (NCC), which introduced the sport in 1981, will send up nearly 10,000 school and college students this year—at a cost of Rs 64 lakh—as part of its national trekking programme. This summer, they will be seen in the Kulu-Manali region, in Uttar Pradesh's Gangotri and Valley of Flowers, around Yusmarg in Jammu & Kashmir and about the Ooty area. The rest of the year will witness cadets trekking in Sikkim, Goa and the Western Ghats in Maharashtra. These statistics do not include the thousands of youngsters from the NCC who will climb hills across the country as part of state-level programmes: in Karnataka alone, for example, they will number 7,200.

But the two organisations which represent this new eagerness best are the Youth Hostels' Association (YHA) and the Bangalore-based Spark. YHA, headquartered in New Delhi—but with branches all over—started its National Himalayan Trekking Programme in 1970. Response turned encouraging only six years later, when 440 people showed up for the 170-km trek in Jammu & Kashmir's Kishtwar region. By 1980, the participants were 1,200.

The upsurge of interest continued after a new trail was opened by the YHA in the Kulu-Manali area in 1981. In summer this year, about 2,200 people will cover this 140-km trail, which is so popular that booking turns full as early as January each year.

Running on its meagre resources—its annual government grant is only Rs 10,000—the YHA now conducts a short eight-day trek for 700 children in the age group 12-17 years, north of Manali; takes about 600 people to the Pindari glacier in Kumaon; and involves 500 youngsters in its Goa winter trek. Last year, it also took 400 people to Kinnaur in Himachal Pradesh. Says Naresh Sharma, YHA's programme officer: "We are restricted by our resources. If we had more basic equipment, our participation could increase manifold—the response is tremendous." The YHA still manages with outdated equipment—rucksacks, tents,

Having a go at rappelling and (bottom) the YHA base camp at Raison

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

tickets—that it purchased with a small Rs 5-lakh grant from the Central Government several years ago. Its fees and overheads are amazingly low because its programmes are run by volunteers who are all experienced trekkers.

The growth of Spark, started in 1981 with just 15 members, too has been phenomenal. It already has 6,000 members—half of them went trekking last year—and range from a four-year-old who took part in an 18-km trek near Bhremukh to people well past their 60s. Spark's prime mover and founder, interestingly is a doctor, T. Venkatesh, 38, an assistant professor in Bangalore's St John's Medical College, who believes that "treks must be educative".

The club, which has graded its treks carefully, at the lowest level takes children in the age group of three to eight on walks for a few hours through city parks—each carrying a little rucksack with food and water. The next phase is three-day trips at neighbouring Bannerghatta National Park. The third stage is treks in the Himalayas for children in the 14-16 year age group, after which come what are called exploratory trips over unmarked areas.

Spark, which operates on an annual budget of Rs 4 lakh—Rs 2 lakh in donations and the rest from the central and state governments—hopes to start a three-month programme in the coming winter, in the Western Ghats. It has also set up an outpost at the Everest base camp which not only leads trekkers but also carries out studies on mountain medicine, in collaboration with the Himalayan Rescue Association of Nepal. Not to be deterred by distance, the organisation plans treks in the Andaman and Nicobar Islands, aimed at learning about tribals who live there.

The trekking fever has naturally touched students the most, but it hasn't left others unaffected either. Balkrishna S. Sawant, 56, a resident of Maharashtra's Ratnagiri district and a chief typist in the Railways, symbolises the wanderlust. Although suffering from a limp and asthma, last fortnight Sawant was at the YHA's picturesque base camp at Raison, on the banks of the river Beas, 17 km from Kulu: "The only way to get to know the Himalayas is to trek through them. I expect it to be difficult but I am determined to complete the journey."

Most of the uninitiated find it hard to understand what motivates a trekker. Why should a person actually want to sweat it, risk foot sores and aching limbs, on a well-earned holiday? How can this torture be read as a vacation?

Interviews with dozens of trekkers across the country produce varied answers. These range from "it is a nice way to socialise" to "standard holidays are so boring"; from "I want adventure" to "I love getting away from the competition in the city".

Posing for a group photograph in the Western Ghats: rising popularity

AJIT YADAV

A trekker in Kumaon with friends: a return to nature

But one basic theme that emerges is the trekker's desire to do something different from the usual. The fact that the sport is most popular in the metros where the pace of life is hectic, makes its own depressing statement about modern city life.

The desire to spend some time in quiet, in the wide open spaces, to leave behind—at least briefly—the intense struggle for existence, is an almost desperate one. The things for which a trekker "sweats it out" are simple and uncomplicated: it could be the sight of an unusual flower, a snow-laden mountain, a shepherd with his flock of sheep or a star-filled night. And trekkers swear that the special satisfaction of panting slowly to top a ridge or of having a cup of tea in a sun-drenched valley, engulfed in silence, or of simply sitting on a river bank watching the water rush by, can be rivalled by few city pleasures. Explains P.P. Manchanda, 36, a tax assistant from Delhi, who was recently in the Manali valley, scaling slopes: "Once the bug bites you, you can't escape it."

This desire has also been helped along by the fact that although rucksacks, tents and sleeping bags are still hard to come by, trekking is considerably cheaper—a 15-day YHA trek for instance, costs only Rs 470—than a holiday to a regular resort. A Central Government regulation from the mid-'70s granting one month's special casual leave to employees wanting to go on treks approved by the IMF, has also provided an impetus, the results of which are only now being seen.

Although the infrastructure for trekking is still meagre in the interior, the hordes of willing walkers do not seem in the least deterred by the the lack of proper food, electricity, bathrooms or a comfortable bed to sneak into—inconveniences that would upset them at any other time. This easy-going attitude springs from a willingness to rough it out and take life as it comes. Because that, in any case, is half the fun.

—SREEKANT KHANDEKAR with NANDITA SARDANA in Manali, ANITA PRATAP in Bangalore and bureau reports

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

JALGAON

Where rail, road and telecommunication links facilitate the passage of trade.
Where urban facilities
lay the foundation for a modern lifestyle.

Come discover Jalgaon where SICOM is generating new industrial growth.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SICOM

Yes. SICOM invites you to invest in Jalgaon. Just a night's journey from Bombay on the broad gauge line connecting Bombay-Howrah.

It has an excellent road and rail network that connects it to the major cities of the country. Power is supplied from a nearby sub-station, and water comes from MIDC's water filtration plant.

What's more, with a 48.14% literate population, there is an ample supply of semi-skilled, skilled, technical and supervisory manpower.

Today, Jalgaon is one of the fastest growing industrial centres.

And quite a bit of it has been SICOM's doing.

In keeping with its 20-year tradition, SICOM is furthering Maharashtra's industrial capabilities... ushering in a second industrial revolution.
It's promoting Petrochemicals, Telecommunications, Electronics, Computers, Laser Technology, Synthetic Fibres, Processed Foods... and developing new growth centres in Chiplun, Nanded, Paithan, Wardha and other places, to provide the necessary infrastructure.

Here's how SICOM helps you start your industry in Maharashtra's developing areas:

SICOM – accompanies you at every step.
Right from conception to the post-production of your unit, SICOM is there to help you with technical consultancy services, feasibility studies and expert guidance in plant location. What's more, it escorts you by co-ordinating with the concerned state-level agencies to get a need-based mix of infrastructure – both industrial and social.

SICOM – assists you financially.
Whether it is term loan, seed capital, direct subscription to share capital, equipment leasing, equipment finance or venture capital and market development assistance for non-resident Indians, SICOM ensures prompt service.

SICOM – offers you an irresistible package of incentives.
As an agent for the State Government's Package Scheme of Incentives, SICOM offers various benefits depending on your plant location. These include special capital incentive as a grant for new projects and excellent sales tax benefits.

SICOM – invites you to pioneer.
Start a pioneer unit with a stipulated investment in a virgin taluka or invest over Rs. 25 crores in any taluka and you get maximum benefits as incentives.

SICOM – supports innovative ideas.
Apart from reduction in sales tax on electronic items, Maharashtra has created electronic industrial estates in Pune, Nagpur and Aurangabad. What's more, if you start an electronic unit, SICOM offers attractive incentives for a period of seven years under a special scheme.

SICOM – keeps you growing.
Your relationship with SICOM can never end. Whether it's expansion, diversification or modernization, SICOM's expertise provides all the necessary inputs to keep you growing.

Such personalised service explains why over 4000 SICOM-aided projects have come up in Maharashtra, with a total investment of Rs. 5,018 crores, providing employment to about 2,70,000 people.

SICOM already shares Jalgaon with:
* Aegis Chemical Industries Ltd.
* Kalyani Brakes Ltd.
* Morarji Dorman Smith Ltd.
* Raymond Woollen Mills Ltd.
* VIP Industries Ltd.

SICOM

THE STATE INDUSTRIAL AND INVESTMENT CORPORATION OF MAHARASHTRA LIMITED
Nirmal, 1st floor, Nariman Point,
Bombay-400 021.
Phone: 2023018 Telex: 011-3066

Pioneering Maharashtra's Second Industrial Revolution.

CLARION/B/SM/44/238

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

 Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PONDICHERRY

Au Revoir

PUDUVAI? The name of a new south Indian city? Alas no. Puduvai or Puducheri is the nom de guerre for Pondicherry, the name by which the historic former French colony is now increasingly referred to. And in the change of name lies the near-total change of culture and ambience that, till recently, had gifted Pondicherry with its unique Parisian flavour.

The signs of the new times are everywhere. If you're looking for a maison on Rue Bussy, a famous Pondicherry street, you'll find it instead on what is now the Lal Bahadur Shastri Road. The Bureau de Finance, one of the landmarks of the town has been renamed the Finance Department Building. And it's more than likely that the stranger on the road will brusquely pass by without bowing his head with a cheery Bonjour Monsieur like he would have a few years ago. Slowly but surely, La Belle France has gone out of Pondicherry, the charming colonial township on the southern Indian riviera that was a French colony for nearly 300 years till its merger with the Indian Union in 1963. Says Elizabeth Raj, the French wife of a Pondicherrian: "Ten years ago if one came to Pondicherry, one almost felt as if one was in Paris." Adds Gautier Divianandin, who is a French national: "Even after the merger with India, one could manage in Pondicherry by speaking French. It was the language of the street."

Now even the superficial links are coming undone. The Northern Boulevard has become the Sardar Patel Road, the bustling Rue Dupleix is the Jawaharlal Nehru Road, Rue Madras is the Mahatma Gandhi Road. As R.A. Alphonse, a long-time resident of the town sadly put it: "The historical fact that Pondicherry had a French connection may no longer be evident to a stranger."

Till well after the merger, the Union territory borrowed its moods from its fashionable counterpart in Europe. Pondicherrians dressed up for dinner. Known for their hospitality, the French Pondicherrian would clasp your hand between both his and plant a warm kiss on either cheek. In the beau monde, the men would tip their hats and bend down to kiss a lady's hand.

And as for a meal with a Pondicherrian, you could bet your life on the menu—freshly baked bread and meat sauteed in wine. As in France, the streets were dotted with clubs and cafes and the evenings inevitably ended at the Cercle de Pondicherry, a watering hole, where the men got together for a drink.

All the landmarks of the town were French: the Bureau de Finance, the Traveaux Public, and the Ecole Premaire. They're all gone now.

The Ecole Premaire has been renamed the V.O. Chidambaram Chettiar School and the old French buildings are being pulled down. In their place, functional, unimaginative and large commercial complexes have sprung up.

The imposing statue of Marquis Dupleix, which dominated the heart of the town, has been shifted to a lowly corner of Pondicherry beach—and Jawaharlal Nehru has risen quickly in his place. Another significant French statue, that of a prostitute called Aayi, has been uprooted and consigned to the museum. Said Paul Ratier: "The French history of Pondicherry seems to be slowly getting out of focus."

Nor does anyone hear a c'est bien on the streets anymore. The cacophony of words that now rise out

Photographs by SHYAM TEKWANI

(From top): New abode for Dupleix's statue; Indian name for French bookshop; English- and Tamil-medium school

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The touch of the Master

Masterkey Software from Tata Consultancy Services

Masterkey. A performance so excellent you won't cease to applaud it.

Masterkey gives you a wide range of software for IBM* PCs and compatibles.

Business Management Series (BMS): BMS is a flexible business and management information system incorporating General Ledger, Accounts Receivable, Accounts Payable, Inventory Control, Purchase Order Monitoring, Order Entry, Invoicing and Sales Analysis functions.

BMS provides for divisionalised accounting with consolidation at company level.

BMS is flexible enough to meet specific requirements in a wide variety of businesses and industries.

BMS is a fully integrated system which facilitates single point entry of data. The on-line checking routine prevents entry of invalid data. You can use BMS easily even without any knowledge of computers.

Prism: This Project Planning and Monitoring system is a must for successful project management. It makes use of the latest PERT/CPM techniques. Prism is very convenient for simulating 'what if' situations and monitoring crucial factors in Project Management Time, Cost and Resources. Prism has powerful graphics for visual presentation of network diagrams, Gantt charts, cash flow plots, project progress trend curves, time-cost trade-off curves, resource histograms and bar charts. Prism provides extensive reporting features with user-defined sorting facility on any combination of project management parameters.

Shabdmala: This is a multi-lingual word processing software for English, Hindi, Marathi, Gujarati and Sanskrit languages. Shabdmala provides for every conceivable word processing need.

Campus: This Course Authoring System is an invaluable aid to teachers and learners of any subject. Campus helps teachers in developing computer-based lessons even if they do not know computer programming. Campus benefits learners through enhanced comprehension and faster pace of learning.

Hompath: The Homoeopathic Symptom and Drug Information System is designed to aid a Homoeopath in patient registration, case history maintenance and repertorization of symptoms. Hompath generates a comprehensive symptoms-remedy matrix displaying the appropriate drugs with various levels of effectiveness. Hompath speeds up the selection of the most appropriate remedy for the patient using the Kents Repertory.

Minto: This is a thought prompter for enhancing clarity in communication. Minto makes use of the Pyramid Principle for aiding you in a structured presentation of your ideas in any written document.

Integrated Banking System: This automates a bank's day-to-day operations such as savings and current accounts, cash credit, overdrafts, term deposits and loans, and provides all the statutory reports. The system has security features to prevent unauthorised access. It can be enhanced to meet the specific requirements of any bank.

Falcon-II: This is a powerful local area network, linking different types of computers, facilitating sharing of expensive resources such as hard disks and printers, file share with record level locking, file transfer, remote directory access and remote printing, virtual disk, electronic mail, calendar management and office automation with multi-layered security.

Masterkey. A creation that took over 75 man-years of the best talent in the country.

MASTERKEY®

A symphony of packages to choose from

For further information contact:
Marketing Manager —
Masterkey Software Products
Tata Consultancy Services
Air India Building, 11th floor,
Nariman Point, Bombay 400 021.
Tel: 202 4827, Telex: 011-3733 TCSB IN

*IBM PC is a trademark of International Business Machines Corporation.  Shabdmala is owned by F&F Software.

CHAITRA-B TCS 66

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Two indecent acts a Sandvik engineer will perform on your shopfloor:

1. Roll up his sleeves
2. Dirty his hands

CC-0. In Public Domain.

ai and eGangotri

That's Sandvik show-how. Expertise that involves itself with your problems . . . on the shopfloor. Because Sandvik engineers work shoulder to shoulder with your engineers to find the most efficient and the most economical metalworking solution.

And that's what makes Sandvik's highly sophisticated, state-of-the-art technology products work, everywhere. So you get the edge, every time.

But at Sandvik, we know there's no success without sophisticated, tenacious R&D. So we have one of the most advanced R&D centres in the country. With never-say-die engineers working inside. Developing products peculiar to your needs . . . on the shopfloor.

Sandvik doubles tool life, slashes milling insert consumption by 50%!

Sandvik's engineers caused the most dramatic improvements in milling performance at India's largest industrial machinery manufacturers. Now, with new SMA milling inserts from Sandvik, 50 guide plates were milled per cutting edge set as against 25 milled previously. This simple yet highly efficient solution resulted in significant cost and time savings.

SANDVIK

SANDVIK ASIA LTD.

Not just know-how... but technical show-how

ollection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Kodak shows you the difference between red and rich red.

New Kodacolor Gold. The richest colour print film the world has ever seen. To give you pictures in colours that brighten life: rich reds, vibrant yellows, sparkling blues, vivid greens. And all the bright colours of life. Insist on Kodacolor Gold film and see the difference.

NEW

KODACOLOR
Gold.

Kodak is colo

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

(Left) A typical French house; and playing balle: dying legacy of the crowded Jawaharlal Nehru Street are all either English or Tamil.

Said Elizabeth Raj wistfully: "Perhaps French will totally cease to be spoken in Pondicherry." Danon Etoile adds: "Now if anyone tries to ask his way around in Pondicherry in French, he is unlikely to get anywhere. Even common French expressions are not understood any more." Till 1963, French was the only language which was in use in the civil and criminal courts in Pondicherry.

Now, not many of the 15,000 Indian-born French nationals in the Union territory speak French. Nor are many keen to join the Alliance Francaise to learn the language. The institute, which was once bursting with eager students, has seen a sudden decline in interest in the language.

The only French periodical to be published in Pondicherry, Trait d'Union, had a circulation of 3,000 before the merger. It now sells only 1,000 copies.

"The French history of Pondicherry seems to be slowly getting out of focus."

PAUL RATIER
Resident, Pondicherry

There are only a few French Pondicherrians who fly to Paris to work or study—and keep the Union territory's interest in France alive. More and more, these couriers of culture are preferring to stay at home. They no longer have any lively contact with France, the French language, life or culture.

Henri Coomes, the French consul-general in Pondicherry commented: "Five years ago, over 50 Pondicherrians used to go to Paris every year either for employment or for university education. Now, only 10 in a year go for higher studies and another 20 go for vocational training. And this figure will come down even further. Because of the growing unemployment in France, we are not able to welcome Pondicherrians with open arms."

With the French Government itself having lost interest in its distant former colony, people in Pondicherry have also forgotten their romantic, and not so distant, past. Says 54-year-old Joseph Goubert, son of the first chief minister of the town after the merger: "It all boils down to the French Government not spending money on Pondicherry." The distance between Paris and Pondicherry has remained the same but the gulf has widened unbridgeably.

The pressures of life and inflation have also found their way to this town, as they have everywhere else. Perhaps only the 2,000-odd French Pondicherrian pensioners here—who earn fabulous pensions ranging from Rs 4,000 to Rs 25,000 a month—can afford some of the luxuries of the old life: domestic servants, an afternoon siesta, beer in the morning, an aperitif in the evening. Admits Louis Clement, a 48-year-old prosperous pensioner: "We get together in the mornings and evenings in the bars and have a few drinks."

But these old world customs seem to be restricted to the pensioners. Like the young men of Tamil Nadu, their rich offspring have not maintained the old lifestyle and are now difficult to tell apart from their south Indian friends.

With the changes in the colony, the old-world ambience too is gone. Dr H.P. Mariadassou of the Trait d'Union says: "The habit of French courtesy has vanished from Pondicherry." The old gracious homes have made way for dingy cubby-holes, which give the town the flavour of Tamil Nadu rather than that of a gay Parisian suburb. Only one lawyer, G. Golandaivelu, bothers to wear the French robe in court anymore.

And what's left of France? A couple of bookshops, a restaurant or two, the antique French funeral carriage that is sometimes used—and a handful of people who still remember how to play the old French game Jeux de Petanque.

—S.H. VENKATRAMANI in Pondicherry

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SNAPSHOT

BY RAGHU RAI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

WE GIVE RAILWAYS THE GREEN SIGNAL

CMI have become leaders in the field of dry core telecommunication wires and cables in the country through sheer excellence of products.

Today CMI cables are at work in the heart of industry, Telephone Exchanges, Computer and Control Rooms, Railways, Power Stations, Heavy Vehicles, Defence, Satellite launchings . you name it.

CMI is on the threshold of launching a range of petroleum jelly filled Cables and Coil Cords for telephone instruments as part of its current expansion programme. It is already manufacturing a variety of screened signal and instrumentation cables for data transmission required in all large industries with a high degree of automation.

In addition to Railway signalling cables, CMI also manufactures specially designed quad cables for axle counters used extensively on railway tracks and a wide range of Copper cables to meet every requirement.

CMI (P) Ltd
602, Ansal Bhawan, Kasturba Gandhi Marg,
New Delhi - 110 001
Ph. 3311984, 3311695, Tlx: 031-61082 CMI-IN

APPEALI CMI 86-14 Creative: Sam Mathews Inc.

CMI Cables — Making the right connections

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TV COMPANIES

Slow Fadeout

DOORDARSHAN two years ago gleamed like an El Dorado. Television companies sprouted overnight. Newspaper chains jumped onto the bandwagon—as did journalists believing that the age of TV journalism was finally dawning. But it is turning out to be MacKenna's Gold, an elusive mirage. The winding down of a few TV companies has begun. Others are diversifying or looking for new markets.

Times Television (from The Times of India group) has drastically cut down its production for the domestic market and begun to retrench; they are looking for buyers for their equipment. Says Gautam Adhikari, chief executive, Times Television: "We are reducing operations for our domestic production. But we are carrying on our international production." Mudra News and Features, set up last year, is sitting almost idle after having produced a few programmes for Doordarshan's morning transmission. ATV (Ananda Bazar Patrika group), with its trail-blazing current affairs programme, Newsline, is now concentrating on programmes for the external market, private and public sector firms. And Independent Television (ITV) has witnessed an exodus of staff and has problems with its new TV serial, Bargat.

The reason for the change of direction: Doordarshan has now decided to put on the cap of the producer. The mandarins of Mandi House want it to become a house of production rather than a clearing house. It has started to bypass the TV companies and go directly to independent producers. Explains Director-General Bhaskar Ghose: "Doordarshan had become a licence-giving authority. We were renting out our air time, like halls for marriages....Now we want to be more like a good publishing house. We will go to the producers with ideas which should be developed here. We would control the kind of serials and programmes we telecast, rather than biting our nails worrying about what is sent to us." In other words, "don't call us; we'll call you".

The process is already under way. Credit lines of the TV companies have begun to disappear: M.J. Akbar as presenter and Vinod Dua as producer do the current affairs programme, Focus—as they did Newsline—but they now do it for Doordarshan. The ATV logo does not appear. PTI provides news-clips and produces the economic programme, Money Matters, for morning TV, but no credit line either. Ditto Times Television's personality series, ITV's aerobics series and Mudra News and Features' Suprabhat programmes during the morning transmission. Obviously, Doordarshan wants to play down the contribution of "outsiders". Collective credit is given at the end of the morning transmission.

Doordarshan has succeeded in having its cake and eating it too. It continues to use outsiders as producers for its current affairs programmes—benefiting from any fresh approaches or technical finesse they might bring. Also, it no longer needs to use its editing scissors. Self-censorship is already the order of the day. Says an independent producer: "Some of us fear that we will end up producing slightly polished publicity hand-outs. But we really don't have any choice now." Thus, the current affairs programme, Focus, will be rotated amongst PTI, Akbar, Ashok Raina (formerly of ITV and Times Television), journalist Rasheed Talib, director Ramesh Sharma and others. There are plans to start a new current affairs programme, Roving Report, and another in Hindi.

In such a scenario, do big TV companies have a future? Dua believes they will have to change tack to survive. "They have a future provided they have good equipment like PTI. Or, they decide to become a satellite or an ally of Doordarshan. I would say that the individuals are more secure," asserts Dua. Adds Ramesh Sharma: "Doordarshan's appetite is gargantuan; it is becoming like a goat with a bottomless stomach, and Doordarshan alone does not have the facilities or the manpower to provide productions of an acceptable standard on a continuous basis." Sharma is also cautious about the change outsiders will bring: "They could bring technical expertise and create a new language within Doordarshan....But you can't expect an overnight change in their news and views." But Raina feels the mushrooming of studios and free-lancing technical expertise will help independent producers. "Three years ago you had to pay Rs 2,500 a day to rent a camera; today you can get one for Rs 900."

The larger TV companies have not quite pressed the panic button, but the mood is far from euphoric. Many TV companies are now concentrating on the domestic video market and overseas eco-productions as well as the ethnic market abroad. They are also concentrating on video programmes for private companies, state governments and public institutions. The golden goose is no longer the main dish.

—MADHU JAIN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

India's most popular electronics magazine

electronics for you

The latest in electronics

In electronics, as in any applied science, keeping abreast with present day theories, techniques and applications is of the utmost importance. Whether for the research scientist or the corporate professional, outdated information can mean the difference between success and failure.

Every month Electronics For You brings you the latest in electronics — be it in the laboratory, the corporate world or the consumer market. Any new concept, theory or idea from the very basic to the more advanced finds its way into the pages of Electronics For You. Of course, while it's still news.

That's why most of our subscribers belong to the Electronics industry. In Electronics For You they keep up to date with the latest trends in Electronics.

Do-it-yourself

There is no substitute to the practical approach. We at Electronics For You believe and practice that. Hence every issue is packed with circuit ideas and make-yourself gadgets from simple add-ons to complete projects. Giant screen projectors, telephone indicators, audio systems, power supplies, battery chargers — these are just some of the projects covered.

And in case you can't get some components or PCBs our associates, Kits 'n' Spares, provide the components needed. Our technical staff test each circuit so that you may not have any problems during construction.

See it for yourself

But there is a lot more than we can write here. Get the latest copy of Electronics For You and enter a world of electronics you thought was beyond your reach.

If you have any difficulty in getting a copy from your local newsstands, mail the coupon below to subscribe. Send the coupon with your remittance to EFY Enterprises Pvt Ltd, D-87/1 Okhla Indl Area, Phase I, New Delhi 110 020.

I understand the subscription charges are:

Period	With Annual	Without Annual
Five years	Rs. 445	Rs. 220
Three years	Rs. 275	Rs. 140
Two years	Rs. 190	Rs. 100
One years	Rs. 100	Rs. 55

(Annual Number copies will be sent by registered post)

Name .....

Address .....

.....

I am/we are sending a sum of Rs.....in cash/by demand draft/money order/cheque/Indian postal order in favour of EFY Enterprises Pvt Ltd, D-87/1 Okhla Industrial Area, Phase I, New Delhi-110020.
Please add Rs 10 on outside Delhi cheque.

DL/20/87

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BANGALORE

Lingual Lesson

At the end of a narrow mud track in an outlying colony of Bangalore, is the Cauvery Primary School. It has a tiny yard as a playground and pigs wallow in filth outside. On its rolls are 75 students.

The Holy Jesus English School in Jayanagar has a picture of Christ wedged in between an array of Hindu gods. Over 100 children are crammed into one dingy room. Outside lies a handkerchief-sized playground with a rusty slide.

In Sarakki, the children of Modern School, located in a two-room tenement, face drying clothes and smells from the kitchens of a dozen households.

These are just three of the over 150 unauthorised English-medium primary schools that have mushroomed in one-room tenements, in backyards, in garages and even in shopping complexes in the past four years in Bangalore. Most are nothing but money-making rackets, horrifying examples of how dangerously commercialised primary education has become.

Most schools have about 30 students in each class and charge Rs 20 to Rs40 a month. All extort a non-refundable admission fee between Rs 100 to Rs 500. And most started as nursery schools for which no permission is required from the Government. Later, higher classes were added without informing the Department of Public Instruction (DPI).

The main reason for the sudden spurt is a decision by the Janata Government, on the recommendation of the Gokak Committee report, that Kannada should be the sole first language of the state. The Government then imposed stringent regulations on the opening of English-medium primary schools. While private Kannada-medium schools were given permission, private English-medium schools were denied permission unless it was 'inevitable'. Says DPI Director C. Hanumegowda: "If we do not encourage Kannada in Karnataka, where else can it be encouraged?"

The result has been inevitable. Over 30 unauthorised English-medium primary schools have come up this year alone. The method is the same. A trust is formed and listed under the Registrar of Societies. The 'school' sports a large sign-board with the magic letter 'R', signifying it is registered. What parents don't realise is that it is the trust, not the school, which is registered.

The proliferation of such schools reveals that, in its zeal to promote Kannada, the state Government has overlooked the demand for English-medium schools. Points out Education Secretary Adip Choudhuri: "When there is a conflict between demand and supply, two things happen. Firstly, unauthorised English schools begin to mushroom. Secondly, the donation in the established schools goes up."

Primary school: illegal expansion

G DEEPAK PAWAR

Ever since the Karnataka Government decided to make Kannada the official language, unauthorised English-medium schools are mushrooming all over Bangalore city.

Both predictions have proved true. Donations in good schools, which till 1983 did not go beyond Rs 500 for a lower Kindergarten seat, have shot up to Rs 10,000. Also, most parents find it easier to send their children to schools close to their houses. And the unauthorised schools are mostly in south Bangalore, where the new housing colonies have come up.

To complicate the issue, many of the unauthorised schools which had sprouted in the initial phase of the boom were legitimised in 1984 by the state Government. "This was an anomalous decision," says Choudhuri, adding: "The law abiding citizen who wanted to start a school before 1983 but waited till he secured permission now has no chance. Those who took the law into their own hands and went ahead without getting permission prior to 1983 benefited".

Surprisingly, the DPI has no authority to take penal action against unauthorised schools. It can only issue a notification every year listing the unauthorised schools in the area. But, as DPI Deputy-Director Ravindranath, southern range, Bangalore, says: "The notification is only a warning to parents. Most of them do not know that the schools are unauthorised. We issue these notifications in the hope that parents will pull their children out of these schools and admit them to recognised schools."

The Education Department's helplessness has made many owners of these schools even more brazen. The Pearl Valley Vidya Niketan, a nursery which, in October 1985, applied for and was refused permission to run a primary school, went ahead and admitted students to Class I last year.

Ironically, these schools continue to flourish despite being illegitimate. Now, some have even started seeking affiliations to the Delhi-based Indian Certificate of Secondary Education Board and the Central Board of Secondary Education. And the state Government seems to be encouraging them. In the last two years, at least four schools have been granted a no objection certificate.

The answer to the problem is obvious. Says Choudhuri: "Judging by the public demand, the restriction curbing English-medium schools should be withdrawn." But as long as the state Government's education policy continues to be governed by language chauvinism, cash registers of unauthorised schools will continue to ring louder than the school bells.

—ANITA PRATAP

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Created for people who know airconditioners can be made better.

The Usha Room Airconditioner. Just switch it and you'll know it's unique.

In its design, the Usha Airconditioner incorporates the latest airconditioning technology to bring you a well balanced, more power packed and efficient appliance.

Usha Airconditioners offer the unique oscillating louvres to spread the air uniformly, all over the room.

And aesthetics. The Usha Airconditioner looks so good with its specially hand crafted wooden grill.

Usha Airconditioner : from the House of Shriram.

Acknowledged leaders in refrigeration and manufacturers of India's largest selling 'USHA' Water Coolers. Only Shriram Refrigeration could bring you an airconditioner like it.

And it's from Usha!

Usha. It's a name you've trusted for generations.

For quality and reliability,
And expert after-sales service.

The Usha Airconditioner. Just feel it perform.
And discover airconditioning at its best.

everest/d87/SRI/21

USHA
AIRCONDITIONERS.
Performance that speaks for itself.

SHRIRAM REFRIGERATION INDUSTRIES LTD. 19 Kasturba Gandhi Marg, New Delhi-110 001 BOMBAY Tel : 4223008 DELHI Tel : 5416753 CALCUTTA Tel : 296747
MADRAS Tel : 84943 SECUNDERABAD Tel : 77468 AHMEDABAD Tel : 396534 LUCKNOW Tel : 46096 PATNA Tel : 56295

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

AIRCONDITIONERS.
Performance that speaks for itself.
SHRIRAM REFRIGERATION INDUSTRIES LTD. 19 Kasturba Gandhi Marg, New Delhi-110 001 BOMBAY Tel : 4223008 DELHI Tel : 5416753 CALCUTTA Tel : 296747
MADRAS Tel : 88443 SHIMLA 77468 AHMEDABAD Tel : 396534 LUCKNOW Tel : 46096 PATNA Tel : 56295

The Himalayan Institute Publishers Proudly Presents

BOOKS

by SWAMI RAMA

(Now available in India)

Swami Rama's inspiring, profound works have brought to all who have come in contact with them, a fuller knowledge and understanding.

CELESTIAL SONG/GOBIND GEET
The dynamic dialogue between Guru Gobind Singh and Banda Singh Bahadur
Rs. 100
"A timely gift from a man of God."
– Patriot

PERENNIAL PSYCHOLOGY OF THE BHAGAVAD GITA
Rs. 100
"Swami Rama coalesces the philosophical concepts contained in the Holy Scripture with insight of a student of psychology."
– Dr. K.S. Duggal

LIVING WITH THE HIMALAYAN MASTERS
Rs. 100
"A very spirited book ... on a par with that other great classic, Autobiography of a Yogi ... It is a remarkable work."
– The Illustrated Weekly of India
"Rich in ancient lore ... great creative skill ... engaging."
– Yoga Journal

NOW INTRODUCING IN INDIA
INNER LIGHT
The quarterly magazine devoted to holistic living
Annual Subscription : Institutions – Rs. 100
Individuals – Rs. 60

Bluebird

To order or for complete list of books by Swami Rama and all other publications of the Himalayan Institute, contact:

The Himalayan International Institute
The Resource for Holistic Living

L-67 A, Malviya Nagar
New Delhi-110017

The Himalayan Publishers

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SUPERCONDUCTORS

New Energy

ON the surface, any attempt to electrify a material to conduct current with virtually no loss of energy would seem a pipe-dream. There are plenty of materials around to carry current with minimum energy loss. But what excites scientists is the esoteric search for materials that act as superconductors—to perform the trick of carrying current with no loss, which all known existing materials cannot—while at the same time costing little and weighing even less.

For more than 70 years, scientists believed such materials which superconduct exist only at extremely low temperatures of minus 250°C. But finally, last year the first stirrings of a major breakthrough came when Dr George Bendorz and Dr Alex Muller at IBM's research laboratories in Zurich saw some strange signs of superconductivity in a compound of lanthanum, barium and copper oxide. Soon, physicists across three continents—America, Europe and Asia—discovered materials that superconduct at higher temperatures. And the latest claim by American scientists is of a material superconducting at minus 48°C.

The discovery has energised Indian scientists working on superconductors. Existing groups on superconductivity research got together in seven laboratories across the country soon after the startling finds were reported. And the Department of Science and Technology funding piece-meal research on superconductors, asked Professor C.N.R. Rao, director and leader of the group at the Indian Institute of Science (IISC), Bangalore, to coordinate the work.

Researchers met for the first time in Bangalore on April 14 and concluded that their work was in the stages of infancy. As a sequel, last month, the prime minister's science adviser Professor M.G.K. Menon went around for a first-hand review of the existing state of research work. And on May 28, Rajiv Gandhi sat in a discussion to work out plans to step up research on superconductors in areas where it might be useful in the country.

However, existing programmes on superconductor research in India are small and the total number of researchers are about 50 compared to Japan, where there are about 500 teams working on superconductor research projects. "The worldwide hysteria," as Dr R. Vijayaraghavan of the Tata Institute of Fundamental Research (TIFR) calls the new wave of interest, rejuvenated the teams in Indian laboratories to concoct more materials that become superconductors at higher temperatures and be part of the international race. Scientists of the TIFR and the Bhabha Atomic Research Centre (BARC), Trombay, jointly hold the newest Indian record of synthesising material which superconducts at minus 166°C.

G. DEEPAK PAWAR

C.N. Rao researching superconductors

The TIFR-BARC team used samples of a crystalline complex of yttrium, strontium, barium and copper oxide. The National Physical Laboratory and the National Chemical Laboratory which got into the game later are yet to announce their findings. But in Madras, the Material Sciences Research Centre of the Indian Institute of Technology (IIT) headed by Dr G.V. Subba Rao has developed more than 50 new materials based on the rare earth-barium-copper-oxygen system for testing at the institute's low temperature laboratory and at the Indira Gandhi Centre for Atomic Research at nearby Kalpakkam. "We have been producing samples at a much faster pace than they can be tested," said an exultant Subba Rao.

Other superconductor researchers at the IISC, Bangalore, are on a different track. They are looking at the stoichiometry—the numerical proportion of the various elements in the materials—to find out what kind of chemical structure is most conducive to produce superconducting qualities in materials. The presence of copper oxide appears to be vital for their superconducting quality. And in keeping with competitive research, Indian scientists have prepared and despatched scientific papers. Says Dr R.M. Iyer, head of the chemical division of BARC: "We are the first Indians to send out a scientific paper and the prestigious journal Physical Review accepted it." Others at IIT, Madras, are preparing papers to be presented at conferences in Japan in August and the US in October this year.

Clearly 1987 is a watershed for superconductor research and Professor C.N.R. Rao says a plan giving the research priority will be ready in June. BARC is to work on the making of thin films, for it believes one of the best uses of superconductors in India is in microelectronics.

What is perhaps most striking about this esoteric search is that scientists still do not know how superconductivity occurs and how the process takes place, though there are many theories afloat to explain the phenomenon. It is for this reason that all groups, including the Indians, are cagey about revealing the composition of the superconducting materials developed by them till it is recorded as their contribution in a research journal.

But to make research meaningful, it will have to be tied up with industry. Cautioned Dr S. Ramseshan, director, Raman Research Institute, Bangalore: "Indian industry has to be organised to receive new technology developed in the country, otherwise superconductors will meet the same fate as semi-conductors. There will be few takers." Unless the interface with industry improves, scientists will have only pensions and no credits to take home as reminders of their work.

—AMARNATH K. MENON

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RADEUS/AMC/6-86

Amul Chocolates

a gift for someone you love

Marketed by:
Gujarat Co-operative
Milk Marketing
Federation Ltd., Anand

Six delicious varieties...
Amul Milk Chocolate, Amul Crisp, Amul Coffee,
Amul Fruit & Nut, Amul Bitter, Amul O...

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TCI & PAN AM's "CLUB ROYAL" HOTELS

If that sounds too much to swallow, you'll gulp when you read about TCI's CLUB ROYAL PLAN.

PRINCELY STAYS ON AN INCREDIBLY LOW BUDGET

It works like this. And how!! If you fly PANAM, First or Business Class, you're entitled to stay at some of the world's finest hotels. At a discount of anywhere between 50% to 75% of the normal room cost!

That means you not only get to live it up at hotels like the Hiltons, Sheratons or the Intercontinentals, you also save so much, you can afford to shop at Harrods, dine and entertain lavishly at places like Maxims or The Lido.

DESTINATIONS GALORE

This never-before scheme covers practically every destination you can conduct business in. Virtually all the major cities in U.S.A. and more than a dozen nerve-centres in Europe & U.K.

The hotels waiting to welcome you have been selected both for the luxury of their service and the convenience of their location.

CALCULATE THE SAVINGS

Each city will have a choice of at least two hotels. For example, in New York, First class passengers will be put up at The Sheraton. While the Lexington Hotel welcomes Business Class travellers.

LIST OF DESTINATIONS ON

CLUB ROYAL PLAN

U.S.A.
Atlanta, Chicago, Detroit, Las Vegas, Los Angeles, Miami, New Orleans, New York, Niagara, Orlando, San Francisco, Washington.

EUROPE & U.K.
Amsterdam, Berlin, Brussels, Dusseldorf, Frankfurt, Geneva, Hamburg, London, Munich, Paris, Rome, Zurich.

THE BENEFITS KEEP ADDING UP

But hefty hotel discounts aren't the only attraction of TCI's CLUB ROYAL PLAN. There's so much more it would take a book to list it all out. And, we've done just that.

So why don't you cut out the coupon and rush it to us for all the information on this truly unique scheme.

All stays extendable at Special CLUB ROYAL Rates.

Also CLUB ROYAL Special Rates for double occupancy.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BUSINESS TRAVELLERS! SAVE MORE THAN 50% OF YOUR FOREIGN EXCHANGE ON YOUR NEXT TRIP TO U.S.A. EUROPE U.K.

r Single occupancy Club Royal Rate r 6 nights only. For Twin occupancy Club Royal Rate for 12 nights only.

TCI's
Club Royal Plan
The Best of Both Worlds

TCI

PAN AM

Prices subject to change without prior notice.

JUST AN EXAMPLE

	Single	Twin Sharing (per night)
NEW YORK
	Normal Rate
SHERATON	145 $	80
LEXINGTON	115 $	60
	Club Royal Rate
SHERATON	40 $	30
LEXINGTON	25 $	20
	Saving per person
SHERATON	690 $	660
LEXINGTON	540 $	480
SAN FRANCISCO
	Normal Rate
RAMADA RENAISSANCE	115 $	65
	Club Royal Rate
RAMADA RENAISSANCE	40 $	30
	Saving per person
RAMADA RENAISSANCE	510 $	480
LONDON
	Normal Rate
LONDON TARA	125 $	72
	Club Royal Rate
LONDON TARA	40 $	30
	Saving per person
LONDON TARA	510 $	504

FRANKFURT
	Normal Rate
INTERCON-TINENTAL	180 $	100
	Club Royal Rate
INTERCON-TINENTAL	40 $	30
	Saving per person
INTERCON-TINENTAL	900 $	900

Contact today or send your coupon to:
Travel Corporation (India) Pvt. Ltd., Chander Mukhi, Nariman Point, Bombay- 400 021. Tel:2021881/2028142. Pune: Hotel Blue Diamond, 11, Koregaon Road, Pune-411 001. Tel: 62460/62495. Ahmedabad: Near Handloom House Ashram Road, Ahmedabad-380 009. Tel: 407601/408770. Baroda: Alkapuri Shopping Centre, Vishwas Colony, Alkapuri, Baroda-390 005. Tel: 322181. Bangalore: 9, Residency Road, Richmond Circle, Bangalore-560 025. Tel: 578826/578829. Madras: 734, Anna Salai, Madras-600 006. Tel: 88913. Delhi: Hotel Metro, N-49, Connaught Circus, New Delhi- 110 001. Tel: 3315181/3315834.
Or any of our 25 offices around India.

Yes, I'm very keen to know how I can save more than 50% of my valuable Foreign Exchange on TCI's CLUB ROYAL PLAN.
Please send me details and your brochure.

Name: _____
Designation: _____
Company: _____
Address: _____
Tel: _____

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

◆ The east-west encounter does not only take place in beautiful laundrettes: it's now hotel time—as Bombay's veteran actress Pearl Padamsee heads for Hollywood to play Mrs Shah, a tough Gujarati lady who runs a flea-bag hotel in San Francisco. For David Rathod's (son of film maker Kantilal Rathod) American film West is West, Padamsee—for whom the maiden experience of working with an American crew was "terrific" and the role a real challenge—spent several months researching the famous Gujarati Midas touch in San Francisco. Says the gregarious actress: "The character I play fights against people who use diabolical methods to try to take over the hotel."

Padamsee with co-star

Yadav: sweet dreams

◆ Imagine the small, meek-looking man who played Massey Sahib to perfection—and won a prestigious award—switching to a Mithun Chakravarty disco dancer number to the tune of Tum kahan ho (his own voice too) in a gaudily luminescent outfit. Exploiting the chameleon quality of actor Raghuvir Yadav, director Prakash Jha has confected a perfect desi Walter Mitty for a new television serial called Mungeri Lal Ka Haseen Sapna (Mungeri Lal's beautiful dream). A henpecked clerk and a total misfit in the real world despite—or because of—his double M.A. in Philosophy and Sanskrit, Mungheri Lal's fantasy life puffs him into a super star, a super cop who chases down a dangerous escaped convict, a surgeon who works miracles, or a godman come to save the world. Will the real Raghubir Yadav ever stand up?

Aziz: dulcet videos

◆ Ghazal videos? Yes. Well, finally, it had to happen. Pop videos, with their amazing special effects, didn't quite xerox onto Indian culture. But those belting, love-sick croonings do. They will now come with slicked-up, beauty-parloured ghazal singers who will now have to look good as well as sound good while they inspire customers to buy up their offerings.

For a start, the dulcet tones of Talat Aziz have now been "picturised" in a 90-minute video cassette to go with his new cassette, Tasavvur. He also has a co-star, new find Jharna. And Sarita Sethi, fresh off the sets from Buniyaad, strings the two 'ghazlings' together.

◆ "Like Eleanor Roosevelt, I've come to learn." With daughter Donna in tow, Geraldine Ferraro's first passage to India is a reconnaissance mission, relieved by an exotic three-week holiday on the side. Or, maybe, the other way around. The former American vice-presidential candidate—who finally had to bow out, following relentless press reports about allegedly dubious real estate connections—is looking for a "corresponding body" for the National Democratic Institute, where she is on the board of directors. The Institute extends a friendly hand to Third World democracies. Ferraro, who is more than amply qualified, delivered a lecture at Delhi's India International Centre on "The American Political Scene: Prospects for 1988"—before setting off to survey the Indian tourist scene.

RAGHU RAI

Ferraro and Donna: a quest

◆ The leopard does not change its spots; nor the fox its hunting ground. But for the celluloid incarnation of Tariq Ali's trilogy The Leopard and the Fox, on the rise and fall of Zulfiqar Bhutto and the rise and rise of Zia-ul-Haq, the protagonists will move out of local habitats. Roshan Seth as Bhutto and Shabana Azmi as Benazir will shift to Cyprus—permission in Pakistan or India being unlikely. The BBC was to have made the controversial film for Britain's Channel Four—but they got cold feet. Says Ali: "There were three meetings, and they reached casting stage...but the lawyers said no."

HARI OM GUJRAT

Azmi and Seth: for posterity

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

directors. The s a friendly
Vorld democ-
who is more alified, deliv-Delhi's India
ntre on "The tical Scene:
988"—before ey the Indian onna: a quest

does not chaor the fox its
d. But for the ation of Tariq
Leopard and the se and fall of
and the rise
a-ul-Haq, the ll move out of oshan Seth as bana Azmi as t to Cyprus—akistan or In-

HARI OM GULATI

for posterity

ely. The BBC
de the controritain's Chan-
they got cold
"There were
s, and they g stage...but d no."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

13024

13023

13022

13021

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

IN FOCUS THIS FORTNIGHT

Tackling the Tigers

India's decision last fortnight, to airdrop supplies over Jaffna has opened up a diplomatic Pandora's box. New Delhi justifies its act as a humanitarian necessity. But it is now entangled directly in the ethnic crisis dividing the island.

COVER STORY 24

"I am much the wiser"

Despite the crises exploding around him, the country's youngest prime minister remains unfazed. Rajiv Gandhi's boyish spontaneity broke through as he dealt confidently with a wide range of questions in an exclusive interview.

INTERVIEW OF THE FORTNIGHT. 36

The Smoking Gun

The much-awaited Swedish Audit Bureau report on Bofors pay-offs, though incomplete, has demolished the Rajiv Gandhi Government's claims on middlemen and commissions. It has confirmed that Rs 35 crore to Rs 50 crore was paid to an agent.

CURRENT EVENTS 50

The Lawless State

The massacre of 41 Rajputs in Baghaura and Dalelchak villages of Aurangabad district was unprecedented in its scale of brutality, even by Bihar's horrifying standards of caste carnages. A report and interview with state Chief Minister Bindeshwari Dubey:

SPECIAL REPORT 86

A Ritzy Revolution

The market-place has been overtaken by a packaging revolution. Tins and poly jars have suddenly become outdated. They are fast being replaced by tetrabricks, pouches and aerosol cans which have moved in, jostling for space on shop shelves.

BUSINESS 104

The New Box Office Goddess

With the stupendous success of Nagina, Sridevi has emerged as the undisputed empress of tinsel town. She is now the highest paid Indian actress in the glitzy world of Indian films. A profile and an interview of the new screen dream girl.

SPECIAL FEATURE 139

CONTENTS

COMMENT 11
VOICES 14
INDIANOTES 19
CAPITALOOK 21
THE FORTNIGHT THAT WAS 22
COVER STORY
Tackling the Tigers 24
INTERVIEW OF THE FORTNIGHT
Rajiv Gandhi: "I am much the wiser" 36
CURRENT EVENTS
Haryana:
The Devi Lal Offensive 46
Bofors: The Smoking Gun 50
Gujarat: Helping Hand 58
Maharashtra: Fatal Failure 63
Kerala: Riding High 64
Karnataka: Rural Tensions 71
PAC: Questionable Conduct 73
STATENOTES 80
SPECIAL REPORT
Bihar: The Lawless State 86
GUEST COLUMN
The Good-Bad Hero 94
TRADEWINDS 99
BUSINESS
Take-overs:
The Corporate Raiders 101
Packaging:
A Ritzy Revolution 104
Soyabean: Bubble Bursts 107
Oil India: Executive Drain 108
The Markets: Losing Ground 113
The Economy Monitor 117
GUEST COLUMN
Judging the Public Sector 120
DIPLOMACY
Foreign Policy: Careening Crazily 124
LONDONEWS 129
GLOBE-TROTTING
United States: An Arresting Affair 131
SNAPSHOT 134
SPECIAL FEATURE
Sridevi:
The New Box Office Goddess 139
RELIGION
Bastar: The Tribal Godman 146
CRIME
Karnataka: Tribal Trouble 154
HEALTH
Medical Equipment:
The High-tech Invasion 159
EYECATCHERS 164

Cover photograph by SHYAM TEKWANI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

To Italians, beauty starts with the basics.

In a home it's got to start with the floor. Si. Si.

So it was only natural that when we wanted to bring you a floor that was really special, we went to Italy.

Regency Tiles are made in collaboration with Welko Industriale. The Italian company that's numero uno — number one — in the world.

Now you can forget the old problems with the old tiles.

Forget about days and days of tedious floor polishing. With Regency, your floor's ready ... presto!

Forget the stains. The scratches. The cracks. Above all, forget the embarrassment of a clean floor that always looks dirty!

Just get Regency. And live beautifully ever after. Viva!

Regency

Italian Ceramic Tiles

Choose the toughest floor. For the most beautiful reasons.

Regency Ceramics Limited

N N House,
Chirag Ali Lane, Hyderabad 500 001
Phones: 237266/233017

Sista's-RCL-227/8

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Kodak shows you the difference between yellow and vibrant yellow.

New Kodacolor Gold. The richest colour print film the world has ever seen. To give you pictures in colours that brighten life: vibrant yellows, sparkling blues, vivid greens, rich reds. And all the bright colours of life. Insist on Kodacolor Gold film and see the difference.

NEW

KODACOLOR
Gold.

Kodak is colour

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

INDIA TODAY
THE COMPLETE NEWSMAGAZINE
VOLUME XII NUMBER 12
FOR THE FORTNIGHT JUNE 16-30, 1987

EDITOR
AROON PURIE

EXECUTIVE EDITOR T.N. NINAN
PICTURE EDITOR RAGHU RAI
FEATURES EDITOR INDERJIT BADHWAR
DEPUTY EDITOR DILIP BOBB
SENIOR EDITOR PRABHU CHAWLA

CORRESPONDENTS

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENTS RAMINDAR SINGH, SHEKHAR GUPTA
NEW DELHI PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI, RAJ CHENGAPPA, MADHU JAIN, SREEKANT KHANDEKAR, TANIA MIDHA
AHMEDABAD RAMESH MENON
BANGALORE ANITA PRATAP
BHOPAL N.K. SINGH
BOMBAY M. RAHMAN
CALCUTTA INDRANIL BANERJIE
HYDERABAD AMARNATH K. MENON
LUCKNOW DILIP AWASTHI
MADRAS S.H. VENKATRAMANI
PATNA FARZAND AHMED
TRIVANDRUM SREEDHAR PILLAI
LONDON RAMESH CHANDRAN
NEWS COORDINATOR RADHIKA ROY
ART DIRECTOR M.G. MOINUDDIN
CHIEF OF PRODUCTION SHIRLEY JOSHUA, ANURADHA KAPOOR
COPY DESK SIMRAN BHARGAVA, ANN NINAN, SUNIL SAXENA
CHIEF PHOTOGRAPHER BHAWAN SINGH
PHOTOGRAPHERS PRAMOD PUSHKARNA, PRASHANT PANJIAR, NAMAS BHOJANI
CARTOONIST AJIT NINAN MATHEW
CARTOGRAPHER B.K. SHARMA
LAYOUT ARTISTS ANUP GUPTA, PEALI DUTTA GUPTA
MARKETING DIRECTOR MOHINI BHULLAR

ADVERTISING MANAGERS

BOMBAY NEENA MONGIA
DELHI NAGINDER RISHI
CALCUTTA MEERA PAUL
MADRAS R. ANAND
BANGALORE S.J. NAIDU
GENERAL MANAGER CHANDER RAI

• EDITORIAL OFFICE: LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. F-14/15, CONNAUGHT PLACE NEW DELHI 110001. PHONE: 3315801-4, TELEX: 31-61245 INTO IN CABLE: LIVMEDIA, NEW DELHI • SUBSCRIPTIONS: INDIA TODAY SUBSCRIPTION DEPARTMENT, POST BOX 49 FARIDABAD HARYANA • TRADE CIRCULATION: INDIA TODAY CIRCULATION MANAGER, F-14 CONNAUGHT PLACE, MIDDLE CIRCLE NEW DELHI. PHONE: 3313076-8, TELEX: 31-62634 INTO • ADVERTISING OFFICES: 28 A&B JOLLY MAKER CHAMBER II, NARIMAN POINT, BOMBAY-400021. PHONE: 2026152, 2029326, 2040363 TELEX: 11-5373 THOM IN, CABLE: LIVMEDIA, BOMBAY • 4/4 CONNAUGHT CIRCUS, NEW DELHI-110001. PHONE: 352378, 352379, 351273 AND 351323. TELEX: 31-2651 THOM IN, CABLES: LIVMEDIA, NEW DELHI • FAGUN CHAMBERS, 26 COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF ROAD, MADRAS-600105. PHONE: 477188, 477770, 479163. CABLE: LIVMEDIA MADRAS • 74/1ST. MAKKS ROAD, BANGALORE-560001. PHONE: 568848, 579037, 579089. CABLE: LIVMEDIA. • 12C EVEREST 46C CHOWRINGEE ROAD, CALCUTTA-700016. PHONE: 445396, 447726. CABLE: LIVINMEDIA, CALCUTTA
• COPYRIGHT 1987 LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. ALL RIGHTS RESERVED THROUGHOUT THE WORLD. REPRODUCTION IN ANY MANNER IS PROHIBITED. PUBLISHED BY CHANDER RAI FOR LIVING MEDIA INDIA PVT LTD. NEW DELHI AND PRINTED AT THOMSON PRESS INDIA LTD. FARIDABAD HARYANA • INDIA TODAY DOES NOT TAKE RESPONSIBILITY FOR RETURNING UNSOLICITED PUBLICATION MATERIAL •

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CURBING COMMUNALISM

Communal violence seems to be spreading through the country like wildfire ("The Agony of Meerut", June 15). The Government must come out with stern long-term measures, not only to control such incidents when they do occur, but also to prevent such outbreaks from happening at all. Special attention should be paid to prevent such riots from spreading to newer areas. This is important. Otherwise, the situation will get out of control.

Ahmedabad KAMLESH G. VARYANI

■ The criminal incompetence of the administration in failing to maintain the peace in Meerut and Delhi should be punished by at least divesting it of the authority that it wielded so ineffectively.

Bangalore G.S. CHANDY

■ Your plaintive cover photograph and hard-hitting cover story were indicative of the sinking of the nation's psyche. Human lives seem mere trifles for the 'religious', and the police seem fit to join the Nazis in history's cess-pool.

Bangalore B. VINOD KUMAR

■ It is a sorry state when a government that boasts of being secular and tries to solve the ethnic problem in Sri Lanka has its own house on fire—in Punjab, Uttar Pradesh and Gujarat. An inefficient Home Ministry is given a clean chit, the law and order machinery is not taken to task for killing innocents.

Riyadh ABDUL RASHEED KHAN

GOVERNMENT FAILURE

Your editorial ("A Deadly Confrontation", June 15) rightly points out the Uttar Pradesh administration's failure to effectively deal with the Meerut riot, a failure which scarred the nation's psyche. The suggestions in your editorial appeal to a secular mind and should be put into practice.

Marunthancode G. DAVID MILTON

■ Congratulations for writing a well-argued comment on communalism. But it was not exhaustive. The media should have exhaustive discussions on the role, function and scope of religion. And in order to decrease the differences between people, there should be one civil code for all Indians, just as there is one criminal code.

Delhi PARJAN KUMAR JAIN

BIASED OBITUARY

Your story on Charan Singh ("Death of a Rural Voice", June 15) is a complete hatchet job. You have concentrated entirely on the negative aspects of his personality—showering him with epithets like power-hungry, petty, self-destructive—but have virtually nothing positive to say about a man, rare among Indian politicians, who articulated a clear, alternative economic framework to the prevailing one, who won the undying adulation of North India's intermediate peasantry for his role in zamindari abolition and for voicing their cause, and whom even his opponents referred to as simple, honest and dedicated. Surely this man deserved a more balanced obituary.

Delhi VINOD CHOWDHURY

UNEQUAL SHARING

Apropos your write-up about the Eradi Commission award ("Muddying the Waters", June 15), in view of the contradictions in the tribunal's report viv-a-vis the Punjab accord, it wouldn't be improper to dismiss the award as "Radi Report". Besides, once the Haryana elections are over, there is every likelihood of the report being dumped into the dustbin by the Central Government.

Amritsar KAMALJIT SINGH AHLUWALIA

TIME FOR NEGOTIATIONS

The imposition of President's rule in Punjab ("A Risky Gambit", May 31) at this juncture is an intelligent exercise in the governance of the crisis-ridden state. It will certainly help in reducing the escalating terrorist activity. The present regime should stop the migration of the minority communities and, more important, start a dialogue with the moderate and extremist groups to solve the problem once and for all.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

S. Paravur — V. JAYAPRAKASH

■ Your cover story fails to look sympathetically at the decision of the Congress Party to impose President's rule in Punjab. It had become very clear to all of us concerned that the law enforcing agencies of the Barnala regime had become totally defunct. Hindu residents of Punjab had to migrate, terrorists killed innocent civilians with impunity, external forces had become predominant, and the state was in total disarray. And with ministers like Chandumajra and others involved in slanging matches with the unimpeachable Director-General of Police Ribeiro, the Congress and Rajiv Gandhi had little choice.

Ahmedabad — ARCHAN MEHTA

■ Commonsense seems to have been sacrificed at the altar of political expediency. The release of the Eradi Commission report and description of imposition of President's rule as temporary clearly indicate that Rajiv is no more interested in the implementation of the accord, but only in retaining the Hindi belt in order to stop the Congress(I) from becoming a regional party.

Bombay — S.A. SRINIVASA SHARMA

OBFUSCATING ISSUES

Your special report on business ("Heading for Trouble", May 31) attempts to obfuscate the real issues behind the poor showing of Indian industry—inefficiency and mismanagement—by raising the bogey of demand recession and blaming the Government's policies for it.

The "Bombay-based financially crippled man-made fibre unit" (Nirlon) and "the moped company of Bangalore with French collaboration" (Chamundi Mopeds) are not victims of looming industrial recession. The real reason is, in the first case, a running feud between its two managing directors and amateurish handling of a labour dispute, and in the second, a laughable attempt to sell its product at a 50 per cent higher price than the competition without offering significant justifying features. The reason for poor showing in light commercial vehicles is not poor offtake but misjudgement and lethargy in response to the yen's appreciation.

It is heartening, therefore, to note that IDBI Chairman S.S. Nadkarni and other government officials have correctly diagnosed the current shake-out as a weeding out process for inefficient units and refuse to be alarmed.

Bombay — N.M. KARANDIKAR & A. AGRAWAL

CRUMBLING SYSTEM

It has been rightly pointed out in your Comment ("Disintegrated Circuits," May 31) that the present political system is not acting in unison. It is no longer an organism with all its limbs functioning in coordination; it has been slaughtered and its limbs are ready for sale.

Gulbarga — TIRUMAL MUNDARGI

■ Your comment candidly depicts the circumstances we are in. While the brute majority is having its sway, the intellectuals, perforce, are keeping their mouths shut. The future is dark, except for those who matter at the Centre.

Jamshedpur — DR SAROJ MOHANTY

UNFAIR COMMENT

In your article on Jamini Roy ("An Indian Sensibility", May 31), you have, through the comment of Dr Kejriwal of Chitrakoot Art Gallery, Calcutta, accused Jamini Roy's son Amiya Roy of painting "fake Jamini Roys" till his death. This is objectionable. Amiya Roy was a mosaic painter of his own style. He had been a life-long assistant to his father and since 1977, had been suffering from Parkinson's disease. It is an impossible task for a paralytic patient to continue painting.

In April 1987, to commemorate the birth centenary of Jamini Roy several galleries in Calcutta held exhibitions of his paintings. An English daily accused one of the galleries of exhibiting fake Jamini Roy paintings. According to newsmen, the exhibits came from two individuals and of course, I am sure, Amiya Roy was not one of them.

Calcutta — ASHOKE ROY

YUPPY CULTURE

Your article about Marutis and their owners ("A Brash New Culture", May 31) was informative and enjoyable. But there was one small mistake. The movie mentioned in the article as Night Rider is not quite correct. It is Knight Rider and it is a serial, not a movie. It gets its name from the man who drives the car, Michael Knight.

Trinidad — DEEPAK PANDEY

■ I was amused and shocked by the story. Amused that there are car owners who waste so much money in dressing their cars; shocked that they get away with it. Here it is illegal to add anything, not even tinted glasses, without the approval of the Registrar of Vehicles. Laws must be the same in India, except that there is no rule of law.

Singapore — S.L. BUDHRANI

PEOPLE'S MANDATE

The Haryana elections ("The Besieged Fortress", May 31) can predict the future of the Rajiv Gandhi Government. Bofors and Fairfax are all laid on Haryana soil. The judgement of the people will be seen in the ballot box and we can be sure that it will be more than Justice Thakkar and Justice Natrajan's report on the issue.

Moradabad — Jr VIJAY SIROHI

MISTAKEN IDENTITY

With reference to your report ("Kickback Row", April 30), S.K. Bhatnagar, defence secretary, had nothing to do with the selection of German submarines. Bhatnagar has also not been appointed to head the inquiry committee which is probing the deal. The committee which he heads has been asked to check into the modus operandi of agents in connection with the defence deals.

Delhi — A.K. ROY director, Directorate of Public Relations, Defence Ministry

HOUSE GROUSE

I refer to your article about the house purchased by me in August 1986 ("Undervalued Officials", March 31) in the name of my wife (for purely sentimental reasons). The notice issued by the Income Tax Department does mention Rs 10.08 lakh (not Rs 10.8 lakh as mentioned in your report), but, on February 25, a few days after your correspondent met me, when our representative went up to the department as required, we were given a valuation report in which the value estimated was found to be Rs 7.66 lakh.

We requested the department to let us know the basis for the notice figure of Rs 10.08 lakh; in response, a brief report drawn up by another official was given to us which contains this figure of Rs 10.08 lakh. The appropriate submissions are being made in this regard to the income tax authorities.

Bhopal — G. JAGATHPATHI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

"Around the world, you and me . . . and our V.I.P.!"

V.I.P. It's part of the lifestyle of travellers the world over — an unmistakable symbol of international class.

V.I.P. Built tough to take the rigours of travel. In a fascinating panorama of designs, sizes, colours, each with the distinct stamp of V.I.P. style. Now with new international features — a soft grip handle, autolock security chain, recessed wheels. For that special feel of luxury only a V.I.P. can give you.

Rediscover the romance of travel. Get a V.I.P. — and get away!
The world is waiting for you . . .

V.I.P.
LUGGAGE
Spells international class
. . . anywhere

Copyright Indian Institute of Advanced Study and eGangotri Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

for e mor reas mor no s a tax

the e wate
The flow you land lively fello they

And know happ wom rathe than

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Ask a Goan – hand on his heart – when he loves Goa best.

"When it rains..."

There is a clear day for every rainy one in Goa during the monsoon. And if that's not sufficient reason, there are others: no big city monsoon blues; no flooded streets; no slushy pavements; and if you need a taxi all you do is send for one.

In Goa during the rains, the earth reaches out to wind and water. Emerald discovers the land. The soil is scented with life, green, flowering, newly risen. Turn where you will, the images of a rich, fresh land celebrate the eye.

It is a time for good company, a lively bottle, song, great food, the fellowship of friends. Visitors vow they will return with the next rains. And even honeymooners have been known to rise, go forth, and make happy new discoveries. Small wonder then that Goans would rather be in Goa in the monsoon than anywhere else.

So will you.

A SPECIAL OFFER:

Between 15th June and 30th September, special discounts of up to 50% are available on room tariffs. Attractive package deals, that include breakfast, lunch and dinner, a welcome drink and airport – hotel transfers, are also offered.

The Best Way To Get There:

By Air from Bombay, Delhi, Bangalore, Cochin, Trivandrum, Pune or Hyderabad; by Buses from Bombay, Bangalore, Pune and other places nearby; or by Train via Londa.

The Best Place to Stay:

Government and privately owned accommodation along the beaches, in cities and other places of tourist interest, offer a comfortable stay to suit all pockets, ranging from Rs. 10/- to 5-Star Category.

THE DIRECTORATE OF TOURISM GOVERNMENT OF GOA, DAMAN & DIU.

For details, please write to:

☐ Mr.P.G.Kenkare, Assistant Director (Information), Directorate Of Tourism, Tourist Home, Patto, Panaji-403 001.

☐ Mr.A.Peres Da Costa, Chief Executive (Marketing), Goa, Daman & Diu Tourism Development Corporation Ltd., Kadamba Bus Terminus, Panaji-403 001.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

1987 good reasons to see Thailand this year.

Majestic temples and magnificent elephants, glittering roofs and garlands of orchids, enchanting people and exotic cuisine...one could write a long book about the land they call Thailand (and many seasoned travellers have). And never has there been a better year to see Thailand than 1987. For this is Visit Thailand Year in the Land of Smiles.

Among the kaleidoscope of festivities planned for 1987 you should try to catch some of these:

Feb. 13-15. Chiang Mai Flower Festival. A million blooms, a thousand smiles. One of the unforgettable moments of your life.

April 13. Songkran Festival. A nationwide water festival celebrating the Thai Lunar New Year.

May 9-10. Bun Bang Fai Festival. "Bang!" indeed. Held in northeast Thailand, a fireworks show like no other you've ever seen.

Oct. 16. Royal Barge Procession. An armada of brilliant colours, pageantry and rare splendour not to be missed.

Nov. 5. Loy Krathong. Celebrated nationwide, this is Thailand's loveliest festival.

Nov. 14-15. The Elephant Round-Up. Come to Surin in northeast Thailand for this extraordinary display.

Nov. 22. Bangkok Marathon. A major sporting event commemorating His Majesty the King's 60th Birthday Anniversary.

Dec. 15. Light and Sound Presentation. A glittering occasion to be held at the Royal Grand Palace and the Temple of the Emerald Buddha.

These are only a small selection of the truly stunning special events that mark 1987 as Visit Thailand Year.

Make your holiday plans now. And make sure you fly on Thailand's own airline, Thai International. Where the exotic sensations that are Thailand start from the moment you step on board.

Thai

MNC 6H-THA 4702

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Explosive Questions

THE findings of the inquiry conducted by the National Audit Bureau of Sweden, into the commissions paid by howitzer-manufacturer Bofors in connection with its Rs 1,400-crore deal with India, have served as an eye-opener. The findings have clarified issues that had been sought to be obfuscated, silenced the orchestrated drum-beat about destabilisation, and raised several questions about the Government's credibility and precise intentions. There is little doubt that this is now one scandal that cannot be wished away.

The essential facts stand out clearly. Bofors did pay money to an Indian agent; the payment was in connection with the controversial deal; it was made into Swiss bank accounts; and the sums involved (up to Rs 50 crore) seem much too big to be related to general support services like booking airline tickets (as had once been claimed). The Bofors explanation—that these were payments connected with winding up the arrangement with its Indian agent—may or may not be technically correct, but only the enduringly gullible will believe that it is the whole truth. For there can be little doubt that the commission was meant to be used as bribes.

Illustration by AJIT NINAN

Swedish Radio (which first lifted the lid on the whole affair) now stands vindicated, and the Government's and the Congress(I) Working Committee's somewhat tired war cry about the foreign hand and destabilisation stands exposed as nothing but cynical slogan-mongering designed to pull the wool over people's eyes. The issues are real, the bribes have been paid, and the stench of corruption will not go away.

The agent's identity is as yet unknown, but he is probably the man who denied such payments in the past and who has now flown the country with his family. But more important than this is another question: for whom was the money ultimately meant?

That answer can come only when more information is released, because what is known so far is only a fraction of the whole truth. Vital details have been held back by both Bofors and the Swedish Government. But on this aspect too, the Indian Government's response has once again been thoroughly unsatisfactory. When the heat was on in Parliament, it declined to have an inquiry conducted by a parliamentary committee, arguing that the Swedish Government had been asked to investigate. The two need not have been mutually exclusive. Now when the situation calls for urgent follow-up measures, the sudden eagerness for a parliamentary inquiry can only be interpreted as a flanking manoeuvre.

Quite apart from the fact that a parliamentary committee will have no powers to seek information abroad—either from Bofors, or from the Swedish authorities, or from Switzerland—the Government seems to be dragging its feet on the first step: the actual setting up of the committee. Besides all this, there is the obvious question of what is being done about the illegal commission of Rs 30 crore paid on the deal with a German company for submarines.

The Government, of course, still claims complete innocence, and the prime minister continues to maintain that he is as interested in getting to know the culprits, and to catch them, as anyone else. But its actions so far do not measure up to this public stance. Indeed, the Government has to explain how it maintained complete silence for so long on a Bofors communication in April, admitting that payments had been made. On this account alone, the Government's credibility in the whole affair wears dangerously thin.

If the Bofors gun is to point anywhere other than at the Government itself, Rajiv Gandhi must straightaway take a series of obvious steps. He must ask the Swedish authorities for all the information they have withheld. He must ask Bofors to return the money that has been paid into Swiss bank accounts, or reduce by a like amount the sum that India has to pay to it for equipment supplied. This should be demanded on pain of cancelling the contract for breach of its conditions. Bofors clearly has more to lose than India if the contract is cancelled, and the Government of India holds the whip. Similarly, Bofors must be asked to provide all the information that it has so far withheld from the Swedish authorities.

The Bofors agent in India should not have been allowed to leave the country when it was known that the audit bureau's findings were due any day. He should now be forced to return, by withdrawing his passport if necessary, and by registering a case and seeking Interpol's help if there is no other option. Also, the Government must follow up the matter with the Swiss authorities, and enter into an agreement for tackling economic criminals in either country.

Without these steps, the Government will stand indicted in the public mind, if not in any court of law, in a case of proven corruption concerning a massive defence contract abroad. The importance of this should not be underestimated, else the Government will find itself swallowed up by a fresh political crisis, and further storms in Parliament. The issue will snowball in a manner that no one can control. And there could be still more disclosures from abroad. If Rajiv Gandhi is to get on top of this explosive situation, and win public trust on the issue, he must demonstrate that his government's hands are clean, and go after the culprits in a manner that leaves no doubt about his commitment to get to the bottom of the whole affair. His government's future could depend on it.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SAVING A FEW RUPEES ON YOUR ROOFING SHEETS COULD BE AN EXPENSIVE MISTAKE.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Of course you can buy a cheap brand of A.C. roofing sheets, and save yourself some money. But don't be surprised when, in a few years, it shows up as an expensive mistake.

Because cutting corners, as you know, can never substitute quality.

Quality in Experience.

At Everest, we don't sell cheap A.C. roofing sheets. As pioneers, we have always given you the best.

A fact that has stood the test of time for over 50 years. For clients like Larsen & Toubro, Reliance, Hindustan Lever, Bajaj Auto, Dunlop, Indian Railways, BHEL and hundreds more.

Quality in Research.

Our 'no compromise' policy begins at our R&D centre. Stringent evaluation to determine the best grade of fibre and cement.

Continuous testing of the fibre-cement mix. Specially developed fibre orientation technology for precise and even distribution of fibre.

Adding up to enhanced strength that is consistent across every sheet.

No wonder our testing standards are 25% higher than ISI.

Quality in Service.

In service too, we don't cut corners.

The Everest 'Code of Practice' which lays the standard norms for correct product usage is, in fact, something the entire industry swears by.

Our technical service personnel are at your beck and call to help with design and installation. And to recommend the right products and accessories. Absolutely free of cost.

Quality in Versatility.

Our technological base allows us to make specialised designs for specific projects.

Like our dust-proof design for Kinetic Honda. Special gutter design for Bajaj Auto. Special curved sheets for Kerala Road Transport. And many others.

You'll find the largest product range available with Everest, for a complete roofing system.

A choice of 3 roofing sheet designs. The widest range of gutters and roofing accessories.

And, of course, we have extensive coverage with 4 factories, a country-wide network of sales depots, stockists and dealers to ensure instant delivery and service.

To be able to give you all this, we've had to pay a price. A price that's understandably, a bit higher.

For us. And, naturally, for you.

But when you think about it, it's a small price to pay for the sake of your reputation.

And, of course, your peace of mind.

EVEREST

FIBRE CEMENT PRODUCTS

50 YEARS WITHOUT COMPROMISE.

EVEREST BUILDING PRODUCTS LTD.
(A MEMBER, TURNER AND NEWALL GROUP, U.K.)

Ashok Bhawan, 93 Nehru Place,
New Delhi-110 019. Tel: 643 2568/643 2569

Zonal Sales Offices: • Block 'D' Shivsagar Estate, Dr. Annie Besant Road, Worli, Bombay-400 018. Tel: 493 8234/493 8236
• Podanur P.O., Coimbatore- 641 023.Tel. 24116/24117 • Everest House, 948 Napier Town, Post Box 70, Jabalpur-482 001.Tel: 25216/25217.
• Everest House, Taratolla Road, Garden Reach, Calcutta-700 024.Tel. 45 2001/45 2002.

Enterprise/D/EV/14

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SAVE RS. 39/-

Every fortnight INDIA TODAY gives you the complete perspective on subjects determining the nation's destiny.

Can you afford to miss out?

Here is my annual subscription of Rs. 105/- by Cheque/M.O/D.D

No. _____

Please mail my copy to:

Name _____

Address _____

_____

City _____

State _____

Pin Code _____

INDIA TODAY
THE COMPLETE NEWSMAGAZINE

Mail to:
Living Media India Pvt. Ltd.
Subscription Department
Thomson Press Building
P.B. No. 69, Delhi-Mathura Road
Faridabad 121007 (HARYANA)

The Statesman

- India is fast on the road to creating another Bangladesh.

■ R. PREMADASA, Sri Lanka's prime minister, commenting on the relief supplies offered by India, quoted in The Hindu

- Mr Gandhi may win an immediate victory by letting Colombo know in no uncertain terms as to who is the region's Big Brother, but the shock waves in the neighbourhood are bound to affect India's future standing and credibility.

■ EDITORIAL in The Statesman

- Behind every dagger is a person and behind every person is a purse.

■ V.P. SINGH, on communal violence, in Sunday Mail

- (Rajiv Gandhi) was not quite clear about the dimensions of the problems. He was in a confused state of mind with regard to their solutions.

■ N. SANJEEVA REDDY, former President, summing up his talks with Rajiv in Indian Express

- No campaign should be run against V.P. Singh....It may damage the Congress Party.

■ KAMALAPATI TRIPATHI in Sunday Mail

- Rajiv Gandhi is a prime minister in flux. He lives from moment to moment.

■ MADHU DANDAVATE in Probe

- I owe my and our group's reputation to the Indian people.

■ MICHAEL HERSHMAN in Indian Express

- The people of Haryana are sick and tired of the rule of the Lals, and their dirty and unprincipled politics.

■ AJIT SINGH in Onlooker

- People of Haryana are not naive....You cannot cheat them. We will win.

■ BHAJAN LAL in The Illustrated Weekly of India

- The prime ministership may belong to him (Rajiv Gandhi) but the nation belongs to all of us.

■ A.P. VENKATESWARAN in The Week

- I am happy to be considered an intellectual. I don't think others would consider me one.

■ JYOTI BASU in Imprint

- But he (Amitabh Bachchan) would not understand a truth about India: here life may imitate art, but it almost never imitates bad art.

■ M.J. AKBAR in Sunday

- It (virginity) is a woman's most precious possession which she can present to the most important guy in her life.

■ POONAM DHILLON quoted in Sunday Observer

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Reaching out to you. Wherever you are.

A nationwide network of sales offices, stockyards, warehouses and consignment agencies maintaining close contact with customers.

A team of helpful application engineers, advising on product usage.

A Company where marketing is not an impersonal sale of products.

That is Tata Steel.

Reaching out to customers.

Responding to ideas on new product development.

Ensuring that commitments made are kept.

Constantly searching for ways to serve you better.

Tata Steel. The Company that is closer to you.

Wherever you are.

TATA STEEL

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A woman expresses herself in many languages.
Vimal is one of them.

VIMAL
A RELIANCE PRODUCT
Sarees

RELIANCE CUP 1987
CRICKET FOR PEACE

Reliance Cup 1987
The cricket event

VIMAL
The Official Fabric for Reliance Cup 1987

Fabric PERFECTION
ONLY VIMAL

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Oberoi, Bombay

Now there's a hotel that is truly one of the most luxurious in the world. The Oberoi, Bombay. Located in the heart of the business district, each of our exquisitely styled guest rooms is appointed with the finest furnishings and fabrics. There's a personal butler to attend to your every need. And our exclusive Executive Centre features the latest office equipment available 24 hours a day. At The Oberoi, Bombay, you'll discover the best the world has to offer.

The Oberoi

BOMBAY, INDIA

AUSTRALIA, EGYPT, INDIA, INDONESIA, IRAQ, NEPAL, SAUDI ARABIA, SRI LANKA
RESERVATIONS THROUGH YOUR TRAVEL AGENT, LRI (NEW YORK) 800-223-0888 (LONDON) 01-541-1199 STR (FRANKFURT) 069-230-304,
THE HOTEL DIRECT TELEPHONE 2025757 TELEX 4153/4154 OBBY IN FACSIMILE 2043282 OR ANY OF THE OBEROI SALES OFFICES

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Cartoons by AJIT NINAN

LIQUOR ON TAP

■ The residents of Vidisha town in Madhya Pradesh woke up one morning to discover an unexpected—but very welcome—bonus as they prepared for their daily ablutions. Turning on their water taps, they found a somewhat familiar smelling liquid that had a decidedly inebriating effect!

The source of the flowing liquor was traced to a seemingly innocuous excise department warehouse, where, the evening before, officials had decided to collect water in a liquor storage tank by fixing a pipe connecting the tank to a water tap. But, perhaps affected by the intoxicating fumes surrounding them, the excise officials forgot to remove the pipe. And as a result, when the tank overflowed, the alcohol and water mixture was suctioned back into the pipelines of the main water supply system—and by the next morning, it had travelled around the whole town.

By the time the public health officials of the engineering department got around to tracing the snag, however, the town residents had already taken unusually merry baths and quenched their thirst for the day—not to mention stocking up bucketfuls of country liquor to last them a long while.

UNSETTLING ACCOUNT

■ Most banks pride themselves on employing the most loyal and trustworthy as their officials. But some managers can turn out to be uncomfortably over-zealous in their protective instincts towards the organisation, especially when the dreaded period of retirement nears.

The manager of the Sharda Rural Bank's Inchahul branch in Satna district, Vinod Tripathi, was one such loyalist, apprehensive at the thought of leaving his iron-hand ruled money-changers.

But there was nothing he could do to halt the inevitable, and on the appointed day, he acceded to taking the new incumbent Rakesh Singhai around his hallowed ex-premises. And soon enough, in the process of handing over charge to the new incumbent, there developed a sharp spat between the two.

Then, with a ungentlemanly shove, Tripathi locked up his unsuspecting successor in the bank vault and pocketing the keys, walked merrily home. It was fully five hours before the police rescued the terror-stricken man. Needless to say, Tripathi now has a different kind of account to settle.

STREAKY IDEA

■ In many universities, student union leaders are notoriously famed as campus mafia dons—willing to protect their reputations at knife-point. But a certain student leader in Baroda University tried to enact a considerably less violent 'encounter' to gain redress—though with as much shock-value.

When Devendra Surti was caught red-handed copying from his neighbour's answer sheet while giving his MA exams, he was barred from taking any future tests. He then used the time-tested method of threatening the supervisor who had nabbed him. But he soon realised he couldn't get away so easily, as police charges were hurriedly brought against him.

That's when the irate student leader decided drastic action was required—and announced that he would streak through the campus protesting the 'false charges' against him. When the fateful day arrived and Surti emerged, wearing only a strategically slung towel, he encountered cops surrounding him on all sides. It seems his closest followers-turned-informers could not see their boss stripping himself of his dignity any further. To date, the foiled streaker-leader is still conjuring up ways to redress the damage.

A STEP TOO FAR

■ One reviving perk that government servants enjoy—to mitigate their tensions of conducting affairs of state—is to go on all available junkets. So it was no surprise to officials at Guwahati airport when Nimal Nag Chowdhury landed up, flashing a letter in the name of the West Bengal finance minister requesting all assistance be given to him and his family.

With the maintenance of inter-state relations being a high priority, officials decided to lay out the red carpet for the Chowdhurys. Official cars whisked them away to Guwahati's most luxurious hotel, and detailed sight-seeing plans were made.

But soon, Chowdhury expressed the desire to charter a plane to the more remote Meghalaya. A tall order, by any standards. That's when the Assamese decided to check out his credentials post-haste.

A phone call revealed that the high-flying imposter, after getting his hands on the West Bengal finance minister's official letter-head pad, wrote the meal-ticket to a holiday himself. The revelations landed Chowdhury in the jug, but it does go to show, ingenuity has its reward.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Say goodbye to tiredness the tastiest way

NEW Campco

WINNER The family health drink that keeps you ahead

Now, get the perfect combination of great taste and good health. In every cup of new Campco Winner. Rich chocolate taste. And all the zip and verve of glucose, minerals and vitamins. To give your family that something extra.

A delicious chocolate drink.

From India's largest, most modern plant.

Campco Limited
Mangalore

R K SWAMY/CL/4923

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Taking Stock

● OPERATION Brasstacks—India's controversial multi-corps level defence exercise near the Rajasthan border area that came near to sparking off a conflagration with Pakistan—is now being subjected to intensive post-mortems in South Block, as also in military confabs. The consensus so far is that although the operation and the crisis it created with Pakistan gave India somewhat of a bloody nose in diplomatic terms, it was useful in pinpointing some gaping holes in both alertness and defence preparedness. Several times, the side playing the role of the enemy—and aggressor—easily outmanoeuvred and dealt crushing "defeats" to the side playing the defender. But the exercise, reported to have cost hundreds of crores, also took a severe toll of tanks, vehicles, and armoured personnel carriers. A huge amount of them were put out of commission because of worn-out treads, shortage of engine grease and the failure of entire engines—with no ready replacements—after the gruelling four-month programme. Also, the air force, particularly the western air command, was not too happy about flying endless sorties for so prolonged a period at the behest of the army, which seemed to be in total control of the entire operation and its logistics. Since then, relations between top air force and army brass have been edgy at best.

In Relapse

● EVER since the departure of V.P. Singh from the Finance Ministry, the Government has faced the charge that it has wound up its offensive against economic offenders and that the Enforcement Directorate has now become a paper tiger. The ministry, however, refutes this as hogwash and says that the sun has not yet set over the raid raj. Whatever the emerging scenario, one post-V.P. Singh development is quite apparent. During the raja's tenure, he went after corrupt officials in his own ministry with a zeal and ferocity equal to that displayed by his enforcement boys against erring industrialists. But all that has now changed. The internal vigilance department of the ministry is back to its pre-V.P. Singh days of bureaucratic paralysis. Officials there don't even dream of making cases against the corrupt in their own ranks because they are unsure of what support they will receive. And in the bargain, even the graft cases already filed against officials within the ministry are now simply languishing in dusty desk drawers.

Miffed Minister

● RAILWAYS Minister Madhav Rao Scindia is said to be stewing at the gills over the treatment recently meted out to him by the Prime Minister's Secretariat. The erstwhile prince was all set to embark on an official trip to Japan and Australia at the end of May when, at the last moment—a day before he was to leave—he received a terse note from the secretariat instructing him to stay put on Indian soil. Scindia was more than a little miffed because a couple of weeks earlier, when he had broached the idea of his proposed trip to Rajiv Gandhi, he had been told to go ahead. As is the formality, Scindia put the proposal in writing, but received no written response. Then for five days he sought, in vain, to get an appointment with Rajiv. Nonetheless, believing the prime minister to be busy with other things, Scindia continued preparations for the trip on the basis of the oral okay. But plans were stymied at the last minute. One of the explanations being given is that Scindia was required to stay on for the Haryana election campaign. According to another, Scindia's family was to accompany him and the cancellation was an example of Rajiv's disapproval of foreign junketing by ministers. Whatever the real reasons, Scindia has not been able to learn of them as he is still waiting for his long-sought appointment with the prime minister.

Cartoons by AJIT NINAN

Active Allahabadis

● THERE's the arms lobby, the industrial lobby, the debentures lobby. But who would have thought that there would be an Allahabad lobby? Sure enough, it exists, and in the nation's capital at that. Its membership is urbane, patrician, selective, and distinguished, consisting of, among others, a top representative from the Prime Minister's Secretariat, a senior journalist, three senior secretaries from key ministries, and even a member of the railway board. What they have in common is that they are all Allahabadis. And they meet regularly for quiet, but elegant and sumptuous dinners—sometimes at each other's residences, and other times at a leading five-star hotel—to discuss strategies for the resuscitation and rejuvenation of their native town. The circle of participants is expanded only after very careful scrutiny of the prospective entrant, much in the fashion of the secretive Freemasons. Just being from Allahabad is not enough of a qualification. Even Amitabh Bachchan has so far failed to make the grade.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Contours of Conflict

CONFLICT shaped the fortnight that was in provocative profile. The sabre being rattled by New Delhi at the Sri Lankan Government's offensive in the Jaffna peninsula suddenly turned into a double-edged sword. India's gunboat diplomacy in its southern waters floundered on its own inept helmsmanship. The subsequent face-saving air-drop may have salvaged domestic pride but gained New Delhi a dubious diplomatic value in the regional and international context.

It was clearly the heat in the domestic kitchen that forced New Delhi to jump the gun in its clumsy handling of the Sri Lankan situation—in full view of a boatload of foreign correspondents ferried there at government expense. The flotilla of failure caused considerable damage to India's diplomatic credibility, as did the subsequent show of symbolic force in the skies over Jaffna. New Delhi held all the cards in terms of being able to exploit the Tamil situation in northern Sri Lanka, but by playing them badly it lost the hand. In the regional context, it has branded India as the neighbourhood bully, caused irreparable damage to Indo-Sri Lankan relations, posed a serious threat to the fledgling South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation (SAARC) and gives the organisation's members further cause to gang up against New Delhi.

The air-drop saved face but its gains were domestic and dubious.

The outcome of the Haryana elections could write the future script of Indian politics.

The contours of conflict were even more dangerously defined in the north, where China appears determined to flex its military muscle in support of its stand on the border issue. And, even if the war in the north is purely psychological, China's overt military build-up on the border indicated that the climate of conflict hovered at dangerous temperature levels.

Other guns were booming as well, as the Swedish Audit Bureau released its report confirming the payment of inordinately large sums of money as commissions on the Bofors purchase even as the Indian Government continued to insist—not very convincingly—that it had been vindicated. The fact that Bofors' Indian agent, Win Chadha, had quietly slipped out of the country before the report was released only added spice to the scandal.

Venkataraman seems the favourite for the presidential nomination.

Elsewhere, another juicy drama was drawing to a close as the race for the next President of India entered its final lap. With the ruling party and the Opposition unable to agree on a common candidate to succeed Giani Zail Singh, the field was narrowed down to the trio of southerners being groomed by the ruling party—Vice-President R. Venkataraman, and Union ministers B. Shankaranand and P.V. Narasimha Rao, with Margatham Chandrashekhar being the darkest of horses. Political bookies, however, were backing Venkataraman as firm favourite in the presidential stakes.

Chadha's departure added spice to the Bofors gun scandal.

But the battle of the fortnight was obviously the one being fought in neighbouring Haryana, the outcome of which could write the future script for the Indian political scene. With Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi personally spearheading his party's campaign and Lok Dal chieftain Devi Lal launching a highly effective and all-out offensive, it promises to be an epic electoral encounter.

In that sense, the fortnight that was appeared to be a powerful aperitif for an unknown feast—the next moves in the war of nerves between New Delhi and Colombo or, for that matter, between New Delhi and Beijing; the outcome of the presidential and Haryana elections and all that it portends, the possible fall-out of the latest episode in the Bofors drama, all issues that could have unpalatable and far-reaching consequences for a country confined to an uncertain limbo.

—DILIP BOBB

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Long before your clothes were rolls of cloth, we thought up the drape and handle of your trousers, the sharpness of the crease, the soft comfort of your shirt, the richness of shades...

Because all this is determined by the quality of the fibre used for the yarn used for the fabric.

Jailene.

The premium Polyester Staple fibre, imparts the desired feel and appearance to your clothing.

Your dream clothing. Swadeshi Polytex makes it possible.

jailene®

SP

Swadeshi Polytex Limited

creating tomorrow's fibre today.

Style courtesy : Kalamandir

Shoma/8371

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SRI LANKA

Tackling the Tigers

THE ingredients were all there, a political and diplomatic witches' brew that had finally bubbled to a boil. Across the Palk Straits, Sri Lankan security forces had launched their most concerted and coordinated offensive to date, in what Colombo described as a "fight to the finish" against Tamil guerilla redoubts in the north. In Tamil Nadu, pressure mounted remorselessly as Tamil militant spokesmen painted horrific pictures of Sri Lanka's "genocide" against their Tamil cousins and the bombing of civilian targets and killing of innocent people in the Jaffna peninsula. In New Delhi, a government increasingly accused of indecision and indifference to the ethnic war in Sri Lanka and faced with domestic unrest and a sharp sag in its popularity ratings, was stung into dubious action.

Suddenly, and without warning, the ethnic war in Sri Lanka escalated into a major regional and international crisis as the Indian Government opted to alter its role from that of a mediator to an active participant. The flurry of diplomatic exchanges between Colombo and New Delhi

SHYAM TEKWANI

■ View of damaged buildings in Point Pedro from army helicopter

■ Jaffna hospital after shelling and

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

that had started in late May following the Jaffna offensive, quickly acquired a combative edge as India announced on June 1, its intention, "motivated by humanitarian considerations", to dispatch a flotilla of unarmed ships carrying relief supplies for the people of Jaffna under the flag of the Indian Red Cross on June 3-with representatives of the Indian and international media on board.

However, New Delhi's attempts to high-profile its aid efforts sank in the seas off the Jaffna coast as Sri Lankan naval vessels refused to allow the flotilla to enter the island's territorial waters (see box). In Colombo, the reaction was characteristically high-strung. "Lanka stands firm. Flotilla goes home" screamed a banner headline in the Sun, a pro-government newspaper. Crackers were burst as Sri Lankans celebrated their 'victory' against what one commentator derisively described as India's "bumboat diplomacy".

That India had bumbled, and bumbled badly, was all too evident in the gloom that descended on South Block and in Tamil Nadu. For New Delhi the loss of face and prestige was far too serious to be dismissed lightly. Even in Colombo, the chauvinistic high was tinged with uncertainty and concern about what India's next move would be. Key people in the Sri Lankan Government tried frantically to get in touch with the three men they consider friends of Colombo—Romesh Bhandari, Dinesh Singh and N.K.P. Salve—but without success. Meanwhile, in an elegant bungalow in a normally quiet Colombo street, the man who would be the first to know India's next move was already making contingency plans.

Jyotindra Nath Dixit, popularly known as Mani Dixit, is an unflappable man who, in his two-year tenure as India's high commissioner in Sri Lanka, has handled his increasingly prickly assignment with considerable tact and equanimity. But on June 4, Dixit was mangling the stem of his ever-present pipe as all confidential files and documents were removed to a safe place pending the

SHYAM TEKWANI

Tigers in Jaffna bunker

Flaming shop in Jaffna town after mortar attack

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

The greatest cooling power under the sun.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Most airconditioners work well when it isn't too hot.

But when the mercury climbs over 40°C, they start to wilt from heat exhaustion.

And by 46°C, there's only one machine in India still going strong.

Amtrex.

The only one specially engineered to handle extreme heat.

Amtrex has airconditioners with capacities ranging from 0.5 to 5 tonnes. Seven models in window airconditioners and a selection of packaged airconditioners. As well as a range of water coolers and voltage stabilisers.

Amtrex airconditioners are now also available in split units. Which means you can have the cool-air outlet in your room and leave the hum of the machine outside.

Our sales executive will give you the details.

He'll tell you about our wide network of distributors and dealers.

He'll also tell you about our sales and service network. Thirteen sales offices. Seven-days-a-week service. Complaints attended to in 24 hours. And a standby machine if yours has to be taken for repairs.

Our sales executive may also be persuaded to disclose the names of a few Amtrex users like Reliance, Gwalior Rayon, Hoechst, Bank of India, Escorts, Bank of Baroda, Canara Bank and Diners.

Looks like everyone under the sun is using Amtrex.

Amtrex Ambience Pvt. Ltd.(An enterprise of Lalbhai Industries Consolidated), Rachana, Opp. Bombay Garage, Shahibaug Rd., Ahmedabad 380 004. Tel: 383035.

Branches/Offices at: Bombay: 233909. Calcutta: 448507. Delhi: 6835986. Madras: 440 802. Hyderabad: 722 77. Pune: 55483. Baroda: 322061.

AMTREX

Air conditioners

0.5, 1.0, 1.5 & 2.0 tonnes

Tnkaya AE 2.87 REL

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

KENNETH SOMANANDER/AFP

■ Sri Lankan soldiers taking Tamil youth for questioning in Point Pedro on June 2: explosive issue

all-important message from New Delhi. The message came just after noon, conveyed by Natwar Singh, minister of state for external affairs. India, he told Dixit, was planning to air drop relief supplies over the Jaffna peninsula that evening.

IN New Delhi, the decision had been late in the making. Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi was away on a tour of Gujarat and Goa, and Foreign Minister N.D. Tiwari was in Moscow on a scheduled visit. In their absence, the Sri Lankan crisis was being handled by Natwar Singh and Minister for Human Resources Development P.V. Narasimha Rao. While Singh was closeted with senior officials in the defence and foreign ministries, Rao met opposition leaders who urged the Government to "act decisively to salvage India's prestige." But it was only after Rajiv's return from Goa at around 1 a.m. on June 4 that the Political Affairs Committee of the Union Cabinet met. The meeting, which lasted till 4 a.m., was reconvened later that morning after Rajiv held discussions with Tamil Nadu Chief Minister M.G. Ramachandran who was specially flown in from Madras bearing a brief-case full of telegrams from citizens of his state pleading with him to "save" the Jaffna Tamils.

From then on, events snowballed with uncontrollable haste. At 3.25 p.m., Sri Lankan High Commissioner in India Bernard Tilakaratne was summoned to Natwar Singh's office and informed that India had decided to air drop emergency food supplies and medicine over the Jaffna peninsula, that the aircraft would be taking off at 4 p.m. and would be escorted by Mirage 2000 fighters. He also added that "any resistance would be met by force". Indian sources say that the Indian action was not an outright declaration of war but two stages short of that act. Tilakaratne, realising that by the time he returned to his office on Kautilya Marg in New Delhi's diplomatic enclave, the aircraft would be airborne, asked Singh to allow him to use his phone to inform Colombo.

But even without the minimal notice, Colombo could do little, nor was it inclined to. Despite the tough talk and India-baiting by people like Prime Minister R. Premadasa, Sri Lankan Joint Operations Commander in the north General Cyril Ranatunge's original orders to protect Sri Lanka's territorial integrity with every means at his command were cancelled. His new orders were to keep his air force on the ground and not to engage the Indian aircraft in any way. Said Brigadier Jerry Silva, commander of the Palaly air force base in Jaffna: "We were given strict instructions from Colombo not to fire at the Indian aircraft." In any event, the Sri Lankan air force with its six SIAI- Marchetti light fighter aircraft and around 20 Bell helicopters was no match for the IAF Mirages.

But the price for New Delhi's decision seemed excessively high. Colombo charged India with "naked violation of its sovereignty and territorial integrity" while Premadasa, the most rabid India-baiter in the Cabinet, characterised the air drop as "dogs that had shat on the Jaffna peninsula", terming it a dress rehearsal for an Indian invasion. The international reaction—barring Pakistan and China—was guarded but nonetheless critical of India's move. Even the Soviets maintained a pregnant silence.

Though the Indians maintain that the air-dropping was part of the initial plan and was conceived with the knowledge that the Sri Lankans would refuse to allow the flotilla into their waters, in diplomatic terms, the Indian Government seems to have lost more than it has

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INDIAN RELIEF MISSION

Journey to Jaffna

ON May 27, the All India Radio, in its morning broadcast, carried a strong statement by External Affairs Minister N.D. Tiwari, condemning the Sri Lankan offensive in Jaffna. Tiwari's statement signalled the beginning of a government plan which ended in the air drop over Jaffna. By end-May, the details had already been worked out. R. Rajamani, additional secretary, Cabinet Secretariat, in coordination with the Ministry of External Affairs (MEA), was to see to its nuts and bolts.

When on June 2 about 100 Delhi-based newsmen and photographers, Indian and foreign, boarded the Government-chartered Madurai-bound Indian Airlines 737 however, most seemed to treat the exercise as an official joke.

The choice of a launching pad for an operation that would hog international headlines was an unlikely one—Rameswaram is a small fishing town 165 km from Madurai. The fact that the operation had been hurriedly launched was soon evident. Although newsmen were told that the loading of boats would begin on June 2, that didn't happen. For one, fishermen at Rameswaram, whose boats were to carry the supplies, were edgy at the thought of being part of an unarmed flotilla. The enduring practice of haggling over what they should be paid was the second reason for delay.

Next morning, the loading proceeded slowly on to the 19 (down from the original 25) fragile 32-foot-long, 96 horse power fishing boats, wearing Red Cross flags. Each boat carried two tonnes of cargo—pulses, kerosene, bread, matchsticks, tamarind, vegetables, milk powder and salt. But the main article was rice, 27 tonnes in all.

Finally, at around 2 p.m., newsmen were taken to the Vikram, a 1,100-tonne, 74-metre-long ship of the offshore patrol vessel class, the escort for the fishing boats. Its heavy gun and Chetak helicopter had been removed overnight at Madras.

Around 4.15 p.m. the Vikram began moving at a gentle 4 knots to enable the fishing boats to keep up with it. The convoy was soon joined by the O.P. Srivastava, a search and rescue vessel with the Oil and Natural Gas Commission. At 4.45 p.m., the flotilla was on the edge of the international boundary that divides the waters of the two countries, as two Indian Coast Guard planes and a navy helicopter circled overhead. On the hazy horizon two ships appeared, one of them clearly a Sri Lankan gunboat.

Just after five o'clock, the captain of the Sri Lankan vessel established radio contact, and asked the Vikram to identify itself. Answering him was Deb Kumar Maitra, director of external publicity, a diplomat with 25 years' experience, and a surprise choice as Indian spokesman. With Maitra's statement of intent to carry relief to "the people of Jaffna", began a nearly four-hour discussion on whether the convoy could proceed.

It would seem that Maitra's brief was three-fold. One, internationalise the issue of the Tamil plight by seeking permission to proceed to Jaffna in the presence of newsmen. Two, seem reasonable by demonstrating that every possible attempt had been made to convince little Sri Lanka. But, three, at no cost endanger human lives. It was an important act that had to be gone through to establish that India had tested every avenue.

SEEMA SIROHI/AP

■ Supplies being air dropped: mission of mercy

■ The Indian flotilla in the Palk Straits: mission de

But few newsmen on board the Vikram realised this. Besides, they had other more immediate preoccupations: with strong winds stirring the waters, many of them were violently sea sick. At about 9 p.m. came the final answer from the gunboat commander: "I have been directed to inform you to remain where you are and not to enter the territory of Sri Lanka. I have been charged with the responsibility of protecting our territorial sovereignty to the best of my ability." The flotilla turned back soon afterwards.

On June 4, on the flight from Madurai back to New Delhi, the overriding feeling on board was of having witnessed an anti-climax. Then came the announcement that the flight was being diverted to Bangalore.

Unknown to them, in the early hours of June 4, the IAF had been told that it too would be playing a part in the drama. According to Vice-Chief of Air Staff Air Marshal S. Raghavendran, 57, in charge of the operation, armymen worked through the night to load five tonnes of supplies on to each of the five Soviet-made transport aircraft, AN 32, at a north-Indian air base. The pilots to be used in Operation Poomalai (Garland) were flown to Bangalore immediately so that they Between June 4, t winging

just as, f
French-b
the same the Mirag range and After galore ov company
dents—ha ers—were 32 took o
ing straig
there was the seven aircraft. I vousness,
calm of G
co-pilot F
Soon, rations an
and green sing at a h four Mira above the
A fifth wa coast. Beca about 200 between acted as rel
in touch w
Marshal D
How w was the qu

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Straits: ission designed to fail from the start?

PRASHANT PANJIAR

that they could catch up on their sleep. Between six and ten on the morning of June 4, the large AN 32s were already winging their way towards Bangalore just as, from a nearby air base, sleek French-built Mirage 2000s took off for the same destination. The choice fell on the Mirages as escorts because of their range and their effective air-to-air radar.

After some bitter argument at Bangalore over which newsmen should accompany the mission, 35 correspondents—half Indians and half foreigners—were finally chosen. As the first AN 32 took off at precisely 3.55 p.m., heading straight for Jaffna, 450 km away, there was restrained excitement among the seven journalists on board the lead aircraft. If they experienced some nervousness, it was quickly stilled by the calm of Group Captain B.K. Sunder and co-pilot Flight Lieutenant S.R. Swarup.

Soon, the aircraft—packed with dry rations and vegetables in brown cartons and green canvas packages—were cruising at a height of about 12,000 ft. The four Mirages circled 500 to 1,000 ft above the slow-flying transport aircraft. A fifth was in reserve, over the Indian coast. Because the normal radio range is about 200 km, two AN 32s hovered between Jaffna and Bangalore, and acted as relay stations to keep the convoy in touch with Bangalore where Air Vice-Marshal D. Keelor was in command.

How would Sri Lanka respond? This was the question on many people's mind as the AN 32s headed for their target. The Mirages were certain to deter the few outdated Italian SIAI-Marchettis in Sri Lanka's tiny air force. Some limited danger, however, lay from ground fire, since there was a real possibility that orders to hold fire had not reached Sri Lankan field troops around Jaffna.

By ten minutes to five, the AN 32s were over Sri Lanka. There was some tension in the lead aircraft now as it began to rapidly lose height until it was only 1,500 ft above ground level over the drop zone. At the point of the drop, it slowed down considerably below its normal cruising speed of 400 km per hour, making the plane susceptible to even machine-gun fire. As Sunder said: "If somebody opens fire from the ground, there is not much one can do about it."

Minutes after five, as the town of Jaffna appeared in sight, the huge rear of the aircraft opened, and on the press of a button, the cargo slid quickly over the rollers on the floor of the aircraft and rushed out. The aircraft lurched after the sudden loss of weight. Through the open rear, the other four AN 32s, could be seen discharging their cargo one after the other, the white parachutes ballooning dramatically before the cargo began its gentle descent to earth about seven km north of Jaffna. As the planes banked after their unchallenged run and headed back to Bangalore, it was all over for the pilots, bar the congratulations.

—SREEKANT KHANDEKAR in Rameswaram gained. The quantity of food dropped—25 tonnes—was hardly enough to feed the 8.33 lakh Tamils of the Jaffna peninsula for even a day. By not pressing the point further, India left itself vulnerable to the charge that the air drop was a purely face-saving gesture fuelled by domestic compulsions. And, considering Sri Lanka's tiny size, New Delhi was also being accused of employing bullying tactics. Colombo had said on June 1 that it was prepared to discuss modalities for accepting and distributing food supplies from India. Even if it was playing for time, New Delhi could have issued a deadline which, if not met, would have given India diplomatic justification for sending in supplies by sea or air. The fact that the International Red Cross has criticised the use of their offices for the flotilla is further embarrassment for New Delhi.

BUT in political terms, New Delhi was clearly starved of options. Despite the Sri Lankan Government's intransigence on the ethnic issue, South Block's handling of the problem has been marked by indecision, ad hocism and the involvement of too many cooks in the ethnic broth. The result: it has lost influence with both Colombo and the Tamil militants. But the Rajiv Gandhi Government is no longer in a position where it can ignore the strong emotional bonds between the 55 million people of Tamil Nadu and their ethnic kin in Sri Lanka. Not only does the Congress(I) need the support of Tamil Nadu legislators in the presidential election, it is the only state south of the Vindhyas where the Congress(I) has some indirect foothold through its informal alliance with the AIADMK. The crucial elections in Haryana could have set the seal on New Delhi's decision.

Predictably, the reaction in Tamil Nadu to India's air drop ranged from relief to rabid jingoism. While MGR himself pledged his government's support to the Centre for continuing help to the Sri Lankan Tamils, his DMK foe M. Karunanidhi urged New Delhi to go in for a "Cyprus-type solution". Tamil Nadu's Food Minister S. Ramachandran, whose views are largely considered representative of the state Government as well as the bulk of the Tamil Nadu public, says that "this (the air drop) was the minimum that the Indian Government could have done under the circumstances. It was not an aggressive but a humanitarian mission which will have to continue as long as the Sri Lankan Tamils are trapped and deprived of their food and livelihood." And V. Pirabhakaran, the head of the

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A.C.S. HAMEED

"India cannot threaten us"

SRI Lankan Foreign Minister A.C.S. Hameed has a reputation of being a moderate in the Jayewardene Cabinet, the voice of reason and restraint. A mild-mannered and cultured man, Hameed has a vast experience in the field of foreign affairs, having been foreign minister ever since he joined the Cabinet in 1977. But he now finds himself reluctantly enmeshed in the diplomatic row between Colombo and New Delhi following India's airdropping of food supplies over Jaffna. Hameed has been studiously avoiding the media but finally agreed to speak to Deputy Editor DILIP BOBB and Senior Correspondent S.H. VENKATRAMANI in his elegant teak-panelled office in Colombo last week. Excerpts:

Q. What is your reaction to India's air dropping of relief supplies?

A. We have already said it was a naked violation of our independence and a most unwarranted assault on our sovereignty and integrity. I find it difficult to understand why they should have done this. When Delhi expressed its desire to send relief supplies to the people of Jaffna we said we were prepared to consider it and were willing to work out the modalities of such a supply. They said this aid had to be rushed. When the plan of sending the flotilla was announced, Jayewardene sent a message to Rajiv that we were prepared to sort this out, and to nominate somebody from both sides who could meet in Delhi or Colombo. Our approach has been one of accommodation to avoid misunderstanding.

Q. Then why did India have to intrude into your airspace?

A. That was what surprised me also. We said let us work out the modalities of distribution of the intended relief supplies. All that was needed was that somebody from here should have received the supplies, and that some arrangement should have been worked out to satisfy the wishes of the donors in its distribution. It was not a serious problem. It could easily have been worked out. India shouldn't have rushed in like this and ruined the relations between the two countries. What was even more surprising was that there was enough food on the ground in Jaffna to last for four months. True, there were certain difficulties in distribution, because the environment wasn't normal. But there was no shortage of foodgrains.

Q. Why couldn't you convince Delhi that the supplies weren't needed?

SHYAM TEKWANI

A. That was what we tried to. Foreign office officials in Delhi and Colombo could have sorted the matter out. But India rushed the flotilla. And if this matter could not have been sorted out between South Block and Colombo, it was hardly likely to be sorted out on the high seas. And ultimately what we got was a demarche of 35 minutes. Delhi did not give us any explanation while announcing its plan to intrude into our airspace. What added insult to the injury was that we were told that any resistance would be met with force. You cannot issue threats like that. You don't conduct bilateral relations like that. Not a country like India. Nobody has to teach India the tenets of diplomacy.

Q. But New Delhi has justified its stand on humanitarian grounds?

A. I don't agree at all with the charges that India has made. But even if we accept that what Delhi says was true you still cannot conduct diplomatic relations in this fashion.

Q. What has been the result of the Indian action?

A. India's actions have disturbed the age-old traditional ties of friendship and goodwill between the two countries. One can only hope now for an early return to normalcy. Subsequently Delhi has told us that they wanted to discuss through diplomatic channels the modalities for distribution of the remaining foodgrains. And we have responded positively. So now I think wiser counsel is prevailing in Delhi.

Q. Will you boycott the forthcoming SAARC meeting?

A. We have still not taken a decision. We are happy that SAARC has been born, and it is not the intention of Sri Lanka to wreck SAARC in any way. It is only the boycott of the ministerial meeting of SAARC that is being considered.

Q. How does your government's reportedly intended acquisition of anti-aircraft weaponry from Pakistan help matters?

A. Every country is entitled to build its defence capabilities. But even a child would not accept the theory that Sri Lanka can be a threat to India.

Q. How do the recent developments augur for future Indian mediation on the Sri Lankan ethnic problem?

A. We first want this present problem with India out of the way. The clouds will have to be cleared. But this ethnic conflict cannot be resolved without India's participation. The issue has a certain emotional value in south India. There is state patronage for Tamil terrorists in Tamil Nadu. India has a federal system and that makes it difficult for Delhi to police the actions of the Government in Tamil Nadu. We have become an important factor in south Indian politics. Since the DMK split we have been witnessing the tragedy of being caught in the whirlpool of south Indian politics. It is no longer just an ethnic problem in Sri Lanka.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam (LTTE) and the man most wanted by the Sri Lankan security forces stated: "We are certain the civilised community will appreciate this humanitarian gesture towards the people who are facing genocide from state terrorism."

Though the truth about the latest Sri Lankan army offensive—codenamed Operation Liberation—lies somewhere in between Colombo's claims and the propaganda of the Tigers, Colombo must clearly shoulder the blame for the situation having reached the present pass. In January, the Government decided to impose an economic blockade, including that of fuel, on the Jaffna peninsula. Colombo's reaction to New Delhi's requests to lift the blockade has been typical. On at least six occasions, Colombo announced that it was lifting the blockade, but in reality what this meant was asking Jaffna inhabitants to lift petrol and kerosene from the army camps—akin to inviting the Tamils into the lion's den. K. Gnanasigamani, 40, a farmer of Valvettithurai which is in the centre of the latest offensive, said in an interview last fortnight that "after the blockage we have been totally dependent on black market supplies of food and fuel".

In Vadamarachi, lorry driver Chinnathambi Arunachalam, 39, said on June 6 that "we have barely managed a meal or two after May 26 (when the offensive was launched)".

That Operation Liberation was intended to be the final all-out offensive was clear from Colombo's statements that it would be a "fight to the finish" and the fact that all three service chiefs under General Cyril Ranatunga, the joint operations commander, assembled in the north on May 21. The original plan, according to informed sources in Colombo, was to take Jaffna in one concerted sweep under a three-pronged attack (see map) with coastal shelling from naval ships and strafing and bombing from the air.

The military strategy was obviously to "liberate" the entire north and the north-eastern belt of the Jaffna peninsula. The Sri Lankan forces were already in control of Jaffna Fort, the Palaly air base and the Kanakesanthurai harbour in the south and south-west of the peninsula. The army was also strategically in control of Elephant Pass, the narrow neck connecting the peninsula to the rest of the island. Apart from the advantage of regaining control of most of the key strongholds of the LTTE, the operation meant that the Sri Lankan forces would be in control of most of the peninsula barring the thickly-populated Jaffna town (population: 80,000).

The offensive escalated on May 26, when curfew was declared in the area and leaflets were dropped from helicopters warning civilians to move to 18 designated buildings, mainly churches and temples. Whether by accident or design, bombs have been dropped on temples and churches in which a large number of civilians have obviously died. Housewife Muthumari of Valvettithurai who had taken refuge in the Alwai Anman temple in Karavetti says that the temple was badly damaged in shelling and she was lucky to escape with her life.

■ Dixit: in the middle

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

LALITH ATHULATHMUDALI

"The army will stay on"

AS Minister for National Security, and the key man in Colombo as far as negotiations with the Tamil militants are concerned, the suave and articulate Lalith Athulathmudali has so far managed to walk the political tightrope with considerable dexterity. However, as the man responsible for the eventual success or failure of the latest offensive against the Tamil militants in the north, he currently occupies the hottest seat in Colombo. Perhaps realising that, Athulathmudali was uncharacteristically guarded in an interview with Deputy Editor DILIP BOBB and Senior Correspondent S.H. VENKATRAMANI after the Indian air drop over Jaffna. Excerpts:

Q. What led you to launch your latest military offensive in Jaffna?

A. You see, we offered cessation of hostilities in April. But the Liberation Tigers went ahead and massacred 120 innocent civilians, mostly Sinhalese, in Alutoya in Trincomalee. Then, they killed another 10 people in Trincomalee. Finally, came the Pettah bomb blast which killed 120 people in Colombo. Then, MGR gave this money to the militant groups that will only be used by them to acquire more weapons. Everybody told us, the Government, that you are doing nothing. So we had to launch a crackdown on the terrorists.

Q. But this seems to be a final assault, aimed at eliminating the militants regardless of loss of civilian life or damage to property?

A. We have been very careful of three things: dropping bombs from aircraft, killings of civilians and damage to the thickly-populated Jaffna town. All the aircraft were put under the command of the joint operations commander so there would be close coordination and no indiscriminate forays. We dropped pamphlets warning the civilian population to move to designated shelters. All this was done to minimise the loss of civilian life.

Q. Why did you concentrate on Vadamarachi?

A. That was the target farthest away from Jaffna. And it was just seven miles long and five miles wide. And three of the LTTE ordnance factories, turning out grenades, mortars, and artillery pieces were located in Vadamarachi. Vadamarachi was the strategic link to Vedaranyam and the weapon supply points of the Tigers. In fact, even while readying our strategy, we sent signals to the boys asking them why they didn't come for talks. The LTTE sent desperate messages to MGR about our military crackdown and MGR went rushing to Delhi and then you know what happened. The sad point is that whatever we do, people accuse us of going for a military solution whereas the LTTE is able to get away with whatever it is doing. Even in Operation Liberation of Vadamarachi we have kept in mind that it wasn't gaining control of territory that was important. We had to win the stomachs, hearts, and minds of the people.

Q. How would you assess the success of your military operation?

A. We were reasonably successful in gaining military control of Vadamarachi. Civilian casualties were minimal. People are saying all kinds of exaggerated things, but our documented estimate of the civilian death toll in the whole operation is 47. Nobody will know the exact figures till we can document them. Dixit (Indian high commissioner in Colombo) says 200 killed, the LTTE says 600 dead. But the main thing is that the LTTE has got the message that it cannot impose a military solution on us.

Q. The Indian Government has accused you of resorting to carpet bombing. What do you have to say?

A. I don't think Rajiv Gandhi's statement was correct. Our aircraft are just not capable of carpet bombing. They are light aircraft and not bombers.

Q. Were you forced to shelve your plan of taking over Jaffna town?

A. No. We never planned to take the town. We only planned to take the periphery and break the backbone of the movement.

SHYAM TEKWANI

Q. Isn't there the danger of the Tigers retaliating once you relax army control in Vadamarachi?

A. The army will not come out of Vadamarachi. We are following the oil slick method: The army will stay on wherever it gains control.

Q. Where exactly is the hold-up in the negotiations now?

A. The main problem is that of linkage. You can't dismiss the Muslims in the eastern province. They are unwilling to be under Tamil domination.

Q. What are your immediate plans?

A. I think the task to which I have to give the highest priority is to speedily screen all the Tamil youth who have been detained by the army on suspicion.

Q. What do you see as the next step in the larger context of relations between Colombo and New Delhi?

A. To defuse the India-Sri Lanka situation.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

KENNETH SOMANANDER/AFP

The dead bodies of the young monks massacred by Tamil militants: inviting outrage

The army assault on Vadamarachi, however, was intense and bloody. Entire buildings were razed to the ground and rockets and bombs from overhead fell on a number of churches and temples. Most people preferred to take shelter in the bunkers built by the Tigers. A clerk working in the Kandy Commercial Bank who had gone to Nelliadi in the heart of the Vadamarachi area to see his family says he was trapped in bunkers for three days while the shelling and bombardment went on. Requesting anonymity for fear of army reprisals, he says: "We were given two hours to move to a safe place before curfew was imposed. I took my wife, mother and children to a small church which seemed like hell. There was no food, the children were screaming and there were reports about people who ventured out to get food being shot. We went without food for three days before we could flee to a safer place." In Valvettithurai (population: 8,000) and Point Pedro (population: 35,000), residents have been cowering in terror in temples and churches since the offensive began on May 26.

Just how many civilians have died is impossible to say. Lalith Athulathmudali, minister for national security, claims that only 47 civilians have died. The Indian High Commission in Colombo puts the figure at between 200 and 300. The LTTE claims that over 600 have been killed. But as Athulathmudali admits: "The actual figure will be impossible to discover till some documentation is done."

WHAT caused considerable concern in New Delhi and Tamil Nadu, however, was the fate of 6,000-odd young Tamils who have been detained and taken away to army camps for interrogation. Most were students who had returned home for holidays. Athulathmudali says that they will be released after the screening process, which largely means identification by hooded informers. Last week, the first batch of detainees was released, indicating that Colombo has realised that their continued detention will lay them open to further charges of discrimination and terrorising of the Tamil population. The Indian High Commission had forwarded to New Delhi a long list of complaints by prominent Tamils in the north whose sons had been taken away. In Sri Lanka's surcharged atmosphere of suspicion and hostility, the fear that they might never be seen again is omnipresent.

Meanwhile, the domestic pressure on Colombo to sort out the ethnic problem was building up to fever pitch. On April 17, the Good Friday massacre by Tamil militants resulted in the death of 120 Sinhalese civilians. Less than a week later came the tragic Pettah bomb blast in the busiest corner of Colombo during rush hour, in which over 100 people died. The final straw was the announcement of MGR's decision to donate Rs 4 crore to the militants. In Colombo's jaundiced eyes, that could only mean more arms for the militants. "The pressure on us to do something was building up. We just couldn't sit back any longer," says Athulathmudali.

New Delhi, however, holds the view that Colombo was increasingly frustrated by its inability to bring the Tamil militants to heel and stop the killings. Indian sources say the first warning across Colombo's bows was fired by Rajiv on May 27 when he sent a message to Jayewardene expressing his government's "distress" at the civilian deaths in the offensive and condemning the "genocide", the first time the Indian Government has officially used the word. The bottom line in the message was that he would be compelled to change his policy towards Sri Lanka if the situation deteriorated further.

Jayewardene's reply indicated that Sri Lanka was in no mood to listen. Dismissing Indian claims of genocide and civilian deaths, he advised Rajiv to worry about the deaths in Punjab and criticised his inability to influence the LTTE. The essential message was that if India wanted to change its policy on Sri Lanka, that was New Delhi's problem. That message was reinforced by the fact that the offensive in the north was actually intensified over the next three days as Colombo poured in around 8,000 troops into the peninsula, with another 18,000 as back-up in the four northern districts.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Indian sources claim that the Sri Lankans have been using far heavier artillery than ever before, including 75mm rockets fired from pods under the wings of the SIAI Marchettis and 50 lb bombs dropped from helicopters which explode on impact. The army also possesses newly acquired 120mm mortars. These weapons, sources say, have been arriving in recent months from Indonesia, Singapore and South Korea. Sri Lankan air force sources, including the former air force chief, however, flatly deny that their light fighter aircraft are incapable of carpet bombing as India has been claiming. But Sri Lanka has also claimed that there has only been selective bombing of militant targets which is belied by the fact that a number of churches and temples—designated safe buildings—have been destroyed.

New Delhi says that there are 37 foreign military advisors operating in the peninsula, including some from Pakistan, Israel and members of the notorious British Keany Meany Services (KMS). Pakistani advisors, according to sources, are training the Sri Lankan navy and army, the Israelis are providing training in anti-terrorist measures while KMS mercenaries are actually flying combat missions.

It was possibly the involvement of Israel and Pakistani advisors that annoyed New Delhi more than anything else and pushed India into making the air drop. But by its action, New Delhi may have helped the Tigers but certainly not the ordinary Tamils. Said M. Jesudasan, 50, of Point Pedro: "Why does India do a half-way thing like this? The air drop leaves us neither here nor there." Adds Vincent D'paul, 49, a fish trader: "See the price I have had to pay for all this. My houses destroyed, I have lost millions. I have nothing to do with the Tigers. But by doing this in-between thing, Delhi has made the Sri Lankan soldiers with their wounded pride hate the Tamils even more than before. They will make our lives more miserable than they already are."

The situation has been exacerbated by the LTTE's massacre of 32 Buddhist monks who were going to be ordained on June 2. The massacre and the gruesome photographs splashed across Sri Lanka's newspapers only alienated the Tigers from the Tamil population and cast fresh doubts on India's intervention. Not surprisingly, the reaction in Colombo was even more intense and anti-Indian in character, culminating in the massive demonstration in front of India House, Dixit's official residence in which inflammatory anti-India and anti-Tamil posters were flaunted.

■ Sri Lankan protesters outside the Indian High Commission in Colombo:

IN that sense, the air drop has caused considerable consternation within the Indian community in Colombo (there are over 500 Indian families in the capital). India's actions have aggravated the already palpable anti-Indian feeling in Sri Lanka—Dixit says he gets an average of 20 hate calls a day since the air drop. All Indian citizens were advised by the high commission to move into hotels before 4 p.m. on June 4, the time of the air drop. But most Indians are upset by New Delhi's action and say that the effect has been to blur the distinction between Tamils and Indians. Indian businessmen and hoteliers also fear that the action will harm their commercial interests in Sri Lanka to a large degree. Says a political analyst in Colombo: "After the air drop, the distinction between Tamil Nadu and New Delhi has evaporated. Rajiv Gandhi is seen here as going out of his way to please MGR."

In the larger context, the direct result has been to convert what was a Sri Lankan ethnic problem into an Indo-Sri Lankan problem. Says Anandatissa De Alwis, a minister of state in the Jayewardene Government: "The problem will be over if the Tamil terrorists are not given refuge in Tamil Nadu. The Indian and Tamil Nadu governments accuse us of killing innocent Tamils but when innocent Sinhalese civilians and monks are massacred by Tamil terrorists in Sri Lanka there is no word of sympathy from Delhi or Madras." Adds the affable Foreign Minister A.C.S. Hameed: "We have become a pawn in Tamil Nadu politics."

The problem is that MGR's attitude towards the ethnic crisis has also undergone a crucial change. Till 1986, he was content to toe New Delhi's line while projecting himself as the great protector of Tamil interests. MGR, however, singled out the LTTE, particularly his blue-eyed boy, Pirabhakaran, and pledged to promote them provided they spurned his arch rival Karunanidhi. Pirabhakarn agreed and this decision polarised the militants into the AIADMK and the DMK camps. LTTE's main rival, the Tamil Eelam Liberation Organisation (TELO), aligned itself with Karunanidhi. The wedge between the LTTE and the DMK was driven further

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SHYAM TEKWANI

flammatory anti-Indian upsurge with the LTTE virtually annihilating TELO as a military organisation in April-May, 1986.

But by November, 1986, relations between the LTTE and MGR had become strained. MGR, at New Delhi's behest, told the Tigers that if they were not agreeable to the basic formula worked out during the negotiations with Colombo, they should go back to Jaffna and carry on the fight from there. This was followed by Operation Tiger, in which the LTTE members—including Pirabhakaran—were disarmed; the SAARC (South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation) conference where Pirabhakaran refused to agree to Jayewardene's suggestions, causing MGR some embarrassment; and the subsequent seizure of the LTTE's communication equipment, the vital link between Pirabhakaran and his commanders in the field. Pirabhakaran finally left for Jaffna on January 6 this year.

But Pirabhakaran's departure reinstated him in MGR's affections—on an even higher plane. Today MGR is not only more sympathetic to the LTTE, he is far more open about his support—witness his Rs 4 crore largesse—and is no longer willing to toe the Centre's line. That has put New Delhi in a tricky situation as far as the Sri Lankan problem is concerned.

ON the one hand, current domestic compulsions dictate that New Delhi cannot ignore MGR or Tamil Nadu. On the other, any further intervention in the Sri Lankan ethnic problem will be a diplomatic disaster. Already, Sri Lanka is reported to be acquiring an air defence system from Pakistan. Military help from other countries like Israel, China and South Africa is also a distinct possibility. In regional terms, India has isolated itself even further. Colombo's effective portrayal of India as the neighbourhood bully will find a receptive ear among SAARC countries, leading them to gang up against New Delhi.

By last week, however, there were signs that the situation was cooling down and that recent events were a temporary aberration. Colombo announced a suspension of its offensive and modalities for the distribution of Indian supplies to Jaffna were being worked out. In Sri Lanka, most educated and liberal-minded Sinhalese and Tamils feel that the crisis should now be de-escalated and Indo-Sri Lankan relations brought back to a more even keel to reopen the way for renewed negotiations. Says Pieter Kenneman, chairman of the Communist Party of Sri Lanka: "The immediate task is for both governments to resolve this problem in bilateral relations." Adds Bernard Soysa, general secretary of the Lanka Sama Samaja Party: "There is intransigence on either side and we don't think such sparring is necessary for a solution."

But the chances of a resumption of negotiations to settle the ethnic problem in the near future seem remote. Says Athulathmudali: "We will have to give the thing some time to cool off before the threads of the ethnic issue can be picked up again." Further, a badly-battered LTTE will take some time to recover from its military set-backs.

Thus, it appears that the impasse on the Tamil problem is likely to continue for some more time. The hitch in a negotiated settlement will be the issue of the merger of the northern and eastern provinces. The December 19, 1986 proposals are the best bet because they come very near a merger. In Sri Lanka's current heated domestic scene, no government in Colombo dare go further than the December 19 proposals. Anything more, in any event, would mean violating the island's Constitution and certain political suicide. In fact, the December proposals are reportedly acceptable to most Tamils except the LTTE leadership. Which is why Indian advisors on the Sri Lankan issue are now suggesting to South Block that the best strategy would be to erode the image of the LTTE as the sole spokesman of the Tamils and allow the more moderate groups to have a greater say in future negotiations. In an interview to INDIA TODAY last fortnight (page 36), Rajiv made it clear that India "wants a settlement across the table which has to be within the constitutional framework of Sri Lanka. We will not support the Eelam concept".

But having involved itself directly in Sri Lanka's ethnic crisis, Delhi will have to do some hard thinking about its future role and relationship with Colombo and the militants. New Delhi's actions have fallen far short of Tamil militant expectations, while Colombo can now be counted upon to view India's role in any future negotiations with suspicion. Judging by the mood in Colombo, any further intervention on India's part could lead to an unstoppable backlash in Sri Lanka, not just against the Tamils but against all Indians living on the island. At the same time, South Block will have to regain its former influence with the militants, isolate the LTTE and give credence to the other groups that have been sidelined and convince them that a negotiated settlement is the only way out. Either way, South Block now finds itself lodged between a rock and a very hard place.

—DILIP BOBB in Colombo with S.H. VENKATRAMANI in Jaffna and ANITA PRATAP in Madras

■ MGR (left) and Pirabhakaran: emotional hurdles

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

RAJIV GANDHI

"I am much the wiser"

BOFORS pay-offs, the Fairfax controversy, V.P. Singh's resignation, a confrontation with the President, the crisis in Punjab, electoral set-backs, rising communalism, intra-party feuding. Problems enough to break the best of political leaders. But the country's youngest Prime Minister, Rajiv Gandhi, seems completely unfazed. He's calm, confident, almost unwarrantedly cocksure. He is neither burdened by his weighty office nor haunted by self-doubt. He seems to take the severest of criticism in his stride and handles the thorniest of issues with such ease as if nothing will go wrong—even when things are, in fact, going seriously wrong.

Photographs by BHAWAN SINGH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

He talks with a friendly informality but compared to the past he is guarded in his comments and less prone to admitting mistakes. Despite the obvious crises exploding around him, he gives the impression of a cool pilot facing some turbulence although the passengers may be panic-stricken.

Now, as he approaches the mid-point of his term in office, he has not been able to accomplish any of the well-defined targets that were set in the heady days of his first year as prime minister. Yet he does not seem unduly frustrated or worried. He seems to have analysed, even rationalised, the reasons for his failures and is preoccupied with steps for the future. History holds no agonies for him. Most surprisingly, he dismisses his troubles with claims to a strange clairvoyance: "We were expecting them to come."

Also, belying the casual freshness that he exudes, he puts in a tough, 18-hour working day, often sleeping at dawn. Even when travelling outside Delhi, his IAF plane is converted into a flying secretariat. Taking time off from the pressing issues at hand, he met Editor AROON PURIE and Senior Editor PRABHU CHAWLA on two separate occasions aboard his IAF jet and at his residence. Excerpts from the interview:

Q. Now that the Audit Bureau report has confirmed that payments have been made by Bofors, how do you think it has affected the Government's credibility?

A. We feel that, to a great extent, the Swedish Government's report has vindicated what we have said. We had said that no middlemen were to be kept and it has been confirmed that there were no middlemen at the point of signing the contract. Now, unfortunately, they have paid 2 per cent to 3 per cent in the winding up of an earlier middleman appointed in 1977. We feel that we could have a 2 per cent to 3 per cent lower rate. The gun is a good weapon. There is no dispute about that.

The other basic question is how middlemen operate in any government. Although we were aware that a lot of things were going on, we were not able to put our hands on them. From 1980, we have taken a series of measures, especially in defence. As we take more steps, we find out more and we take further steps. The target is to eliminate them. Before this question came up in public, I had asked the Finance Ministry to do a full exercise on how to get to the root of all this. I received a note a couple of days ago on steps we should take and I have okayed them. Now we want to keep the actions we want to take quiet—otherwise somebody will try and thwart them.

Q. There is a feeling that the Government is dragging its feet in investigating the Bofors affair. What have you done personally on this score?

A. When we were replying on the issue in Parliament, we could have easily continued to take the stand that unless some hard information was available, we could do nothing. But we didn't wait. My office asked for an inquiry, spoke to Prime Minister Carlson's office, and then I spoke to Carlson. I thanked him for all that they had done. We didn't want to go into the sort of inquiry they would have because we did not want to complicate their system. Though we did feel a little upset that they have gone and deleted half the things in the inquiry. Well, not half, but the critical things which could have helped us. Now we are asking them for these, to find a starting point. It is no use going berserk and saying that we will do this and that. We will do it at a critical point after everything else has been sorted out. We cannot behave as a child does. We have to talk to the Swedish Government, to Bofors and try and get information out of them, from what is missing from the report.

BOFORS

"We feel that, to a great extent, the Swedish Government's report has vindicated what we have said. We had said that no middlemen were to be kept and it has been confirmed that there were no middlemen at the point of signing the contract."

Q. Don't you think that a payment of Rs 50 crore means that it is not purely an agent's commission, that there were other pay-offs?

A. Let me tell you what I feel has happened. Whoever signed the agent's contract in 1977 must have signed for some absurdly high figure. And that is why the winding up has cost 2 per cent.

Q. Don't you find it strange that the payments for the termination of the agent's contract were made in November-December '86, six months after the Bofors deal was signed?

A. No, I don't see that as a complication, because a part of the payment for cancellation would come as a part of their agent's contract. But the fact is that they have done it. There were no middlemen when we signed the contract.

Q. Do you have any ideas about where the Rs 50 crore could have gone?

A. We will chase it through the parliamentary committee. That doesn't mean that we are not acting on the hard facts we have. The agent was mentioned in the revenue intelligence report and action has been taken.

Q. Why was he allowed to leave the country?

A. He left earlier. What could we have done at that stage—arrest him? We must go through the full legal procedure. There must be no short-cuts. We will chase the matter with Bofors, the Swedish Government and the Swiss for information. Whatever information we have got has been at our instigation. We put it up to the parliamentary committee because it is the most open kind of forum. Opposition members will be involved.

Q. Wouldn't it have been more effective if the Government had found out the facts and taken the issue to its logical conclusion? The appointment of the parliamentary committee seems a side-step.

A. No, it is not a side-step. The question is not so much of what is being done. The Government must be seen not to be hiding something. What will, in fact, happen is that the parliamentary committee may not be able to carry out this investigation; it will ask the government agencies for help. Then we will be working with them.

Q. How hopeful are you of identifying the people who received the payments?

A. We will have to wait and watch over the next 10 to 15 days. We will study

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

the report in terms of the law and on that basis we will ask the Swedish Government and Bofors for further information. When we get those answers we will know exactly how hard we will have to fight to get to the other end. We are determined to get to the other end.

Q. Have you thought of cancelling the contract?

A. The Defence Ministry categorically says no. Others will jack up the price and delay deliveries. We will have a serious problem. Pakistan has already got the weapons, it has people trained to handle them. The Defence Ministry is very clear that this would cause a serious flaw in our defence capability. You have seen how quickly the situation flared up within 10 to 15 days in January.

Q. Will you ask Bofors to return the Rs 50 crore?

A. We can take this up with Bofors.

Q. Since the Bofors payoffs have gone into Swiss accounts, what steps does the Government propose to take to detect accounts held by Indians abroad?

A. This is a problem area. But we are working out the details so that we can have some arrangement to get details about illegal accounts in Swiss banks or anywhere else. A group in the Finance Ministry will go into it. Whenever we have evidence, we shall take the sternest possible action.

Q. When you became prime minister you had declared that the Government would come down heavily on economic offenders. After the shifting of V.P. Singh from the Finance Ministry, the impression is that your Government is rather slow on this front. Do you agree?

A. I really do not know. Even before V.P. Singh was shifted, the media was creating an impression that he was facing difficulties. This was totally incorrect. But the impression was being deliberately created. V.P. Singh is aware that I needed him in defence. I had a talk with him about why I wanted him shifted and I think there is no doubt in his mind that it was not a case of removing V.P. Singh from finance, but one of putting V.P. Singh in defence.

V.P. SINGH

"The party reacted because of certain things that happened in the Lok Sabha. The reaction was so violent that I don't think I could have controlled it."

Q. But what went wrong? Why was your relationship strained?

A. It is wrong to say that relations between us were strained. He was carrying out our policies and I had full trust in him.

Q. Was he a good finance minister?

A. On the whole, the economy did well, but there were areas where a lot more attention was needed.

Q. Do you think that his resignation from the Cabinet was a loss to you?

A. Losing any senior minister like V.P. Singh is definitely a loss. But I didn't drop him. He resigned.

Q. Why didn't you stop the party MPs who were making personal attacks on him?

A. There is a limit to which you can control the party. The party does have a mind of its own. I can give instructions but the party will react only if it agrees with what I think. If tomorrow I decide that we totally reverse our foreign policy the party is not going to agree with me. The party reacted because of certain things that had happened in the Lok Sabha. And the party's reaction was so violent that I don't think I could have controlled it.

Q. But why was he virtually forced to resign?

A. We did not force him to resign. He resigned himself.

Q. Do you feel that he committed a mistake in hiring Fairfax and in giving complete authority to his officials?

A. Now, this question is before a commission. Let it carry out its job.

Q. But the commission is working in secrecy which was not the idea.

A. Let the commission decide its course of action.

Q. Would you like an open inquiry?

A. That is why we set up the commission, to make it absolutely clear that we have nothing to hide from the public. I must add that some statements coming from people belonging to that company are highly questionable.

Q. On the domestic front, are you more comfortable with the President now?

A. I won't discuss that relationship in public.

Q. Do you believe that the President doesn't have the right to seek information from the Government?

A. The Government has never denied that the President has a right to seek information. The question is how much, when and the kind of information. On that, the Government has a definite point of view. And it is not Rajiv Gandhi's point of view. It is the Government of India's point of view, which has been formed during the last 36 years. It has been formed on the basis of what Panditji said and did, on what the Supreme Court has done and what our attorneys have advised. It is a historical fact.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Q. The question is whether you concede that the President has the right to information or not.

A. Kindly look at Article 78. It is not a question of conceding any right. It is the Government's obligation under the Constitution to inform the President of decisions. We are doing that. If the President needs any other information with regard to Government decisions and legislation, we are giving that also. But all these issues have to be looked at within the broad framework of our Constitution.

Q. It looks though that the problem between you and the President is a personal one and has nothing to do with principles.

A. There is no problem between Giani Zail Singh and Rajiv Gandhi.

Q. You continue to have problems in other areas. Do you think the dismissal of the Akali government will solve the Punjab problem?

A. As I said, President's rule there is meant for taking hard action against those extremists who are beyond retrieval.

Q. But will you be able to contain them with a show of force? Don't you think that it is a political problem also?

A. The House is not dissolved. I agree there is a political problem—the problem of dealing with a communal and theocratic conception of society and state. That has to be dealt with at the ideological level. We shall carry on that campaign in cooperation with other parties. But the problem of violence is equally important. Violence has to be put down. President's rule has to show firmness in action.

Q. Isn't the Barnala group now likely to join the other side?

A. They were good in the beginning. They are out now. They had become part of the other groups. We supported them till the last moment. But they failed to contain terrorism.

Q. With the ouster of Barnala government isn't the Punjab accord dead?

A. No, it's not dead. Eleven points of the Punjab accord have already been implemented. Only three—Chandigarh, water and the All India Gurudwara Act remain. The Eradi Commission has given a report which gives more water to Punjab.

Q. But the terrorism today is no longer related to these disputes.

A. That is right. I think what Punjab needs today is vigorous economic development and rebuilding of trust and social cohesion. We need to reach out and find out the problem of those groups which have not crossed the boundary yet.

Q. Shouldn't the Government try to end the violence by talking to the boys who command a following?

A. We haven't spoken to any of these groups yet.

Q. But do you intend to?

A. Let's see how the President's rule fares.

Q. Was the timing of President's rule linked to the Haryana elections?

A. Not at all. If we did not want President's rule we could have avoided it. But two things happened which forced Central intervention. The first was that the fundamentalists had prachar sabhas. They forced the closure of liquor shops, haircutting saloons, and even banned dresses, among other things. And it started in new areas. Then, we had an open attack by a senior member of the government on the police chief. That was not acceptable. We felt that something had to be done to restore confidence in the police and enough was not being done by the local government.

Q. So it was purely a law and order problem which compelled you?

A. Bad law and order situation is one thing but breakdown of the police system was a serious matter. We could not ignore it.

Q. Are you satisfied with the performance of the police and administration?

A. We believe it has improved but it is too early to say anything—we must watch for a longer time.

Q. Can you name the foreign forces which you say are active in Punjab.

A. I am not going to name them. But they are definitely active there. It is known all over the country now.

Q. Is trouble in Punjab also part of the destabilisation design?

A. Punjab has been part of that for a long time.

Q. You always refer to America as

THE PRESIDENT

"The question is how much, when and the kind of information. On that, the Government has a definite point of view. And it is not Rajiv Gandhi's point of view."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

part of the destabilisation conspiracy.

A. I never referred to America.

Q. But why are you on a bash America binge?

A. It is not an anti-America binge but it is a question of where we think our problems are coming from.

Q. You are not getting enough support from the USSR on many issues.

A. We are an independent country. We don't look for support like that. We do get support on international issues.

Q. No one has come out in our support on Sri Lanka.

A. I think by and large the international community has understood that we were interested only in humanitarian relief. The problem in Sri Lanka has to be settled through negotiations. India is involved and India is concerned because what happens with regard to the ethnic problem affects us in a very important way. Therefore, we have dealt with it bilaterally and that is the way in which we shall continue.

Q. In Sri Lanka, the situation has drastically changed—to our disadvantage. Do you agree?

A. No, it has not changed. The basic policy which we had with Sri Lanka is still the same. We want a settlement across the table. And the settlement has to be within the constitutional framework of Sri Lanka. We will not support the Eelam concept.

Q. But in spite of all our efforts, the situation has deteriorated to a point where we have violated Sri Lankan airspace. Was this justified?

A. The situation deteriorated because Sri Lanka thought they could work on the military option. Sometimes we wonder whether this whole exercise of getting the parties together across the table was not used by Sri Lanka to buy time for the military solution. This has caused the problem. They agree to something, then they go back on that. They again agree partially, but again change their mind. It is the Sri Lankan flippant attitude which has caused all these tensions. There is a lot of vacillation on their part. But we hope they will see the futility of the military option and return to the dialogue.

Q. How can we support the Tamil Nadu Government giving financial support to Tamil separatists?

A. MGR has given aid on humanitarian considerations for running relief camps. There are over a lakh Tamil refugees in India. But we are confident that Tamils in Sri Lanka are fully competent to look after themselves. The shutting of food supplies and the economic blockade is causing them serious problems. That is why we are sending some humanitarian relief.

PUNJAB

"We had an open attack by a senior member of the government on the police chief. That was not acceptable. We felt that something had to be done to restore confidence in the police."

Q. If a similar thing happened in Punjab, then?

A. There is really no parallel. The Sikhs are not against the Government. We are not fighting with them. A small group is perpetrating violence and we are dealing with it. But we are not bombing a whole people. We are not shutting off their food supplies, we are not denying them medicines. Sri Lanka is doing all these things to its own people. This is why we had to decide to help the long-suffering people. In our relief there was nothing hidden. It was open for anybody's inspection.

Q. Coming to communalism, the general belief is that it is due to the Government's appeasement policy.

A. We are not appeasing these forces. I have called for a national movement to fight communalism which has assumed serious dimensions now. The National Integration Council should have a good look and suggest what should be done. Violence has to be controlled and put down firmly. But the problem is deeper. It has to do with education, with politics and with the pattern of economic development. It is complex, but I am determined to tackle it. I cannot allow the hard-won legacy of communal unity to be undermined.

Q. But why can't we ban communal parties and stop selecting candidates according to religion and caste?

A. You will recall we had put this in the President's Address in February 1987. There has to be a national consensus. We cannot legislate without overwhelming national consensus that religious and communal groups should be totally banned from politics.

Q. Even in the economic field you seem to be defensive on liberalisation. The Government is returning to its old policy of controls.

A. Some sections of the media have got it wrong. Our strategic policy of planning—and planning envisages controls of one sort or another—remains unchanged. Within that we have to make adjustments to deal with new circumstances and new situations. That is what we have done. It is wrong to label it as this or that. The basic thrust is on modernisation, technology upgradation, efficiency and improving the competitive ability of Indian industry. This does not mean that we shall jettison our fundamental policy of self-reliance and safeguarding economic independence.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Above all, in everything we do, our fundamental concern is the alleviation of poverty. This means we have to step up the rate of growth. Growth of agriculture, growth of mass consumption goods, spread of the public distribution system, land reforms, special programmes for the landless and for small and marginal farmers, have priority in my thinking. All this has nothing to do with the so-called liberalisation. This is a matter of planning our investment in the right direction. You cannot leave this to the market forces, because the market forces can only accentuate poverty, not alleviate it. We have a resource constraint. With these priorities in the plan we need to enlarge our resource base. This is where liberalisation comes in.

Q. But the capital market has collapsed and profits of major industries have been plummeting during the last few months.

A. Temporary ups and downs in the capital market should not be taken as a major trend. The economy is sound and the policies we are pursuing will lead to healthy industrial growth. The stock-market will reflect, sooner than later, the underlying health of the economy.

Q. What happened to your slogan of moving into the 21st century?

A. It was not a slogan. We have to move doggedly, persistently towards modernising our agriculture and industry. We are working in that direction. This is a historical trend, not a slogan.

Q. Another problem for you seems to be your party which is in a shambles and in which you have been unable to conduct organisational elections. When do you propose to do that?

A. It is not correct that the party is in a shambles: it is active and vigorous. But we have problems and we shall solve them. Elections will be held as soon as Dikshitji reports on the corrective steps to be taken.

Q. You promised some degree of decentralisation in the party and the Government but there seems to be a growing concentration of power.

A. All this talk of concentration of power is so much nonsense. There is the widest degree of participation both in the party and in the Government in decision-making. There is more autonomy in decision-making at the level of ministries than ever before.

Q. How do you cope with so many departments with you? When do you propose to expand the Cabinet?

A. There will be cabinet reorganisation. But you can't expect me to tell you when.

Q. Or are you holding it up because you don't want to disturb the political balance in the party till the presidential elections?

A. I will do it at the right time.

Q. How are you going to select your nominee for the presidential elections?

A. I am consulting political parties and others. I do not know whether there will be consensus on our candidate but I will consult all those who have to be consulted.

Q. What were the problems with Arun Nehru? Were they personal or political?

A. I have no problems with him.

Q. Do you agree with your partymen who say V.P. Singh was trying to emerge as an alternative leader?

A. It is for the party to choose who shall lead it.

Q. Do you feel that the worst is over and the party is fully behind you?

A. The party is united. It is a great privilege to lead a party as rich in history and tradition as the Congress is. It has a tradition of rising to every crisis. I have no doubt that the party will back me in carrying out its policies.

Q. But the impression persists that you only trust your close friends.

A. I trust everybody in the party. And, in fact, there is a total misconception—presumably caused by the media—that I rely on certain people for decisions. In fact, those are not the people whom I trust for decisions at all. When I have to take a political decision, I consult the party set-up, the AICC, Working Committee members, chief ministers and PCC presidents. When it is a question of governmental policy-making, it is the Cabinet or the Cabinet Committee on Political Affairs as the case may be. There are no small

SRI LANKA

"Sometimes we wonder whether this whole exercise of getting the parties together across the table was not used by Sri Lanka to buy time for the military solution."

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

groups or coteries. On almost no political matter have I ever consulted my personal friends, meaning the friends now involved in politics and who have not come through the Youth Congress or the organisation.

Q. Then, what is their role? They are seen with you quite often.

A. Each one of them has a specific role. I am not going to discuss each role here.

Q. So each one of them is doing some job.

A. Yes, as assigned by me.

Q. Are you satisfied with their performance?

A. One is never satisfied fully with performances. If one was fully satisfied then, in a way, your mind is dead. To a great degree, yes. But to a certain extent there are shortcomings.

Q. Have they helped you improve your image?

A. Image as opposed to work?

Q. Image as a leader and a prime minister.

A. In some areas yes, in some areas no.

Q. In which areas has it been bad?

A. For this I will have to discuss individuals which I don't want to do here.

Q. Have your friends proved to be a liability or an asset?

A. In some ways assets, in some ways liabilities.

Q. Among your friends, Satish Sharma and Amitabh Bachchan have been involved in a lot of controversies. What is your opinion?

A. I don't read what appears in the press. Much of what appears in the press is not based on correct information.

Q. But what is your personal opinion about their conduct? Do you agree with what has appeared about their life-styles and business activities abroad?

A. My attitude is very clear. Neither of them is handling any political task. Satish looks after Amethi only, and that is a very limited exercise. But if they have done anything wrong now or in the past, they are absolutely accountable and I want to assert that law of the land is the law of the land. It will not be waived, bent or softened for anybody in the country.

ADVISORS

"When I have to take a political decision, I consult the party set-up....There are no small groups or coteries. On almost no political matter have I consulted my friends."

Q. Don't you agree that Ajitabh Bachchan's shifting of residence or business to Switzerland should be looked into? Has he taken the Reserve Bank's permission?

A. If anything is brought to our notice we must treat him like any other citizen. But he is much more visible than any ordinary citizen and must get his rights like any other citizen. However, if any specific information is given to us that he has done something wrong we will act on it. In fact, when a senior official from the Finance Ministry came to me and told me that he was looking into the economic activities of certain individuals. I told him to go ahead without fear.

Q. But have you sought Ajitabh's explanation for his business activities abroad?

A. I have not discussed this with him but I am sure that the Finance Ministry will look into the matter if anything is wrong.

Q. You are in the middle of your term now. What are your successes and failures?

A. I think we have made tremendous gains on almost every front. On foreign policy, India has seldom had a problem in international forums. It is not something I have done. It is only because I have been able to stand on the shoulders of others before me and have been able to go further. On the economic front, our economy is moving very well. Yes, there are some negative indicators. But I think they are under control and we can cope with them.

Q. You now seem to be deliberately adopting a leftist posture. What is the reason?

A. There is no reversal. In '85 I spoke more about imperialism than I have done at any time after that. If you see in all my international speeches, even in my speech to the US Congress, it has always been there. What has happened is that the media here has picked up only one aspect of it. Right from the beginning I was saying the public sector is important—it is a key to our development and will continue to be the key. What we are looking for is a change in its role. While the media was talking only about the private sector, we were investing more in the public sector than any other government.

Q. What have you learnt during your tenure as prime minister?

A. I am much the wiser.

Q. The general feeling is that you have changed from being a person who relied on his instincts and commonsense to one who is getting into the usual politician's mould.

A. No, I am not getting into any old

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

mould. I am very much in the same mould as I was. I still function very much on what I think is right.

But then, as now, I take in a lot of input from a lot of people. What has changed is that I have changed a lot of the people I used to get inputs from. I mostly get inputs from ministers, from the party, and for economic issues from many people outside. We started a lot of things but they got bogged down in the bureaucracy. It went down to a certain level, perhaps the joint secretary level. By the time the policies went down, they were not what we had started off with. They were so diluted, that they were neither here nor there and had little effect. So we started a major exercise of revitalising the bureaucracy. I think it is having a tremendous effect. It is not a question of indoctrination but of getting them to have a little more vitality, of being more active. Each individual has it in him but somehow the system does not allow them to function.

RAJIV GANDHI

"I am very much in the same mould as I was....I still function very much on what I think is right...but I have changed a lot of the people I used to get inputs from."

Q. But a lot of them should not even be doing even the things that they are doing. Perhaps the system requires surgery.

A. In any such thing I think too sharp an action can destroy everything. We must look around and see how many countries have been destroyed. They have lost their democracy and freedom because they did things too fast and did not balance them. I don't think a harsh change is going to work. It should be a change in which we can carry the people with us.

Q. Are you as trusting as before? Do you work with the same enthusiasm?

A. I am less trusting because I found major shortcomings in many areas where I had placed trust; not personal things but relating to work. But I do not feel let down because I don't see a person as letting me down; I see myself as having misjudged him. But yes, I work with the same enthusiasm. I feel that I have only been elected because I have certain ideas, and I must put them through. What has been happening in the last two to three years is that the methods of implementing these ideas have had to be modified slightly. Because when you start doing something you hit a wall. Either you break down the wall or you achieve the same thing in a different way.

Q. How do you perceive your public popularity now? You were on a high two-and-a-half years ago. Do you see yourself lower down in the graph today?

A. We were expecting this right from '85. In mid-election you are always at the lowest. What we started in '85 was not just a question of liberalisation or rationalisation. What we really attacked was all the vested interests in the system—whether in politics, bureaucracy or industry. So we opened out all the fronts. One can say why did you open up all the fronts, you should have chosen one at a time. We looked at it but the fact is that one led to the other. When we took this on it was very clear that the vested interests would hit back at some time. We had started calculating in '85 when this would be and our assessment was that it would be somewhere in the beginning of '87—during the budget session because it is the hot part as Parliament is in session. We were a little surprised when one volley came in middle and late '86.

Q. What was this volley?

A. I am not telling you; you find out. But then it all died down and it all started coming in January. That was a bit earlier than we had expected. I mean, if you ask me whether it was Fairfax or anything else was going to come, I had no idea, but we knew that some major onslaught would come roughly during this time—and it has come.

Q. Since what and how it has come about could not possibly have been foreseen, how could you have expected it?

A. If you go back and look at history, during Panditji's period and during Indiraji's period—the early years—they have been through very similar things.

Q. Is the worst over?

A. I think we will be through all this once the President's election is over.

Q. Are you relating it to the election?

A. No, I am not saying it is related but we had a vote in Bengal and other places. And we have a vote now. A vote is always a high tension point and the presidential election will be the last vote for some time.

Q. Besides all these weighty problems, there seems to be some concern about your driving habits. Why do you drive so fast ?

A. Because I drive better than all the drivers.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Ennore Foundries Limited

Ennore, Madras-600 057

Speech delivered by Chairman, Shri MANTOSH SONDHI at Twenty Seventh Annual General Meeting of the Company held on Monday, the May 18, 1987 at Ennore, Madras-600 057.

Shri MANTOSH SONDHI

Dear Shareholders,

It gives me great pleasure to extend to you all, on behalf of the Board of Directors and on my own behalf, a very warm and cordial welcome to the Twentyseventh Annual General Meeting of your Company.

The notice convening this meeting, the Directors' Report and the audited Annual Accounts for the year ended December 31, 1986 together with the Report of the Auditors, have been with you for sometime now; with your permission, I shall take them as read.

Performance

When I spoke to you last year, I had stated that I looked at the prospects for your Company during 1986 with cautious optimism, in the belief that the Government will in the near future initiate policy measures to stimulate demand for commercial vehicles and tractors - two important sectors of our industrial activity - which had been passing through a phase of extreme sluggishness. Unfortunately, our hopes have not been fully realised, but despite this and a higher power cut, your Company has done well during the year under review.

The sales volume has been marginally higher at 23,956 tonnes as against 23,319 tonnes in 1985. The turnover was, however, at an all time high of Rs.36 crores compared to Rs.34 crores in the previous year. Profit After Tax declined slightly from Rs.146 lakhs in 1985 to Rs.141 lakhs in 1986. The squeeze in the margins was mainly due to increase in input costs. Though this cost escalation was to some extent neutralised by better utilisation of materials and men, the Company was not able to get the required price increase from customers in view of the prevailing market conditions.

Prospects for 1987

You are aware that in order to guard against sectoral slackness in demand, the Company has been making strenuous efforts to broaden the product-mix in the last few years. As a result, there has been a perceptible change in the sectoral share of the products of your Company. In keeping with this policy many new products have been introduced during the year and some more are under development. This strategy is bound to pay dividends during 1987 and in the years to come.

During the first quarter of 1987, production, sales and turnover were 7,012 tonnes, 6,606 tonnes and Rs. 1,020 lakhs respectively, compared to the corresponding previous year figures of 4,719 tonnes, 5,271 tonnes and Rs.780 lakhs respectively. The value added per man also increased from Rs.54,000 to Rs.59,000. Thus there has been a marked improvement in the performance of your Company in the first quarter of 1987 in terms of turnover, productivity and profitability. Prospects for this year are, therefore, good.

Modernisation - Key for stability and growth

Modernisation and upgradation of technology, is a sine-qua-non for survival of any industrial enterprise in the present highly competitive market place. This has been a continuous process in your Company and the production in the High Pressure Moulding Line is firmly established. Your Company has now decided to immediately take up the modernisation of the old moulding lines with an Automatic Shoot Squeeze Moulding Plant.

The thrust in the next few years will be on improving company's competitive performance with focus on waste management, quality improvement, development of complex aluminium castings, exports and intensive training programmes. Adoption of Computer Aided Design and Drafting is another key thrust area. In fact, Designs and Drawings for the development of new Cylinder Blocks and Heads is now being done successfully on CAD workstation. This is the only way if the design and production capabilities at Ennore Foundries are to be kept in line with the state-of-the art.

As some of you may be aware, the Government had recently constituted an expert group to review the total policy framework for the foundry industry and to suggest changes in order to achieve the objectives of modernisation and growth. This was in pursuance of the Prime Minister's Budget speech in which he had made a reference to a special programme to be launched by the IDBI with the above objective in view.

The report of the expert group on the foundry industry has recently been submitted to the Government and it is my fervent hope that action on some of the main recommendations made by this expert group will be initiated at an early date. This is necessary so that the foundry industry can meet the challenge imposed on it as a result of the liberalisation of Government policies - a trend which must continue.

Long term prospects

Your Company is now reasonably capitalised, it has a sound technological and management base, and its future seems to be quite secure. The 5 Year Rolling Plan to which I had made a reference in my statement last year and which is being updated every year gives a fair indication of where your Company would like to be in the course of the next five years. There is no reason why the objectives set out in the Rolling Plan should not be achieved. Then only would the full potential of your Company be realised.

National Scene

Since we last met, the Government has continued with its major policy initiatives to encourage investments and expansion of existing units. The average annual growth rate of the Gross National Product has been maintained at a steady 5% during the last few years. Despite three successive weak monsoons, there had been no setback in agricultural output, showing a high degree of self-reliance we have achieved in this sector. The growth rate of industrial production in 1985-86 of around 8% has also been quite satisfactory, the increase in the manufacturing sector being particularly encouraging. This augurs well for the country and for your Company.

However, I am quite concerned at the growth rate of specified capital machinery based industries which showed a meagre growth of 2% in 1985-86 and a decline of 9% in first half of 1986-87. Import of capital machinery has affected the capacity utilisation of industrial machinery manufacturers. While import of capital machinery may sometimes be necessary in certain core sectors of the industry for meeting specific technological requirements, a review has to be necessarily done to protect the capacity of the indigenous industry by ensuring its quick modernisation and by taking such other measures as may be required. Here again the recommendations of an expert group are under the consideration of the Government. One must re-iterate that under-utilisation of capacity in the capital goods is bound to have far reaching implications so far as self-reliance is concerned. Our capital goods industry was doing well sometime ago; it is in doldrums now.

Power situation

The power situation prevailing in the Southern States continues to be alarming. Even traditionally surplus states like Andhra Pradesh and Kerala have had to impose severe power cuts. Talking of the country as a whole, while there has been a significant growth of about 14% in thermal power generation, hydel power generation has not shown any worthwhile growth. Although the weak monsoon, particularly in the western parts of the country, was a contributing factor, there have been serious slippages in the implementation of hydel power projects aggrevating the situation. Besides power generation, greater attention needs to be given to power transmission systems, reduction of losses, creation of a national grid and improvement in power stability. It is also high time that action to abrogate or atleast to suitably update that archaic piece of legislation - The Electricity (Supply) Act of 1948 - is initiated in order to bring it in line with the present day requirements. This obviously has political overtones but this is a situation which has to be faced if a significant impact on the power situation in the country has to be made.

Recent pronouncements that private sector may also be allowed to enter the power generation sector shows a pragmatic approach to a perennial problem, where in spite of increased generation, the overall power deficit in the country continues to increase - by as much as 7% last year.

Coal linkages to the Southern States for operation of thermal power plants have not been very successful. It is for consideration whether import of coal under bilateral trade agreements would provide a more cost- effective solution.

Industrial Relations

Industrial Relations remained cordial throughout the year. The Ennore Foundries Employees Union under the able leadership of Shri S C C Anthoni Pillai completes 25 years of useful service to the employees, this year. As you are aware, this is the only union in the company since its inception. Over the years this union has built an unique tradition of industrial relations based on mutual trust and confidence between management and employees. I extend my hearty congratulations to the Ennore Foundries Employees Union on this happy occasion and express the hope that this tradition of industrial relations will continue and the bond between employees and management will be further strengthened in the years to come to their mutual advantage.

Directors

Mr D R G Andrews, Mr R A Fryars, Mr H A Rose and Mr L L Narayan have resigned from the Board. I would like to place on record our deep appreciation of the contributions made by them as Directors of this Company. Mr D J Balaji Rao was nominated Director by The Industrial Credit and Investment Corporation of India Limited in place of Mr P Sabanayagam. Mr J P Gilchrist and Mr P Sabanayagam were appointed as Directors in the casual vacancy caused by the resignation of Mr R A Fryars and Mr L L Narayan respectively. They would hold office upto the date of this Annual General Meeting. Mr N J Penn, who was appointed as Additional Director on October 23, 1986 would hold office upto the date of this Annual General Meeting. The Company has received due notices from Members proposing the names of Mr J P Gilchrist, Mr P Sabanayagam and Mr N J Penn as Directors of the Company. Necessary resolutions are before you for appointing them as Directors of the Company at this Annual General Meeting.

Acknowledgement

May I conclude by conveying our thanks to our collaborators Ms Land Rover-Leyland International Holdings Ltd., and all our friends at the erstwhile Leyland Trucks, U.K., who have always provided unstinted support and advise whenever required by your company.

I would like to convey our deep gratitude to all our valued customers and suppliers as well as to our Bankers for their assistance and support.

Despite the severe environmental constraints, your Company has done well during this year because of the unstinted co-operation extended by all employees of your Company under the able guidance of your Managing Director. I thank them all on this occasion.

I would also like to take this opportunity to convey our sincere thanks to The Industrial Credit and Investment Corporation of India, Industrial Development Bank of India, Industrial Finance Corporation of India, Unit Trust of India, Life Insurance Corporation of India and General Insurance Corporation of India for their assistance for our modernisation and replacement programmes.

Our thanks are also due to the Central and State Governments and to The Tamil Nadu Electricity Board for the assistance they have rendered to us. I shall be failing in my duty if I do not place on record my deep appreciation of the assistance that I have received from my colleagues on the Board. Lastly, may I say how grateful I am to you all for your presence in such large numbers at this Twentyseventh Annual General Meeting of your Company and for your confidence in and continued support to us.

Note: This does not purport to be a record of the proceedings of the Annual General Meeting.

Imageads 2444

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Through years of rugged service in war and peacetime, the C-130 Hercules aircraft has earned the admiration of pilots and mechanics all over the world. It's simply one of the most dependable planes in the air.

But it's also one of the most versatile. It converts from aerial refueling capability to cargo handling in hours, and delivers outstanding performance on either mission.

As a tanker, the Hercules aircraft carries 56,000 pounds of fuel on a typical mission — fast enough for mid air delivery to jets, or slow enough for helicopter refueling.

When the KC-130 is used as a freighter, it can get almost anything almost anywhere. Its 40,000-pound capacity is large enough for tanks and heavy trucks. It can land or take off from runways you wouldn't try with other planes. Even ice and snow.

Best of all, the C-130's impressive performance comes with surprising cost efficiency. That's why you'll find it serving more than 55 governments on every continent, day in and day out, year after year. Getting the job done, no matter what the job may be.

Lockheed-Georgia

Innovation
Giving shape to imagination.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

HARYANA

The Devi Lal Offensive

THE expectations are high, and so are the stakes. What Bhajan Lal, the quick-change artiste of Haryana politics, describes as "a question of life and death for the Congress(I)", is, in Devi Lal's eyes, "the beginning of the baghawat (revolt) in the Hindi heartland". And last fortnight, the 19-month campaign of Devi Lal's Haryana Sangharsh Samiti to oust the Congress(I) from power in the state began to look achievable. Even the two hectic swings through the state by Rajiv Gandhi, in the final days of the campaign, hardly seemed to slow the Devi Lal juggernaut in the state's rural areas. Anticipating victory, an opposition leader gloated: "Today Haryana, tomorrow the country."

Devi Lal, 75, considers the result of the June 17 poll for 90 seats in the Haryana legislature a forgone conclusion. The craggy-faced, gravelly-voiced patriarch of the Jats exudes confidence. He has rural audiences eating out of his hands with his promise to write off all loans under Rs 15,000. "On June 19," he says, "you will put in my hand the kalam (pen) of power. With this pen, I can appoint someone finance minister and someone else irrigation minister. I will call the finance minister and ask him: 'What is the amount of loans outstanding for this district?' He will reply: 'So many lakhs and so many thousands.' I will say: 'Maaf kar do.' He will draw up the order and put the file before me. Then, I will take this pen and sign on the file: De-vi-Lal."

In Haryana's rustic setting, Devi Lal is proving to be a superb communicator; his rapport with the rural audience is complete. They believe what he tells them. He turns to the elders sitting in the crowd and says: "Don't die on me. Stick around till June 19 and I will get you an old age pension." These are only two points in Devi Lal's cleverly crafted rural platform which has captured the imagination of villagers. He promises an unemployment allowance to all youth till they get a job, medical expenses to all Harijan women delivering their first child, and a share to landowners in the profits from all trees adjoining their land. This, maintains Devi Lal, will give farmers a vested interest in looking after the trees planted by the state Government along their fields, rather than being tempted to uproot the trees to conserve sub-soil moisture.

The enthusiasm generated by these promises has put the Congress(I) on the defensive. Chief Minister Bansi Lal and his predecessor Bhajan Lal spend all their time trying to counter Devi Lal's promise to write off loans. There is no law under which he can do so, they argue. Replies Devi Lal: "The Lok Dal (B) and Sangharsh Samiti members are going to the Assembly to make such laws. We don't have to go to Rajiv Gandhi for approval."

Devi Lal's charge that Bansi Lal and Bhajan Lal are mere creatures of the Centre was illustrated by their behaviour in Rajiv Gandhi's presence during the prime minister's recent Haryana tour. While Rajiv sat centre-stage, surrounded by three commandos, Bansi Lal and Bhajan Lal sat huddled in a corner of the stage with AICC(I) General Secretary Nawal Kishore Sharma and Parliamentary Affairs Minister H.K.L. Bhagat. And when their turn to speak came both Bhajan Lal and Bansi Lal spent half their time dispelling talk of rampant factionalism in the party. These disclaimers carried little weight in the light of Bhajan Lal's earlier remark that the decision on leadership of the state Congress(I) after the elections was an open question.

For Devi Lal, on the other hand, there is no looking back. He collects about Rs 2 lakh every day at election meetings, and thanks the villagers for adding "dhan shakti" (money power) to their display of "jana shakti" (people power), "Jiski dehari do lakh ho, woh Birla, Rajiv say kya darrey ga" (Why would the man, whose daily earning is Rs 2 lakh, fear either Birla or Rajiv), he announces, to applause from the audience. He collects green turbans too, by the dozen. Green is the colour of the Lok Dal flag, and where ever Devi Lal goes, villagers tie a new green turban around his head as a mark of respect. The bundle of green turbans has been growing larger and larger every day, and now occupies half the kitchenette in his multi-purpose minibus 'Vijay Rath'.

The money donated enables Devi Lal to travel in style. He motors from village to village in a hired Mercedes, accompanied by four other cars. When the day's work is done, he moves to the Vijay Rath, an air-conditioned caravan similar to the one popularised by NTR in Andhra Pradesh.

The vehicle draws big crowds; village urchins and elders cluster around, trying to peer into its darkened interior which has a large bed, toilet, kitchenette, a television set and a VCR. Outside, in a floodlit area, blares a public address system and a large movie screen showing a film about Devi Lal's 19-month-long "nyaya yatra" for Haryana's rights. The Vijay Rath was gifted to Devi Lal by friends in Sonepat. Another friend, Dr J.K. Jain of Delhi, has loaned him a van with 18 television monitors, which now screens video films of speeches by Devi Lal and other leaders of the Haryana Sangharsh Samiti. This 'Video Rath' has been touring the state extensively, taking the message of the Samiti where its leaders cannot reach. Hi-tech campaigns, once the preserve of the well-heeled ruling party, have been adopted by regional parties too, thanks to the path shown by NTR. For the

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Photographs by PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Devi Lal being weighed in coins at Narnaund: rural rapport final two days of campaigning, the Lok Dal (B) leader plans to hire a helicopter.

The adulation and public support have not burgeoned overnight; they are the culmination of a 19-month agitation during which all Lok Dal and Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP) MLAs resigned their assembly seats in protest against the "injustice" meted out to Haryana. "June 17 key baad, hum nyaya maangney vaaley nahin, nyaya dayney vaale hongey" (after June 17, we will be dispensing justice, not seeking it), says Devi Lal vehemently. And he makes full use of the commission scandals surrounding defence deals. He patiently explains how politicians and big businessmen keep crores abroad in foreign banks. "The old British rulers used to take money out of the country, now our own government does it. I don't say this, Rajiv's own finance minister says it."

In Haryana, people vote their caste rather than cast their vote. All parties make it a point to announce how many tickets they give to candidates from the different castes and communities. Devi Lal also narrates a long list of the number of Brahmin, Scheduled Caste, Ahir and Kamboh candidates of his party. But the biggest chunk of votes is of the Jats, the community to which both Devi Lal and Bansi Lal belong. And as the peasantry in the five Jat dominated districts is galvanised behind Devi Lal, the Congress(I)'s salvation can only come from the towns. But there is another complication—the Bahujan Samaj Party (BSP) which has, with an eye on the Harijan vote, fielded a candidate from every constituency. It made a dramatic entry: overnight, BSP workers plastered the party's blue elephant symbol on the walls of almost every house in towns and villages. BSP candidates are expected to draw away the Harijan votes, which will ultimately hurt the candidates of the Congress(I). The Lok Dal (B)'s main worry, on the other hand, is the prospect of low polling due to the heat. Pointing to the danger of compiacericy by voters, Chaudury Jagannath, the Lok Dal (B) candidate in Bhawani Khera, warned that if people stayed home, polling may be as low as 35 per cent. Only 50 per cent of the voters cast their vote in a by-election last November.

For the Congress(I), nothing seems to have gone right in Haryana. With intense faction fighting between the dominant Bansi Lal and Bhajan Lal groups, the party presents a fractured picture. Many rebel partymen, who have been denied tickets, are also in the fray as independents. The

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Bansi Lal with Rajiv at an election meeting in Bhiwani: fractured stand

Congress(I) election effort appears dispirited and few Congress(I) vehicles can be seen plying on village roads. Only in the major towns like Hissar, does it look as if the main contenders face each other in a real contest. But the desire for change seems very transparent. The public response at Bhiwani and some other meetings addressed by Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi in the state was tepid. Rajiv made an extremely brave and valiant effort to convince the electorate that he has been doing his best to protect Haryana's interests vis-a-vis Punjab. He said he "had secured" (from the Eradi Commission) more river water for Haryana that even Devi Lal had demanded when he was chief minister in 1977.

REGARDING Chandigarh, Rajiv categorically announced: "Jab tak Haryana key hak poore nahin hote, hum Chandigarh ko nahin jaaney dengey" (until Haryana's rights are fully secured, we will not let Chandigarh go). Even in the immediate context, these announcements may not dramatically improve his party's electoral prospects in Haryana; in the long run, they could affect the prime minister's credibility in Punjab. As Jaswant Singh of Beer Hissar confided, the prime minister's speech would lose his party a sizeable part of the Sikh vote.

"Paani aur vikaas" (water and progress) have been the two key issues in the Congress(I) campaign. Party workers labour the point that the Eradi Commission allocated more water to Haryana than was previously allotted. But the Lok Dal (B) tells the people that water will arrive only when the Sutlej Yamuna link canal is completed, and that can be ensured only by the pressuring of a government unafraid of Rajiv Gandhi. Despite the Congress(I) reminder to villagers that Bansi Lal is the builder of modern Haryana, the people now largely take for granted the progress made by the state in the mid-'70s when he was the chief minister. And as the Lok Dal (B) reminds them, he sullied his record with excesses during the Emergency. The Lok Dal (B) and the BJP enjoy a more favourable martyr image ever since their MLAs resigned their assembly seats to protest against the raw deal given to Haryana in the Punjab accord.

Even the death of the Lok Dal leader Charan Singh has not hampered the bright prospects of Devi Lal's party. "Candidates of the Ajit faction of the Lok Dal and the Janata Party will all lose their deposits," bragged Devi Lal. Sympathy votes for the dead Charan Singh can only help his widow Gayatri Devi who is involved in a tough three-way contest against Hardwari Lal (Lok Dal-B) and former Central minister Professor Sher Singh (Congress-I). So strong are expectations of a Lok Dal (B) victory that traders in the busy town of Jind are placing Rs 10,000 bets on Bansi Lal's defeat at Tosham, at the hands of a Lok Dal (B) maverick Dharam Bir. Bir himself is equally confident. "I will defeat Bansi Lal by 10,000 votes," he declares. Nevertheless, this will prove to be an extremely difficult task and the air is electric with tension in Tosham. According to Sudhir Jain, a Jind petrol pump owner, villages like Barsola on the Jind-Narwana road have put up banners warning Congress(I) candidates not to try to enter the area.

Even police and intelligence officials shadowing Devi Lal are extremely deferential towards him. Chuckles Devi Lal: "Trucks flying the Lok Dal's green flag are no longer being challaned." This, feels Devi Lal, is the strongest indication of the direction in which the wind is blowing.

—RAMINDAR SINGH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

This summer holiday with the Stars

This summer take a break in the quiet charm of princely Mysore and the lush cool hills of Ooty. Your friends at the new, affordably luxurious Southern Star Hotels await you. We'll show you the sights and lavish you with care...

The Southern Stars are ideally located, amongst gardens and hills, near woods and lakes, palaces and monuments. See the majestic Mysore Palace, Tipu's Srirangapatna, the Chamundi temple and the Nandi Bull. Brindavan Gardens and Halebid-Belur, the wildlife of Bandipur and Mudumalai, Dodabetta Peak and Lamb's Rock. Walk through carpeted tea gardens and whistling pine woods. Go picnicking, riding, golfing or boating.

Back home at the Southern Star, play Billiards or work out at the Health Club. And in the evening, enjoy a refreshing cocktail while the Piano soothes your cares away. Dine by candlelight to a band, or be pampered by Room Service. Then, in the cosy comfort of your room, enjoy the latest movies on TV.

Best of all, we believe in value for money. Doesn't this sound like just what you need? Come soon. We'll make your holiday memorable, your honeymoon a dream. And, if it's business, we'll organise for you a conference that's efficient and enchantingly different.

Come, live with the Stars

HOTEL HSS SOUTHERN STAR

MYSORE OOTACAMUND

For information and reservations:
AK DAVE AND ASSOCIATES Delhi: Tel: 675347 Telex: 65230 Bombay: Tel: 222262 Telex: 3061 Bangalore: Tel: 579445 Telex: 8110
HOTEL SOUTHERN STAR Vinobha Road Mysore 570 005 Tel: 27217 Telex: 256
HOTEL SOUTHERN STAR Havelock Road Ootacamund 643 001 Tel: 3601-9 Telex: C/o 204 OR YOUR NEAREST TRAVEL AGENT

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BOFORS

The Smoking Gun

"Let me just reiterate. We are waiting for information from the Swedish Government. The minute we get information we will take action and we will show that we have taken action." —Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi in the Lok Sabha on April 28, 1987.

WHEN the information obtained by the independent Swedish Audit Bureau on the Bofors pay-off finally landed on the prime minister's desk on June 4, 1987, the Government made a show of taking action by outlining a series of steps that seemed designed to accomplish everything short of nabbing the real, but unknown, culprits. There was little doubt that the scandal had seriously undermined and eroded the credibility of Rajiv Gandhi's Government and that he knew it. And so he appeared to move with alacrity. The prime minister summoned an emergency meeting of the Cabinet Committee on Political Affairs, rushed to President Zail Singh with a copy of the report, and then instructed the Finance Ministry to conduct raids on both the official and residential premises of Win Chadha, Bofor's former agent in India. But Chadha had already flown the coop to some destination abroad. And the raid turned out to be no more than a cursory formality. The Government also requested the presiding officers of the Lok Sabha and the Rajya Sabha to appoint a parliamentary committee to inquire into the various payments made by Bofors.

But as far as the Opposition and the critics of the Government were concerned this action was yet another damp squib—too little and too late—in the continuing and bumbling government campaign to deal with the Bofors issue. And it looked suspiciously like another cover-up. Even though the four-page Swedish report, released simultaneously in New Delhi and Stockholm, was not a complete one—names and other details were missing—it came as a devastating hammer blow to the Government. It demolished its claims—like denials of middle-men and secret payments—and confirmed that between Rs 35 crore to Rs 50 crore was indeed paid "among others to a previous agent of Bofors in India".

In Sweden, however, the report was viewed as a let-down. The major part of the report, which was released to the press, neither contained any incriminating names of the recipients of Bofors payments nor any new evidence except the widely anticipated confirmation that payments of approximately £ 28 million were made in the Indian deal. Swedish Government officials at various levels told INDIA TODAY in telephonic interviews that since there was now "no suspicion of violation of any Swedish law" by Bofors, they would have to stop investigations. They stated that they had no legal grounds now to put any further pressure on the firm. One senior Swedish journalist noted that the Government's bland assertions had "taken the Mickey out of what was otherwise an absorbing, investigative story". Journalists at the 'Dagens Eko' programme newsroom in the Swedish National Radio said, perhaps with a touch of indignation: "Well, there is no more controversy here: no parliamentary debates, no commissions of inquiry since Bofors has apparently done nothing illegal. The Audit Bureau's report is no more an issue here."

But if at all the Bureau's investigations proved a point, it was the confirmation of the Swedish National Radio's tenacious stance and the precision and accuracy of their investigation. The radio, under considerable fire both in India and Sweden for not providing documentary evidence to back up its charges, came out with its journalistic reputation enhanced.

In India, the person who finally scored against his adversaries in the Government and his own party, was Rajiv's former finance minister Vishwanath Pratap Singh. Hounded out of the cabinet after he ordered a probe into defence contracts Singh's stand seemed vindicated by the Bofors report. His position was further strengthened when the Government sent a four-member team of banking and legal experts, headed by the Deputy Governor of Reserve Bank of India Amitabh Ghosh, to Switzerland to obtain information about secret accounts held by Indians. Said Singh: "The report that Bofors did indeed pay upto Rs 50 crore comes as a shock to us all, particularly to

Bofors guns being assembled; (left) Chadha: pay-off confirmed

The much-awaited Swedish report, though incomplete, has come as a devastating blow to the Government. It has demolished its claims and confirmed the pay-off report.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

some of us who were made to believe that the rumours about payments in the Bofors deal was but a part of a grand plan of destabilisation engineered by foreign hands." Singh also demanded that the Government pressure Stockholm to release the names of the parties to whom payments were made, and also demand a full audit of the Bofors account.

Predictably, Singh was supported by the entire Opposition in demanding that the Government not stonewall the issue. The politbureau of the CPI(M) passed a resolution stating that "only a thorough inquiry into all these issues by a parliamentary committee will satisfy the people." Added BJP President L.K. Advani: "If the Government's hands are clean, it should have no hesitation in insisting upon the exposure of all the beneficiaries particularly those who have stashed away their gains in Swiss accounts. And if Bofors is unwilling to cooperate, the Government will be justified in considering the cancellation of the contract."

The Government, however, seemed to be depending heavily on the parliamentary committee's report. Said Rajiv: "We will chase every thing through Parliament." Admitting that the amount paid as "winding up charges" was enormous, the prime minister asserted that the Government had received a clean chit from the Audit Bureau report. A lengthy statement signed by Nawal Kishore Sharma and A.K. Anthony, both AICC(I) general secretaries, and V.N. Gadgil, a former Union minister, declared: "We urge the parliamentary committee to employ all means at its disposal to discover the identities of those who have received payments and recommend exemplary punishment to law breakers".

HOWEVER, even though this statement was intended to convey the message that the ruling party supports a thorough investigation, there were serious doubts about whether a parliamentary committee will be able to accomplish anything at all given its powers and capacity to track down information and pursue leads. Parliamentary experts say, for starters, that the presiding officers of the two houses probably do not have the power to appoint the committee when the Parliament is not in session. According to the former chief election commissioner S.L. Shakdhar, only Parliament, while in session, can elect members of a panel and finalise its terms of reference as well. And even if the committee comes into being expeditiously, it can hardly be expected to conduct a probe covering foreign governments and companies. Said H.N. Bahuguna, Lok Dal (B) chief: "Various agencies of the Government are far better equipped and competent in collecting information from foreign governments. The parliamentary committee may mean delay in exposing the people." In consonance with this stand, the Opposition has made the following demands:

- The Government should launch a prosecution case against Chadha and request the Swiss Government to give details about his Swiss accounts;
- The Rs 50 crore paid as commission to various agents be reimbursed.
- Bofors be forced to give the names and details of the people, in and out of government, who have been paid commissions.
- Initiate extradition proceedings against Chadha who has left the country with his family.

Opposition leaders and critics seem convinced that the pay-off—which appeared designed to bribe Indian officials to facilitate the award of the contract—exceeds the amount mentioned in the report. According to defence sources, commissions have also been paid to agents representing various companies that supplied other items such as gun carriers, shells and other components for the Bofors purchase.

But the Government is no doubt fighting against heavy odds. Defence Ministry officials and the Prime Minister's Secretariat still maintain that the report has clearly stated that no middlemen were involved in the deal. But it is in the repetition of this very assertion that the Government has been embarrassingly snared. Originally, this defence was based on the declaration that the late Swedish premier Olof Palme had given a solemn assurance to Rajiv that Bofors had withdrawn middlemen completely from the deal. During the parliamentary debate on the scandal, Defence Minister K.C. Pant repeatedly invoked the dead Swedish prime minister's name to rebut opposition charges that middlemen had influenced the deal. He stated in Lok Sabha on April 28: "There has been a tendency to ignore what the Swedish Government has said. There has been a tendency to slur over the fact that a man of the stature of Olof Palme gave a solemn assurance. It is for you to balance and see whether it is right to put this one radio against the (whole) Swedish Government, not to

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Bofors head office at Karlskoga speak of our own government."

The Government also disputed the Opposition charge that the parliamentary probe is intended to be nothing more than an eyewash. Said an official in the Prime Minister's Secretariat: "We have now done what all of them wanted. If the Government had conducted its own inquiry we would have been accused of hiding facts."

So far as the Swedish Government is concerned, it seems to have washed its hands off the deal. Swedish Government officials indicate that they had done all that they could do under the circumstances. Lars Olof Lindgren, the political adviser at the Ministry of Foreign Trade which is affiliated to the Foreign Office, said: "The Government could not have done more since Bofors has not violated Swedish laws. We have no legal provisions to pursue the case. What the Minister for Foreign Trade, Anita Gradin has done is to appeal to Bofors to provide information to unanswered queries. As it is the Government has come under attack for making the major portions of the report public." The Swedish Central Bank invoking banking secrecy laws had recommended to the Government that parts of the report be classified—a recommendation faithfully implemented by the Swedish government. However, the leader of the Swedish conservative opposition, Carl Bildt lambasted the Government for not making the entire report classified. Bildt argued that it was not the Swedish Government's business to do India'a work. The message was clear—Bofors had done nothing wrong under Swedish Law if it had paid "provisions" or "commissions" or "winding up costs". It was now upto the Indian Government, which had requested the probe to find out the recepient's identity.

A. OBJORNSTRON

"So far we have been unsuccessful. But we believe it could simply be a code name or a reference number like Lotus."

BORJE REMDHAL
senior journalist, Swedish Radio

It was on April 29 that the Swedish Government instructed the "Riks revisions verket" (the National Audit Bureau), after consultation with the Military Equipment Inspectorate to carry out an audit of the records based on Bofors' written report of April 24 to the Indian Ambassador in Stockholm, Bhupatrai Oza. The Director of Information of the National Audit Bureau, H. Antell said: "Do not assume that the Bureau was not thorough. It went about its task scrupulously. For the Bofors investigations, besides Ingemar Mundebo the auditor general and Bo Sandberg, the audit director, an authorised public accountant Ulf Gometz was part of the Military Equipment Inspectorate. The Bank of Sweden, the National Police Board, the National Tax Board, the Customs Office, the Exports Credits Guarantee Board and the Public Prosecution Authority were contacted. The Bureau also contacted the editorial offices of the Swedish Broadcasting Corporation."

At first the Audit Bureau had contacted Bofors at the highest levels. Anders Carlberg, president of Nobel Industries, Per Ove Morberg, president of Bofors and Lars Gothlin, the chief company lawyer at Nobel, were present at this meeting. Although Bofors said it wished to "assist in the Bureau's investigations", the company also sought "confidentiality" with regards to its business operations which the bureau refused. On May 20 they slammed the door on the Audit Bureau, saying that since secrecy could not be guaranteed by the Bureau, they did not wish to cooperate further.

Under Swedish laws, Bofors apparently had iron-clad protection. As R. Sparve, the chief legal advisor to the Swedish Central Bank, explained: "There are two main provisions for secrecy—one relates to national interests when dealing with foreign states and international agencies and the second deals with protecting a company's commercial interests and customer trade practices. In this case, Bofors was ensured protection under the second."

In its communication to the Indian ambassador, Bofors had stated that the

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Beauty in your bathroom, beauty that lasts

LET'S TAKE
LET'S TAKE

Take Hi-Tech

Take Aircraft tyres. Hi-tech that brought the first Airbus into India from Toulouse, France. With tyres made in India. By Dunlop. Hi-tech that makes Dunlop the only aircraft tyre manufacturer in India.

Hi-tech that has resulted from four major collaborations in Japan and U.K. Hi-tech that gives you superior tyres for every type of vehicle on the road.

And now from Dunlop, Steel Cord Belting.

Dunlop hi-tech. You can't get higher.

Take Firsts

Take Maruti Radials. First from Dunlop. And the best from Dunlop. Elegant Radial Class Travel. Hardly surprising from a company with a list of firsts to its name.

First tyre and rubber company to establish operations in India. First to make tyres for aircraft, and still the only one. First to manufacture extra-large earthmover tyres. First to introduce Tyre Service Centres in India. First to manufacture hi-tech steel cord conveyor belting.
The list goes on...

Dunlop. Started First. Remains First.

Take Size

Take the Number One. Dunlop India –the only Indian Company listed in the published list of the world's top 30 tyre and rubber companies.

No 1 in India. The world says so.

Take range. No. 1 again. Farmer or Jet fighter. Car tyres or Earthmover tyres. It's Dunlop all the way.

Dunlop. Started No. 1. Remains No. 1.

DUNLOP

ELEADERSHIP
EDUNLOP

Dunlop is Dunlop. Always ahead.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

B.A. HONOURS.

The prestigious American aviation magazine Air Transport World has named us 'Airline of the Year.'
We're both delighted and proud to accept the award. Our passengers can be sure that this is one laurel we certainly won't be resting on.

BRITISH AIRWAYS
The world's favourite airline.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

only payments made were to a Swiss company and these were "completely in accordance with the Swedish currency regulations". It went on to add, significantly that the stated payments have not been made to any "Indian company or Indian citizen and have no connection with the winning of the contract of 1986". The then president of Bofors, Martin Ardbo in a letter dated March 10, 1986 to the Defence Secretary S.K. Bhatnagar had said: "We hereby confirm that we do not have a representative/agent especially employed in India for this project." He, however, added that Bofors engaged Anatronic General Corporation for administrative services at Swedish kroners (SEK) 100,000 each month.

Close on the heels of the publication of the Audit Bureau's report, the Swedish Radio alleged that Svenska Incorporated was the recipient of SEK 170-250 million. The radio's extensive efforts in Switzerland to unravel the identity of this mysterious firm came to nought. Said a senior journalist Borje Remdahl: "So far we have been unsuccessful. But we believe it could simply be a code-name or a reference number like Lotus".

According to the radio, Lotus was the code name for two payments made in 1986 totalling under SEK 40 million—one to the Societe De Banque Suisse (Suisse Bank Corporation) and the other to the Hanover Manufacturers Bank, an American Bank. The radio had evidence of one payment under the Lotus code in the form of a pay order. In the pay order to the Suisse Bank Corporation the name of a senior bank official Lafonde is mentioned. When INDIA TODAY contacted the Swiss bank in Geneva and asked to speak to Lafonde, an assistant responded: "Lafonde is ill and he cannot be contacted now."

But with Bofors officials adamantly unwilling to provide any further information on the identity of those who have been paid and refusing to comment to the media, several Swedish commentators—one argued that the prodigal firm be nationalised—have demanded that the Swedish Government ask for cooperation from their Swiss counterparts to provide information on the payments. For, despite requests from the National Audit Bureau to the Central Bank, the latter had after "careful consideration" declined to do so. The question, however, was would the Swiss banks have cooperated had the request gone through. Legal advisor R. Sparve demurs: "Swiss banks have in recent years been slightly more open especially with requests from the US Government. But these relate to major crimes like Mafia-related crimes, not fiscal crimes. The other famous precedent is that of millions of dollars stashed away by former Philippines President Marcos which is now under scrutiny. I would imagine the Swedish government would have been unsuccessful in its attempts to glean information from Swiss banks".

BHAWAN SINGH

"The report that Bofors did indeed pay upto Rs 50 crore comes as a shock to us all...we were made to believe that the rumours about payments was but a part of a grand plan of destabilisation."

V.P. SINGH
former finance minister

The key question thus remains unanswered. Swedish radio journalists argue that if the Indian Government can be forced to apply pressure on Bofors, the last remaining piece of mystery in this fascinating "jigsaw puzzle" could be solved. And it was upto the Indian opposition leaders to trigger off this debate. For its part, the Swedish radio had been in touch with politicians like George Fernandes, who recently visited Switzerland. Much also depended on the Indian Government's desire to unravel the mystery.

BHAWAN SINGH

"There has been a tendency to ignore what the Swedish Government has said....to slur over the fact that a man of the stature of Olof Palme gave a solemn assurance."

K.C. PANT defence minister

Meanwhile, in New Delhi there is talk that the parliamentary committee may even invite Bofors' executives to appear before it and, in case of their refusal, recommend that the contract be cancelled. And by sending a high-powered team to Switzerland, the Government hopes to collect evidence against Bofors, should it refuse to cooperate with the parliamentary committee. The Government, however, feels that any harsh action may precipitate matters. Competing arms dealers may jack up prices. Also, arms delivery may be affected, something India can ill afford when there is mounting tension on her borders.

The government is clearly caught between the devil and the deep sea. Though Rajiv has taken a few serious administrative measures to unravel the pay-off mystery, the Bofors issue will continue to haunt him till the recipients of the money are exposed and nabbed.

—RAMESH CHANDRAN in London and PRABHU CHAWLA in New Delhi

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

GUJARAT

Helping Hand

LAST fortnight, 30 poets got together at a kavi sammelan in Ahmedabad to focus attention on national integration and the dangers of communalism. They attracted an audience of 28. This spoke eloquently of the current mood in a state which, in the last five months, has been witness to over 500 cases of communal rioting, leaving nearly 100 dead and 500 injured. Last year, there were 398 communal incidents, with 132 deaths and injuries to over 800. Now, New Delhi has sat up to take notice.

This time the Amarsinh Chaudhary Government's communal fire-fighting mission is under Rajiv Gandhi's initiative. The prime minister took time off to give Chaudhary three sittings in two days last month just to discuss this problem in Gujarat.

Rajiv believes that the main reason for these recurring riots is the economic backwardness of the minorities and is keen on correcting this situation. Though the riots in Gujarat do not seem to suggest this theory, Rajiv sent a task force headed by R.K. Saiyed, additional secretary in the Ministry of Welfare, last month, to the state. Its brief: to evolve an economic package in selected minority-concentrated and riot-hit areas like Bharuch, Jamnagar, Viramgam and Siddhpur.

The task force decided to identify 250 families from each of the areas and give them financial assistance to stand on their own feet. Unfortunately, the planners did not realise that such packages could trigger off more bitterness. Said one Muslim leader who insisted on anonymity: "Just picking out Muslims to give financial assistance could prove detrimental as they will definitely become targets during riots." In fact, during recent violence, there was a pattern in the attacks on Muslim households which had received loans from the state Government.

The Vishwa Hindu Parishad (VHP) was aghast at the very idea. Charged V.A. Vanikar, vice-president of the VHP's state unit: "This very move proves that the Government is thinking on communal lines. By trying to appease the minorities, they are only going to create more trouble. There is poverty even among Hindus. Why are they not being identified for economic packages?" Meanwhile, the Minorities Commission in the state has pointed out to the task force that just picking out 250 families was not enough since there were many hundreds of other poor Muslims who also needed attention.

To ensure that things got moving, Rajiv despatched Union Minister of State for Internal Security P. Chidambaram to extensively tour the riot-torn areas and get a first-hand account. Chidambaram talked to scores of people in various communally sensitive pockets, patiently listening to complaints of inaction by the Chaudhary Government and examples of political interference. He then whipped out an action plan and asked the state chief minister to implement it.

But the plan was kept under wraps for a few days. Chidambaram had said that only Chaudhary would announce it, but when he did, the expectations that had been generated fizzled out, for it only underlined strategies that ought to have been taken up anyway: the need to take preventive action before a communal flare up ballooned out into a major riot, arresting anti-social and communal elements and giving the police a free hand by keeping out political interference. But Chidambaram did say sternly that "action would now be taken against culprits, irrespective of their status and political affiliation".

The Centre was also keen on reshuffling the top brass of the police and the Home Department so that they function more effectively. Chaudhary brought in tough-cop Manmohan Singh as director-general of police and he immediately set about clearing his department of deadwood. In another major change, N. Vittal, managing director of Gujarat Narmada Valley Fertilisers Limited, who made the company into one of the greatest success stories in Gujarat, was brought in as additional chief secretary for home.

The other problem which dogs both Chaudhary and the Centre is the growing influence of the BJP in the current sordid atmosphere in which religious festivals are being used to whip up communal sentiment. The Ram Janki Rath Yatra in recent weeks travelled to over 4,000 places to rouse public opinion on the Ramjanambhoomi issue. In half a dozen places, it left behind a trail of disturbances. As it is, the riots have made the Congress(I) lose its base among the Muslims.

A manifestation of their anger came in the recent Ahmedabad Municipal Corporation elections when Muslim voters chose to plump for an independent, Abdul Latif, a National Security Act detenu, from five Muslim-dominated areas. And the BJP was swept to power on the Hindu vote. Then, late last month, Chaudhary and BJP Mayor Jayendra Pandi broke with tradition by abstaining from attending the Jama Masjid Id prayers at Ahmedabad, further increasing the distrust between Hindus and Muslims. The Centre may be trying out action plans and economic assistance, but the most important measure, a concerted effort to heal the wounds, still seems to be out of sight.

—RAMESH MENON

BHAWAN SINGH

Rajiv with Chaudhary: Central initiative

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

VINITO

PURE MARBLE WALLSTYLING

Wall groomed

Vinito. Pure marble tiles designed specially for walls. For that fresh 'n' glowing feeling. Selectively quarried marble from captive mines. Processed to precise dimensions and a mirror finish by computerised machinery from Italy. With Italian-trained expertise.

Vinito. A matter of looking good.

everest/87/VU/213

OFFICES / INSTITUTIONS / HOTELS / SHOWPLACES / HOMES / STORES

Manufactured by:
VINEET UDYOG LIMITED
Udyog Vihar
Sukher, Udaipur 313 001
Rajasthan. Tel: 27719

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MAHARASHTRA

Fatal Failure

THE brand-new clay and cowdung helipad at Bamni village in Maharashtra's Dhule district appears incongruous in a land that time seems to have forgotten. But the helipad is indicative of the sudden importance this hilly tract inhabited by more than 4,000 adivasis has acquired after years of almost total isolation. The outside world intruded only after several people died of ailments related to malnutrition in recent months—the state Government acknowledges 31 deaths while unofficial surveys put the number at 93—as the district authorities failed to provide even basic medical assistance to the hapless tribals.

But last month, the Government acted quickly when details of the tragedy finally became known, suspending two health officials and rushing relief to the desperate adivasis. After sending Health Secretary D.T. Joseph on a fact-finding visit to the remote region, state Chief Minister S.B. Chavan flew down in a helicopter to Bamni to meet the villagers. The helipad built for the visit has suddenly brought a prestigious symbol of modernity to an area which for all practical purposes exists in another century—it has no school, no primary health centre, no shop, no electricity, no industry, no roads, no transportation or any other modern facility. And a few years from now, even the bamboo huts will disappear as the tribals are evacuated from this inaccessible area to make way for the massive reservoir of the Sardar Sarovar dam.

The 38 villages in the Akkalkuva taluka of Dhule, tucked away on the banks of the Narmada in the Saputara hills, inhabited entirely by Vasava, Tadvi and other tribals, can be reached only after several hours of arduous trekking through the hills. After successive droughts and the denudation of what were once thick forests, the adivasis lead abjectly impoverished lives, with the shift cultivation of jowar, maize and dal unable to provide them any longer with the already low level of sustenance. As a result, the entire population suffers from chronic malnutrition, besides a host of debilitating ailments like diarrhoea, malaria, goitre, scabies and other skin diseases. To make matters worse, they are also afflicted with sickle cell anaemia, a genetic disease characterised by deformation of the red blood corpuscles which increases the chances of death after dehydration by two hundred times.

Earlier this year several deaths occurred in the area, especially of children afflicted with measles, and the adivasis sent word to a primary health centre across the hills asking for medical attention. But the doctor ignored their distress message. In desperation, more than a month later in May, the kotwal of Bamni village set out to inform the Akkalkuva tehsildar. It was only then that the district administration became aware of the tragedy in the hills. A survey by the district collector put the number of deaths at 31, of which nearly 20 were children, while the Bharatiya Janata Party compiled a list of 93 persons who died in recent months. "Unless the Government surveys all the 38 villages and ham-

Malnutrition and disease, compounded by a lax administration, have claimed 31 tribal lives in the remote hilly tracts of Dhule district.

A child being examined: late relief

Photographs by M. RAHMAN

Damania who lost his son: high toll

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

lets in the area it will be impossible to say how many have actually died," says the party's Dhule leader Dharamchand Chordia.

The tribal villages in the hills had been virtually forgotten by the district administration until last month. The villages, a part of Maharashtra since the Narmada was taken as the state boundary in this region, are actually more accessible from Gujarat, and the tribals also speak a smattering of Gujarati. For Maharashtra government officials, a visit to Bamni and neighbouring villages means a 300-km drive through Gujarat followed by a trek in the hills. "Even then, since we do not know their language, it becomes extremely difficult to do anything," says a medical worker now camping in Bamni. "We will be forced to resign if we are asked to live permanently in this desolate area." No government doctor has visited the region for the last two years and even the medical kit, stocked with the trained dai (midwife) of the area, dates back to 1980.

The Government has now set up a primary health sub-centre at Bamni with medical teams on eight-day duty assignments. A tribal health research centre will also be set up in the district. "We have absolutely no excuse for the neglect of the tribals," says Health Secretary Joseph. "But now, besides immediate relief, we are also considering what should be done on a permanent basis. Ultimately, only training local people will ensure day-to-day medical care in the area."

A medical team from Pune's B.J. Medical College which accompanied Joseph to Bamni discovered the incidence of the hereditary sickle cell anaemia in a quarter of the adivasi population. The doctors found that among parents of children who had died of measles, a disproportionately large number (66 per cent) were suffering from the genetic blood ailment, clearly indicating that it was an important contributory factor to the spate of deaths. Ramsinh Damania, one such tribal who lost his one-and-a-half year-old son, recalled: "The child died just five days after getting fever. There was nothing we could do."

But with the deaths, the adivasis find that after years of total neglect the outside world has suddenly woken up to their miserable condition. Groups of young tribals now take home bundles of jowar gifted by the Government, while medical and agricultural workers trek through the hills providing advice and assistance. With the Sardar Sarovar reservoir expected to inundate the region in five years time, there are no permanent plans for development. However, till they are rehabilitated elsewhere, the adivasis at least have the hope of a better deal from the local administration. As a wizened Gardia Surdia pointed out: "It is good to see the doctors here. At least our children have stopped dying now."

—M. RAHMAN in Dhule

KERALA

Riding High

FOR the first time in many years, a government in Kerala seems to be actually rising in public esteem with every passing day. This appears to be the message following the victory of the ruling Marxist-led Left Democratic Front (LDF) in by-elections to the Vamanapuram and Kottayam assembly constituencies.

While the victory of Marxist candidate Krishnan Nair had been foreseen in Vamanapuram—he won by 10,116 votes—what baffled the opposition United Democratic Front (UDF) was the outcome in Kottayam where the Minister for Cooperation and Fisheries, T.K. Ramakrishnan, an outsider, was expected to have a hard time against R. Radhakrishnan, state Congress(I) general secretary. However, the Marxist won by a convincing 9,526 votes. After the twin triumphs, the LDF strength has risen to 79 in the 141 member House.

The Congress(I) had campaigned fiercely to retain Kottayam, headquarters for half a dozen Christian churches and the trading centre of the powerful Christian-dominated plantation lobby. Said a despondent Congress(I) MLA: "The priests, nuns and businessmen, our traditional supporters, went against us this time." Confessed Thachady Prabhakaran, the former Congress(I) finance minister: "At this rate, the LDF in Kerala will become as strong as its counterparts in West Bengal and we will be in the wilderness for ever."

Ramakrishnan: convincing win

That remark epitomised the despondency now prevailing in the Congress(I) camp, amid fears that the voting public has more or less turned its back on the party. And much of the party members' anger is directed against former chief minister K.Karunakaran, whose continued leadership of the state unit has now become anathema to many partymen. Following the UDF defeat in the March assembly elections, the name of AICC(I) General Secretary A.K. Antony had been suggested for the state president's post, but the move was dropped because of the Karunakaran group's fierce opposition. However, the latest by-election losses may provoke another upheaval in the state unit of the party.

Pro-Antony stalwarts—like former ministers Prabhakaran, Oommen Chandy and Vayalar Ravi—have been joined by erstwhile supporters of Karunakaran, like the controversial former minister M.P. Gangadharan and state Congress(I) chief C.V. Padmarajan. That's a formidable line-up, and even die-hard Karunakaran supporters are keeping mum.

Former revenue minister P.J. Joseph, of the Kerala Congress(Joseph), goes so

After its two recent by-election victories, the LDF strength has risen to 79 in a House of 141 members.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

What do you get when you use your Thomas Cook MasterCard® Travellers Cheques as cash, instead of encashing them?

More money for your money.

It's simple, really.
For instance, if you're visiting the US, make sure you use your US Dollar Thomas Cook MasterCard Travellers Cheques as cash. They have purchasing power at full face value. On the other hand, when you encash any travellers cheque, you may be charged a tidy service fee.
See the difference?

Thomas Cook MasterCard Travellers Cheques are available in 12 currencies. So you can carry them in the currency of the country you're visiting. And use them as cash.

And, thanks to the backing of MasterCard, the US-based worldwide credit card giant, and leading European banks (symbolised by the ETC mark) you're a welcome customer anywhere on earth.

Regain without pain.

If you lose your Thomas Cook MasterCard Travellers Cheques, you needn't worry. Your money isn't going anywhere. Just head for the nearest phone and call Thomas Cook MasterCard on the Anytime Line – the round-the-clock telephone service – and you'll be guided to the nearest refund office. (With over 100,000 refund points worldwide, there's sure to be one near you. Wherever you are.)

An Emergency Refund can be provided, on the spot, to see you through the next 24 hours – the time normally taken for a complete replacement.

With all this going for you, shouldn't you carry Thomas Cook MasterCard Travellers Cheques on your next trip?

For more information, do ask your banker. He'll be glad to advise you.

Thomas Cook MasterCard

Travellers Cheques

The Right Choice

everest/87/TCIL/200

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

far as to say that when people think of the UDF they think of Karunakaran, and decide on voting for the LDF. Though that sounds harsh, most partymen do seem to agree that the Congress(I) has little to hope of regaining power as long as the former chief minister is at the helm. Said a senior Congress(I) MLA: "In the next couple of months, the CPI(M)-CPI relationship is sure to deteriorate and we have to capitalise on this. The CPI has made it clear to us that it doesn't trust Karunakaran. Rajiv Gandhi should take him away from Kerala for a long holiday in some Raj Bhawan or the other." Karunakaran himself seems calm in the face of the attacks—"I have done what best I could"—and dismisses the situation as just another of those vicissitudes in political fortune.

Meanwhile, Joseph has also begun to feel that the UDF leadership is more intent on promoting his arch rivals within the front, the Kerala Congress (Mani). He has expressed resentment at party meetings over having to accept the lead of the Congress(I), and is said to have sought entry into the LDF, an advance that was turned down. Apparently driven to desperation, Joseph is also willing to merge with the Congress(S), an LDF constituent, but though that party appears interested, it is not about to accommodate him until the Marxists give the nod.

The LDF's ride, leading up to the by-elections, has so far been trouble-free despite a difficult financial situation. It passed a vote on account in a four-day session in March—the budget will be presented in the monsoon session—leaving a deficit of Rs 139.46 crore. But Finance Minister Vishwanath Menon says he had no option. "The UDF has reduced the state economy to a shambles and the Centre's economic policies have further damaged it." Menon adds that the LDF not only has to begin with a large deficit but also faces the prospect of Central assistance being scaled down by Rs 50 crore this year because of an advance plan assistance of Rs 125 crore taken by the previous government.

The one factor that seems to be going against the Marxists is their overdependence on instructions from the A.K. Gopalan Centre, the state Marxist headquarters in Trivandrum. LDF constituents have already begun to feel that the Marxists are not giving them due weight before arriving at decisions that concern them all. Unless the Marxists improve their style of functioning, relations could sour among LDF constituents.

—SREEDHAR PILLAI

LAST WORD/RAJINDER PURI

Headline Headaches

A few days ago, I met a senior adviser of the prime minister. He looked very worried. "The prime minister is very unhappy with us," he said. "The Punjab crisis is causing a problem!"

"What's the problem?" I asked.

"It's creating very bad headlines in the press," he said.

A few days later, I met him again. He looked more relaxed. "Thank goodness we've solved the Punjab problem," he said.

"How did you do that?" I asked.

"We've created the V.P. Singh controversy," he said smugly. "Now, no one talks of Punjab; the papers are full of nothing but V.P. Singh!"

One month later, when I ran into him, he looked tired. He mopped his forehead and said: "V.P. Singh had become a headache! He had hogged all the press. It was hurting the prime minister as well as the party! It required a real effort to get rid of that problem!"

"How did you manage that?" I asked.

"Don't you read the papers? There's hardly a line about V.P. Singh now! All the news is about the communal carnage in Meerut. That takes care of V.P. Singh and Fairfax!"

"But Meerut hurts the prime minister's reputation too!" I pointed out.

"It did till yesterday, but not now," he said. "It's been taken care of. See tomorrow's papers, they'll be full of the caste riots in Bihar. We got the news this afternoon!"

A couple of days later, I met him again. He looked worried once more. "We've solved the Bihar problem all right, but the solution has a terrible fall-out!"

"Like what?" I asked.

"The Bofors report did manage to knock Bihar off the headlines," he said crossly. "But now the papers are full of nothing else. The prime minister isn't happy! But don't worry, we're working on something!"

The next day he was his cheerful self again. "So, we've solved the Bofors problem too," he said, rubbing his hands in glee.

"Now the papers are full of nothing but Sri Lanka. We're in control of the situation again!"

"But Sri Lanka can become a big problem too," I warned him.

"We've already made arrangements about that," he said confidently. "If Sri Lanka escalates, we can always expect China or Pakistan to push Sri Lanka off the headlines!"

"China will be terrible," I said, turning pale. "They've even got atom bombs!"

"Exactly," he said cheerfully, "and that means we can always control the Chinese problem, because Russia and America are sure to step in and take the headlines away from China!"

"But don't you see," I gasped, "Russia and America could mean world war! That would be nuclear! Nothing would be left of civilisation after that!"

"Of course we've thought of that," he said with a beaming smile. "But don't you see, that would solve our problems once and for all—there won't be a single newspaper headline to embarrass the prime minister after that...!"

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Limca for the star

Limca for the star-crazy

When you're hot and thirsty after escaping from your fans or straining for a glimpse of your favourite star ... reach for a zero-bacteria Limca with thirst-quenching isotonic salts.

Limca

is veri veri lime'n' lemon!

SERVE CHILLED

Responding to customer needs, boosting productivity and profits

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A WIDIA IDEA
BUILT ON QUALITY AND CU

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CUSTOMER-ORIENTATION

WIDIA offers its customers products of advanced technology. And backs them up with competent service... responsive, result-oriented and reliable.

WIDIA's involvement is total: from tailor-made products to technical training and close interaction on the customer's shopfloor.

WIDIA employs the finest technologists. Uses up-to-date production technology. And builds consistently high quality into its products. Making sure that they meet stringent standards. And deliver increased productivity and lower production costs.

WIDIA. At the forefront of hardmetal technology. Supporting every customer in his drive to be a winner. With a wide range of metal cutting, metal forming and mining tools. As well as Special Purpose Machine tools. For top performance in diverse applications.

WIDIA and its customers. A rapport that spells peak productivity and profits. The ultimate proof of a dynamic philosophy in action.

THE WIDIA IDEA

Your productivity – Our concern

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

RK SWAMY/WIL/2690

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

KARNATAKA

Rural Tensions

■ Rajanna of Hassan district's Hoskopulu village stared in dismay as the fire consumed his 15-ft haystack. While he has not lodged a police complaint, he is convinced that the arson was caused by an independent candidate who resented Rajanna's support to the victorious Congress(I) contestant.

■ In a village in Mysore taluk, a quarrel due to cattle straying into a farmer's fields snowballed into a Congress(I)-Janata Party fight.

■ The police resorted to firing in Gundlupet taluk's Hangala village after a clash between Congress(I) and Janata Party workers in which several men were injured. Forty Congress(I) activists were arrested.

KARNATAKA'S two major parties are currently arguing over what decentralisation of village administration has come to mean. While Janata Party workers sing paeans of praise for their experiment which culminated in the zilla parishad and mandal panchayat elections in January this year, Congress(I) supporters insist that the taking of power to the villages has only succeeded in disturbing rural peace.

Though the people still have to see the benefits of the 2,580 mandal panchayats which will begin functioning only in June, the negative aspects of panchayati raj are already becoming evident. Taking party politics to village lanes has inevitably resulted in adding political colour to existing social tensions.

The first indication of the new tensions that would be generated came during the mandal panchayat elections when 215 incidents of violence occurred. During the zilla parishad elections that followed three weeks later, there were 128 incidents. But the worst rifts were created by the elections to the pradhan and upapradhan (president and vice-president) of the mandal panchayats. The violence was not only widespread but also more serious. Though the state police headquarters still has to compile the statistics, there were 30 to 40 incidents in each of several districts. This is not surprising since the pradhan is the main repository of power in the new structure. Says a superintendent of police: "The work of the force has increased tenfold." Adds the police chief of Tumkur, A.R. Infant: "The tribe of politicians with power has increased. Naturally, there are more conflicts."

Though the situation has quietened now, undercurrents of tension have come to stay. Mandya district's Kangalahundi village was witness to just one disturbing illustration of this trend when an attempt by some pro-Janata Party youngsters to put up an innocuous play was resisted by Congress(I) workers. This simple issue ended up involving some senior party leaders and ultimately the play had to be staged under heavy police security. At other places, even fathers and sons have been known to have hurled accusations at each other publicly in the course of campaigning for their respective parties.

A burnt Harijan home: new fears

Photographs by G. DEEPAK PAWAR

Political horse-trading is also no longer seen as something that happens in distant capitals. There have been reports of mandal panchayat members being paid cash to vote for a contestant to the pradhan's post and, in one case, these privileged voters were even whisked away to Ooty and Coorg by a Congress(I) pradhan to keep them away from Janata Party allurements. Since money was used freely to influence the election of pradhans, many villagers fear that this may widen the scope for corruption.

Most worried by the new developments are people from the Scheduled Castes and Tribes who say that the strength of the more powerful communities has been enhanced by the elections. Minister for Rural Development Abdul Nazeer Sab concedes that Harijan fears of intensified oppression are justified but says that he consoles complainants by saying that "this is the best system to benefit them. It is for them to make it work". But with the majority communities having captured the bulk of the seats, the Harijans will have a difficult time standing up to them.

Though minister Nazeer Sab says that the new rural structure is the best possible, many question this view.

While Congress(I) state party chief Oscar Fernandes has tried to adopt a constructive attitude with regard to the mandal panchayats, the same cannot be said for his party workers at the village level. Already out of power for four years, they fear for their very survival because the success of the panchayati raj could mean the consolidation of the Janata Party at the grassroots level. Their entire attitude, therefore, is obstructionist.

Nazeer Sab says that "politicisation of villages is a good thing—it is the supreme edifice in a political set-up". But as friction escalates in rural Karnataka in the coming months, when the mandal panchayats actually start functioning, how many people will agree with this view is a good question.

—ANITA PRATAP

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

What do you desire in an Interior Project?

SWIFTNESS...
SUPERB SKILL...
SMOOTH SUCCESS...

With years of valuable experience behind them, Gogia incorporates exquisite craftmanship into every project. Which is executed from conception to completion - including consultancy, designing and execution all under one roof. And is carried out on a time-bound basis to suit your budget.

Our excellent projects bear testimony of our dedication and skill:

Oil & Natural Gas Commission
Indian Oil Corporation
Air India
Bharat Petroleum Corporation
Unit Trust of India
General Insurance Corporation
Reliance Industries Limited
Bank of Credit & Commerce International
United Breweries Group of Companies
Copper Chimney Restaurant, Muscat, Bahrain

ONLY FROM GOGIA
-COMPLETE INTERIOR MANAGEMENT ON A CONSULTANCY BASIS

We undertake jobs all over India and abroad.

If we interest you, write to us for our comprehensive brochure:

Gogia Interiors

4, Raheja Centre, Nariman Point, Bombay 400 021. Tel.: 230541, 230741, 2872782, 2871022.

Gogia Spells Magic In Interiors.

Vishi

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PAC

Questionable Conduct

■ "It was around 1 a.m. Armed men firing indiscriminately, forcibly entered 50 houses simultaneously. They picked up young men from these houses, dragged them out and shot them dead in full view of their relatives. By the time this ruthless operation was over, the Jali Kothi locality of Meerut had turned into a graveyard for 27 young Muslims killed in cold blood by the PAC."

■ "Muslims had kept firing on the force for well over three hours from house tops. The district officials....ordered the PAC to conduct a combing of Jali Kothi. The sector magistrate and circle officer accompanied the force. It took two hours to complete a house to house search. A total of 38 persons were arrested and 52 licensed and unlicensed firearms and 21 hand bombs were recovered. Two bodies of Muslims....were also recovered. They died of bullet injuries, of shots fired from a .303 mm rifle, generally used by the PAC. The PAC did open fire, but within limits. Sufficient restraint was exercised by officials and PAC despite great provocation by Muslim mobs."

THESE two contradictory versions of riots in a Meerut locality in 1982, could be appended blindly to almost any riot in Uttar Pradesh where the Provincial Armed Constabulary (PAC) has been called out. The first scenario was painted by a fact-finding committee of minority leaders, the second is an excerpt from an unpublished official inquiry report. The Malliana carnage near Meerut last fortnight, in which over 100 Muslims were killed, has only sharpened the division of opinion on the PAC. The Muslims view the force with intense suspicion and fear. The state stoutly defends the group. And dangerously, the Hindus have decided to chime in on an issue which has turned explosive.

Today, the state's prime strike force finds its uniform blotted indelibly by charges of communalism. In the 29 riots reported in the state since 1972, it stands accused of butchering Muslims in 13. The trail of terror, say Muslim leaders, snakes through Firozabad (1972), Sambhal (1978), Aligarh (1978 and 1980), Moradabad (1980), Meerut (1982, 1986 and 1987), Bahraich (1983), Mau (1983), Pilibhit (1986), Bara Banki (1986) and Allahabad (1986). PAC firings in Muzaffarnagar (1975) and Sultanpur (1976) also resulted in the death of 12 Muslims in the sterilisation drive during the Emergency.

Says Syed Shahabuddin, Janata Party MP, angrily: "The PAC is no less evil than the Nazi occupation armies. It is out to destroy the Muslims of Uttar Pradesh." All India Muslim Majlis President Fazlul Bari refers to it as "the saviour of the Hindus". And Islam Ahmed, who retired as inspector general of police in 1971, says: "It was a fine force in my time but now something is seriously wrong."

But the Government does not think that anything is wrong anywhere. State Home Secretary Mata Prasad, without commenting on any particular riot, says: "So far, not one such complaint that the PAC acted in a communal manner has been substantiated by various inquiries." The official Moradabad inquiry committee report—where Muslim leaders claimed that over 500 lives were lost in the communal holocaust unleashed by the PAC—notes pointedly: "If the PAC would not have acted the way it did, there would have been complete chaos, large-scale loss of human lives and property." Adds S.C. Dixit, who retired as director-general of police in March 1984 and is now a Vishwa Hindu Parishad functionary: "The PAC is the finest force we have. I assure you that minus the PAC, the Government cannot run the state for one day."

The battle lines are now clearly drawn. While the Government is standing solidly by its 32,000-strong strike force, the state's Muslims want it to be either disbanded or reconstituted as a

PAC patrolling Meerut: blotted copybook

PRASHANT PANJIAR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

WHY CAN'T MORE OF YOUR PEOPLE THINK MORE LIKE YOU?

If all your middle level and junior executives spent just 30 minutes each day with The Economic Times, would you have to repeatedly step down to their level?

Inform them about every big and small thing that happens on the financial and economic scene? And then interpret it all?

The fault is not entirely theirs.

The average executive finds precious little time to spare at work. And when the work load is easy, more often than not, the office copy isn't around.

The problem, however, can be easily overcome! You can make sure each and every executive gets his or her own copy. If not in the office, definitely at home.

No excuse for ignorance

The Economic Times gives the most comprehensive, correct and up to date information about business, finance, industry and general economy. In addition you get, with the help of The Economic Times Research Bureau :

The Investor's Guide on Monday; Computers/Science every alternate Wednesday; Mid-Week Review on Thursday covering commodities, industry, finance, institutional banking, foreign trade and management; Commodity Guide on Saturday; Advertising & Marketing and Magazine Section on Sunday.

Plus supplements from time to time on other nations giving in-depth and extensive coverage of economic, business and related affairs.

Get your secretary to list out the names and addresses of your promising executives and send in the subscription today to the Circulation Manager, The Economic Times, Times House, 7, Bahadurshah Zafar Marg, New Delhi-110 002. Tel: 3312277

R. KANGA/ET/1A/87

THE ECONOMIC TIMES

GIVE A PERK TO THE EXECUTIVE MIND

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

riot force with a 6 per cent to 8 per cent Muslim representation. They dismiss the Government claim that 5.07 per cent of the men in the PAC are Muslims and say it is only 3 per cent. They also charge that men of the backward classes, Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes, (45.7 per cent of the force), are their main tormentors. But S.K. Bhatnagar, the state's director-general of police until he was shunted out after the Meerut riots, states categorically: "Our force is not constituted on a communal basis and it would be dangerous if we start doing this."

PAC officers have a simple explanation for the low Muslim representation—the failure of Muslim youth to fulfil the basic eligibility criteria, a primary condition being matriculation. A Police Department survey conducted in 1980 in 35 districts, found only 6.64 per cent of Muslims to be matriculates, though Muslims made up 17.78 per cent of the population in these districts.

Another study reveals that not many Muslims applied for PAC posts in the first place. Of the 11,983 applications received between 1977 and 1980, only 401 were from Muslims. So, of the 2,291 PAC constables recruited in this period, there were only 70 Muslims. Says a senior PAC official: "They somehow do not come forward and the handful who do, do not fulfil the basic requirements." Ahmed disagrees: "They are lying. Muslim applications are just not entertained."

The PAC may be justified in rigidly upholding its eligibility criteria, but it cannot wipe off its pro-Hindu image easily. In Meerut recently, where Muslims were vehemently canvassing for the PAC's removal, over 200 Hindu women gheraoed District Magistrate R.S. Kaushik, chanting "PAC nahin hategi" and "Tripathi ko vapas laao" ("PAC will not be removed" and "Bring back Tripathi"—a PAC commander).

Undoubtedly, the overt Hindu reaction has grave overtones, almost as serious as the charge of indiscipline levelled against this force. The memories of the 1973 PAC revolt are still fresh in people's minds. The revolt, which was finally quelled by the army, cost 51 lives—30 PAC and 21 army jawans. Even during the Moradabad, Meerut and Aligarh riots, the PAC has been found to have "gone out of control" at times.

BHAWAN SINGH

Hindu women demand PAC presence: sectarian support

Even on this count, PAC officials have a ready explanation: they say there are only 180 Class I and Class II officials to inspire and command 32,000 men structured in 33 battalions. Also, while an officer of the rank of deputy superintendent commands a company in the Border Security Force (BSF) or the Central Reserve Police Force (CRPF), a mere inspector is a company commander in the PAC, in charge of 100 jawans. And, whereas the BSF and CRPF usually move in platoons, the PAC moves in sections. (Each company has three platoons and each platoon has three sections.)

On riot duty, the PAC sections, comprising nine men and a head constable, often work independently despite mandatory orders that district police and civil officials accompany them. "It simply isn't always possible to have a sub-inspector with each section," says a superintendent of police. Thus command can lie with a head constable who is not trained to deal with tense situations. Obviously, fatal errors are often made.

Surprisingly, though the PAC is mainly a strike force, it is often deployed in riot-affected areas, for which it is not fully equipped. Says a PAC DIG: "It is basically a strike force. So when it moves in, it will either use canes or bullets."

Following the 1980 Moradabad riots, the Government decided to train five battalions—38, 39, 40, 41 and 42—as a specialised riot control force. Ambitious plans were formulated, the unit was christened Vishesh Sewa Unit and placed under a deputy inspector general of police. Among other things, its .303 mm rifles were to be replaced by self-loading, semi-automatic rifles and each battalion was to have its own fire brigade and medical teams. But even basic riot control training has not been imparted to this unit yet. These battalions are like any other PAC battalion. One of the companies of the unit—the 41st—was even involved in the Malliana carnage.

The PAC also suffers from over-use. Instead of the one-and-a-half months continuous mandatory training recommended for each company every year, the frequency is barely one month in two years—that too in phases.

The PAC jawan is finding it difficult to cope with public criticism. The withdrawal of seven companies in Meerut has angered him further. And dismissed constable, Ram Ashish Rai, general secretary of the Uttar Pradesh Police Parishad, who had led the 1973 revolt. Says: "The 1973 revolt has to be repeated to reply to this demoralisation of the force by the Government and the minorities." If feelings continue to run high, the worst may not yet have been seen in the PAC-Muslim stand off.

—DILIP AWASTHI

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BANGALORE 560 042: 43, Dickenson Road Tel: 578718/578452 BOMBAY 400 025: 227, Dr. Annie Besant Road, Worli Tel: 4936716/4930543
CALCUTTA 700 017: 5, Camac Steet COCHIN 682035: Nedumchalil Chambers, Mullachery Canal Road Ernakulam

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Looking for a business solution is easier with the help of professionals who look at your needs, at Computer Point.

There's more to buying a computer than meets the eye.

Where you're buying it at, for instance.
Or who you're buying it from.

Today, more than computers, when it's their applications that are becoming important, it's prudent to meet someone who really has the time and the desire to understand your needs perfectly.

Someone like us.

At Computer Point, it's not which computer you're buying that's important. Rather, it's what you're buying it for.

Naturally, we go all out to really understand your business. And to look at it from your point of view.

Only then do we offer you advice.

Our expert consultancy comes free with everything you buy from us.

Also, since you have a wide range of brands to choose from, you're more likely to make a better computer-buying decision at Computer Point.

Whether it's hardware, software, consumables, accessories — or anything else to do with computers, you can't come to a better place than Computer Point.

Because while everyone else is still living up to past promises, we're looking at the future — for you.

By seeing your point of view!

COMPUTER POINT

We see your point of view!

Sista's-1451/87

DON'T BE A PARTNER IN SOFTWARE PIRACY

BUY GENUINE

HYDERABAD 500 482: 10, Regency House, Greenlands Road, 680, Somajiguda Tel: 229123 229374
MADRAS 600 017: 92, G. N. Chetty Road, T. Nagar Tel: 441192 NEW DELHI 110 049: F-41, South Extension part I Tel: 624370/698548

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

If you want to fly free for six m

For more details contact your local travel agent.

BRITISH AIRWAYS

The world's favourite airline.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ix months feel free to enter.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Cinematic Awareness

WITH more than 60 film societies, some even in villages, Kerala is today witnessing the biggest ever film society movement in the country. It appears that the Malayali film buff is not just turned on by porno films but enjoys serious cinema. Soorya, a film society in Trivandrum is recognised by all the others as the leader of the movement. Started eight years ago by N. Krishna Moorthy, an engineer working with the Indian Space Research Organisation in Trivandrum, Soorya according to well-known film director, Shyam Benegal "is by far the most well organised film society in the country". The main activities of this society are confined to screening good films, presenting film directors and holding retrospectives. Almost all the big names in the film industry—from Satyajit Ray to Shabana Azmi—have been hosted by Soorya. Lecture classes attended by Adoor Gopalakrishnan and Aravindan have discussed great masters like Zoltan Fabri and Ingmar Bergmen. The film society has premiered many Indian films like Aakrosh and Tabarana Katha for its nearly 2,500 members who are the elite of Trivandrum.

Film directors at seminar and Krishna Moorthy (left): success story

According to Moorthy, who was a member of the national jury of the film award committee: "Soorya has brought an awareness among the Trivandrum audience of the works of the masters and their taste has definitely improved". He even dreams of the day when Fabri and Bergman would be invited to attend retrospectives in Trivandrum—a possibility that cannot be scoffed at considering the Soorya success story.

Assembly Crisis

THE West Bengal Assembly has conjured a crisis out of thin air. In the centre of the storm is Congress(I) MLA, Sadhan Pande, who is accused by members of the Left Front of making allegedly obscene remarks against a female Marxist legislator, Maharani Konar, in the House. By last fortnight, the storm had become a typhoon with the Assembly Speaker, Hashim Abdul Halim denouncing Pande for debasing the hallowed tradition of "the House" and suspending him from the Assembly for the rest of the session.

Interestingly, the entire controversy had its origin in a remark made in the Assembly by Public Works Minister Jatin Chakraborty, that "all journalists are prostitutes...". The press staged a walk-out and the Congress(I) took up the issue, demanding that Chief Minister Jyoti Basu apologise for his minister's misbehaviour. The crisis snowballed and the speaker refused to allow a motion against the minister, on the grounds that "prostitute" was not unparliamentary. But in order to assuage the feelings of the press, Halim ordered that the unfortunate remarks be expunged from the official records.

Pande: show down

The speaker's decision and the Opposition's howls of protest sparked off the interesting sequel to the confrontation. Senior Left Front ministers rushed to the Congress(I) benches with fists raised, spoiling for a fight. In the free for all that followed, Konar—seen standing with a slipper raised in her hand—declares that Pande humiliated her by calling her something unmentionable. The Marxists, quickly concluded that the lady had been called a prostitute.

Pande, of course, vehemently denies the accusation and claims that he has been requesting the speaker to produce the evidence. "If I had indeed made such a remark then it should be recorded in the proceedings", says Pande. But the Marxists point out that his remark might have gone unrecorded in the pandemonium that prevailed. The MLA even dashed off to Delhi and met party leaders and the press to prove that he was being framed. The Nari Kalyan Samiti, a women's organisation has also come out in support of Pande. What queer turn the issue now takes is anybody's guess.

Collision Course

STUDENTS of two medical colleges in Bangalore are on a collision course thanks to the State Health Department taking a "the left hand knows not what the right hand is doing" policy. Last fortnight, the students of the capitation fee-based Ambedkar Medical College had gone on strike protesting against the management's inordinate delay in constructing their own buildings. Barely had this problem been settled when the students of the merit-based Bangalore Medical College (BMC), too went on an indefinite strike, protesting the Government's decision to allow the undergraduate students of Ambedkar college to utilise the clinical facilities of the Lady Curzon and Bowring hospitals,

G. DEEPAK PAWAR

Striking BMC students: organised protest

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

- Experience the Blue Diamond
- Compare the Blue Diamond
- You will buy the Blue Diamond

TRUST YOUR EYES ONLY!

WARRANTY
3 YEAR
ON PICTURE TUBE

Don't take anyone's word for it

NELCO
BLUE DIAMOND

What a difference!

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CRISIS TO

Road Transportation at the crossroads

The wheels of progress are slowing down.
Rising fuel costs. Deteriorating roads and driving conditions. Higher Operations and Maintenance costs. Increasing tyre prices. And more.

But the crisis to hit you worst of all, is that you've been missing out on the latest innovations of international technology to free you from the tightening grip of the 'profit squeeze'.

Yesterday's truck technology cannot solve today's crisis.
You need a revolutionary change.

Today's International Truck Technology– The need of the hour

It had to be state-of-the-art. It had to be a world leader!
Reason why Hindustan Motors collaborated with ISUZU — Japan's largest truck manufacturer and Industry pacesetter of Diesel Engine Technology.

Result: TODAY'S HEAVY-DUTY TRUCK.
For India's acute trucking needs and road conditions.

HM's other pathfinding collaborations with world leaders: Mannesman Demag, West Germany ■ D.D.A, General Motors Corporation, USA ■ Caterpillar Tractor Company, USA, give it over four decades of experience in the 'heavy-duty' field of excavators, cranes and earth moving equipment.

This involvement in the manufacture of the most rugged vehicles for the most arduous conditions and terrains, gives HM the expertise none can match. HINDUSTAN-ISUZU is a revolutionary, new step in the HM tradition of teaming up with the world's best.

Hindustan-Isuzu – The only choice

Today you need a heavy-duty vehicle that's built to take on today's challenges.

Roads are not getting any better. The vehicle's design should.
Fuel isn't getting any cheaper. The fuel bill should.
Tariff per kilometre is not increasing The kilometres covered should.

This is where HINDUSTAN-ISUZU overtakes the others. And distances itself by far in the critical areas of economical operations, higher profits. Most importantly, it's geared to revolutionise returns on investment.

Advanced Technology creates new gains

The HINDUSTAN-ISUZU FVR is custom-built for today's compelling necessities.

Extra Revenues

Power-packed Engine: All powerful 6BD 1-N engine. Develops massive power of 135 PS at 3000 RPM. High Torque of 38 mkg at 1800 RPM.

EXTRA HAULING POWER! EXTRA PICKUP! EXTRA SPEED on each gear. Top speed of 85 Kmph to keep you ahead of the rest — always!

Extra Benefits: More kilometres per hour ■ More kilometres per day ■ More trips per month ■ More profits every year.

Extra Economy

Clearly Superior & Fuel Efficient Engine: Incorporates ISUZU's world-acclaimed fuel injection and combustion innovations: Swirl type square, flange-lip combustion chamber ■ Chromard cylinder liners ■ Roller tappets.

Extra Benefits: Perfect fuel-air mixing for more efficient combustion ■ Substantially, lesser fuel consumption ■ Longer liner life and easy replacement ■ Powerful, noiseless operation.

HINDUSTAN IS

The Heavy Dut To Beat The Profi

Extra Payloads

Rugged, Heavy-Duty Frame: Greater ruggedness built in by virtue of superior design. Long and Cross members are thicker, taller, wider. Far greater frame strength compared to all other vehicles.

Sturdier, Invincible Axles:
Rear axle — sturdier, stronger, higher capacity 8ft. wide rear axle. Not only facilitates carrying of heavier loads with 'never before confidence' but also offers a larger loading platform area, compared to others.
Front axle — built deeper with larger-sized bearings to safeguard against front axle failure even under extreme loading conditions.

Greater Gradeability: Higher torque, more efficient transmission: assures climbing ability of the order none can match.

Extra Benefits: Axle design aimed at meeting increasing load and capacity demands ■ Toughest framework by any standard. Stands a lot of abuse ■ Uncompromising strength and durability to carry the heaviest loads on rough and even hilly roads.

A 254 mm
B 85 mm
C 8 mm

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

ISUZU FVR

Heavy Duty Truck
Profit Squeeze

Extra Life

All aggregates viz., engine, gearbox, axles, suspension and chassis, etc., are stronger and designed to international standards, for long life.

Extra Benefits: Lesser breakdowns ■ Lesser time in garage ■ More trouble-free drives ■ More time on the road ■ More revenues.

Improved Suspension Design: Sliding type spring hanger bracket, gives higher strengths in torsion. Absorbs bumpiest shocks.

Extra Benefits: Longer suspension life ■ Increased tyre life.

Extra Safety

Advanced Dual Braking System: Fully independent lines for front and rear wheels give you complete reliability. If one line fails, the other is there to take over.

The powerful exhaust brake guards against brake fade even on long gradients.

Extra Benefits: 100% Reliability ■ 100% Safety.

Extra Drivability

Advanced Cab Design: Wide, bright, soundproof cab with heat insulation. ■ High driving position with extra large windscreen offers wide, reassuring view in all directions, simplifies manoeuvring ■ Ergonomically designed reclining seats, for fatigue-free driving on long hauls ■ Light steering effort. Feels like power steering. Manoeuvring made even easier by the short turning radius. Invaluable on hills, hair-pin bends and in cities ■ Large array of warning lights allow the driver to monitor all vital operations right from the driving seat.

Hydraulically Operated Clutch: Requires minimum pedal pressure for smoother transmission.

Synchromesh Gear Box: Five speed synchromesh gear box, eliminates double declutching. Stronger gears with synchromesh design greatly increase gearbox life.

Extra Benefits: More comfort ■ More safety ■ Better manoeuvrability ■ Greater Driver efficiency ■ Greater Trucking confidence.

The assurance of continuing care

The HINDUSTAN-ISUZU is assured of total quality service. Anywhere. Anytime.

This assurance is guaranteed in HM's vast experience of over four decades. In establishing and continuously enriching a sales, spares and service network which is the largest in the country.

To further assure maximum uptime for the HINDUSTAN-ISUZU, a multi-pronged approach has been developed: Company Service Engineers ■ Company-Trained Dealer Mechanics ■ Wide Network of Authorised Service Centres fully equipped with parts & equipment for the highest levels of precision services.

And now for the first time in India: Service Vans fully equipped for rendering 'highway repairs'. Prompt service is only a phone call away.

ISUZU Technology! HM Assurance!
Double surety to always keep you on the move.

HM-ISUZU Coordinated Service System

Hindustan Motors Limited

If it wasn't a technological breakthrough, it wouldn't be here.

Available in Andhra Pradesh, Karnataka, Kerala, Tamil Nadu, Pondicherry and South Maharashtra.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Polyplex.

A material change... towards better living.

Invest today in the products of tomorrow.
That's the Polyplex philosophy.
And it makes good business sense.

Take Tensilised Polyester Film.
It has an astonishing range of attributes and applications. Yet is produced in only 5 countries... by just 10 companies worldwide. Now this new wonder material will soon be manufactured for the first time in India – by Polyplex.

A many-splendoured pioneering venture. Providing the material for change to better products.
Stimulating industry and employment.
Saving foreign exchange.
Transforming the very substance of a host of items that are part of daily living.

Yes, Polyplex is proud of its project.
And sure of its prospects!

POLYPLEX

CORPN. LTD.

75 Amrit Nagar, Behind NDSE -I, New Delhi-110003
Phones: 611307, 619694 Telex : 31-63380

The future---with confidence

Sobhagya/82/87

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

which had so far been the exclusive preserve of the BMC medicos. BMC students pointed out that in sharing the clinical facilities, they now have to contend with the problem of an inadequate student-patient ratio which might provoke the Indian Medical Council to derecognise their college.

To add to the state Government's woes, Janata Party legislator, Roshan Baig has threatened to expose the 'misdeeds' of his own government in "handing over" the clinical facilities of the two hospitals to Ambedkar college. In a letter to the chief minister, Baig implicated Health Minister B. Rachiah, by stating that the "ever obliging minister of health seems to be falling over himself to cater to every whim and fancy of the Ambedkar Medical College management". If the charges are substantiated, BMC students are bound to create a stink the Government will not very easily live down.

Differences Deepen

THE Samyukta Maharashtra Seema Samiti (SMSS) is a motley collection of political groups constituted to get the Marathi- speaking areas of Belgaum merged with Maharashtra. But united as they are by this one slender thread, political differences were bound to spill over into the open, threatening to split the Samiti.

Last fortnight, veteran Janata Party leader S.M. Joshi, 82, largely responsible for keeping the different political groups together in the Samiti, announced his decision to step down from the chairmanship. His resignation was to protest Shiv Sena chief Bal Thackeray's criticism of his devotion to the Gandhian principle of non-violence. Joshi, though in poor health, has been maintaining that the Samiti must eschew violence in its confrontation with Karnataka Chief Minister Ramakrishna Hegde. But the principle of non-violence is against the grain of the Shiv Sena. At Samiti meetings, Thackeray has been openly demanding a more "aggressive" action plan to resolve the long standing border dispute.

Thackeray: agitated

Joshi's decision to resign was, however, not anticipated by the Shiv Sena. Thackeray immediately offered to withdraw his party from the SMSS "in the interests of resolving the border issue". The future of the border agitation now depends on whether the Shiv Sena tiger can be tamed by meetings between the two leaders with conflicting standpoints.

Fawning Felicitations

FOR members of the Telugu Desam, May 28 was both the final day of the annual party convention—mini-mahanadu—and the birthday of their leader, N.T. Rama Rao. The nearly 4,000 handpicked party activists, invited to Teluguvijayam—the party headquarters, 25 km outside Hyderabad—greeted their leader with sweets, and garlands, and some even prostrated themselves at his feet. The high point was the huge birthday cake, carried in by yellow shirted volunteers—which was cut and passed around.

Accepting the fawning of his supporters unreservedly, NTR told the gathering: "I do not know why I was born and I cannot say how this journey will end. What is the meaning of this life's journey?"—words which foxed party members.

BABJI/Janata Studios

BABJI/Janata Studios

NTR at meet and (left) being greeted: birthday treat

During the three day meet, party members discussed a host of issues, and passed 25 resolutions. All except two were directed against the Central Government and its handling of the Sri Lanka Tamil problem, Centre-state relations, and Punjab. But issues closer to home, like the widespread shortage of drinking water, were referred to only in passing.

Commenting on this shift in priorities, Newstime editorialised, "It seems the crusading zeal with which NTR launched the party is lacking...Let him look after the state first. The nation can wait till his own house is in order." Unsolicited advice, the chief minister might say.

Defamatory Issue

JASPAL Singh, former police commissioner of Baroda is again in the news. But this time the MLA, elected mayor of the city earlier this year, is fighting off a personal communal attack.

The problem arose after Singh passed a cursory remark in Baroda last fortnight that Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi had goofed on the handling of the Punjab situation, Bofors, and Fairfax. This kind of outspokenness was not going to be tolerated by Congress(I) members. Ranjit Singh Gaekwad, Congress(I) member of Parliament immediately declared that Singh's action was a cheap gimmick made by one born a Sikh. Most people were shocked by his brashness. But once started, Gaekwad was not going to stop. In a statement to the press he wondered why the people of Baroda had put their faith in a Sikh.

Singh: under attack

Singh, shot off a long, indignant letter to Gaekwad. The mayor said he was proud to be born to a Hindu mother and Sikh father and that this did not make him a terrorist. Singh has now filed a criminal complaint in Baroda's chief metropolitan magistrate's court against Gaekwad for defamation and making statements which could lead to communal trouble. The mudslinging has only boosted Singh's image.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BIHAR

The Lawless State

Caste carnages have become almost synonymous with Bihar: one takes place every few months. But even by that troubled state's horrific standard of killings, the massacre last fortnight of 42 Rajputs at Baghaura and Dalelchak villages in Aurangabad district marked a new level of brutality. But more than that, it also marked a new stage in a rapidly escalating caste war, mixed now with the deadly influence of a Naxalite organisation that is prepared to kill on caste lines. As class and caste combined in a potentially explosive mixture, Bihar last fortnight seemed to teeter at the edge of a dangerous precipice. A report by Executive Editor T.N. NINAN and Principal Correspondent FARZAND AHMED:

WELL COME", the hand-painted sign said above the doorway. "Drawing Room", it then announced somewhat quaintly, in the same green paint.

Ram Deen Singh, head clerk in the forest department, was once proud of this doorway, the drawing-room it led into, and the house—Baghaura village's only pucca dwelling. But on the night of May 29, a lynching party of Yadavs from nearby villages and activists of a dreaded Naxalite group, the Maoist Communist Centre (MCC), scooped out the mud floor of the verandah just under the welcome sign, forced the frightened womenfolk in Ram Deen Singh's house to place their necks on the improvised chopping block, and beheaded them with country-made axes. Those who came for the mass funeral the next evening saw the scooped-out hole filled to the brim with the congealed blood of the slaughtered women.

The menfolk were killed earlier, in the yard outside. A couple of them were shot as they tried to escape into the darkness of the night. Ram Deen Singh escaped as he was not in the village that night. But 20 members of his family—from his 80-year-old father to his one-and-a-half year-old grandson—were butchered mercilessly along with other Rajputs from three other families in the village. A visiting tractor-driver, a Harijan, was tied to his

Photographs by K.M. KISHAN

Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

vehicle's steering wheel and burnt alive.

Barely a kilometre away, Dalelchak village was living through its own nightmare. Kamla Devi had just returned from her in-laws'-house after her marriage a fortnight earlier, and her father was celebrating. When the dogs barked outside, Kamla's sister Lalita Devi peeped out, to see a horde of armed men marching on the village. The two sisters, their parents and other relatives fled into the fields, but were pulled back by a neighbour who insisted they had nothing to worry about. The family returned home. Two hours later, only Kamla and her sister were alive. Everyone else's throats had been slit.

After the killings, the mob set a torch to all the Rajput houses in both villages. The bodies were thrown into the fire. The flames lit up the night sky for miles around, but not a soul came from any of the surrounding villages to help. Hiding in his haystack, Amresh Singh of Dalelchak heard the killer mob shout "MCC zindabad" and "Chhechani ka badla le liya" (We have taken revenge for Chhechani—where Rajputs had killed Yadavs in April) before disappearing into the night.

For over a month, the police in the district had been expecting just such a carnage, and had been on full alert. Armed pickets were posted in dozens of villages, including two in the neighbourhood of Baghaura and Dalelchak. Mobile patrols swarmed around. But on the night of May 29, a mob described as between 450 and 700 not only assembled unnoticed, but killed entire families in the most organised fashion and made a bonfire of two villages before melting away into the night once again, unseen, untraced.

The police picket at neighbouring Anjan, 3 km away, saw the fire and five men were despatched to the site. They had to walk cross-country and along a canal, because roads are non-existent in backward Aurangabad. Another group on regular patrol also reached Dalelchak, picked up two who were still alive and rushed them to hospital. The district Superintendent of Police, Satish Jha, reached within two hours. But not a soul from the surrounding villages came to help put out the flames, despite Jha personally going round and pleading for assistance. And by the next day, all the surrounding villages too were deserted—and stayed deserted for the next week. Everyone had fled in fear.

Forty-two Rajputs were slaughtered that night. Bihar had never seen carnage on such a scale before. In terms of plain

Mass cremation of those killed in Baghaura (left); and weapons used by the killers: unparalleled brutality

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BINDESHWARI DUBEY

"It will not help if I resign"

CHIEF Minister Bindeshwari Dubey has attracted most of the flak for his administration's failure to stop the repeated caste carnages in Bihar. But Dubey himself feels he deserves credit for taking the fight into the Naxalite camp and mounting a determined police campaign. On the other hand, he admits frankly that Naxalites control large tracts in the troubled state—levying their own taxes and holding 'people's courts'—and that his government's writ simply does not run in hundreds of villages. Excerpts from a candid interview with T.N. NINAN and FARZAND AHMED:

Q. How do you react to the latest outrage in Bihar?

A. Massacres in Bihar are not a new thing. It seems alarming only because the number of cases is now bigger than before. But Naxalite extremists have been operating in this area from 1970. They have become practically entrenched in 49 blocks.

Q. Why has the problem become more serious now?

A. After I became chief minister (in 1985), I recognised the evil designs of the extremist forces. Earlier, the administration was passive, and those people who didn't believe in the extremist ideology were completely demoralised, irrespective of their caste. So when the Government started building up resistance against them, the extremists became furious. We assured safety to people of all castes, and people started refusing to pay any levy to the extremists.

Q. What have you actually done to tackle the problem?

A. We sent a task force with jeeps and policemen to create confidence among the people. The people started defying the extremists, who were infuriated. So they launched their assault with more vigour, and there has been a retaliation. The Maoist Communist Centre (MCC) has attacked Rajputs because the Rajputs went to the MCC hide-outs.

Q. Have you been able to catch the main culprits behind the carnages?

A. We are trying to find out the hide-outs of the culprits. A number of persons have been arrested. One extremist leader, Nepali Yadav, was killed in a recent police encounter. And Chandeswar Dusadh, who was responsible for the Darmia massacre last October and who had fled to Dhanbad, has been caught there. These, in fact, provoked the MCC.

Q. But the police have failed to prevent the carnages.

A. I can't say the police have failed in their duty, as they have got these two people recently. Forty-five of 111 extremist leaders have been arrested in the last six months. All this has been achieved by the special task force.

Q. Are you saying the police have been successful?

A. No, the extremists are so deeply entrenched that it will not be possible to eliminate them in a short time. They have collected huge amounts of funds, including money from labourers' wages. No one dares to disobey them.

Q. What you are saying is that the extremists are controlling these 49 blocks in a very organised fashion.

A. Yes. The tax on each family used to be between Rs 100 and Rs 1,000 every year, and also a part of the grain at harvest time. We have seized papers in police raids which indicate they had regular party cadres to operate in these villages and adopt violent methods. We seized registers with names, code names, villages to be attacked, villages 'liberated', levies fixed, arms snatched, etc.

Q. Why were the police unable to prevent the latest attack?

A. A guerilla fight has been going on. We didn't know where they will attack, and the police can't protect every village. The extremists hide in the hills and keep track of police movements through their cadres in the villages.

Q. So you are saying this kind of carnage can be repeated.

A. We are going to intensify our efforts. We will double the number of armed police. We have bought 175 jeeps, and will buy 150 more jeeps this year. We have asked for 200 wireless sets from the Central Government.

Q. How has militant extremism got mixed up with caste in Bihar?

A. Harijans, Yadavs, Koeris and Dusadhs are involved. Some of them own more land than the Rajputs, but they are Naxalites. So it is not a question of haves and have-nots, nor is it a question of economic disparities. These disparities are much greater in Purnea or Darbhanga, where people have up to 5,000 acres of land. In the Aurangabad area, where the murders have taken place, the ratio of the landowning population to the landless is not so bad. And the people who have been killed in Baghaura and Dalelchak villages now are quite poor. So it is not a question of economic disparity. But it is not exclusively the caste factor either. It is basically MCC vs non-MCC.

Q. You don't think the Naxalites have been successful because of the poverty and exploitation in the area?

A. It is not a question of fighting for the have-nots and for minimum wages.

K.M. KISHAN

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

because once a village starts paying a levy to these extremists, all land disputes and minimum wage quarrels stop. So their main purpose is to use poor people for their political gain.

Q. So you think poverty has nothing to do with the success of the extremists?

A. Of course, there is poverty in the area, and these districts are underdeveloped.

Q. So shouldn't you be trying to tackle the problem of poverty?

A. We have gone in for development of the area and given it additional money. We gave Rs 5 crore last year for these 49 blocks, and we have given another Rs 5 crore this year. We are building roads, schools, health centres, and conducting poverty alleviation programmes.

> "The extremists are so deeply entrenched that it will not be possible to eliminate them in a short time. They have collected huge amounts of funds, including money from labourers' wages. No one dares to disobey them."

Q. Nevertheless, you seem to be treating this essentially as a law and order problem. What about the political aspect, and the socio-economic aspect?

A. It is not a political problem. It is not a socio-economic problem. Nor is it a question of haves and have-nots.

Q. So you are not looking for a political solution?

A. No, it is a law and order solution. Only preaching non-violence will not help, because violence can only be fought by the police, not by preaching.

Q. But doesn't the war have to be fought in the minds of men?

A. That is true. They have indoctrinated people, forced villages to surrender. So first we have to create confidence in people through better policing, so that the extremists cannot harm them.

Accelerating development is also a method of motivating the poor, to wean them away from the MCC. Our party cadres have been advised to go there.

Q. But aren't Congress(I) leaders themselves involved with these groups?

A. This is their strategy, to spread this. You can't take what they say at face value. But, in the process, they have forced a cleavage between the castes.

Q. Why did you ban the MCC?

A. In the past, such bans have helped. Jehanabad is quiet after the MKSS was banned last year. Now the MCC too will become quiet.

Q. After the Darmia massacre last October, you promised a 'final crackdown'. Yet we now have an even worse massacre.

A. I did say that, and I did try. But no one can be sure. I did try.

Q. Your police force does seem quite incapable of handling the job.

A. We spend the second lowest amount in the country on our police. The strength of the force, for every 1,000 of the population, is the lowest in the country. We should have looked at all this earlier, but my predecessors never thought of it. We've started all this now.

Q. What action are you taking on the failure of the district administration to act when intelligence reports predicted the attack on Baghaura?

A. A cabinet group has been formed to go into this. I have transferred the district magistrate and the superintendent of police, because if there are lapses, then I must change the man. I may be a good officer, but if I fail, then I must go.

Q. By the same logic, shouldn't you resign as chief minister?

A. It will not help if I resign. The chief minister's is not a policing job. When there have been no communal incidents in Bihar, no one praises me. I have made Bihar the number two state in rural development in 1986-87. It was ranked number 17 earlier for the 20-point programme. Now it is ranked number 8.

Q. Is the Centre thinking of replacing you with someone else?

A. There is no indication of them looking for a new chief minister. And why should I resign? I believe in facing the problem and resolving it. I did it with the dacoits in Champaran, and the problem has been completely solved. I have solved the same problem partially in Rohtas. And I am sure I can counter the MCC. Only those who are not confident of themselves flee from problems.

brutality, the attack was unparalleled: the killing of women and children was taking place for only the third time. In the audacity and scale of the attack—getting hundreds of people together, ringing and attacking two neighbouring villages simultaneously—this latest outrage raised the state's escalating caste war to a new pitch. And finally, the self-proclaimed involvement of Naxalite extremists in caste massacre added a new and dangerous element to a crisis situation, even as it focused a horrified nation's attention on the dreaded MCC (see box).

AURANGABAD district is not anyone's idea of god's own acre. The majority don't have a shirt on their backs, the land allows barely one crop with a yield that is one-third that in Punjab or Haryana, there are next to no jobs. Even primary schools are scarce, hospitals non-existent, and there are no more than a couple of roads. What money is provided goes into corrupt pockets. A handful of big farmers (including the Bodh Gaya mahant and a minister in the state cabinet) own thousands of acres, and feudalism of the worst kind prevails. It is the kind of place where caste feuds can run through generations, where Naxalism will strike root in ravaged minds, and where the administration is so inept that the national flag above the district magistrate's residence will be unrecognisably faded.

But even though trouble had been brewing in this ravaged land, the state Government was stupefied by the scale of the outrage after six months of a special police operation aimed at taming the Naxalites in central Bihar. The district magistrate and superintendent of police—both of whom had been posted at Aurangabad after their predecessors were summarily transferred in the wake of last October's Darmia massacre—were now summarily transferred themselves. And as evidence surfaced that an attack on Baghaura had been predicted, a cabinet committee was set up to investigate the failure of the district administration to act on this intelligence information. Home Minister Buta Singh paid a visit, and eventually Chief Minister Bindeshwari Dubey was summoned to New Delhi for what seemed like a dressing down from the prime minister. A change of chief minister seemed very much on the cards.

But all this concerned only New Delhi and Patna. On the ground in Aurangabad, everyone feared for the next round of reprisals, and tension crackled through the district like a sparking electric wire.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MCC

Red Rebels

A revolution is an uprising, an act of violence whereby one class overthrows another. —Mao Zedong

Veteran revolutionaries only end up as monsters and ghosts. —Deng Xiaoping

Red salute to the brave martyrs of Chhechani and Ramdeeha! Tit for tat. Forget not, forget not!
—Gaya-Aurangabad South Bureau Committee, Maoist Communist Centre

LAST fortnight, Bihar's Aurangabad district—part of the state's "liberated zone"—reflected Deng's observation more truly than Mao's vision. At the site of the massacre of 41 hapless Rajputs, the Maoist Communist Centre (MCC) left behind printed pamphlets containing a heated, 3,000-word diatribe against police and upper caste thuggery. Its slogans recalled Chhechani and Ramdeeha, villages where the upper castes had wreaked havoc on lower castes earlier. A Naxalite group had joined Bihar's escalating caste war.

The MCC promptly attained national notoriety, though it has been held responsible for earlier carnages, notably the killing of 11 Rajputs at Darmia village last October. Known as a particularly virulent Naxalite group, it began in West Bengal as the Dakshin Desh group (Dakshin as India is south of the Himalayas; Uttar Desh is Mao's country, China). It followed an intensely theoretical 'party line' before Kanhai Chatterji renamed the group MCC around 1975, shifted the base of operations to Hazaribagh in south Bihar, and adopted a more 'action-oriented' course of violence.

But the group was not very successful, and moved to the Palamau/Aurangabad area. Five years ago, a secret Bihar Government report described the MCC as "a most militant underground group" which believed in commando-type operations and exhibitionist killings by its cadres.

Estimates of MCC strength vary widely, from 15 or 20 active cadres (with many informers and village-level supporters) to several hundred strong 'red defence corps' led by area commanders. Indeed, underground MCC literature shows pictures of its 'red defence corps' in the Aurangabad hills.

Chief Minister Bindeshwari Dubey says the group controls scores of villages in the utterly feudal and backward Aurangabad-Gaya belt. And local police chief Satish Jha said that though the MCC has only 20 hard-core activists, it has committees in every village which meet secretly, hold people's courts, collect levies and post sentries to report police movements. Intelligence officials in Patna call it a "situation of parallel government and insurgency".

But due to its excessively militant line, the MCC has failed to reach out to very large numbers. Instead, its ranks have been swelled by village toughs and criminals who are often hired by landlords or political candidates.

MCC literature talks of destroying the landlords' authority through "revolutionary farmers' committees" and the defence corps. A former MCC leader said the group has so far killed 250 people, and police say it has seized and distributed to the landless over 5,000 acres belonging to absentee landlords—far more than the Government has.

Meanwhile, the MCC has been riven with factional disputes following Kanhai Chatterji's death. The new leader, Sivenji, fell out with his deputy, Ramadhar Singh, over the policy of individual annhilations. Singh (a Rajput) recently left the MCC to join the Kanu Sanyal faction of the CPI(ML), and, perhaps significantly, the MCC has been taking up Yadav cudgels against the Rajputs. Indeed, last month's pamphlet expressed extreme indignation at the police reacting only when Rajputs are killed. Clearly, the group has decided to align itself with the lower castes in Bihar's escalating caste war.

Ramadhar Singh, meanwhile, remains a wanted man with a price of Rs 15,000 on his head. INDIA TODAY tracked him down to his hide-out in a remote Bihar town last fortnight, where he argued: "You can't have a mass movement through individual violence. This is a total misreading of Marxist-Leninist philosophy." He insisted that the MCC is now a depleted force and that the police are blowing up the issue to cover up their own failures. But intelligence officials say the new MCC leaders, Pramod Misra and Sanjay Dusadh, are "local legends".

Apart from the MCC, two major Naxalite groups operating in Bihar are the Liberation Group (Bhojpur-Rohtas belt), which functions through its front organisation, the Bihar Pradesh Kisan Sabha, and the Party Unity Group, which has strong links with the Mazdoor Kisan Sangram Samiti (MKSS), active in Jehanabad district and banned last year, after the police shot 21 of its activists in Arwal town in broad daylight. Dubey claims the MKSS has been subdued, but on a late night drive through Jehanabad last fortnight, a police patrol warned INDIA TODAY reporters to continue their journey in daylight: "The MKSS people are roaming around, we can't protect you." It quickly became clear why this whole area is considered a 'liberated zone'.

—T.N. NINAN and FARZAND AHMED

Map by B.K. SHARMA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Survivors view the burnt-out remains of their home: organised destruction

For Rajputs had been slaughtered, and Rajputs must inevitably take revenge. In Patna, intelligence officials warned of a potential caste conflagration the like of which the country has not seen.

FOR those looking for causes, the answers lay at several levels. At the most immediate level, a Rajput and a Yadav—both middle-level farmers—had been squabbling over control of some government land in Baghaura. The Yadav had links with the MCC, and the extremist organisation (already identified with the Yadavs in the state-wide feud with the Rajputs) was probably called in to kill or drive the Rajputs out. Said Ram Deen Singh: "The Yadavs want us to be finished, so that they can take our land cheaply." With the Koel canal coming up right alongside Baghaura, land in the village would soon have been precious beyond words.

In Dalelchak, similarly, two families had been involved in a petty dispute. One of them had links with the MCC, and on the night of the carnage he was seen pointing out the homes to be attacked. If that seemed to suggest that the MCC was playing the role of hired killers settling local disputes, there was another level of causality as well. And here the chain of events went back a couple of years.

The MCC had been involved in an acrimonious dispute with the Bodh Gaya mahant over the rights of sharecroppers on the mahant's land in the area. In stepped a local Janata Party stalwart and the man at whose home party President Chandra Shekhar stopped on his way back from Baghaura: Ram Naresh Singh. Singh bought 46 acres of the disputed land from the mahant and forcibly dispossessed the sharecroppers. Singh's worker, Krishna Kahar, was murdered, then his ally's son was waylaid by MCC activists from Parasdih village last September and killed. Ten days later, the landlords struck back at Parasdih and killed some MCC activists, who in turn struck back by killing 11 Rajputs in Darmia village three weeks later. Landlords from Darmia had been involved in the attack on Parasdih.

Darmia shook the state administration, which launched a special Operation Task Force to put an end to the Naxalite menace. Chief Minister Dubey promised there would be no more caste killings. Both the district magistrate and the superintendent at Aurangabad—a miserable, one-street town after which the district is named—were changed. Under the new, active police chief, Satish Jha, some successes were indeed notched up. The MCC was engaged in at least one pitched battle, and a tense truce prevailed in the caste war.

But this was not to last. The Central Reserve Police Force company was withdrawn for more urgent duties in Punjab, and several deputy superintendents of the special task force went back to Patna. In April, the MCC killed a Rajput of Anjan village, whose landlords promptly struck at the culprits in the nearby Chotki Chhechani village, killing seven Yadavs. Of them, six were known MCC activists.

Police supremo Jha was now fully on the alert. "I knew there would be a reprisal, it just had to come," he said last fortnight, shortly before he too was transferred out of the district. In fact, the local block development officer knew of the land dispute in Baghaura, and of the connections the MCC had in the village, and warned District Magistrate Jogendra Prasad that there could be trouble. Prasad told Jha, whose forces were fully stretched but who had police pickets all around Baghaura. That, however, was not good enough—as the carnage of May 29 eventually proved.

If this provided a second level of causality, there was a third level too. As Jha asked angrily last fortnight, "Why do

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Ram Deen Singh showing Chandra Shekhar and Ajit Singh a memorial slab listing those killed in his family people turn to Naxalites in this area?" The answer lies in the fact that:

► agricultural wages are still as low as Rs 3, when the official minimum wage is five times as high;

► the Bodh Gaya mahant continues to control 7,488 acres of land, and can hold off action against him under the land ceiling laws by going to court;

► a local Harijan is brutalised for giving his son the same name as a local zamindar;

► the seniormost district officials are clueless about progress on basic development programmes in the district, although special programmes with extra funds have been drawn up. Worse, the officials don't seem to care.

As Ashok Singh, collector of the neighbouring Gaya district admitted, "If the administration does not solve the people's problems, they are bound to go to the extremists to get justice, and this is what has been happening in this belt."

But the problem has also been getting more complex. C.P. Thakur, Congress(I) MP from Patna, points out that newly powerful castes like the Yadavs have been flexing their muscles, and the Rajputs and Bhumihars have not given up their superiority, leading to a new type of caste rivalry in a state where casteism is endemic. More important, Pradhan H. Prasad of the A.N. Sinha Institute of Social Sciences in Patna points out that Bihar's agricultural sector has been growing by no more than 0.5 per cent annually since 1969-70, whereas the population has been growing at over 2 per cent annually. Said Pradhan: "Per capita income in the agricultural sector has been falling for some 15 years. Naturally, the farmer will try to squeeze his labourer and not pay him proper wages. This class conflict is a direct result of non-development."

CASTE is added on because the upper castes traditionally own most of the land. Said Pradhan: "Half the land is owned by the upper caste 16 per cent of the population. So caste identifies with class." When these problems become manifest in extreme form—as they have in Aurangabad and in some neighbouring districts—a caste-cum-class war is inevitable.

But the most instructive lesson in Bihar last fortnight was in the reactions of leading Congress(I) politicians, including ministers in Dubey's Cabinet. One chuckled in good humoured resignation at the situation and said about Baghaura and Dalelchak: "What had to happen has happened." Former chief minister Jagannath Mishra criticised Bindeshwari Dubey for attending a conference organised along caste lines by the Yadavs, while a couple of backward caste leaders criticised Dubey for going to the scenes of only those outrages where Rajputs were killed. Last April, they said, when a Rajput was killed in Anjan village and seven Yadavs killed in neighbouring Chhechani on the same day, Dubey went first to Anjan. A minister from central Bihar also virtually admitted that the special funds that Dubey had been allocating for the Naxalite-infested districts were disappearing without a trace.

Through it all, Dubey talks bravely of his development programmes, of doubling the police force, and of launching an all-out offensive against the Naxalites and the caste war. But with caste feelings running high, with large tracts of land in 49 blocks spread over 14 districts under the influence of various Naxalite groups, including the MCC, no one can rule out a continuation of the chain of killings that led last month to the massacre at Baghaura and Dalelchak. Aurangabad remains the devil's acre, neglected, but with the potential to thrust itself into the national headlines yet again.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

LIC'S New Business Crosses Rs. 9099 Crore

A testimony of People's faith and collective effort

As on 31st March 1987 LIC completed a new business of Rs. 9099.53 crore (individual assurance) in India.

This is an increase of 29% over its last year's business. The number of new policies has also gone up by 18% compared to its previous year's performance.

The premium income has also increased substantially. The Corporation continues to make impressive thrust in providing the security of insurance to the economically weaker sections of the society through its innovative Group insurance schemes.

During the year the Corporation completed 3894 new Group schemes covering 16.62 lakhs of lives assuring a sum of more than Rs. 10845 crore.

Individual and Group insurance taken together, the new business performance of the Corporation during the year 1986-87 exceeds Rs. 19,944 crore—an all-time high performance.

Some of the notable Group schemes completed by the Corporation for the weaker sections include a scheme covering 4.35 lakh farmers of Madhya Pradesh, Shop and Establishment Workers of Rajasthan, Tribal farmers of Warangal, Headload workers of Trivandrum, Bidi workers of Pune, Municipal Sweepers, Railway Porters, etc.

"The various Zones have also recorded impressive growth. The growth ranges between 29% (Central Zone) to 34.5% (Northern Zone)."

"The Corporation is overwhelmed by the faith of the people and rededicates itself to serve the people better.

The field and in-house personnel of the Corporation at all levels pledge to serve the people with greater involvement so that the Corporation will continue to be a meaningful partner in the nation's integrated progress."

Life Insurance Corporation of India

Life Insurance — a symbol of eternal love

Efficient/LIC/406

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The Good-Bad Hero

POPULAR cinema, students of society like to believe, is more than mere entertainment. Indeed, cinema is perhaps the major shaper of an emerging third form of culture, pan-Indian in its scope, which draws upon the older folk and classical traditions and combines them with the more modern themes. As popular culture, cinema can then be an important source of information on changes taking place in Indian society in response to the political, economic and social forces which impinge upon it.

Take, for instance, the relatively new kind of hero, epitomised by Amitabh Bachchan. The Bachchan hero is the good-bad hero who lives at the margins of his society. His attachments are few but they are strong and silent. Prone to quick violence and to brooding periods of withdrawal, the good-bad hero is a natural law breaker, yet he will not deviate from a strict private code of his own. He is often a part of the underworld but shares neither its sadistic nor sensual excesses. If a policeman, then he often bypasses cumbersome bureaucratic procedures to take the law into his own hands. His badness is not shown as intrinsic or immutable but as a reaction to a deprivation in early childhood, often of a mother's loss, or absence.

The good-bad hero is both a product of and a response to the pressures and forces of development and modernisation taking place in Indian society. He thus reflects the psychological changes in a vast number of people who are located in a half-way house—in the transitional sector—which lies between a minuscule (yet powerful) modern, and the numerically preponderant traditional sectors of society. Indeed, it is from this transitional sector that Bachchan films draw the bulk of its viewers.

The individual features of the good-bad hero can be directly correlated with the major psychological problems experienced by the transitional sector during the course of modernisation. Take, for instance, the effects of high population density in urban slums. Here, the necessity of dealing with relative strangers compel the individual to be on constant guard and in a state of permanent psychic mobilisation. A heightened nervous arousal, in order to ward off potential encroachments, becomes a characteristic of the good-bad hero.

Then there is the bureaucratic complexity with its dehumanisation. The mounting effect of the daily blows to feelings of self-worth, received in frequently rude bureaucratic encounters, from police stations to government offices, gives rise to fantasies of either complete withdrawal from social relations or following the dictates of one's personal interests, even if this involves taking the law in one's own hands.

Furthermore, the erosion of traditional roles and skills of those entering the transitional sector destroys their self-respect and questions their social status. For the families of the affected, there may be a collapse of confidence in the predictability of the established world. The future itself begins to be discounted to the present. The good-bad hero incorporates the transitional man's collective dreams of success without hard work and of life lived primarily, and precariously, in the here-and-now.

The last feature of the portrait is the core sadness of the good-bad hero. This may be traced back to the effects of the population movements which take place with economic development. The separation of families and the loss of familiar village neighbourhoods can overcome many with feelings of bereavement. Sometimes, concretised in the theme of separation from the mother, these feelings are mirrored in the hero and are a cause of his depressive detachment, in which the viewers can recognise a part of themselves.

As a lover, the good-bad hero is neither overtly emotional, like the hero of the early Dilip Kumar movies nor boyishly phallic like the lovers portrayed by Dev Anand. A man of controlled passion, somewhat withdrawn, he subscribes more closely to the lines of the Urdu poet Faiz that "our world knows other torments than of love and other happinesses than a fond embrace".

Afraid of the responsibility and effort involved in active wooing, the withdrawn hero would rather be admired than loved. It is enough for him, to know that the woman is devoted to him while he can enjoy the position of deciding whether to take or leave her. The heroine is more a junior comrade to the hero than his romantic and erotic counterplayer. The heroine makes few demands on the hero and can blend into the background whenever the man has more important matters to attend to. Yet she is not completely unfeminine. She is not a mere mask for the homosexual temptation to which many men living in crowded city slums, and away from their womenfolk, are undoubtedly subject. She exemplifies the low place of heterosexual love in the transitional man's life, his fantasies absorbed more by visions of violence than of love, more with the redressal of injuries to self-esteem than with romantic longings. For those who grew to adulthood in a more settled era, the transitional man's values, are bound to appear as unappetising as his cinematic idols.

Cartoon by JAR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

For the diskette that meets international standards, jackets that exceed all standards!

Pinsel believes that if you're looking for a world-class diskette, look at both the sides.

The inside. As well as the outside.

Because a jacket is as important as the disk it protects.

Pinsel, in collaboration with Sentinel Technologies Inc., USA, now brings you a high performance diskette with a jacket that's as perfect as the disk.

The Cover Story

Every Pinsel Diskette comes to you sealed in a carefully manufactured static-free jacket.

Lined with a non-woven, self-cleaning material that maximises the cleaning action and minimises wear.

Pinsel jackets are manufactured in-house to tighter tolerances than industry standards providing the ultimate in media protection and overall diskette performance.

The Sentinel Standard

Pinsel Diskettes are manufactured on the same lines as Sentinel's.

On the same machines.
Using the same raw materials.
With the same burnishing process that provides an advanced degree of surface smoothness allowing for maximum head to media contact.

And meeting the same rigid standards.

These diskettes are available in two sizes – 5¼" and 8".

In single, double or high density with or without reinforced hubs.

Shades Ahead

Along with world-class quality, Pinsel Diskettes offer one significant difference.

Colour.

Available in Medium Blue, Light Blue, Green, Yellow and Red, besides Black.

Offering the unique advantage of colour coding your data for easy identification.

The Pinsel Promise

Each Pinsel Diskette is 100% error-free not only on all tracks but also between tracks, to ensure the highest level of operational integrity.

So confident is Pinsel of the quality that it's put it down in writing.

A guarantee assuring flawless performance for as long as you own it.

AVAILABLE IN 5 COLOURS, BESIDES BLACK.

PINSEL Diskettes.
Only the best in the world can match them.

Head Office: Pinsel Computer Products Ltd., Jehangir Building, 133, M.G. Road, Bombay 400 001. Tel: 270833/272442. Tlx: 011-3426.
Branches: Universal Building, 2/2A, Asaf Ali Road, New Delhi 110 002. Tel: 274466/278335. Tlx: 031-63131. • 46C, Chowringhee Road, Calcutta 700 071. Tel: 431518/447907. Tlx: 021-2435. • 59 Kasturi Ranga Road, Madras 600 018. Tel: 453449/453076. Tlx: 041-6295.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

everest/87/PD/238

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Your painter can make your walls look fresh with any shade

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

You can make sure the freshness lasts longer with just two words: Asian Paints

Working out colour schemes is fun. Muted pastels for the living room, bright colours for the children's room, a dark shade on one wall to make a large room look smaller, cool blues and greens for rooms which get a lot of sunlight, and so on.

Your efforts to decorate your home, however, should be well rewarded. Your pleasure in your home can fade if the shades fade.

Which is why Asian Paints offers you a range of shades that stay looking fresh for years.

And, each shade is computer matched. So the shade you'll get is precisely the shade you want.

A paint for every need, every budget

For your walls, there's Apcolite 100% acrylic emulsion or Tractor distemper.

For painting doors, windows and metal, there's Apcolite synthetic enamel. And TouchWood clear wood finish for furniture.

What's more, each paint from Asian Paints makes the most of your budget. Giving you exceptional quality at affordable prices.

Which is why more homes have been decorated with Asian Paints than any other paint.

Because, each of those homeowners knew that with Asian Paints they were getting more for their money.

asian paints

Money well spent

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

OBM/9797

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The pioneers of Freshair fans now present:

New

khaitan® Freshair Fan

It was in 1980 that Khaitan introduced Freshair fans. Since then millions of men and women are breathing fresh air in kitchens and bathrooms, from where heat, odours, dampness and stuffiness have been banished forever.

But, at Khaitan, a fan designed in 1980 is obsolete today. Our Research & Development Wing at Faridabad, in its quest for constant innovations, has made a breakthrough once again. The result—the new Khaitan Freshair fan, a technological marvel which is years ahead of the rest.

The motor: The motor is a super efficient capacitor type having a power factor of above 0.9. It consumes less power while providing greater air delivery.

The blade: The new profile, precision-moulded, single piece blade is optimally angled to ensure maximum air delivery. Being perfectly balanced, it not only ensures smooth, silent and vibration-free rotation but also prolongs motor life due to even load on bearings. The new blade, apart from having a stylish look, is also washable and rust proof.

Indeed the new Khaitan Freshair fan is a boon for kitchens and bathrooms. Sleek, sturdy and long lasting; with a higher air delivery, it offers much more than what has ever been offered before.

khaitan® Freshair Fan

The ultimate for kitchens & bathrooms

® Registered Trade Mark of Khaitan (India) Ltd., 66C, J. L. Nehru Road, Calcutta 700 071

CLARION C-KHFA-19

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BAIL-OUT BID

MARUTI UDYOG is seeking tax cuts from the Government for its vans, on the lines of the customs and excise duty concessions granted earlier to light commercial vehicle manufacturers. The objective: to cut prices on a product whose waiting line has disappeared. While Maruti's order books for cars are full for three years, it has problems marketing its jeeps and vans, both of which are now available off the shelf. It believes that the high price is one reason for this, and hopes to cut price tags by over Rs 8,000 if the Government grants it tax concessions. This would make the vans cheaper than Maruti cars. Other solutions being considered are folding seats for vans (thereby providing more space to be used for commercial purposes) and increasing the fuel efficiency by 10 per cent, which the company's Japanese partner Suzuki is working on. Finally, the canvas-covered jeeps will get a hard top.

COURTING CALLERS

MAHANAGAR Telephone Nigam (MTN), the public sector corporation set up a year ago to run the telephone systems in Delhi and Bombay, is on a drive to improve customer relations. MTN will hold open house sessions by the month-end in the two cities. Apart from hearing subscriber grievances, the sessions are meant to help telephone personnel of various ranks interact with subscribers. The telephone company has also introduced a system of graded financial incentives for telephone operators under which they are awarded points for long distance calls. This move follows a study by the National Productivity Council. While MTN expects to fork out some Rs 7 lakh a month by way of incentive money, it expects to earn Rs 1.10 crore in additional revenue, the assumption being that people will make more long distance calls if they find it easier to do so.

BITTER PILL

PHARMACEUTICAL companies are in for a bitter dose. Far from condoning the hefty sums many of them have to pay as a result of a recent Supreme Court ruling, the Government is likely to ask them to fork out the money in instalments. Drug concerns had since 1981 been charging more for medicines than the officially fixed prices after obtaining stay orders from the Delhi High Court, but the Supreme Court held that they would have to roll back prices and pay the difference to the Government, with retrospective effect. The pharmaceutical industry already faces official demands for some Rs 200 crore in an issue relating to the so-called Drug Prices Equalisation Account (an official committee is examining the matter again), and the latest government stand will put it in a tight corner.

SEEKING SUPPORT

THE Government has permitted the Calcutta-based Guest Keen Williams (GKW) to buy 25 per cent of the equity shares of Webel Precision Industries Ltd, a jigs, dyes and components company promoted by a West Bengal Government undertaking. The state Government unit had earlier approached GKW for financial and technical assistance, and the two sides had arrived at an understanding on these and other matters. A number of other state-owned units have similar links with private sector companies in West Bengal.

TEA TIME

TEA it seems is more than the cup that cheers—it's also the stuff that sets the cash registers ringing. An Economic Times ranking of the profitability and earnings of 251 companies in 1985-86 puts as many as three tea concerns in the top 10 list (see chart). Heading the pack is the Calcutta-based Goodricke, the most profitable company in the business firmament (judged by a composite of profitability ratios). The other two tea companies are Assam Company and Tata Tea. The Tata company had top billings in the list the previous year but has slipped to 10th position.

Chart by B.K. SHARMA

The rankings are based on the gross return on total capital employed, gross return on sales, and earnings per share. What is also striking is that Goodricke, along with Reliance Industries and Hind Dorr-Oliver, paid shareholders the fattest dividends—a hefty 50 per cent.

ACQUISITION MOVE

SOUTHERN Petrochemical Industries Corporation (SPIC)—which has been on a diversification spree—has now got into the corporate acquisition market, and sought government permission to take over Kothari Chemicals, a Kothari Industrial Corporation unit, at a price of Rs 29.23 crore. SPIC will finance the deal by taking over the loan liabilities of Kothari Chemicals, amounting to Rs 19.23 crore, dipping into its own kitty for the rest of the cash. Kothari Chemicals, manufactures among other things, chlorine and hydrochloric acid, and production has been hamstrung by power cuts. The Kotharis want to sell the unit because of the heavy interest and loan burden. SPIC on the other hand can use this to offset its profits for tax purposes.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

CLARION C-KHFA-19

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Before you decide which water cooler to buy consider this:

- Reliability ✓
- Price ✓
- After-sales service ✓
- Maintenance/Operational cost ✓
- Elegance ✓

VOLTAS

OFFERS IT ALL

The expertise, the experience and the technology that have made Voltas the acknowledged No. 1 in air conditioning systems, are available to you in the range of Tushar Water Coolers.

CLARION/BV/103/24

TUSHAR WATER COOLERS NO. 1 IN KEEPING COOL.

Also available on DGS & D rate contract

VOLTAS LIMITED
Appliances Business Group
19, J.N. Heredia Marg, Ballard Estate,
Bombay 400 038.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

TAKE-OVERS

The Corporate Raiders

SUDDENLY it's open season on companies. From coast to coast, corporate raiders are training their financial sights on some of the biggest corporations in the land, plunging into negotiations or striking multi-crore deals. Even smaller companies have come in for attention. Two in the south have, in fact, changed hands.

Clearly, take-over time is here—and the heat is on enterprises with significant overseas shareholdings. Among them: the Calcutta-based Chloride India, a GEC (India) subsidiary Genelec, Jokai India, Tribeni Tissues and the Bombay-based Mather & Platt. The list is even longer if Guest, Keen Williams (GKW) and McLeod Russell are counted.

Reflecting the action, the shares of at least one target of the take-overs plunged, with brokers on the Calcutta Stock Exchange kicking up a shindig, till the stock exchange authorities wrote to the Government asking it to intervene to help halt the slide.

The rash of take-overs this summer has partly been prompted by the fact that many companies, especially former British-controlled ones, are ripe for the taking. Most of them are in Calcutta, and P.L. Roy, managing director of Genelec, which itself is up for sale, argues: "It is only the old imperial British houses that are disinvesting in India, because they want quick returns on their money and don't see the long-term benefits of remaining in India".

They are also unloading some of their equity because their domestic counterparts are not flourishing. Example: GKW, battered by a downturn in the automobile and electrical sectors, made a Rs 42-lakh loss last year. And the engineering company needed to raise Rs 52 crore over the next four years for modernisation. What the Rs 213-crore outfit clearly needed was a Galahad. Enter K.K. Birla, whose companies bought almost 7 per cent of the 46.8 per cent British shareholding in GKW, put in a director on the board, with another to follow after the Reserve Bank of India clears the transaction. K.K. Birla has the first option to buy more shares should GKW in the UK disinvest further to some 25 per cent, as it is expected to. The Birlas, on their part, believe that GKW will fare better, once the electrical and automotive sectors revive. If that happens, they may have bagged a potential winner relatively cheap.

In some cases, the foreign principals themselves are in a financial bind, and wish to hawk their local subsidiaries. Chloride (UK) plc has a crippling debt burden which it is obliged to trim as part of a British bank's rescue package last year. So it put its 51 per cent controlling interest in Chloride India, the battery company, on the market —a point the highly profitable subsidiary's officials vigorously contested for almost a year.

Last fortnight, however, Chloride India Chairman Jahar Sen Gupta conceded that the company had been put on the auction block. The snag so far has been the price—a daunting Rs 80 crore to Rs 100 crore, way above the market value of the shares. So Chloride (UK) has come up with a solution: either a "split" sale whereby the shares would be hawked to more than one Indian buyer, or a sale of part of its shareholding.

The big question is: who are in the race for the company? The financial press has identified MacNeill & Magor's B.M. Khaitan as being in the running. The JK group's Hari Shankar Singhania and Dubai-based marauders Manohar and Kishore Chhabria also have reportedly made a joint bid for Chloride. But all four are quick to dismiss the reports. Said Singhania: "There's absolutely no substance to all this. We're not interested in Chloride India." Added Kishore Chhabria: "We're not negotiating for Chloride. We have not talked to Singhania either. Our plate is full."

Whether the Chhabrias are buying or not, they certainly have their hands full. After snaring Gordon Woodroffe and establishing a presence in Dunlop India along with R.P. Goenka, they are in the driver's seat at Shaw Wallace following a bitter battle for control. What is more, the take-over artistes are now negotiating for Mather & Platt, the Rs 36-crore Bombay-based pumps, motors and machinery company. While Kishore Chhabria says flatly that "all these news reports about our bidding for Mather & Platt are inspired," reliable sources claim the contrary and assert that the Chhabrias have been talking to the Australian Wormald International, which owns 60 per cent of the company's UK parent. Wormald wants £ 14 million (nearly Rs 30 crore) for the shares, and the Chhabrias are trying to beat down the price.

Mather & Platt's blandishments for a suitor are not merely its profits (almost Rs 6 crore last year). Its order books are full for the next year and it does not owe a rupee to any bank. So a raider will not have to spend too much time in the nitty-gritty of running the company, and he could use its healthy balance sheets to raise loans for funding other take-overs.

Tribeni Tissues (a sister company of ITC because it is part-owned by British American Tobacco (BAT) abroad) may also change hands in the near future.

RAGHU RAI

K.K. BIRLA

A stake in GKW

K. CHHABRIA

Shopping for Mather & Platt

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

K.K. MODI

Moving into Genelec

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BAT has offloaded its interest in Tribeni to Gillette, which recently made an entry into the country by promoting Indian Shaving Products.

Again, the attractions of what is essentially a sound tea company have lured practically every other tea company in the eastern region into bidding for troubled London-based businessman Rajendra Sethia's Jokai India. Last month, a financial daily claimed that Warren Tea had written to Punjab National Bank (PNB) seeking to buy 74 per cent of Jokai's overseas equity (the bank had acquired this as collateral for loans to Sethia's Esal Commodities). Warren Tea Managing Director Vijay Goenka denies having put in a bid, a contention backed by PNB Chairman J.S. Varshneya.

Still, PNB has received 10 to 15 offers for the company. It is also true that the bank will unload the shares—if it can establish its title to them. Here, buyers have clearly jumped the gun because Esal's liquidators have laid stake to the shares and Jokai Tea Holdings Ltd, the UK-based holding company of Jokai India, has refused to register the equity in PNB's name. The bank filed suit against the holding company a year ago, and Varshneya quite validly points out that any offers are meaningless till the title is established. "When we don't have anything to sell, how can there be an offer? The question doesn't arise."

The question does, however, arise in the Genelec case. Says Managing Director Roy: "GEC (India), which has a 33 per cent stake in Genelec, has the intention of divesting itself of its holding to raise funds for its own modernisation and expansion programme." He argues that selling Genelec is a cheaper way of raising money than obtaining interest-bearing loans. Genelec is raking in modest profits (Rs 46.2 lakh in 1985-86), so the gambit could make sense.

The company is being pursued by a number of businessmen who have so far remained in the shadows, the exception being K.K. Modi. Roy declines to reveal any names or even to confirm whether Modi has swung the deal. Modi was abroad last fortnight, but he said in an interview last month that Modis had bid for only half the GEC (India) holding in Genelec.

Certainly, Modi is not the only industrialist whose name has figured prominently in corporate raids. Another is B.M. Khaitan, whose spree of acquisitions (McNally Bharat, Standard Batteries and, more recently, India Foils and Metal Box) has put him in the spotlight. Many observers believe that his newest acquisition is tea company McLeod Russell, something he stoutly denies. Last month, the UK-based George Williamson, which holds a majority stake in MacNeill and Magor, bagged 80 per cent of McLeod Russell (UK). The latter firm in turn has a 40 per cent stake in three Indian tea firms, including McLeod Russell (India). Mcleod Chairman N.A. Atal admits that the three companies will act in consort with MacNeill & Magor. The question then is: does Khaitan now control all four concerns?

No answers may emerge, because Khaitan is a cagey industrialist. Inevitably too, his name has been linked with bids for companies as diverse as Chloride, ITC and Bata India. "But where on earth will I get the money for all these companies?" Khaitan asks, dismissing the rumours with a laugh.

Meanwhile, it is clear that the take-over mania is spreading to the minor leagues too. Last January, the JK group bought from Madura Coats 25 per cent of the shares of the Madurai-based Fenner India. And last month Raghu Modi, who runs the Rasoi group of companies, finally got his nominees on to the board of the Bangalore-based J.L. Morrison Sons and Jones (India). He bought a 22 per cent stake in the drugs and toiletry company.

The sudden spurt of take-overs and attempted raids on companies inevitably raises several questions. Since foreign companies are disinvesting, are they losing faith in the Indian business environment? The answer is probably no, and the disinvestment is mostly linked to problems elsewhere. Indeed, as Saroj Poddar (K.K. Birla's son-in-law and the man considered likely to take charge of GKW) argues: "The fact that Indian businessmen are ready to take on companies that are sick but have potential is another indication of industry's health and optimism." And Singhania adds: "By and large the climate remains good in the country. With a competitive society, mergers and take-overs should increase. They are a normal thing in the West." Quite obviously, they are well on the way to becoming a normal event in India too.

—INDRANIL BANERJIE with PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI

Photographs by KALYAN CHAKRABORTY

The head offices of the Calcutta based Tribeni Tissues and Chloride India are likely to change hands because of disinvestment decisions taken abroad in the hope of getting quick returns.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Oops ! Don't tell the boss...

Don't worry !
the boss will never know ...

You'll wonder where the spot went when you wash it away with a little soap and water– that's the magic of the revolutionary new modilon magic carpet.
Modilon is washable–livable– and with its range of beautiful colors– it's simply lovable!

modilon

Magic Carpet

modi carpets limited
India's No. 1 Carpet Manufacturing Company
In collaboration with Tomkinsons Carpets Limited, UK
Harsha Bhawan, E Block, Connaught Circus, New Delhi-110 001
Available at: modi carpet world

AVAILABLE IN 15 BEAUTIFUL SHADES

100% Washable, Stain Proof, Anti-Static, Flame-Retardant, Zero Bacteria, Indoor-Outdoor Synthetic Carpet.

*M/s Anokhee, 1, Embassy Centre, Nariman Point, Bombay. *M/s Galeechan, 101, Heera Panna Shopping Centre, Bhulabhai Desai Road, Haji Ali, Bombay. *M/s G.P. Gupta & Co., 41 Lenin Sarani, Calcutta-13. *M/s Krishna Carpet Co., 30 Bays Building, Sector 17, Chandigarh. *M/s Bonnam Handloom Camp, Chakrota Road, Dehradun. *M/s Vashisht Furnishers, Near Navrang Cinema, G.T. Road, Ghaziabad. *M/s Mahajan Furnishings, 1-2-524/3 Domalguda, Hyderabad. *M/s Modi Carpet Emporium, Halwasia House, Hazratganj, Lucknow. *M/s Ashoka Carpets, Ashoka Estate, Barakhamba Road, New Delhi—110 001. *M/s Chopra Carpets, II-B/7, Central Market Road, Lajpat Nagar, and N.D.S.E. Part-II, New Delhi. *M/s D.D. Amarnath, 1969 Chandni Chowk, New Delhi—6. *M/s D.S. Brothers, E-12, South Extn., Part-II, New Delhi. *M/s Skipper, 8, Scindia House, New Delhi—110 001. *M/s ...

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

PACKAGING

A Ritzy Revolution

IN the capital, an entrepreneur plans on hawking pure Ganga water in India and overseas, after having packaged lube oil for cars and two-wheelers in stand-up pouches for the Government's oil companies. Down south, a Muruga temple has kicked off machine-packed prasad packets, and at least one other temple in Tamil Nadu is considering a me-too act. Across the country, a host of juices and juice-based drinks, snack foods, ready-to-eat mixes, meat products and milk have hit the market in quick succession, with more waiting in the wings.

Making all this possible is one common factor: a spectrum of new packaging materials. Quietly, manufacturers of products as disparate as pan masalas (Pan Parag), piston rings (Goetze), pharmaceuticals (most of the drug companies), coffee (Food Specialities, Brooke Bond) and edible oils (the cooperative oilseed federations) have already switched or plan to switch to new ways of wrapping their wares. Even the public distribution system is climbing on the bandwagon. In Delhi, a small beginning has been made to package sugar in 800 gm polyfilm packets and distribute it through ration shops. Rice and flour could be next.

The revolution in the market-place began two or three years ago but went largely unnoticed. Explains M.R. Subramanian, director of the Indian Institute of Packaging (IIP): "The new trends in packaging are mainly to be seen in the food products industry. That's why it's getting noticed. They have been there in the pharmaceuticals industry already." Drug companies in fact leaped into "shrink and blister" packaging quite some time back. The processed foods industry sat up only after Food Specialities launched Maggi noodles in 1983, packed in six-colour printed film-based packets. Both the company and the IIP were swamped with letters from firms seeking information on the new packaging material.

TETRA BRICKS

> The country is in the grip of a packaging revolution. Products as disparate as pan masalas, piston rings and edible oils now have attractive new exteriors.

But from hovering at horizon's end, the packaging revolution has finally arrived today. "It's kicking off," says Kamal Meattle, who runs a clutch of packaging companies in the capital. Adds B.M. Vijay, president of Cosmo Films, the biaxialy oriented polypropylene (BOPP) film company: "The whole concept of packaging is changing. Everything used to be packed in tins and then in poly jars. We're now coming to laminates and pouches."

He is right. Hindustan Lever has launched cheaper varieties of detergents like Wheel in polybags, while trying out the upmarket Surf in polybags in the eastern region. "In five years time we will probably shift to bags entirely," says J. Basu, the soap and detergent giant's senior purchase manager. Lever also recently switched from wax-coated paper to polyester film to wrap its Rin.

K.R. Kamat, sales manager of Garware Plastics and Polyester Ltd, underlines the breath-taking sweep of the packaging revolution when he points out: "In Uttar Pradesh, 42 different varieties of pan masala are now packed in polyester film packets. In Nagpur, the local sevwalla markets his sev in polypacks and is doing roaring business."

Even aerosol cans have caught on. M.I. Patel, managing director of Ex-

Photographs by BHAWAN SINGH

PILLOW POUCHES

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

trusion Processes, a major packaging company, reports that his company used to make a couple of thousand cans a year. "Now the total market has suddenly jumped to nearly five million cans," says Patel.

Still, the buzzword today is "flexible packaging," based on a range of films such as low and high density polyethylene, polyester and BOPP, or combinations of these. Indeed, some suspect that the newest segment of the Rs 4,000-crore packaging industry is growing at a blistering pace. Representative of the heady growth rates may be the Flex group of packaging companies, whose sales, says Ashok Chaturvedi, the group's 30-year-old chairman and managing director, have climbed exponentially from Rs 1 crore in 1983-84 to Rs 15 crore last year.

Expectedly, the mood among the new packaging men is upbeat. Says Meattle: "I'm very bullish." He argues that the switch to flexible packaging is inevitable because the raw materials for conventional packaging will get depleted. "We're chopping trees. Once there's no wood, what will you do? This has to happen." So he's setting up packaging units in the four metros (and plans to sell Ganga water and distilled mineral water in pouches).

Film manufacturers can hardly keep pace with the burgeoning demand. "We have a waiting-list because we cannot meet the existing customer demand," says Cosmo's Vijay. He reckons that the present demand of 8,000 tonnes will more than triple by 1990. So Cosmo is furiously expanding annual production capacities from 800 tonnes to 4,000 tonnes, as are rivals in the business. What is more, new companies are making a foray into film manufacture or related areas. Examples: Finnpack (India), a Rs 1.48 crore joint venture with Finland's Tuomo Halonen Oy, went into production a few weeks ago, on the outskirts of Delhi. Paharpur Cooling Towers is putting up a more ambitious Rs 50 crore laminating, printing and colour separation plant, also on the capital's fringes.

Unquestionably, the boom is fuelled by the overwhelming advantages product manufacturers see in pouches and tetrabricks. "Rigid containers like tins and jars are on the way out because the laminated pack is cheaper, and can maintain product quality," notes a Food Specialities executive. The new juice and drink brands, such as Amul Shakes and Volfruit, would probably not have been viable at all were it not for the cheap tetrabrick packs (tinned juices are still prohibitively expensive).

Companies have also been quick to recognise that selling products in smaller, more affordable, quantities can at times dramatically push up sales graphs. The classic example is Pan Parag, whose sales soared after Kanpur-based manufacturer M.M. Kothari switched from tins to metalised sachets made of film. And the state-owned oil companies have realised that more appropriate packaging can also cut wastage. The point was rammed home by the results of a private survey which discovered that putting lube oil into pouches instead of plastic jars meant a saving of Rs 45 crore for the economy, simply because this would help two-wheeler owners put the right amount of oil into their vehicles.

The new packaging offers manufacturers a wide range of other benefits: it cannot be copied very easily by small spurious goods manufacturers (who are mostly small-timers and cannot afford the investments in equipment, especially if complex printing techniques are involved), is more attractive and so catches the consumer's eye, at times offers a longer shelf life and, best of all, requires vastly less storage space than conventional packages, in turn cutting transport costs. "Tin and glass are ideal materials for packaging as both are absolute barriers against oxygen and moisture. But the high cost and the inconvenience in storing them are making manufacturers

STANDUP POUCHES

The new packaging has helped cut costs, boost sales and increase shelf life of products. Tins and jars are on the way out and tetrabricks and pouches are coming in.

METALISED POUCHES

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Papa said Colour
I said Eurocolor
Papa said Hi-tech
I said Hi-gain
Papa said TV
I said Telerama

Wasn't I right, Papa?

You bet you are.
Because Telerama is a stylish, world-class TV with advanced features. And outstanding performance !
Hi-gain. Fully tropicalized. With Video games and cable TV facilities. Use an adaptor... and wow ! you get teletext and a home computer monitor.
Telerama Colour TV—it's the smart choice !

TELERAMA

HI-GAIN COLOUR TV

Clearly the best

Ask the wise guy!

TELERAMA AUTHORISED SERVICE CENTRE FOR ITT COLOUR TVs

TT-6400

Currently available in West Bengal, Assam/N.E. States, Bihar, East M.P., Varanasi, Tamil Nadu, U.C.O. in Faridabad, Dharwar, Gurgaon, Chandigarh, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

go in for plastic," notes K.K. Talwar, chief engineer of Paper Products, a packaging company.

Still, the benefits alone could not have ushered in the new packaging trends without a marriage of other factors. Among them: liberal official attitudes which permit equipment to be imported on open general licence (at least 40 machines have been imported at a cost of Rs 1 crore or more), and the availability of newer and relatively inexpensive downmarket packaging and printing machines. Locally made "form-fill-and-seal" machines, of the size of a small fridge, can cost under Rs 2 lakh (Rs 12 lakh to Rs 18 lakh if imported) as against some Rs 50 lakh for an imported automatic tin packaging line. "Some printing machines too are cheaper now," says an industry executive.

If all this has obviously helped hundreds of small "converters" or businessmen who turn out flexible packages to set up shop all over the country, the plastic wave may also take a toll of the more conventional packaging materials such as tins. Some argue that this will not happen because tins cannot be dislodged from the packaging pantheon (they offer the best protection against spoilage for products like baby foods). Nevertheless, there are straws in the wind suggesting that fewer tins may be used to package wares. Finnpack (India) promoter Brijesh Goel, whose family owns ghee and milk companies along with a tin outfit, says that their captive consumption of tins has dipped by two-thirds simply because they have switched to newer packaging materials.

For all the cheer among packaging men, most admit that the industry still has miles to go before catching up with developments world-wide. And there are problems too. Packagers contend that the shortage of basic raw materials will be a damper on further growth. Complains Chaturvedi: "The biggest constraint is that not enough raw materials are available." For instance, polyethylene, a raw material for films, is scarce at home and abroad and an official of the state-owned Indian Petrochemicals Corporation Ltd, which makes half the country's requirements, admits that the shortage will continue for the next two or three years. But the shortage itself is an indication of the burgeoning demand, and the outlook for both the packaging industry and the consumer is wrapped in a rosy glow.

—PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI and M. RAHMAN

SOYABEAN

Bubble Bursts

The wonder-crop, soyabean, has begun to wilt. And the country's infant soyabean industry, which was growing with the speed of a child prodigy, is in for a period of retardation. A crippling drought has reduced the soya crop this year to half the expected level, and excess capacity has pushed the processing industry into an unexpected crisis.

In Madhya Pradesh, which accounts for 80 per cent of the national production as well as processing capacity, 90 per cent of the 40-odd units now lie closed.

Said a Soyabean Processors' Association (SOPA) spokesman: "There is simply no soyabean available in the market and the units are lying idle." The average level of capacity utilisation in the industry is barely 33 per cent.

While the actual production of soyabean has fallen only marginally (from 7.83 lakh tonnes in 1985-86 to 7 lakh tonnes in 1986-87), the crisis has been precipitated by the breakneck expansion in the number of processing units: up by some 75 per cent last year. In fact, the processing capacity that has been created already totals 21 lakh tonnes, against the seventh plan target for 1990 of 14.4 lakh tonnes.

This may not have created an unmanageable problem if the year's production target of 15 lakh tonnes had been reached. As industrialist O.P. Goyal pointed out: "The industry had pinned its hopes on the projected target of 15 lakh tonnes, but the drought has halved the production and ruined everything." The drought also doubled prices (from Rs 275 per quintal in 1985-86 to Rs 550 per quintal this year) and lowered the oil content of seeds (by 0.70 per cent).

In a sense, however, trouble had been building up even before the drought. Soya solvent extraction plants shot up from four in 1980 to 40 last year, and the total processing capacity increased 35-fold in this period. In contrast, soya production increased only nine-fold, from 87,000 tonnes to 7.83 lakh tonnes. In fact, despite an increase in area under cultivation—from 9.34 lakh hectares in 1984-85 to 11.20 lakh hectares now—overall production had failed to show a matching increase.

"Everyone had joined the gold rush," said Congress(I) MLA Swaroopchand Jain, who runs one of the oldest soya units in the state. "Drawn by the high profitability, government concessions and easy terms offered by financial institutions, everyone had jumped in." In fact, the former SOPA chairman M.P. Mansinghka had warned of excess capacity four years ago, and in 1983 SOPA had pleaded that no additional capacity be sanctioned unless abundant soya supply was ensured. But the state Industrial Development Corporation stopped encouraging new units only two years ago and Central financial institutions woke up only last year.

In the wake of the supply crisis, some of the processing units have been clamouring for imports of soyabean. But Shyam Prasad Bajpai, managing director of the Oilfed cooperative, said this would be disastrous for the farmers and for the continued growth of soyabean cultivation. Clearly, an industry that was once full of beans is now in for troubled times.

—N.K.SINGH

Picture courtsey/OILFED

Soya extraction plant: supply crisis

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

OIL INDIA

Executive Drain

SIX years ago, when Chairman and Managing Director Major-General S.C.N. Jatar joined Oil India Ltd, nearly a third of the state-owned oil outfit's executives resigned to take up jobs in the Gulf. Today the wheel has turned full circle at Oil India. Jatar himself may be poised to leave amidst a blaze of publicity—and another exodus could be in the offing.

Certainly, the sparks are flying at the Assam-based Central Government undertaking. Last month, the media reported that Oil India executives were flooding the company's management with transfer applications because they feared for their safety at the company's Duliajan headquarters. The reports were swiftly contradicted by an Assam government spokesman who challenged the oil company to furnish the names of the employees to the President.

A rumpus has also erupted over Jatar's future, with reports suggesting that Jatar was being shifted from Oil India to Hydrocarbon India Ltd (HIL), a small Oil and Natural Gas Commission (ONGC) subsidiary—triggering off suspicions that the Government was buckling under pressure from the All Assam Students Union (AASU). Editorialised The Times of India: "The Centre has capitulated to AASU's pressure."

AASU has been spearheading an agitation against Jatar at Duliajan on grounds that he is anti-Assamese (favouring non-Assamese for jobs at Oil India), and that he is corrupt—a charge that the Central Government has now completely cleared him of after an investigation. He has also been cleared of the AASU charge that in his effort to increase Oil India's production, he ruined the company's oil wells. The agitation has made it impossible for Jatar to visit Duliajan since last October because AASU has threatened a bandh if he does. It has also demoralised employee ranks, and cost the company a production loss of 70,000 tonnes of oil worth Rs 12 crore (INDIA TODAY, April 15).

There is little doubt that Oil India faces an executive drain. As a company list of names shows, 50 executives have resigned over the last 16 months while another 208 have sought transfers. Quite simply, that means 25 per cent of the company's executives have either quit or want to get out. Last October, when the public sector Gas Authority of India Ltd (GAIL) wrote to Oil India seeking executives on deputation, only 23 volunteered. Next time round in March, an astonishing 170 shot in applications. GAIL ultimately picked only 13 of them.

It is on Jatar's alleged move to HIL that things get more foggy. Has the Oil India chairman been transferred from his post? He says that he has not been informed in writing of a new posting: "Officially, I'm still chairman and managing director of Oil India. But if the Government wants to post me elsewhere, I will go. I'm a soldier."

PRASHANT PANJIAR

Jatar: uncertain future

The Government too agrees that Jatar has not been moved out—but lends a fresh twist to the controversy. A senior bureaucrat maintained last fortnight that Jatar had appeared of his own will for an interview before the Public Enterprises Selection Board for the HIL job along with several other hopefuls: "It's not as if he's compulsorily being shifted out. He's generally accepted that he's unable to function at Oil India."

Backing his contention, the official brandishes a letter Jatar wrote to the Government in March saying that the chief secretary of Assam had written assuring him protection, but he was sceptical of the Government's ability to maintain order, and so did not want to visit Assam. "You can't have an Oil India chief executive who operates from New Delhi," argues the bureaucrat.

Jatar agrees that he wrote the letter and that he appeared for the interview. He, however, says that the chief secretary of Assam did not guarantee that the state Government could prevent AASU from agitating: "An agitation means a bandh which will stop the company's operation and involve a loss of production. So it's pointless for me to go." On the interview question, Jatar adds: "My appearing for an interview evolved out of consultation with the Government."

While the chairman declines to comment further on matters, his supporters claim that the Government had in fact sounded him out some months ago on the HIL job and that shifting him raises serious issues for the public sector. A senior public sector executive contended this would set a precedent: "Is the Centre going to be dictated to by AASU or a similar organisation? Suppose the Maharashtra Government says tomorrow that the ONGC chairman should be a Maharashtrian because ONGC is based in that state. It can happen."

The government official, however, counters that the argument doesn't hold water: the problem is specific to Oil India. "The Assam Government has told us that it is not against non-Assamese. What they're saying is that there's a lot of dissatisfaction in the organisation with Jatar, that it's a specific case."

That may or may not be so, but the Government is clearly in a fix. If Jatar is selected for the HIL job, it is open to the charge that it has succumbed to AASU pressure. If he's not, the Centre is faced with a chief executive who runs a key oil company far from the hot seat—and so may eventually have to sack Jatar. Said the bureaucrat resignedly: "It's a no-win situation."

—PALAKUNNATHU G. MATHAI

Oil India's executives are flooding the company's management with transfer applications as they fear for their safety in the Duliajan headquarters.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Maruti owners can now travel

DUNLOP

Radial Class

From Dunlop, the first and only radial for the Maruti.

DUNLOP

Radial Car Tyre

Dunlop is Dunlop. Always ahead.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

WILD WHITES IN

THE Wild Passion

Garden VARELI

A L I N O Y O R Y U

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

In Hong Kong, you can!

In Hong Kong you can find more fun, more variety and more excitement packed into one cosmopolitan city than anywhere else on earth.

You can shop for the newest fashions or the latest electronic goods. You can enjoy regional Chinese food, authentically prepared and always fresh. You can pick a winner at the night races, or dance till dawn in pulsating discos.

You can fly to Hong Kong on Cathay Pacific, Hong Kong's airline, with 4 flights a week from Bombay. You can travel in Rolls Royce comfort, pampered by the most gracious service in the air. So you'll enjoy a relaxing journey and arrive in the best possible shape.

For more information contact your travel agent or Cathay Pacific Airways at Taj Mahal Hotel, Bombay. (2029112|3|9561|5691.)

HONGKONG

Arrive in better shape

CATHAY PACIFIC
The Swire Group

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE MARKETS

Losing Ground

ALL the king's horses and all the king's men have been trying to put a shattered stock-market together again. But with no luck. Despite crisis meetings in Delhi, arm twisting of the dominant bears to square up their outstanding positions (thus sending a clear signal to fresh sellers) and moderate purchases by the financial institutions, the markets remained weak and lacking in confidence last fortnight, and most shares lost further ground.

The Economic Times share price index dropped to a new low for 1987 at 226.1 in late May. There was a marginal upswing after that, but this couldn't be sustained and the index dropped to 224.5, on June 8 before crashing further to 218.7 the following day. The market is in the grip of the bears to such an extent that any full-scale recovery now seems remote.

Inevitably, most shares lost ground heavily. TISCO was particularly weak because the Government has yet to announce higher steel prices, while the troubles plaguing the commercial vehicles market have left their mark on the TELCO share price. Other big losers have been Raymonds, Ranbaxy, Ponds, Orkay, J.K. Synthetics and Britannia Industries—companies spanning a wide range of industries.

There was little doubt that the market continued to be depressed because of the steady flow of downbeat corporate news. And the only real exception to the downtrend—Bajaj Auto—caught investors' fancy because of hopes of a generous bonus issue. Some other counters also notched up gains following the announcement of good annual or half-yearly results.

The stock-market can recover from its depressed state only if the news from New Delhi is good, and if companies begin to report improved performances in greater numbers. At the moment, there is little hope of either materialising in the near future. Indeed, the prospect of complete decontrol for the cement industry can only drive cement shares further down, because there is bound to be a shake-out in the industry. And the Government doesn't seem to be in a mood to announce any further concessions for the troubled industries.

Most observers now feel the market has entered a bear phase which will see share prices drifting lower for months before a fresh recovery finally begins. With the Government running into a political headwind, with trouble around the country's borders, and with some sectors of industry experiencing the shake-out that was inevitable following liberalised licensing policies, the share market can hardly do anything other than reflect the new, problem phase. The wise ones in the trading ring will, therefore, look for money to be made by riding the new trend for the time being.

ACTIVE STOCKS

	1987 HIGH	1987 LOW	CLOSE 5.6.87	Change in Fortnight
Ashok Leyland	35.50	28.00	34.50	0.50 –
Associated Cement	241.50	156.00	160.00	13.00 –
Atlas Copco	150.00	105.00	147.00	17.00 +
Associated Bearings	880.00	500.00	870.00	145.00 +
Avery India	169.00	108.00	120.00	12.00 –
Bajaj Auto	4925.00	3950.00	4650.00	275.00 +
Baroda Rayon	260.00	205.00	215.00	13.75 –
Bata India	160.00	110.00	116.00	13.00 –
Bayer	785.00	600.00	750.00	nil
Bharat Forge	88.00	63.00	87.00	8.00 +
Blow Plast	126.00	92.50	108.00	7.00 +
Bombay Dyeing	83.50	40.50	82.00	7.75 +
Britannia Ind.	190.00	106.00	112.00	55.00 –
Brooke Bond	101.00	77.00	88.50	3.75 –
Ceat Tyres	70.00	48.00	65.00	nil
Century Enka	1160.00	850.00	900.00	60.00 –
Chloride India	148.00	67.00	70.00	1.00 –
Citurgia	70.00	53.00	64.00	6.00 –
Colgate	391.25	327.50	370.00	2.00 –
DCM	47.00	23.00	32.50	2.50 –
Dunlop	77.75	71.25	74.75	2.75 +
E.I. Hotels	56.00	41.00	45.50	0.50 –
Escorts	84.00	41.50	44.50	1.50 +
Finolex Cables	226.25	114.00	211.75	31.75 +
Food Specialities	188.50	126.50	140.00	12.00 +
Garware Nylon	36.00	20.50	21.50	0.50 +
G.E. Shipping	28.50	16.00	27.75	5.25 +
Gujarat St. Fertilisers	183.50	113.00	125.00	3.00 –
Grasim Ind.	95.00	80.00	91.00	3.00 +
Hind. Aluminium	126.00	71.00	100.00	4.50 –
Hind. Cocoa	262.50	191.25	195.00	10.00 –
Hindustan Lever	212.00	165.00	175.00	5.00 –
Hindustan Motors	35.35	22.20	24.50	1.60 +
Hind. Dorr	407.50	295.00	312.50	52.50 –
IEL	61.50	45.00	50.25	3.75 –
Indian Organic	78.00	51.00	59.00	4.00 –
Indian Rayon	76.50	51.00	54.50	3.75 –
Indrol	510.00	187.50	190.00	38.00 –
Ingersoll-Rand	352.50	272.50	312.50	28.75 –
ITC	78.00	40.00	46.50	2.50 –
J.K. Synthetics	93.50	43.00	45.00	8.25 –
Kinetic Engineering	312.50	210.00	220.00	15.00 –
Kirloskar Cummins	97.50	67.00	90.00	5.00 –
KSB Pumps	375.00	220.00	325.00	40.00 –
Larsen & Toubro	100.00	67.00	71.00	nil
Lipton	79.50	60.00	69.00	2.50 –
LML Ltd.	32.00	13.00	16.00	nil
Madura Coats	73.00	66.00	70.00	1.50 –
Mahindra & Mahindra	58.00	38.00	58.00	3.00 +
Motor Industries	400.00	317.50	387.50	52.50 +
Mukand Iron	81.00	63.50	78.00	nil
National Organic	577.50	417.50	425.00	25.00 –
Nirlon	26.00	11.00	14.00	1.00 –
Orkay Silk Mills	115.00	30.00	31.50	4.50 –
Peico Electronics	57.25	36.00	41.00	0.50 –
Otis Elevator	215.00	155.00	200.00	10.00 –
Ponds	375.00	252.50	252.50	62.50 –
Premier Auto	30.00	20.00	20.75	2.25 –
Ranbaxy	135.00	71.00	71.00	10.00 –
Raymond	79.00	62.50	63.00	9.00 –
Reckitt & Colman	200.00	144.00	155.50	7.50 –
Reliance Industries	277.00	118.00	132.50	3.50 –
Richardson Hind.	327.50	210.00	310.00	15.00 –
Shriram Fibres	36.00	19.50	22.00	2.00 –
Sandoz	140.00	67.50	72.50	5.25 –
Siemens India	144.50	68.00	77.00	3.00 –
SPIC	53.50	36.50	41.75	1.25 –
Tata Steel	1207.50	867.50	900.00	102.50 –
Telco	665.00	350.00	390.00	35.00 –
Vulcan Laval	63.00	45.00	60.00	nil

WORLD VALUE OF RUPEE

COUNTRY	CURRENCY	UNIT	Selling Rates Rs	TT Buying Rates Rs
Australia	Dollar	1	9.2211	9.1235
Austria	Schilling	100	101.8547	100.7689
Bahrain	Dinar	1	34.1403	34.0898
Bangladesh	Taka	100	42.4738	42.4080
Canada	Dollar	1	9.6162	9.5176
Denmark	Kroner	1	1.9019	1.8818
Egypt	Pound	1	9.3600	9.2900
France	Franc	1	2.1739	2.1204
Hong Kong	Dollar	1	1.6531	1.6355
Indonesia	Rupiah	100	0.9700	0.0700
Iran	Rial	100	17.9200	17.8986
Italy	Lira	100	0.9700	0.9600
Japan	Yen	100	9.1000	8.9000
Kenya	Shilling	1	0.7998	0.7733
Kuwait	Dinar	1	45.0000	44.9000
Malaysia	Dollar	1	5.1796	5.1253
Mauritius	Rupee	1	1.000	0.9900
Nepal	Rupee	1	0.6008	0.5990
Netherlands	Guilder	1	6.3508	6.2850
Pakistan	Rupee	1	0.7570	0.7339
Singapore	Dollar	1	6.1146	6.0485
Spain	Peseta	1	0.1010	0.9090
Sri Lanka	Rupee	1	0.4435	0.4220
Sweden	Kroner	1	2.0479	2.0266
Switzerland	Franc	1	8.6004	8.5098
Tanzania	Shilling	1	0.2120	0.2000
Thailand	Baht	100	50.7200	50.6000
UK	Pound	1	21.0725	20.9425
USA	Dollar	1	12.9050	12.7775
UAE	Dirham	1	3.5000	3.4832
USSR	Rouble	1	19.9080	19.8580
W. Germany	Deutschmark	1	7.2727	7.0921

These rates were supplied by The Bank of Tokyo Limited, New Delhi, and quoted between the banks on 8.6.87.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Ashok Leyland Limited

Speech by the Chairman Mr Mantosh Sondhi at the 38th Annual General Meeting on 19th May 1987.

A Developmental Strat

Review of Operations

1986 has been yet another difficult year; road transport industry continued to be depressed due to a combination of adverse factors. The total industry sale of medium and heavy commercial vehicles has registered a steep fall of 11% in 1986 over the previous year.

Against this adverse background, it is a matter of great satisfaction that your Company was able to achieve a new water-mark in sales and turnover, sold 16065 vehicles in 1986 compared to 15113 vehicles in 1985 and achieved a higher domestic market share. Sale of engines for industrial and marine applications was marginally lower at 2064 units compared to 2202 units in 1985. Export performance, however, continued to be on a low key due to persistent liquidity problems of Third World Countries and intense competition from advanced countries.

Gross turnover of your Company registered an increase of 17.5% compared to the previous year. However, profitability of operations continued to be under pressure; with strict control on manufacturing expenses, your Company was able to achieve higher operating profit of Rs.23.43 crores compared to Rs.13.93 crores in 1985. With the increase in financial expenses, profit before tax was Rs.6.41 crores.

Having regard to the improved performance in the year and the intrinsic strength of your Company, the Directors have recommended an increased dividend of 16% on the enhanced share capital of Rs.2139 lakhs, compared to 10% on share capital of Rs.1813 lakhs in 1985.

The road transport industry continues to be faced with an economic impasse, plagued with high operating costs, poor returns and limited growth.

The industry has been pleading with the Government to improve the availability, increase the quantum and extend the repayment period of loans to transport operators. Similarly it has been the contention of the industry that overaged vehicles which abound in the road transport system should be weeded out to improve the productivity and safety of transport services and to reduce fuel wastage pollution. It is gratifying to note that the interim report of the Planning Group on Transport has also made a similar recommendation regarding the overaged vehicles. The Planning Group has also asked for the complete abolition of octroi which it calls as "the most obnoxious form of taxation".

Macro-economic Policy Framework

While the Government's thrust in liberalising licensing regulations and inducing investment flows have been well thought out, it is unfortunate that there has been no matching appreciation of the need for follow-up measures to stimulate demand growth. The adverse impact of this policy shortcoming has been that despite a reasonable growth in quantum of road traffic — both freight and passenger — there has been a net slump in the offtake of commercial vehicles by 5% between 1981-86.

Taking the example of public transportation systems, I would like to outline the contours of a positive developmental strategy which harmonises the interests of societal development and industrial growth.

Operational aspects of Public Transport System

Firstly, it needs to be recognised by policy-makers and commuters alike that the public transport is indispensable in optimising mobility on our cramped roads. In most cities and urban centres a major portion of mass transit trips are catered to by road-based bus transport systems and this trend would continue. Alternatives such as rail-based rapid transit systems and elevated or underground transit systems have been proven to be extremely expensive and inflexible and are no longer the preferred route even in developed and capital-rich countries. With land use patterns already predetermined, road-based bus transport systems would continue to be the only viable option for several years to come. As regards rural areas, it is beyond any argument that road transport is the only relevant medium of transport for all times to come.

Traffic studies point out that for a given volume of traffic, the smaller the unit vehicle, the higher the road space required for movement of traffic leading to greater congestion. The mix of various types of vehicles on road has a vital relation to the congestion level and evidently the policy will have to be to move more passengers or freight per vehicle to maximise output in terms of passenger kilometres or tonne kilometres and minimise the input in terms of unit road space. Buses, in this context, need to be the preferred choice of transport.

Secondly, vehicle manufacturing technology today offers several options to cater to diverse needs of passenger traffic. For example, in urban transport where the problem is one of coping with peak hour traffic, the vestibuled bus — a train of two vehicles — would be an ideal option for passenger transportation in congestion and heavy rush. In certain other highly congested urban routes, double decker buses emerge as a viable alternative. More importantly, today's buses are engineered in a wide range of engine power, wheel base and overall length options to serve the needs of radial, arterial and feeder routes in central urban districts as well as for suburban extension.

Thirdly, public transport has the capability to compete most effectively with private transportation in terms of comfort. Compared to conventional truck-derived buses, integral type of buses which employ a body in monocoque construction with under-frame offers advantages of lower floor height rendering boarding and alighting quick and easy. It is indisputable that if public transport system provides for better passenger comfort, higher speed of travel and improved efficiency, it would induce some migration from personalised form of transportation to the overall benefit to the economy in terms of capital, fuel, road space, pollution and safety.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Strategy for Public Transport Systems.

Fourthly, the vehicular technology, per se, has progressed to offer benefits of improved features such as power steering, synchromesh/automatic transmission, dual-line air brakes and airconditioning for enhanced safety and comfort.

While the medium and heavy commercial vehicle industry is fully equipped to cater to the needed shift in vehicle types, such appropriate passenger vehicles are being produced in India in limited numbers only due to reluctance of purchasers to pay a higher price. Transport undertakings, handicapped with finance, have hardly been able to offer the necessary support to newer vehicular developments, essential to update the public transport systems.

Having regard to the pressing needs of public transport and the ability of the vehicle manufacturing sector to meet the potential, I would urge the Government to implement a funding policy for the STUs, on an urgent basis so that the essential need for better transport facilities is met. To my mind, the development strategy for public transport must encompass the following components, central to which would of course be the reaffirmation of the Government's interest to restore public transport to its superordinate role.

Firstly, the Central and State Governments should consider Capital Grants to their respective STUs within the Plan framework. Also, the corporate and capital structure of STUs should be reorganised to diversify funding base and improve access to funds.

Secondly, the STUs should be treated as a priority sector for devolution of credit by Banks and other financial institutions and credit allocations should be increased as recommended by the Planning Commission.

Thirdly, as an immediate measure, the Government should make special allocations to all the STUs to gradually replace their overaged fleet and also achieve an average annual augmentation of at least 10% of their fleet.

Fourthly, the STUs should be offered purchase incentives on the lines of the successful erstwhile scheme wherein excise incentives were offered for higher production in a demand surplus situation. Each STU should be paid an excise duty grant equal to that paid on previous year's offtake, provided offtake during any year exceeds the previous year's by 20%.

Fifthly, the Centre and States should work out strategies to gradually reduce the adverse impact of passenger tax on STU finances with a view to eventually abolishing it.

Sixthly, all commercial vehicle chassis which incorporate unique features for passenger transport should be provided some excise relief so that such concepts can catch on.

Seventhly, Government companies or corporations which build bus bodies should be exempt from excise duty on bus bodies the same way Integral Coach Factory is exempt from excise duty on railway coaches.

In the long term, the funding of the STUs needs to be taken up by an Apex Road Transport Finance Corporation which will be in a position to raise finance at low rates of interest through the issue of bonds on the lines of IDBI and offer it to STUs.

Funding of transport sector must be accompanied by steps to expand and upgrade road network. Investments in roads as percentage of total plan expenditure have shrunk from 6.7% in the First Plan to a mere 2.9% in the Seventh Plan. Plough-back of tax revenues from road transport on road development has reduced from a peak of 51% in 1980-81 to a low of 23%, estimated on an average for the Seventh Plan. There is an urgent need to redefine investment priorities to cater to the future demands of highway and rural road development.

Product Plans

Your Company is fully equipped to be in the forefront of upgrading public transport systems by offering a unique and comprehensive range of buses. The popular Viking series of buses are now available with HINO engines to offer higher levels of fuel-efficiency hitherto unknown. Availability of HINO engines will be progressively stepped up to a wider range of passenger models. A new rear-engined passenger chassis incorporating superior technical features has been developed exclusively for STU requirements. These vehicles together with your Company's pioneering range of integral as well as vestibuled buses would be indispensable elements of any futuristic development strategy for upgrading the public transport systems.

In the truck range, your Company has developed a new 6×2 vehicle which would ensure optimum fuel economy and improved tyre life in bulk tanker applications. The Taurus vehicle will be upgraded to serve more effectively transport needs of high density cargo.

Your Company is poised to introduce this year a new aerodynamic, ergonomic, aesthetic Front End Structure (FES) which will provide new standards of driver comfort and safety.

Your Company has also plans to make a new thrust in the diversification of the product range by launching two new intermediate vehicle models based on indigenous development.

To meet the long-term challenges, R&D strategy is focussed on developing and sustaining engineering skills and infrastructure necessary to ensure product leadership. Installation of an advanced computer system and commissioning of a modern in-house vehicle test track facility would be key strategies for continued engineering excellence.

Business Plans

During the year under review, your Company has taken an important step towards diversifying business portfolio by signing an agreement with Terex Equipment Ltd for distributing their earthmoving and construction equipment in India, Bhutan and Nepal.

Your Company has also obtained registration from the DGTD for the manufacture at the Hosur and Alwar Plants of identified machine tools to acquire the requisite capability to upgrade manufacturing infrastructure based on in-house skills.

It is a matter of gratification that Ashok Leasing and Hire Purchase Limited (ALHP) promoted by your Company and its dealers has established an impressive track record of performance and profitability.

Your Company's other joint venture with TIDCO, now renamed Automotive Coaches and Components Limited, has made satisfactory progress and will play an important role in the manufacture and introduction of the new FES. This will enable your Company to market fully built buses and trucks.

Note: This does not purport to be a record of the proceedings of the Annual General Meeting.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The 21st Century Sensation
The fan that fascinates

Topbrass

For those who demand the exclusive

It's a fan in a million. With a body wrought out of real brass and crowned with a five light chandelier, it's an ornamentation for your ceiling.

That's not all. It's not just a good looker — it's got a unique, the first ever, remote control system that enables you to control it from anywhere in the room.

We even give you a eleven years guarantee!

That's because we're so confident you'll never have reason to use it.

It's not just a fan — it's an acquisition.

Exclusively — Top Brass.

air sahara

Its so airy. Its so cool.

PRODUCT OF SAHARA INDIA COMMERCIAL LTD.

CC-0. In Public Domain.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

THE economy, by and large, shows no major problem areas at the moment: prices are under control, industrial production may pick up and commercial credit conditions are easy. The great uncertainty of the monsoon, however, looms large and its final outcome could make or break the economy this year.

All data are seasonally adjusted. Current trends are computed on the basis of six months (weekly data) or two years (monthly data) figures. The quarters referred to in the text are calendar year quarters.

Wholesale Price Index

1970-71 = 100

Current Trend
3.0% p.a.

Inflation is currently well under control. But a poor monsoon could trigger-off a spurt in prices since the economy already has excess liquidity.

Industrial Production Index

1980-81 = 100

Current Trend
6.9% p.a.

If the trend in industrial production continues (see box for growth in coal, steel and cement) GNP should grow by 5 per cent in 1987-88.

Manufacturing Output

1980-81 = 100

Current Trend
6.8% p.a.

The manufacturing sector of Indian industry is growing at a healthy rate, and the dip in November-December may be reversed.

Money Supply

Rs Crore

Current Trend
15.9% p.a

Money supply continues to grow at a fast rate. How long will the dire monetarist predictions of high inflation be unfulfilled?

Commercial Bank Credit

Rs Crore

Current Trend
15.1% p.a.

An easing of commercial bank credit should be a welcome relief for the industry. It is important that the Government maintain this trend.

Share Prices

1984-85 = 100

Current Trend
-24.1% p.a.

The crash in share prices from, perhaps, unjustifiably high levels, has not been reversed yet as uncertainty continues.

Electricity Generation

Million kwh

Current Trend
9.6% p.a.

Electricity generation continues to increase at a fast rate, easing a major infrastructural bottleneck. But capacity utilisation has fallen.

Closing Gold Prices

Rs per 10 gm

Current Trend
30.4% p.a.

Gold prices are still rising sharply, making it, currently, the best investment, particularly with the uncertainty in the share market.

INDUSTRIAL PRODUCTION

Growth of items in Jan-Dec 1986 over Jan-Dec 1985

	% Growth
Railway Wagons	90.30
Forged Handtools	43.60
Scooters	42.30
Air/Gas Compressors	38.10
Polyester Fibres	35.90
Metallurgical Machinery	28.40
Wrist Watches	26.50
Twist Drills	24.90
Tetracycline	23.80
Motorcycles	23.00
Cement Machinery	22.40
Lifts	22.10
Polyester Filament Yarn	21.60
Nitrogenous Fertiliser	21.40
Newsprint	21.00
Boilers	20.10
Phosphatic	17.70
Calcium Carbide	17.40
Lead	16.80
Storage Batteries	16.40
Baby Food	16.00
Vat Dyes	15.80
PVC Resins	15.80
Scooter Tyres	15.50
Fluorescent Tubes	15.50
DDT	15.30
Cars	14.40
Electric Motors	13.40
Paints & Varnishes	13.20
Rubber Machinery	12.80
Industrial Explosives	12.60
Tooth Paste	12.10
Viscose Filament Yarn	12.00
Mining Machinery	11.30
Printing Machinery	11.00
Caprolactum	10.50
Cement	9.40
Vitamin A	9.10
Typewriters	8.70
Paper & Paper Board	7.50
Earth Moving Equipment	7.20
Transmission Towers	7.10
Auto Ancillaries	6.70
Rubber Footwear	6.40
Polystyrene	6.00
Soda Ash	6.00

Of the 141 series considered, 91 items with a total weight of 71.9 per cent had a positive growth and 50 of them with a total weight of 28.1 per cent had a negative growth.

SELECTED INDICATORS

	1987	1986
Coal
Thousand Tonnes, April	13,031	11,264
Saleable Steel
Thousand Tonnes, April	637.2	487.0
Cement
Thousand Tonnes, April	2,900	2,818
Plant Load Factor
Per cent, April	56.2	58.2
Call Money Rate (Bombay)
Per cent, April	9.87	10.00

Compiled by THE POLICY GROUP

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Company Meeting

GARWARE NYLONS LIMITED

Registered Office : Chander Mukhi, Nariman Point, Bombay – 400 021.

Shri. B.D. Garware

STATEMENT OF SHRI B.D. GARWARE, CHAIRMAN, GARWARE NYLONS LIMITED, ON THE OCCASION OF THE 29TH ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING OF THE COMPANY ON 27TH MAY, 1987.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

I have pleasure in extending to you a warm and cordial welcome to the twentyninth Annual General Meeting of your Company.

The Directors' Report and the Audited Accounts for the year ended 31st August, 1986 have been with you for some time now. I presume, you have had an opportunity of going through the same, and I will take them as read.

2. DIVIDEND

The Directors have recommended, subject to your approval, a Dividend @ 15% (subject to deduction of tax), absorbing a sum of Rs. 1.46 crores.

3. DEBENTURES

The Company's Rights Offer of 10,00,000 – 15% Secured Redeemable Non–Convertible Debentures of Rs. 100/– each, of an aggregate face value of Rs. 10 crores, was well received and fully subscribed. The issue had been made for part–financing the cost of the projects pertaining to increase in the capacity of Nylon Filament Yarn as also manufacture of Nylon Industrial Yarn/Tyre Cord/Fabric My grateful thanks to the Members, Debentureholders, Bankers, Financial Institutions and Investing Public for the confidence reposed in the 'House of Garwares'. I look forward to continuing support in all our future endeavours as well.

4. MODERNISATION & EXPANSION

Apart from continuing modernisation of the existing facilities, the Company has completed its expansion programme for increasing the Nylon Filament Yarn capacity to 6228 tpa. The expansion to increase the Polyester Filament Yarn capacity to 3500 tpa is under process. I am pleased to report that the trial production of Nylon Industrial Yarn has commenced and production of Tyre Cord and Fabric will also start during the third quarter of this year.

The Company's application for broadbanding is progressing well and all permissions in this regard should be received shortly. After this, the Company's licenced capacity for manufacture of Synthetic Filament Yarn will be increased to 11500 tpa and this will mean that there will be no constraint on the quantities of yarn that can be manufactured within the three categories – Nylon, Polyester and Tyre Industrial Yarn to suit the changing pattern of demand.

5. WORKING RESULTS

Due to escalation in the cost of inputs coupled with lower sales realisation, the operating margins were under pressure throughout the year under review. You will no doubt appreciate the fiscal environment in which your Company has been operating and which is adversely affecting the performance not only of your Company but also of the synthetic filament yarn industry as a whole. When certain parameters pertaining to both the input and the output of any manufacturing unit are entangled with Governmental policies which are beyond the control of the Company, you can well imagine, how sensitive its working results will be.

6. BASIC RAW MATERIALS

We are continuing to depend on indigenous source (about 20% – sole supplier) and imports (about 80%) for Caprolactam, the basic raw material for the manufacture of Nylon Filament Yarn and on 100% imports for Pure Terephthalic Acid (PTA), the major raw material for the manufacture of Polyester Filament Yarn. The ex–factory price of indigenous caprolactam has been increasing steadily, the latest increase being in February this year from Rs. 29,000/–

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

per M.T. to Rs. 30,400/– per M.T. Excise levy at 15% ad valorem on caprolactam further aggravates the situation. Repeated pleas of the industry from various forums, for repealing this levy, still remain unheeded.

There has also been a steep rise in the cost of imported caprolactam due to rise in its CIF price, apart from increase in the customs duty and the dollar–rupee parity. The prohibitive import duty, inclusive of countervailing duty, presently at 118.5%, merits substantial slashing. PTA also presently attracts a very high rate of customs duty at 190%.

The vital need for smooth flow of essential raw materials to any industry, at fair and reasonable prices, cannot be overemphasised. I, therefore, strongly urge the authorities to reduce the levy of customs duty on caprolactam and PTA, substantially, as also to shift these items to OGL so as to ensure their steady and regulated flow.

7. LEVIES ON FILAMENT YARN

The synthetic filament yarn continues to be heavily burdened with excise levies (Nylon Filament Yarn Rs. 70/– per kg., Polyester Filament Yarn Rs. 83.75 per kg.) under the mistaken notion that it is the rich who consume synthetic fabrics. Such exhorbitant levies keep the products of the industry beyond the reach of the common man, reduce the demand base and thus restrict its expansion. The excise duty is not only heavy in absolute terms but also in comparison with the present excise duty on Polyester Staple Fibre and its blends. Such differential has adversely affected the sales realisation of Filament Yarn due to an artificially depressed demand. Furthermore, the increased availability of Filament Yarn in relation to demand, consequent on increase in production due to expansion of existing and licensing of fresh capacities has further aggravated the situation. The policy implication of such a situation is to lighten the excise burden so as to generate demand as also to ensure optimum utilisation of capacity. Such relief may not affect revenue; on the contrary, with higher production and broader market base, revenue is bound to increase. I, therefore, urge the authorities to reduce the excise duty so as to restore the parity in excise levy on filament yarn vis–a–vis staple fibre spun yarn.

Imports of yarn with lower duties are continuing on OGL basis – in addition to reported smuggling on a large scale. There is, in fact, a valid case, for restructuring the import duty on Nylon and Polyester Filament Yarn so as to discourage avoidable imports. Inspite of such a plea, I regret to say that the anti–dumping duty on imports of Polyester Filament Yarn, correctly levied since November, 1982 at Rs. 15/– per kg. has since been lifted from June last year.

8. PRAGMATIC REVIEW

I wish to stress that all the aspects of Government Policy – nay, their basic approach and attitude towards the synthetic yarn industry requires review "de novo" and must necessarily hinge on purely pragmatic considerations. A fresh breeze of realism blown into fiscal policies, I regret to say, is yet to percolate, in sufficient measure, to the segment of the synthetic yarn industry with which your Company is vitally concerned. The recent announcement regarding removal of specific customs levy of Rs. 3/– per kg. in respect of PTA and Dimethyl Terephthalate is a step in the right direction. I sincerely hope that the authorities will consider the various other longstanding grievances of the industry and extend the long overdue fiscal concessions perhaps in the next phase of reliefs so as to enable the industry to restore its health and sustain its future growth.

9. OUR COMMITMENT

We, on our part, despite these constraints, will continue to improve the operations and reduce costs at all levels; we shall always strive hard to achieve the best possible results. With our emphasis on safe working conditions, a Safety Committee is continuously reviewing operating procedures & incorporating improvements. We have created a ready captive market for many of our products. With the enhanced capacity of Nylon and Polyester Filament Yarn and the plant for the manufacture of Nylon Industrial Yarn/Tyre Cord/Fabric fully operational, we will have a well balanced complex with diversity and flexibility in the production pattern and the broad marketing base to cater to various segments of synthetic yarn users.

10. CURRENT OUTLOOK

Gross sales during the 8 month period September 1986 – April 1987 amount to Rs. 59.63 crores as against Rs. 57.59 crores during the corresponding period in the previous year. Inspite of lower price and higher cost than in former times, I am quite optimistic about the current year's working, specially since there has been a marked increase in production from the middle of this year and I have no doubt that the benefit of this will be derived by the Company from this year onwards.

Presently, the Company is deeply engrossed and involved in the starting up of various expansions that it has undertaken over the past two years or so and I do believe that as a result of these expansions, the production levels will leap substantially achieving newer heights. I have full faith and confidence in all that is being done in the Company to strengthen it and make it grow and I have no doubt whatsoever in my mind that the future can not be anything but rosy and I would like my fellow shareholders to take special note of my comment when considering the year that has been — perhaps the most difficult that this industry has ever witnessed.

11. ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

Before I conclude, I would like to express my appreciation of the services rendered by Senior Executives, Officers, Staff and devoted employees. I would like to express my sincere gratitude to the Financial Institutions and Banks for their continued and active support, and last but not the least, I warmly appreciate your support and understanding as also your presence here this afternoon, which reflects your keen interest in the progress and well–being of the Company.

Thank you.

CHAIRMAN

Bombay, 27th May, 1987.

This does not purport to be a report of the proceedings of the Annual General Meeting.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Judging the Public Sector

GEORGE Bernard Shaw was once approached by a ravishingly beautiful woman with a marriage proposal. She wanted to have a child endowed with her beauty and his brains. Shaw, however, pointed out the possibility of having a child with his looks and her brains, and declined the offer.

This anecdote captures the essence of the problem of public enterprise in India. Public enterprises are hybrid institutions created with the expectation that the strengths of the private sector will be combined with those of the public sector. The private sector is believed to do things "right" (that is, efficiently, quickly, innovatively), even if it does not always do the right things. The Government, on the other hand, often does the right things (such as promoting balanced regional development) but does not always do them right. By combining the strengths of both, public enterprises were expected to do the right things and to do things right. Unfortunately, this experiment in genetic engineering seems to have failed.

The assumption behind much of the criticism of the public sector is that the major factor for its disappointing performance is the inefficiency or greed of public enterprise managers. Further, it is argued that even when public sector managers are well-meaning, they do not have enough autonomy to do the right things. But this boils down to blaming the patient for the mistakes of the surgeon.

The relationship between the Government and public enterprise managers is no different from that which exists between any owner and his managers in the private sector. And public enterprise managers are no different from their private sector counterparts, in that both of them ultimately try to maximise self-interest. The real difference lies in the role of the owners in this relationship.

In the private sector, the owners specify their goals clearly, monitor the achievement of these goals closely and determine rewards and punishments accordingly. In the public sector, goals are rarely clear. There are multiple principals (the Finance Ministry, the Planning Commission, the Department of Public Enterprises, the auditor general, etc), each of which specifies multiple and often conflicting goals. So it is difficult to monitor and evaluate performance. Even when performance can be measured objectively, there doesn't exist a fair and effective system of rewards and punishments.

Does this imply that to make public enterprises "do things right", we should emulate the example of the private sector? The answer is both yes and no. For instance, they should not be evaluated primarily on the basis of financial performance. To do so would be like going to a cinema-hall to sleep rather than to watch a movie. In other words, why bother to create public enterprises if all you want them to do is to act like private ones?

Public enterprises are an instrument of public policy and their operation ought to enhance national welfare. However, increases or decreases in the profitability of an enterprise may not necessarily have any correspondence with increases or decreases in national welfare. In many cases, a market monopoly guarantees enormous profits, with or without managerial efficiency.

While policy makers concede that profitability is an inappropriate criterion for measuring public sector performance, they still end up using profitability as an implicit or explicit yardstick. In large part, this is because policy makers have still not successfully answered the question: "If not for profit, then for what?" This intellectual cop-out is the major source of the troubles that plague public enterprises. If we do not even know what we want from our public enterprises, how can we expect to get it? The challenge lies in devising performance indicators which rate performance on commercial and non-commercial objectives.

Take the issue of autonomy versus accountability. There are two ways of controlling any enterprise, public or private. One involves specifying final outcomes clearly and letting the manager pursue them with minimal intervention. This is often called "management by objectives" or "management by results".

Cartoon by JAR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Alternatively, one can control the production processes to ensure the desired outcome. This requires substantial intervention in the affairs of the enterprise. Since the Government finds it difficult to specify goals, it opts for the latter course.

Reducing controls in order to increase the autonomy of public enterprises, however, is not enough. This may turn out to be both undesirable and unstable. The important question here is: "Autonomy for what?" If public enterprise goals remain fuzzy, more autonomy will simply lead to abuses, which will most certainly invite a cut back on autonomy. This is the classic "autonomy pendulum" observed all over the world.

Reforms, therefore, should focus not only on the "quantity of controls" but also on the "quality of controls." If the former is reduced while the latter is increased, the Government can raise both managerial autonomy and managerial accountability. This would make the debate that focuses on the choice between autonomy and accountability redundant, because the trade-off between the two is imaginary and not real.

Unfortunately, while a simple stroke of the pen can raise or lower the quantity of controls, regulating the quality of controls requires superior attributes of policy-making. The starting point once again is goal specification.

Recent moves towards designing large holding companies, to insulate them from bureaucratic interference, again emphasises the reduction of the quantity of controls. But this too is a cosmetic exercise which leaves the heart of the problem untouched.

The following statement by Minister of State for Public Enterprises K.K. Tewary highlights the problems of current policy thrusts: "If smaller companies are put under bigger ones, the Government will be freed of the responsibility of financing them." Tewary is confusing cause with effect. The real problem is that smaller companies do not generate surpluses. Consequently, the Government often has to subsidise their losses. Whether such financing comes from the government budget directly, or indirectly through the profit of larger enterprises, is a secondary issue. In fact, putting unprofitable enterprises under profitable ones will provide the latter an excuse to justify their future lapses in terms of this extra burden.

The problem of monitoring will be further compounded by the fact that the new mega-conglomerates will be headed by people who will, in all likelihood, have more political clout than most members of the Cabinet. They will probably enjoy more autonomy than their counterparts in the private sector. In the absence of any well-specified goals and a well-developed monitoring system, the potential for disaster is mindboggling, as shown by Pertamina in Indonesia.

THE only real solution to the problem of poor performance of public enterprises lies in getting the Government back into the business of being a "principal" in the principal-agent relationship. This requires action on several broad fronts. First, the Government has to decide on its criteria for monitoring public enterprises. Experience suggests that it is futile to search for any universal criterion, applicable to all public enterprises, which would be the counterpart of profits in the private sector. But whatever the criterion the Government may choose for a public enterprise, it must pass the following tests if it is to be successfully implemented: it must be 'fair' to the managers and to the country. Fairness to managers implies that the criterion should be such that it corresponds only to things within the public enterprise manager's control. For example, in a particular year, if the criterion shows a deterioration, it must be ascertained that it was not due to factors beyond the manager's control. Usually, an exogenous increase in input prices and constant output prices is cited as an illustration of this phenomenon. The solution for this problem would be to measure managerial performance at constant prices. Similarly, a public enterprise manager must not be rewarded for doing something which may fulfil the criterion at the cost of the nation's overall welfare. For example, public enterprises are often judged by their capacity utilisation. But a public enterprise manager can improve capacity utilisation by simply postponing required maintenance.

> "Public enterprises are hybrid institutions created with the expectation that the strengths of the private sector will be combined with those of the public sector. But unfortunately this experiment in genetic engineering has failed."

If the quality of control has to be raised, the Government must not only specify goals but also have the information to determine whether they are being achieved or not. For this purpose, it needs the counterpart of the management information system (MIS) widely employed in the private sector. This information system should not be, however, a copy of the MIS that is required for internal management. Rather, it should be based on social accounting concepts that view enterprise performance from a public or social perspective. The experiences of Pakistan and Korea, both of which have recently implemented such systems, should be instructive. In Venezuela also, the ruling party and the Opposition have adopted a resolution to implement an information and evaluation system.

Recent attempts by the Government to sign a Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) with public enterprises is a step in the right direction. However, due to poor home-work on the part of the Government, this policy is also faltering badly.

Essentially, the MOU is a contract between the Government and a public enterprise, which specifies mutually agreed upon targets to be fulfilled by the public enterprise and the corresponding commitments of the Government considered essential to ensure attainment of these targets. MOUs were first recommended by the Arjun Sengupta Committee, and have acquired great significance since Rajiv put the full force of his personality behind them.

Tragically, neither the Government nor the public enterprises has a clear idea as to what these MOUs ought to look like. Consequently, only one MOU is reported to have been signed in two years.

One problem is that the Government appears to think that only France has experimented with this approach and has ignored the more relevant experiences of countries like Korea, Pakistan and Bangladesh, where similar approaches have also been tried with some success. Also, to be really effective, performance measurement should be linked to predetermined rewards and punishments.

These are difficult areas of reform. But, if the Government is really serious about improving the performance of public sector enterprise they are inescapable.

Dr Trivedi is State Trading Corporation Professor of Public Enterprise at the Indian Institute of Management, Calcutta.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

INTRODUCING A PROJECT ENGINEERING COMPANY WHICH HAS ONE OF THE MOST DIVERSIFIED PROJECT PORTFOLIOS, EVEN BEFORE IT STARTED

Consider a project engineering company which has successfully implemented a wide range of diversified projects.

Jaykay Tech.

Begun 15 years ago as the projects wing of a major industrial group, Jaykay Tech now has an impressive portfolio of diversified high technology projects.

Jaykay Tech offers a comprehensive range of project consultancy and engineering services in diverse fields including synthetic yarn and fibre, chemicals, petrochemicals, thermo-plastics, cement, thermal power plants and non-conventional sources of energy. The company undertakes complete turnkey ventures from the inception of the idea to the commissioning of the plant.

These services are backed by a vast infrastructure — a team of over a hundred enterprising technical professionals, access to foreign technical know-how and advanced design and fabrication facilities.

That's why Jaykay Tech now has a unique portfolio of prestigious high tech-projects.

For a company that has just begun, Jaykay Tech sure has come a long way!

JAYKAY TECH

SERVICES, CONSULTANTS, ENGINEERS & CONTRACTORS

Jaykaynagar Kota 324 003 (Raj.) INDIA
Phone: 25470-79, 25501-05 Telex: 0305-202 JK-IN Gram: JAYKAY

JAYKAY

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Cartoon by AJIT NINAN

FOREIGN POLICY

Careening Crazily

NO matter what the final outcome and the international fall-out of the Sri Lanka imbroglio may be, events over the last few months indicate that the credibility of Indian foreign policy is taking a nosedive across the world. It is almost as if, through some perverse geopolitical gymnastics, the country has managed to tie itself into problematic knots, causing consternation within the diplomatic community.

The memories of Rajiv Gandhi's successful US visit, the Six-Nation Conference, the fight against apartheid and nuclear armaments seem to have evaporated. What observers see now is a succession of rapid-fire diplomatic debacles, in which the Government has woefully waffled on Sri Lanka, embroiled itself in a potentially explosive border confrontation with China, annoyed the US, failed to respond to the crisis in Fiji, and raised grave scepticism about its performance even with allies like the Soviet Union. Consider some recent incongruities:

Several weeks ago, well before the Indian relief armada sailed for Sri Lanka, Tamil Nadu Chief Minister M.G. Ramachandran unilaterally announced that he would break the blockade of Jaffna by sending relief ships to the region. His proclamation, uttered without obtaining clearance from the Centre, drew an almost stunned silence from South Block. For several days, the Foreign Ministry just did not know how to officially react to the announcement as there was no clear signal from the prime minister's office.

On the very day that anti-US hysteria was being drummed up by Rajiv Gandhi in his famous "nani yaad diladenge" speech, L.K. Jha was in Washington pleading with US businessmen to invest in India, and Chief of Naval Staff Admiral Tahiliani was on a goodwill visit to the US.

Early last month, as word about China's build-up on India's border with the Tibetan region began to spread, Defence Minister K.C. Pant, accompanied by former foreign secretary Romesh Bhandari paid a quiet visit to Beijing, where they were met—in what was a deliberate snub—by the Chinese minister for mines and minerals instead of any higher authority. And Foreign Minister N.D.Tiwari's forthcoming visit to China—even though billed here as an official trip—was announced in an off-the-cuff remark to the press and later made the subject of a press release. Beijing was not informed of this so-called "official" visit, which is really a detour from an official trip Tiwari is making to Pyongyang.

India failed to denounce the coup against the democratically-elected government of Fiji where half the population is of Indian origin, even after official denunciations were made from England, Australia and New Zealand. Instead, South Block despatched emissaries to these three countries in search of a solution. The loss of India's credibility was evident in the fact that the deposed government led by Dr Timoci Bavadra, chose to send a distress signal to former foreign secretary A.P. Venkateswaran, rather than to the Government of India, urging him to use his good offices to restore a representative government.

Diplomats see not only bumbling and indecision in these amateurish moves but also a loosening of the firm hand that was always present at the helm of the steady foreign policy course charted by past governments. In 1982, for instance, Mrs Gandhi had made a conscious decision to build new bridges to the West. She made an opening towards the US, partly because she wanted to diversify India's source of arms supplies which were largely anchored to the Soviet system, and partly because she knew that the Indian economy needed huge infusions of western technology. A parallel policy was to continue negotiations with China over the Tibet region, in order to normalise relations along the Indian border. But in the wake of the recent corruption scandals in which Rajiv and his party have made the US and western imperialism the scapegoat for India's "destabilisation", and with a concomitant leaning on the Soviets in order to drum up domestic support from India's left political parties, the Indo-US honeymoon is all but over.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Privately, officials and other India-watchers in the US Administration make no secret of their bitter disappointment at the way Indo-US relations have gone into a tailspin. Officially, however, the State Department does not go beyond optimistic platitudes. Reacting to Rajiv's speech in New Delhi last fortnight, a spokesman said: "We remain committed to maintaining a high-level dialogue with India aimed at broadening our important ties." One official admitted that relations have suffered because of the US aid-package to Pakistan, "which has been necessitated by the Soviet presence in Afghanistan". Yet he quickly added: "While we remain committed to aiding Pakistan, it is absolutely wrong to say that we are trying to break up India," making a special reference to the cooperation between the two countries against Sikh terrorists. The official also firmly stated that neither the US Administration nor the CIA had anything to do with the Fairfax Group.

Most diplomats agree that the postponement of Tiwari's visit to the US, scheduled for May 7, was yet another diplomatic gaffe in which India was hurting its own interests. Not only was it considered insulting, but it was also poorly timed. It left the Indian case unrepresented at a time when Pakistan's persuasive Foreign Minister Sahibzada Yakub Khan was lobbying yet again for the E-3A Airborne Warning and Control Systems (AWACS). What was worse, the Indian Ambassador to the US, P.K. Kaul, was holidaying in California when the AWACS debate raged in the US Congress.

It is now being increasingly suggested that India's new approach to the US has something to do with the forthcoming events centred on the Himalayas. Several officials feel that India has been concerned at the Soviet silence on the growing Sino-Indian boundary dispute and Rajiv has decided to court Moscow more actively. Which is why he cancelled Tiwari's US visit and sent him on an unexpected trip to Kabul instead. According to the official view in Washington, Tiwari's statements in Afghanistan marked a visible departure from the Government's earlier and "healthier" stand on the Soviet presence in Kabul. The visit is being exploited by the anti-Indian lobby, particularly in the Pentagon and the National Security Council. As an official says: "Afghanistan is the most important foreign policy issue as far as this Administration is concerned. Make no mistake about that." According to this school of thought, the very basis of the policy shift is appeasing the Soviets.

Rajiv Gandhi with Ronald Reagan in Washington in June 1985

USIS

The Indo-US honeymoon is all but over with the US being made the scapegoat for 'destabilisation', and a concomitant leaning on the Soviets to gain support from left parties.

Ministry of External Affairs (MEA) officials are sometimes surprised to see the kind of attention the Sino-Indian border situation is receiving from the US Administration. Last week, a State Department spokesman took the unusual step of making a long statement expressing US concern on the situation. Officials, however, say this is because the US—through its considerable intelligence and surveillance resources—has a pretty good idea of the massing of troops in the Himalayas and finds the situation "far from reassuring". They also assert that there is nothing sinister about the Chinese conveying their warnings to New Delhi through US diplomatic channels. "It is wrong to conclude from this that there is any Sino-US-Pak axis to undermine India," an official said. In the recent past, disturbing messages from Beijing have been conveyed by State Department officials to Ambassador P.K. Kaul.

If Indo-US relations have suffered a set-back, so also has the constructive dialogue with China which was started in 1981 and which was intended to ease the border tension. In this new crisis, it is unlikely, diplomats suggest, that the Soviets will willy-nilly jump to the rescue of the Indians. The Soviets, too, have maintained an ongoing high-level dialogue with China, aimed at ending the cold war between the two communist giants.

During his recent visit to India, Communist Party Central Committee Secretary Anatoly Dobrynin made it abundantly clear, in private meetings, that the Soviets did not buy the Rajiv Gandhi line that certain Indian groups, aided by foreign forces, were trying to destabilise the nation. He told a group of Congressmen: "You can only destabilise a country when you are not united internally." The Soviet leader's visit, one senior diplomat remarked, was not so much a gesture of support as a fact-finding mission to determine how solid the Rajiv Gandhi Government is. And on the China issue, the

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Convenience goes sky high...

BOBCARD

now accepted by Indian Airlines.

BOBCARD ... the creditworthy convenience reaches a 'new high'. You can now use BOBCARD to get your tickets from Indian Airlines ... in India and Nepal, at most centres.

And of course, the list of hotels, restaurants, shops and departmental stores honouring BOBCARD is ever growing.

No wonder thousands of discerning people are finding BOBCARD so handy, convenient and safe -- for travelling, entertaining and shopping. You can join them too.

One more reason for you to have an account with Bank of Baroda.

Bank of Baroda

(A Government of India Undertaking)

Imageads-BOB-87165

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Soviets have remained adamant that the border question must be resolved through negotiation and not confrontation.

According to informed sources, the Soviets believe that the current Sino-Indian border crisis is coming to a head partly due to Indian intransigence. They feel the initial provocation did not come from China and its now ongoing military build-up along the McMahon Line (which the Chinese call the 'actual line of control'), along Arunachal Pradesh and China's Tibet region, but because of India's hidebound attitude which has all but scuttled the ongoing negotiations which began in 1981. In 1982, a year after these negotiations began, Chinese Premier Deng Xiaoping suggested to G. Parathasarathy, the then chief of the Policy Planning Committee, that the two countries negotiate a "package deal" to settle the border question. This would replace the arduous sector-by-sector approach then being pursued, according to which just about every inch of how the boundary should run was being examined according to custom, tradition, and usage—a process in which, many Indians themselves felt, India might end up ceding territory it already controlled.

The package proposal entailed a simple "as is" territorial swap—the Chinese would give up their traditional claim of 90,000 sq km of territory in Arunachal Pradesh (under Indian control) in exchange for India conceding 38,000 sq km of territory in the western sector in Aksai Chin (already under Chinese control) which, though a barren desert, is of strategic importance to China. The idea was that while negotiations were under way, neither side would assert its traditional claims or create a renewed physical presence in the disputed areas.

But in late 1984, the prime minister's office, opposing strenuous objections by the MEA, began to establish seasonal Intelligence Bureau border observation posts in the Wangdung area of Arunachal Pradesh. At the time, the Chinese had no presence there, even though they claimed it fell on their side of the actual line of control. But when the snow melted and the Indians went back to their posts, they found that the Chinese had also set up a handful of posts in the area, along what they claimed to be their actual line of control and which runs further south of what India calls the McMahon Line. Later, just before the seventh round of official talks were to be held in Beijing last year, India considered cancelling them in a show of protest. But the Cabinet Committee on Political Affairs was persuaded by the foreign office to continue negotiations. Nonetheless, on July 19, two days before the seventh round was to start, the Government announced in Parliament that the Chinese had occupied Indian territory. At the talks, China blamed India for violating the informal agreement over the package deal, yet it agreed to a freeze along the border, which meant neither side would move from present positions to the line of control.

But when the Indian negotiating team referred this proposal to the Government, it responded by decreeing that the freeze should be observed by China unilaterally and that the Indian side should be allowed to move up as it liked.

PIB

Dobrynin with Natwar Singh and T.N. Kaul: courting the Soviets

What compounded an already delicate situation was the conferring of statehood on Arunachal Pradesh on February 20, 1987, which took the Chinese totally by surprise. The announcement of the proposed statehood decision could not have been more badly timed. It came almost immediately after the conclusion of the seventh round. In the ensuing tension, India moved a whole brigade into the Wangdung area, the Chinese began establishing helicopter pads, and have now begun to pour troops, rockets and artillery supplies into the Tibetan region. Already, in an area in the eastern sector about 30 km long and 7 km deep, Indian and Chinese troops face each other in ominous positions. "There is little doubt in my mind," a senior diplomat remarked, "that the Chinese are now determined to manage their side of the actual line of control. They are determined to come up to the actual line with troops." The million-dollar question is whether the Indian Government will tolerate this and how it will react.

To date, the Government has no clear line on the border issue about which it is clearly apprehensive. But whether it be China, Pakistan, the US or Sri Lanka, it is clear that there has been a loss of Indian diplomatic edge all around because of ad-hocism or short-sightedness. Foreign Secretary K.P.S. Menon is not known to be an aggressive decision-maker and is content to leave the handling of critical issues to bureaucrats in the prime minister's office, particularly Ronen Sen and Gopi Arora.

Of late, Rajiv himself has become aware that his parroting of the destabilisation theory as well as the confused foreign policy moves by his government have been costing him dearly in terms of an adverse reaction from the international press. To counter this bad press abroad, Rajiv has summoned N.D. Tiwari to take steps to ameliorate the situation. Subsequently, the foreign office sent messages informing all heads of missions that they must cultivate journalists and opinion makers more assiduously in order to forcefully put across India's point of view on the recent controversies involving the nation. But once again, this is but a public relations panacea that is hardly expected to produce results in place of political will, firmness and vision—all of which are suddenly conspicuous by their absence in India's foreign policy scenario.

—INDERJIT BADHWAR with DILIP BOBB and SHEKHAR GUPTA in Washington

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

And to think you can fly there on Alitalia...6 times a week.

All roads still lead to Rome, but after we fly you there, we can fly you to Munich, Dusseldorf, Stuttgart or Frankfurt almost immediately. Six times a week, every week, a sleek Alitalia 747 leaves Delhi and Bombay for Italy. With our convenient worldwide network, we can connect you to key cities in Italy, Europe, as well as North America.

Take an Italian airline? Certamente if you want convenience. The ultimate, if you want to be pampered in the luxury of our Top Class or Prima Business Class. Call Alitalia, or see your travel agent and book your flight today. Six flights a week ... 312 flights a year, make it so easy.

Alitalia

The airline of Italy

daCunha/ALT/4/87

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Courting Custom

THE Karnataka Chief Minister, Ramakrishna Hegde, who has spent the past month in the UK and the United States trying to attract non-resident investment to his state and to undergo medical treatment, has visibly impressed the large Indian community in Britain with what some describe as his "personal charm" and "lucid grasp of Indian politics". Last fortnight, Hegde visited a part of Britain normally ignored by visiting Indian dignitaries. He was honoured at a civic reception in Wales by the Lord Mayor at the city hall in Cardiff. Hegde spoke of the need to foster business and cultural ties between India and Wales and scrupulously avoided references to Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi following trenchant criticism from Congress(I) party officials in India. A proposal to "twin" the South Glamorgan county council with Bangalore is now under scrutiny. Later, at a public meeting hosted by the Asian Society of Wales and attended by over 500 Indians, Hegde was joined by Menaka Gandhi, who is currently in Britain for what she said was essentially "RSPCA (Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals) work". Incidentally, Menaka will be the focus of a documentary to be made on celebrated female politicians by BBC Wales and producer A.K. Verma. She joins the company of Margaret Thatcher, Corazon Aquino, Benazir Bhutto, Sirimavo Bandaranaike and Gro Brutland.

PRAMOD PUSHKARNA

Hegde and Menaka: goodwill visit

Denouncing Extremism

THE growing number of violent clashes between moderate and pro-Khalistan Sikhs in Britain is causing increasing worry to British and Indian officials here. The most recent clash was also the most violent—at the Belvedere Gurudwara in Kent last month—when over 46 people were arrested and more than 30 suffered injuries. So last fortnight's "pro-India" peace rally in Derby, 40 miles north of Birmingham, was welcomed. Organised by groups like the Indian Overseas Congress, gurudwaras controlled by moderates, the Namdhari Sangat, the Shri Ravidass Gurudwara and the Federation of Indian Organisations, the rally attracted 1,000 people. Organisers insisted that many from the 10,000-strong Sikh community in Derby, who would otherwise have attended, were "put off" by the Belvedere Gurudwara clashes. Mohinder Singh Mondair, principal organiser, says it was held to "oppose and publicly denounce Sikh extremism in the UK and in India". He promised more such rallies in other parts of Britain.

MAHANT

Speakers at the "pro-India" peace rally

The Asian Bank

A banking service exclusively designed for Indians and other Asians seems to have made impressive strides in six years. The Equatorial Trust Corporation—the only Asian-owned public limited banking company incorporated in the UK—was founded in 1981 by two banking executives—M.G. Krishnan and N.B. Desai—to fill the gap in existing banking services for the growing ethnic market. Today, its capital of £10.7 million is held by 100 Indians and other Asians. It has public deposits of £35 million, and the chairman is the Indian banker R.C. Shah, former chairman and managing director of Bank of Baroda. Shah says many of the borrowers are Indian family-owned shops and small businesses.

Chairman Shah: impressive growth

Terminal Case

FOR his notable performance as Dr Aziz in David Lean's A Passage to India, Victor Banerjee received fine reviews in the British press as an actor of depth and skill. So his lead role in the Ronald Neame-directed comedy, Foreign Body, co-starring Trevor Howard, was eagerly awaited. But following its release last fortnight, Foreign Body has come in for such withering censure that it now threatens to sink without a trace. Banerjee, portraying Ram Dass, arrives in Britain from the slums of Calcutta to become a London bus conductor and eventually impersonates a Harley Street specialist in "back, neck and joint problems". One critic branded it a dismal comedy that was a "terminal case" while another delivered the rasping verdict that the audience would have no idea of "how offensive this ugly, lubricious and mean-spirited picture is".

Banerjee with co-stars: strong criticism

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

How to make your car talk to you while driving...

on all these subjects

Maximum output

Optimum engine performance

Optimum fuel economy

Introductory offer — Rs. 450/-* by VPP. Specify 3 or 4 cylinder engine.

Guarantee: Money back within 30 days if not fully satisfied.

* Will be available at retail outlets @ Rs. 500/–. (The above prices are inclusive of C.E.D. and taxes)

Believe it or not, every time you start up your car, shift gears, cruise along or stop at a traffic light, your car has something to say to you. Only you're not listening. Something you pay for dearly in terms of engine life, fuel economy and performance over the years. Now you can relax. Pricol's new electronic RPM meter is here.

What's an RPM meter...?

It indicates engine revolutions per minute. You'll be able to change gears and drive at optimum engine speed! The advantage — better fuel economy, lower wear and tear, and maximum engine life. Not to speak of a ready warning not to push the engine on cold mornings. And a safe guide to just how much a newly re-bored engine can take. What's more, your RPM meter is unbeatable when it comes to setting idling speeds.

Pricol's new range of electronic RPM meters are for both 3 cylinder and 4 cylinder engines. So what are you waiting for? Before your car starts complaining install one. And start communicating with something you love. Your car.

pricol

Premier Instruments & Controls Limited

Post Box 6331, 339 A, Avanashi Road, Coimbatore-641 037.

Telephone: 37611 (4 lines) Telex: 0855-376 PIL IN Cable: PRICOL

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

MAA(S) PRICOL 1A 87

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

UNITED STATES

An Arresting Affair

RARELY, if ever, had the Los Angeles court-room seen such tight security. There were metal detectors at the entrance and armed policemen swarmed the court area. And as the judge read out his verdict, the convict was whisked away to a waiting helicopter and flown to the nearby penitentiary of Lompoc to serve a 14-year sentence followed by a five-year probation.

Nemesis finally caught up last fortnight with Franklin Camper, the self-proclaimed trainer of dogs of war whose Mercenary Association school in Dolomite, Alabama, had hit world headlines in 1985. For it was here that four Sikh terrorists, including the well-known fugitive who planned to murder Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi and Environment Minister Bhajan Lal, had been trained. Yet, the same man had now fallen victim to his sudden fame and tall talk. Camper earned the prison sentence on charges of racketeering, possession of firearms, concealing evidence and conspiracy on the mysterious 1985 fire-bombing of two cars in California. This also marked the end—for the time being—of his school for terror. "Last year, our son ran the school but now Mr Camper wants it closed down and that is what we have done," Camper's wife Mavis told INDIA TODAY on the telephone from Dolomite.

According to the prosecution case, Elizabeth Hamilton, 40, and Charlotte Wyckof, 51, of Dana Point, California, who own the California Preparatory Schools chain, hired Camper and three of his instructors to intimidate two teachers in their own school who had filed complaints of misdoings against them with the authorities. Significantly, the women said they learnt about Camper from a radio talk-show he gave following the massive media exposure on the Sikhs' case.

The mercenaries said the prosecution, charged "thousands of dollars" for the job and "coolly blew up the teachers' cars", using "napalm-like devices". Said Federal Attorney Charles J. Stevens at Los Angeles: "The device they used was an improved napalm firebomb which consists of some soap, oil and gasoline in a sealed container linked to the ignition of the car which provides the spark."

Camper (above); and at his school: terrorist guru

But in the narrow, incestuous world of professional terrorists, it is hard to keep secrets. Soon enough, the police caught up with Camper and his men, two of whom—James Cuneo and Paul Johnson—pleaded guilty and testified against him on the promise of lighter charges. Keeping him company in jail now will be his deputy, William Hedgecorth, 27, and Elizabeth Hamilton, one of the women who hired him. The sentence regarding her partner, Charlotte Wyckof, is yet to be announced. Among those acquitted was Lee Ann Faulk, an Albanian described as Camper's girl-friend.

The stoutest defence for Camper comes from his wife Mavis who asserts her husband's innocence and claims self-righteously that he has been "framed by the people in the National Security Council and the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI), who were afraid of his making public the embarrassing information he had about the Sikhs and the Iran-Contra scandal". This explosive information, she claims, would have made his testimony before the Congress very embarrassing for the administration.

Mavis also claims Camper knew a lot about the Kanishka air crash and those responsible, and that he had names of Federal agents who "knew with certainty that the Air-India jumbo jet had explosives on board". She asserts that he had information about the activities of key Sikh extremists in America.

She says it is to remove him from the scene that the FBI has framed him. Mavis adds that the two women had hired Camper only to investigate who had been "harassing their children, killing their pets and threatening their lives". The women made eight complaints with the police but no one took notice. And she laments the controversial publicity surrounding the Sikhs' case earlier. The case was not brought up in court but William Del Gasso, one of Camper's attorneys, says that the publicity harmed him. "At least, Mr Camper thinks so," he said.

Del Gasso, however, points out that Camper had already appealed against the judgement in the ninth California Circuit Court and is confident his fortunes will change. Perhaps Camper and his backers could repeat the age-old mercenary saying: "You haven't lost the battle till you are there." But the big-mouthed mentor of mercenaries has now been reduced to a mere set of numerals: Federal prisoner number 15685-001, and a property of the Justice Department.

—SHEKHAR GUPTA

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Shri Moosa Raza

GUJARAT STATE FERTILIZERS COMPANY LTD.

P.O. Fertilizernagar
391 750, Dist, Baroda.

GSFC CHAIRMAN'S STATEMENT

 GOVERNMENT'S EFFORTS TO REORIENT THE NATION'S ECONOMIC POLICIES IS A MAJOR STRIDE TOWARDS IMPROVEMENT OF THE LIVING STANDARDS OF THE MASSES

 THE COUNTRY'S PRESENT DELICATE SITUATION IS BUT ONLY A PASSING PHASE

 GSFC'S SILVER JUBILEE YEAR – 'A YEAR OF FULFILMENT'

 NATIONAL AND INTERNATIONAL AWARDS - A SOURCE OF INSPIRATION AND REDEDICATION FOR GSFC

 GSFC IS POISED TO MEET THE CHALLENGES OF THE 21ST CENTURY THROUGH EXPANSION AND GROWTH

 GSFC'S COMMITMENT TO SOCIAL RESPONSIBILITY TRANSCENDS THE IMMEDIATE CONCERNS AND CONTRIBUTES TO BASIC DEVELOPMENT

 GSFC CONTINUING PURSUIT FOR EXCELLENCE THROUGH CHALLENGE AND RESPONSE

The following is the text of the Statement made by Shri Moosa Raza, Chairman, Gujarat State Fertilizers Company Limited at the Twenty-Fifth Annual General Meeting of the Company held on the 28th May, 1987 at the Registered Office of the Company.

CHAIRMAN'S STATEMENT

Ladies and Gentlemen,

It gives me immense pleasure to cordially welcome you at this 25th ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING of your Company. Your Company has completed its 'SILVER JUBILEE' on a highly satisfying note. Real hard work and concrete results have laid a sound foundation during the Silver Jubilee Year of your Company for the future development and growth. The Directors' Report and the Audited Statements of Accounts for the year ended 31st December, 1986, have been with you for some time and may I, therefore, with your permission take them as read.

ECONOMIC ENVIRONMENT

Before reviewing the performance of your Company and the programme being implemented currently and to be undertaken in future, I think it worthwhile to share my views with you on the general economic environment in the country. You are aware that under the leadership and guidance of our Prime Minister, the Government is attempting a re-orientation of the economic policies of the country. It is heartening to note that the general thrust of the budget proposals for 1987-88 is broadly in consonance with the pattern set out in the Long Term Fiscal Policy. It is more precisely so with some of the proposals contained in the "Discussion Paper on Simplification and Rationalization of Direct Taxes."

The budget of 1987 seeks to give direction to the growth of the economy in the most critical areas. It seeks to make public sector more productive. It offers a fillip to the rural economy. It has provisions to promote export. And it aims at encouraging indigenisation and savings in foreign exchange. Fresh impetus to housing and improvement of the health and hygiene of the masses have been given due weightage. It also lends further stimulus to the integrated rural development programmes. The budget may not appear to be a panacea for all our ills but it is indeed a major stride towards self-reliance, planned development, conservation of resources and improvement of the living standards of the masses.

The Industrial Licencing Policy determining certain economic sizes of plant capacities for the purpose of either expansion or setting up new industries is also a step in the right direction.

The recent announcement by the Government about withdrawal of Section 194-E and modification to Section 115-J of the Income Tax Act has been widely welcomed.

SOCIO-ECONOMIC SCENE

Our country is passing through a delicate situation today. The smooth pace of progress, which was set over the last two years, is under serious threat of retardation. Communalism, riots and agitations on all and sundry issues shatter the confidence of the people in the democratic processes to which our country is deeply pledged constitutionally, and create a sense of insecurity in which progress and growth are halted. These are the most serious problems which have to be tackled expeditiously. We all hope that these are temporary phases and a country of the size and variety of India has but to face such odds in its march towards progress. Our people have the sixth sense to understand what is good and what is bad and they would ultimately rally round to protect the interest of our country. Let me assure you that your Company deeply shares these national concerns and would stand by to attend to any call of duty for the good of nation with the support and cooperation of its shareholders and employees.

SILVER JUBILEE YEAR – A YEAR OF FULFILMENT

I am delighted to inform you that Company's performance during the year matched with the expectations of the 'Silver Jubilee Year'. The main highlight of the Silver Jubilee Year is that your Company has been able to commission the Coastal DAP Project at Sikka in a record time of just 17 months as against the normal time of 36 months and the scheduled time of 24 months. The commissioning of the main process plant was inaugurated by the Hon'ble Chief Minister of Gujarat on 29th December, 1986. Most of the other systems were commissioned step by step before 31st March, 1987 and fullfledged production is expected to commence from July 1987 onwards.

The Company also established, in a record time, facilities for a Monomer Recovery Unit of Nylon-6 Chips Plant at a cost of about Rs. 75.00 lacs. This would greatly help COD/BOD control in effluent stream and recovery of Caprolactam out of wash liquor coming out from processing of Nylon-6 Plant.

GSFC is also producing Methane from its Purge Gas Recovery Plant and supply of this gas to Gujarat Alkalies & Chemicals Ltd. through a pipeline was commenced on schedule.

A new record of 8.08 lac MTs of fertilizer production was established during the year. It is higher by 6.5% as ompared to the previous year. The overall capacity tilisation of the fertilizer plants was 115% during the ear. Another record of "Single Day Production" was stablished by producing 2680 MTs of fertilizer as gainst capacity of 2100 MTs. It is gratifying to note hat individually, each fertilizer plant achieved more han 100% production against the budget. Phosphoric cid production achieved a major breakthrough by eaching 139% of capacity utilisation which is higher y 28% compared to the previous year. Capacity utiliation of DAP also rose to 145% during the year. Capactam production achieved the maiden record of xceeding of 100% designed capacity during the year or the first time since its inception. The production of ndustrial Products also showed significant improvement. Almost as many as 14 plants have achieved over 00% capacity utilisation which is a record in the hisory of your Company. Equally matching has been the les performance of your Company. Sales of fertilizrs touched a new high of 9.48 lac MTs as compared to 18 lac MTs during the previous year. This perforance indeed deserves a worthy mention because spite of the glut situation in the fertilizers market used mainly due to the second consecutive drought many parts of the country, heavy imports, wagon portages and stiff competition, your Company's sales erformance was equalled by hardly any unit in the rtilizer industry. Increase of 13.6% was recorded in e sale of Industrial Products. Your Company has rned valuable foreign exchange for the country by port of Melamine to Japan, South Korea & Belgium d maiden export of MEK Oxime and Gypsum to stralia and Muscat respectively.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

spite of such high production and sales performance profit for the year was lower. There are four impor- t reasons. Firstly, there has been a continuous esca- on in the input costs. Secondly, your Company's ims with the FICC could not be realised due to ays in finalisation of the Revised Retention Price heme effective from 1st April, 1985 by the Govern- nt. This was announced only recently. Thirdly, the ntinuous drought conditions and import of fertiliz- s created a stiff competition in the fertilizer market d, therefore your Company had to give longer cre- s and higher discounts which, of course, were kept minimum as compared to tempting offers from her competitors. Fourthly, your Company had to r the brunt of higher interest charges. However, n the announcement of the new Retention Prices the period 1.4.1985 to 31.3.1987, I am confident that next year's results would present a much better ture.

PANSION PLANS – INDOW TO 21ST CENTURY

ur Company has received a Letter of Intent from the vernment of India for expansion of the Caprolactam nt from the existing capacity of 20,000 MTs per um to 1,20,000 MTs per annum to be executed in phases. Your Company proposes to establish ditional capacity of 50,000 MTs in the first phase. ter clearance of the various arrangements by the vernment of India, a new plant of the increased pacity would be established. Your Company has progressed in the establishment of 1350 TPD monia Plant. The work on Melamine Expansion m the existing capacity of 5,000 MTs per annum to 000 MTs per annum will also start soon. The setting of the Joint Captive Power Generating Plant is proeding satisfactorily. To meet with the increasing eds of energy, your Company has also proceeded with setting up Co-generation of Steam & Power Plant. The foundation stone of Co-generation Project was laid by Shri Nalinbhai Patel, Minister of State for Energy, Forest & Environment. Similarly, plans for effecting merger of Gujarat Nylons Ltd with your Company are also being worked out. Your Company has applied for licence for the LLDPE Project with a capacity of one lac tons a year. Your Company also plans to participate in the Petro Chemical Complex being set-up at Hajira. Your Company has taken up the debottlenecking programme of the Caprolactam plant with a view to enhancing the capacity by 25% and the first phase of this debottlenecking was completed with the commissioning of the Anone Unit. The work on the second and subsequent phases would be initiated and completed as early as possible. Your Company's Polymer Unit has achieved a major breakthrough in import substitution by successfully developing an indigenous process to manufacture Methacrylic Acid without any foreign collaboration or knowhow. All these plans would require a substantial investment of over Rs. 1,000 crores. I would urge full support from you and the financial institutions in the timely implementation of these projects.

The expansion plans which are envisaged to be implemented by 1990 would open up new vistas of growth for your Company in the last quarter of this century. You will be happy to know that your Company has already started planning to meet the challenge of this further growth which would be a stepping stone for us to enter the 21st century with a sense of confidence.

TOWARDS FULFILMENT OF SOCIAL RESPONSIBILITY

You would have noticed from the Directors' Report the efforts made by your Company especially to help the farmers. This objective has been uppermost in our mind while implementing such programmes-improvement of socio economic levels of the farmers and increased food production-which are vital to the country's economy. You are aware that Gujarat and many other parts in the country have been in the grip of a severe drought consecutively for the second year. In keeping with its traditions, your Company has contributed an amount of Rs. 11 lacs to the Chief Minister's Relief Fund. As you know, your Company has taken up the Dry Farming Project in some areas of Gujarat. It has been decided to extend this project to Rajkot and Bhavnagar districts in Gujarat, Dhar district in Madhya Pradesh and Dungerpur district in Rajasthan. The Leap Forward Project which has been in force for the last 12 years for the benefit of the tribal farmers is being extended to Vyara, a backward area in the Surat district. Your Company has continued its interest in the Government sponsored Intensive Fertilizer Promotion Scheme, which has given good results in the three districts of Gujarat and two districts of Rajasthan. A massive programme of tree plantation of around 3 lac saplings - two lacs in the fertilizernagar and one lac in the GSFC battery area was undertaken during the year.

As you know your Company has made pioneering efforts in development and commercial production of Biofertilizers and the experiments so far conducted have yielded encouraging results. A well-equipped Biofertilizer Unit was inaugurated by Dr. G.S. Dhillon, Union Minister of Agriculture last February. On this occasion, your Company also organised an all Gujarat Convention of Fertilizer Cooperative Societies and besides the Union Agriculture Minister, this convention was graced by the Chief Minister and the Minister for Cooperation, Gujarat State. You will be happy to know that your Company's contribution to the cooperative movement was greatly appreciated at this Convention.

NATIONAL & INTERNATIONAL AWARDS

You will be happy to know that your Company has celebrated its Silver Jubilee Year by winning four awards of national and international level during the period. Your Company has achieved the rare distinction of winning the FAI Award for the best performance in production of phosphatic fertilizers for the fourth consecutive year. This is a unique achievement in the fertilizer industry. For the first time in its history, your Company has achieved the FAI Runners-up Award for the second best performance in Nitrogenous fertilizer (Ammonia). The highest award for safety and health performance from the National Safety Council of the United States has also been won by your Company for exemplary display of awareness and commitment towards safety and health. Again your Company has achieved the prestigeous award of the National Productivity Council of India for the second best performance in the productivity field.

PRODUCTIVITY EXCELLENCE THROUGH CHALLENGE AND RESPONSE

As you know GSFC has been meeting productivity challenges from year to year and the excellence achieved by your Company in terms of fulfilment of targets and record capacity utilisation have been unparalleled in the annals of the fertilizer industry in our country. Your Company has shifted the emphasis of its corporate philosophy from small and medium level projects to large size projects and maximization of production and productivity through optimum capacity utilization in all plants. Your Company adopted the philosophy of Challenge and Response to achieve this objective and a threefold strategy was evolved to create new challenges and to meet them successfully. This philosophy envisaged motivation of the work force by creating a new confidence in them for realisation of the untapped potential. This was backed by a long term programme of modernization and revamping. As you can see, your Company has achieved substantial results over the past few years culminating into a record fulfilment year in 1986 and providing a further fillip and a continuing driving force to the growth plans from year to year.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I am glad to convey on your behalf my sincere thanks to Government of India, Government of Gujarat, Financial Institutions, Banks and other agencies for the unstinted support and assistance in the fulfilment of our objectives. I deeply appreciate the contribution made and guidance extended by my colleagues on the Board from time to time. I would be failing in my duty if I do not thank earnestly the team of staff and officers of your Company for their loyalty and dedicated efforts in maintaining the reputation and continuous growth of your Company.

– JAI HIND –

Note : This does not purport to be a record of proceedings of the Twenty-Fifth Annual General Meeting of the Company.

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SNAPSHOT

BY SWAPAN PAREKH

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Even if you lose American Express Travelers Cheques you'll have lost nothing

Because no other travellers cheque offers as much protection. None.

Naturally, when you are away from home the last thing you'd want is to lose your wallet along with cash and travellers cheques. But if you were carrying American Express Travelers Cheques, you'd have lost nothing.

If lost or stolen, American Express Travelers Cheques can be :

- Replaced usually within 24 hours at 90,000 locations and over 1400 Travel Service Offices* worldwide.

Further no other travellers cheque can:

- Help you alter hotel/airline bookings.
- Let you cable your colleagues anywhere in the world, about changed travel plans.
- Give you temporary identification, if you also lose your passport and other travel documents.

And all this at no extra cost.

So when you go abroad carry only American Express Travelers Cheques. And travel with peace of mind.

AMERICAN EXPRESS Travelers Cheques

Don't leave home without them.

* Offices of American Express Company, its subsidiaries and representatives.

OBM/109471

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Introducing

JETDRIVE

PREMIUM NYLON CAR TYRE

The extra wide tyre with an extra deep tread.

Extra deep tread for extra mileage

Yes, that's the most attractive benefit of the Jetdrive. It's the nylon car tyre with extra width and tread depth. Which really means that it has a lot more rubber to keep it running a lot longer.

In addition, here are some of the other unique advantages that only Jetdrive can offer:

Extra wide tread for greater road grip

The Jetdrive also has the widest footprint which offers more tyre surface area to keep in contact with the road. Naturally, that gives it a surer grip,ensuring greater stability for you.

Extra wide grooves for greater safety on wet roads

The Jetdrive has been specially designed with wider grooves and angled sipes to make sure you're extra safe on dangerously wet roads. Always.

JK's commitment to quality

And of course, the Jetdrive is manufactured in India's most sophisticated tyre plant, where it's made to match the most exacting quality standards.

Take a good look around. You'll find that only the Jetdrive offers you all this.

For your Maruti, Ambassador and Premier Padmini.

JK TYRE

More mileage for your money.

everest/d87/JKI/157

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

It's because of thieves like this that you should carry only American Express Travelers Cheques

No other travellers cheque offers as much protection. None.

Apart from your business associates there's a large group of people waiting for you – pickpockets. Once they spot you, your wallet is gone. So are your travellers cheques. But if you were carrying American Express Travelers Cheques you'd have lost nothing.

If stolen or lost, American Express Travelers Cheques can be:

- Replaced usually within 24 hours at 90,000 locations and over 1400 Travel Service Offices* worldwide.

Further no other travellers cheque can:

- Help you alter hotel/airline bookings.
- Let you cable your colleagues anywhere in the world, about changed travel plans.
- Give you temporary identification, if you also lose your passport and other travel documents.

And all this at no extra cost.

* Offices of American Express Company, its subsidiaries and representatives.

So when you go abroad carry only American Express Travelers Cheques. And travel with peace of mind.

AMERICAN EXPRESS Travelers Cheques

Don't leave home without them.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

SRIDEVI

The New Box Office Goddess

IN a soaking wet chiffon saree she swayed erotically to the soft music. Her diaphanous eyes smouldered, her lips pouted and her every little nuance was full of sensuality. The effect on the audience in the theatre was electric. Many let off low whistles, others shifted uneasily in their chairs. And Mohammed Ayub, 20, a college student, said later: "She seemed to reach out to me alone. She is the woman of my dreams."

At 24, Sridevi has become the new empress of the dreams that tinsel town conjures up. With her recent film Nagina turning out to be the biggest block-buster of all times she is also the new box office goddess. She is, as producer Suresh Jindal, puts it: "The ideal Indian image of a female—busty and hippy—the kind you see in an erotic temple sculpture. She is becoming what Marilyn Monroe was to the Americans."

She may not as yet have the sex goddess status that Monroe enjoyed but like her she exudes an innocent sensuality. Shekhar Kapur, who directed the wet scene in his movie Mr India released last fortnight, says: "It is as if her face does not know what her body is doing." Shekhar thinks there are basically two kinds of actresses: those who act from the heart and those who perform. To him "Sridevi is the star performer."

If Meena Kumari was the eternal tragedienne and Amitabh made it big with his angry young man image, Sridevi projects a quality, that producers feel, every Indian male craves for in a woman. As one producer says: "They want their wives to be an angel in front of the family and a mistress in bed. She has that quality."

She is also an actress with prodigious talent that has made her undisputedly the number one. Producer-Director

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Manmohan Desai, who has made a string of big hits with Amitabh Bachchan, says: "She's no fluke. Apart from her sex appeal she has enormous talent and is a superb actress. She deserves to be the number one." Ironically, before Desai could cast her in his films her fee had shot to dizzy levels and he confesses: "I can't afford to have Amitabh Bachchan and Sridevi in the same film."

COMMANDING a price of Rs 14 to Rs 20 lakh for each film, she is now the highest paid Indian actress on the Hindi screen, earning twice as much as her contemporaries. Her fee is only matched by former number one heroines Hema Malini and Rekha and works out to roughly Rs 4,000 per hour. Currently she has 14 films on hand. Co-starring with her are several generations of actors including Dharmendra, Jeetendra, Shatrughan Sinha, Rishi Kapoor, Anil Kapoor and Sunny Deol. Setting up a hot pace for herself she works three shifts a day. In fact, so engrossed is Sridevi in her work that she hasn't had a day free in the past two and a half months.

Sridevi seems to possess the Midas touch that transcends the language barrier. Having acted in nearly 300-odd films she enjoys the rare distinction of being the only multi-lingual star who has achieved the number one status in Telugu, Tamil, Malayalam and Hindi cinema. The prestigious Ladies Home Journal of USA recently rated her as one of the 100 most influential women in the world—an honour she shared with Vijayalakshmi Pandit, Anita Desai, Lata Mangeshkar, Margaret Alva and Mother Teresa. Jeetendra, who has co-starred in 16 of her 30 Hindi films, says: "I don't think any Hindi film heroine has ever commanded such a screen presence as Sridevi. In a male dominated industry she can make a film run on her own."

That she proved in Nagina. Playing the role of an ichchadhari nagin (a snake which can shape form if it so desires) which assumes the form of a village girl to seek revenge, she performs the part with just the right amount of restraint, venom, and vivacity to send the film dancing to the top. Says director Harmesh Malhotra: "She did exactly what I wanted out of the character." And co-star Rishi acknowledges: "Sridevi carried the film on her back. It was her all the way."

Her domineering presence is now the butt of wisecracks. Shatrughan Sinha, who co-stars with her in Sherni (Lioness) says: "I'm just a bakra (goat) in the film." Rishi adds: "I feel like a homosexual in her films. It may not be long before she sings songs to me rather than vice versa."

Already Nagina has grossed over Rs 10 crore and celebrated silver jubilee runs in over 30 centres across the country. In the process it has outspun some of the biggest money-spinners of yesteryears including Sholay, Mother India and Mughal-e-Azam. In several smaller cities of Uttar Pradesh where films traditionally run for hardly three days, Nagina ran for several months. Some theatres even reported people throwing coins at the screen when Sridevi did her famous snake dance. Says B.D. Bhatia, a Delhi theatre manager where Nagina completed its 28th week: "Sridevi's acting is a big draw."

Sridevi herself is nonchalant about her performance in Nagina, saying: "It was a very silent, very Indian kind of role. It was not difficult to play." But if anything the film established her firmly as

PRASHANT PANJIAR

On location in Srinagar and in Mr India: star performer

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

India's best-selling heroine. There were signs that she was slipping particularly after her recent releases—before Nagina—like Sultanat (where her role was confined mainly to dancing) and Bhagwan Dada (she plays a prostitute) flopped at the fickle box-office.

Ironically, Nagina was first offered to her arch-rival, Jayaprada, who delayed accepting it. When Malhotra called up Sridevi she was in bed with high fever. But on reading the script she told her mother, Rajeswari, who manages her career: "Mummy, I'm doing this film." Said Rajeswari: "It was her first real heroine-oriented Hindi film and I knew she would play it superbly. So I cancelled some other dance and fight movies and told her to concentrate on Nagina." While Rishi reportedly charged out of the sets whenever the snakes were brought in, Sridevi handled them without fear.

But proving that Nagina was not just a flash in the pan, Sridevi has turned out yet another scintillating performance in Mr India. Overshadowing Anil Kapoor, who plays the invisible Mr India, Sridevi breathes life into every scene that she appears in: as the inane crime reporter, the irritable tenant, the moll in trouble and as Charlie Chaplin himself. The film has all the potential of being another block-buster if the first week returns are any indications.

THROUGHOUT the movie her sense of comedy wasn't slapstick: she seemed to quirk her eyebrow, stick her tongue out defiantly or pout just at the right places. She carried the role effortlessly, giving it a comic disbelief reminiscent of Roger Moore as James Bond. And she topped it with some of the most sensual dances that she has ever performed. Says co-star Anil Kapoor: "She was like magic and as flexible as rubber."

It is her extraordinary flexibility as an actress that has made directors rave about her. Says Shekhar: "She's like a child. You can mould her into different blocks. And she understands what you want. She loves her work and enjoys it so much that she gets me excited also." Ramesh Sippy of Buniyaad and Sholay fame, who has cast her in his next film Rameen, says: "She has the right combination of everything. She has good facial control, her sense of comedy and timing is brilliant, she dances superbly and has plenty of oomph. She will stay on for a long time."

She is also one of the most professional stars on the circuit, and what's more doesn't throw tantrums. She is usually the first on the sets and Dance Director Suresh Bhatt says: "When she says she is coming at 7 a.m. she means it. We are all on our toes exactly at that time." And she willingly does any number of retakes for her director.

Her major handicap is Hindi. She still has trouble delivering long dialogues. While her voice in many of her earlier films was dubbed, she now insists that the directors use her own. Malhotra remembers that for Nagina she sat up the whole night redubbing entire scenes so that she got the accent right. But as Shatraghan Sinha says mischievously: "Who cares for her minuses when she has such heavy pluses."

Her pluses were not so evident in Srinagar last week when she appeared on the sets of Sherni and Ram Avtar. Wearing

In the smash hit Nagina: mesmerising presence

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

In Sadma: talented actress

a shiny tangerine saree and holding a black umbrella to block the scorching sun she gave no hint of her famed sensuality. As she lightly dabbed the beads of sweat on her bulbous nose she looked instead like a teenager preparing for her first party—until she faced the camera. Then she came alive. Her face radiated charm, her eyes danced and a smile lit up her face. And as she glided down the garden path, her body swaying sensuously to the background music, a hush descended over the gaggling crowd. "Cut," screamed the director and the spell was broken. And as suddenly as it came her inner vitality subsided. She was back to being the girl next door.

It is this ability, to transform her seemingly ordinary presence into a bubbling vivacity on screen that has made her a star of the '80s. As Rishi says: "She's got a weird kind of magic that spontaneously ignites when the camera rolls." Director Sunil Hingorani, who has cast her as the heroine in Ram Avtar, says: "We call her the ultimate take artiste. She has the ability to switch off and on whenever she wants."

But after her shot she tends to switch off with her co-stars and directors as well. Shekhar confesses that he does not know her personally. Rishi says he has spoken hardly four lines to her off the screen. Says he: "It's like looking at her through a mirror. You can see her but you can't communicate with her." But Jeetendra finds her a warm person and remembers fondly that for his birthday last year she presented him a bouquet of flowers. Sridevi herself explains: "I'm basically shy and reserved . Even as a child it was difficult for me to get along with anyone."(see interview).

That's because she was busy shooting films right from the time she was a precocious four-year-old in Madras. At a party the late Tamil writer Kannadasan asked her father, K. Ayappan, a lawyer, whether she could act in his film. He agreed and she was cast as God Muruga in a film called Thunnaivan (Help). For the role the director wanted her to shave her head. Sridevi burst into tears and he agreed to let her keep her locks.

She remembers returning from school staring proudly at the big banners of her movie on the streets. By five she was a celebrity. Recalls her mother: "She was very inquisitive and good in studies." But she devoted more time to acting and dropped out of school in her fifth standard,

INTERVIEW

"Can I help looking sexy?"

IF on screen she projects an image of innocent sensuality, in real life Sridevi exhibits only the innocence and a quiet reserve. She prefers answering in monosyllables unless provoked. Then, the words come out in a torrent, her large eyes flash and her hands keep pace expressively. On location at Srinagar, she took time off for an interview with Principal Correspondent RAJ CHENGAPPA. Excerpts:

Q. What do you think of your image as the sex siren of Hindi cinema?

A. I feel very bad. When people come and tell me how beautiful I looked in a film, I don't react. But when they tell me I acted well I feel proud.

Q. But you became number one because of your willingness to bare more than others?

A. If that's the case then whoever reveals a lot should be number one. Why are they not? If I look sexy just wearing a sari, can I help it? There are so many girls who reveal much more but they don't look anything.

Q. You were known in Tamil films for the character roles you played. Why did you switch your image in Hindi films?

A. In Tamil films they love to see me act naturally. But in Hindi films all they want is lot of glamour, richness and masala. My bad luck was that my first big hit in Hindi films turned out to be a commercial one (Himmatwala). When I did a character role in Sadma, the picture flopped. So people started casting me only for glamour roles. But one day I'm

PRASHANT PANJIAR

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

In her first film: early beginning eferring to be tutored at home. S.P. uthuraman, who directed her both as a ild artiste and heroine, recalls: "She as a born actress. Even as a child artiste e could grasp the medium so well. And e was always cool, composed and to-lly relaxed."

Increasingly cut off from the outside orld, Sridevi relied heavily on her other for moral support. Says she: "I felt e being with my mother all the time." In any films she made her mother stand hind the camera so that she could see r. Her mother took charge of her career m then on and even today directs it. herever she is, be it Ladakh or nyakumari, Sridevi faithfully rings up r mother every night. She doesn't mind mitting she's a "mama's girl" and says: o what if my mother controls me. After she is doing everything for my ppiness."

It was her mother who enrolled her for aratnatyam classes when she was six ars old and that training has proved a big asset. Jeetendra, who has done 53 song sequences with her, says: "I take almost four or five rehearsals to master the steps but she takes only one." Bhatt, who has directed many of her dances, says: "She always adds something of her own to the dance sequences. Never loses anything."

But her initial forays as a heroine were disastrous. Her first big break as a teenage heroine was in Malayalam films directed by I.V. Sasi of Her Nights fame. Sridevi unwittingly posed in a skimpy skirt and blouse—a role that became a constant source of embarrassment in her later life. In fact, after she made it big in the Hindi films, her Malayalam films were marketed all over India as: "Sridevi and her thundering thighs presented by Her Nights Sasi." She was paid hardly Rs 7,000 for each movie and was given a first class rail ticket for location shooting.

But in Tamil films she established herself as a character actress of repute. She was a willing learner even then. During the shooting of the smash hit Moondram Pirai, where she plays a mentally retarded child, on the first day she came heavily made up. The director, Balu Mahendra, sent her a note telling her to remove the pancake from her face. Her co-star Kamalahasan says: "Any other top heroine would have walked out of the film. But the next day she reported without make up." Mahendra feels she has the edge over even actresses like Shabana Azmi because "it is rare that great ng to prove to everyone that I can also.

Q. Is that day far away?

A. Yes. Everything has changed. I e realised that glamour is important not vulgarity. Now it is out of the stion that I would do any revealing ts. I would love to do art films without ke up. And I would love to do a crying . But, so far, I am not satisfied as an ste. I have not done the role where I say, chalo, at last I have done it.

Q. Do you think you will remain mber one for a long time?

A. I can't be number one for life. As a the time is even shorter. I am not ng to be a performer, going on year r year. I will never give people a nce to get bored of me. The moment nebody younger is going to take my e, I will quit films. I hate to hang on.

Q. But your colleagues say it is time played a role that reflects your real racter. Something that has moved deeply.

A. Then there be would no such role lay because my life is routine.

Q. Who is the real Sridevi?

A. Someone very simple. I'm an nary person. Nothing very interest-Just another parents' daughter. n ordinary girls have style. I don't k I've got that. You see the real evi in the house. I hate to go out for parties. I like being at home with my parents. I'm a very shy person and difficult to get along with.

Q. Has your stardom affected your attitude to life?

A. It doesn't give me a chance to get to know life. Whenever I want a saree or anything, it comes to me. I have never been shopping. But I've got so used to it that even if I get a chance to experience things, I withdraw. I feel very uneasy with anything new. I feel comfortable only with my life style.

Q. Do some of the characters you play influence your life-style?

A. The characters that I play are different from my personal life. The moment I play a role I forget it.

Q. How do you look so innocent despite doing all those daring dances?

A. It is not an act. You can't do that for a whole life. It would look silly and stupid. It is just that I have a baby face that doesn't change.

Q. But in front of the camera you become a totally different person.

A. Because I'm very professional. I don't plan my shot or anything like that. I have never learnt acting. I think it should come from inside.

Q. What would you like to do after you stop acting?

A. Get married and settle down. I love children.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

talent is mixed with glamorous looks, a good figure and a thorough professionalism. Sridevi has all that".

But all these qualities didn't help her in her first Hindi film Solhwan Sawan opposite Amol Palekar. It bombed at the box-office and Bharati Raja, who directed the film, said: "Nobody gave her a ghost of a chance in Hindi films after that." But she proved the pundits wrong. She was quick to discern that unlike in Tamil films, the Hindi audience has a penchant for glamour, glitz and sex. Pairing up with Jeetendra in Himmatwala she wiggled her way to the top with some daring dances and revealing dresses.

With her family and (left) painting: a shy homebody

HOWEVER, by that time the producers realised that she would be a big seller in what Sridevi politely calls "glamour roles" but what in reality exploited her sensuous figure. Soon she was type-cast as the new sex siren of tinsel town. What followed were mindless movies like Tohfa, Mawaali, Masterji and Maksaad, films where she showed more of her midriff than her talent. But her gyrating presence ensured that these films would be grossers at the box office. She has even acted in two films, Inquilab and Aakhree Rasta, with the film industry's tallest star Amitabh Bachchan.

Sridevi's rise to the top has ensured the continuing dominance of south Indian heroines in the Hindi film industry—a phenomenon that still remains unexplained. Rishi feels that it is because they are usually more disciplined actresses. Shekhar thinks it's because by tradition it is more acceptable in the south for women to take up performing arts. Sridevi has a different reason. Says she: "That's because we can do any kind of role and we can dance well, both modern and classical. Also we look very Indian."

Whatever be the reason Sridevi's success has made her rich beyond her wildest dreams. Her father gave up his practice and concentrates on managing her financial affairs. They recently moved into a palatial house in Madras that has pictures of gods hung in every room. Meanwhile there are rumours that they are buying a modern preview and dubbing theatre apart from investing in real estate.

But being rich and famous has only made her withdraw further into her shell. She shuns film parties and outings preferring to spend her little spare time with her family. Her younger sister, Srilata, who chaperones her, says: "We vibe so well that we are more like best friends than sisters." Her pastime is watching horror films—particularly Dracula and Omen—or Peter Sellers and Charlie Chaplin comedies. She dabbles a bit in painting, preferring to concentrate on women's portraits. She confesses to being a "lazy person" and has a weakness for "all the things I shouldn't eat like ice-creams and chocolates". She admits she can't cook and says that all she can do is make "a good lime juice".

Her dreams seem to be symbolic of her life. She loves to swim—something her celebrity status prevents her from doing—and in a recent dream she was in front of a large inviting pool. "I wanted to jump in and swim. But I saw a lot of snakes. I kept asking someone whether the snakes would bite me or not and I woke up before I knew the answer." In real life too she confesses that she knows little of the world and would like to explore it.

Her stardom has also unleashed the usual crop of rumours about her affairs with her co-stars. She is consistently linked to another Hindi film star, Mithun Chakraborty. She dismisses all such talk as "just rumours". And as is the trend with most film stars she is thinking of joining the Congress(I) but is unwilling to say more than that.

Today, with the success of Nagina behind her and with Mr India likely to become another big hit, Sridevi is thinking of switching her image as the sex siren. Says she: "I am concentrating on heroine-dominated roles." Sridevi is also cutting down on her hectic schedule after several directors complained that she was pushing herself far too much. But her quest for acclaim as an actress is going to be more difficult than just putting on more clothes. And no one knows that better than this baby-faced star of the make-believe world.

—RAJ CHENGAPPA in Srinagar and Bombay with SREEDHAR PILLAI in Madras

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

If it's happening in AP you will read about it in the Deccan Chronicle

He's interested in Rajivji
They want the latest on Lajoji

Deccan Chronicle Group has given the people of Andhra their oldest English newspaper. They have left their stamp in the State's history. From Razakar, right up to the present. The voice heeded in every AP home. The secret of this success? Reporting of regional news with authenticity and promptness. Everything everyone would like to know... from the crowded markets to the changing movies, from celebrity visits to sports events.

No advertiser entering the AP market can afford to ignore the Deccan Chronicle. It provides advertising mileage at its best. Even its classified columns have become a byword — dating back to the very first issue, in May 1938.

Yes, equipment and infrastructure has changed, to keep pace with the times. The latest in typesetting, pagenation and offset printing. But one thing remains unchanged... the traditional trust that readers have in the Deccan Chronicle. Loyal, eager readers, unwilling to settle for anything less than the regional fare provided, by the 'voice of AP'. Andhra's industrialists and trade choose it — use it — to communicate with Andhra readers. They are indeed invaluable — imparting life into the articles, with up-to-date commercial and financial news.

Reach for Andhra with the DECCAN Chronicle Group

Published simultaneously from Hyderabad and Visakhapatnam. Soon to be published from Vijayawada and Nellore.

Imageads/DC/10187-3

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

BASTAR

The Tribal Godman

FOR the superstitious and simple-minded tribals of Bastar, he is the ghost who walks, a mystical figure whose name is spoken in hushed tones of awe and fear. In the eyes of the district administration, he is nothing but a clever charlatan who has created a religious cult to become rich and powerful. To state politicians, he is indispensable as an electoral ally. And to his supporters, he is a unique social reformer whose only mission in life is to wean the tribals away from liquor and other dangerous vices. But in essence, however, Baba Biharidas is the latest in a long line of Indian godmen who have grown larger than life through the cant and controversy that surround their every move.

Ever since his dramatic appearance in Bastar 15 years ago, the bearded baba, 52, has acquired enormous influence among the 13 lakh tribals living in the country's biggest district. Projecting himself as the 'reincarnated' maharaja of Bastar—the legendary and popular ex-ruler of Bastar who was killed in 1966—Biharidas has also acquired a huge fortune and enviable political clout. Adored and adulated by the adivasis, wooed by politicians in the state but hated by the local administration, he has emerged as the single most significant force in the tribal heartland of Madhya Pradesh.

"You can either hate him or love him, but you cannot ignore him," says Bastar-based journalist Kirit Doshi. Last month despite obstacles that were created by the district administration, Biharidas successfully organised a mammoth three-day yagna at his Chapka ashram, 30 km from the district headquarters of Jagdalpur. The event more than amply demonstrated the godman's hold over the tribals, his formidable political clout as well as his fund-gathering capacity.

Ignoring pressure from the district administration, about 20,000 tribals from all over Bastar—as well as the neighbouring areas of Orissa and Maharashtra—assembled at the Chapka ashram for the yagna. Madhya Pradesh Chief Minister Motilal Vora was scheduled to attend the mass religious ceremony, but cried off at the last minute. Still, at least half-a-dozen MLAs and an MP of the ruling Congress(I) Party showed up on the occasion to support Baba Biharidas's "efforts for national integration through the yagna".

The baba: dubious success

Photographs by IQBAL

But there were obviously less altruistic motives involved. Biharidas charged Rs 100 from each participant who performed the yagna, netting a cool Rs 3 lakh in the process. Besides these proceeds, he also received offerings from the 20,000 visitors who prostrated themselves before the godman to seek his blessings. "Religion is his business," remarked R. Parsuram, the district magistrate of Bastar.

And it is a business that is rapidly becoming an industry with powerful political overtones. Biharidas has been supporting the Congress(I) during elections and had once even shared the dais with the then prime minister Indira Gandhi at an election meeting. It was on the eve of the last parliamentary election that the baba was 'admitted' to the Congress(I)—amidst much fanfare, of course. Moreover, earlier this year, a state Youth Congress(I) camp was organised at his Chapka ashram. Acknowledging his immense clout in the district, Biharidas was boastful: "They all come to me with folded hands when they want votes."

For many years, the Congress(I) could not establish a hold among the tribals, winning only one or, at most, two Assembly seats in the district. The death of the popular maharaja, Praveer Chand Bhanjdeo, in police firing in 1966, whipped up such an anti-Congress(I) hysteria among the tribals that the party was able to win only two out of 11 seats in 1967. But with the advent of this ordinary looking man—of average height, with a pock-marked face, unkempt long hair and beard—the entire political scenario in the district was transformed. With the baba's support, the Ever since his dramatic appearance in Bastar 15 years ago, Baba Biharidas has acquired enormous influence among the 13 lakh tribals in the district.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

PERSONAL CARE PRODUCTS PAR EXCELLENCE
Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

HELENE CURTIS

Premium Freshness all day long

The body talc with a haunting international perfume that makes a world of a difference to the way you feel, all day.

Premium* BEAUTY TALC

everest/87/JKHC/261

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

For a few glorious days forget your earthly bonds.

Take a Welcombreak!

Welcombreak is an exciting getaway for the entire family. Walk down shell-strewn beaches, and travel the timeless deserts. Play golf on velvet greens, or a set of tennis early morning. Or simply revel in the luxury of India's finest hotels. Welcombreak has it all!

Wind-surfing at Welcomgroup Cidade de Goa.

Welcomgroup Umaid Bhawan Palace, Jodhpur

Short Break Rs.666/-

* Free entry to the Palace Museum and Mehrangarh Fort
* Airport-hotel-airport transfers
* Optional tours for sightseeing to Mandore Gardens and Jaswant Thara at extra cost
* Swimming pool

Welcomgroup Mughal Sheraton, Agra

Short Break Rs.1099/-
Long Break Rs.1499/-

* 15% discount on health club and beauty parlour
* Free coupons worth Rs.200/- for recreation
* Swimming pool

Welcomgroup Bay Island, Andamans

Long Break Rs.1110/-
Big Break Rs.1850/-

* Table-tennis, darts and other indoor games
* Sightseeing, fishing and snorkelling optional at extra co
* Swimming pool

Welcomgroup Windsor Manor, Bangalore

Short Break Rs.699/-
Long Break Rs.999/-

* 15% discount on beauty parlour
* Sightseeing optional at extra cost
* Billiards, golf and tennis on request
* Swimming pool

Welcomgroup SeaRock, Bombay

Short Break Rs.1099/-
Long Break Rs.1599/-

* 15% discount on beauty parlour, Mind and Body Temple
* Tennis and squash facilities
* Swimming pool

Welcomgroup Cidade de Goa, Goa

Long Break Rs.1950/-
Big Break Rs.2850/-

* Gala dinner nite on a luxury river cruiser
* Chauffeur-driven car (for four hours)
* Airport-hotel-airport transfers
* Gifts and many other complimentaries
* Swimming pool

Short Break: 2 nights 3 days
Long Break: 3 nights 4 days
Big Break: 5 nights 6 days

Special Features :

* 15% discount on all other food and beverage items except at Cidade de Goa 25% on all beverages only
* Rates for room only for two on twin-sharing basis
* Free accommodation for 2 children below 12 years
* Extra bed Rs.100/-
* Special breakfast (exclusive for package)
  Adults : Rs.50/- per person
  Children : Rs.25/- per child (under 12 years)
* Special buffet dinner (exclusive for package)
  Adults : Rs.85/- per person
  Children : Rs.50/- per child
* All service charges & taxes extra as applicable.
* VALID FROM 1ST APRIL TO 30TH SEPTEMBER 1987

Price valid only on advance reservation of package
Valid for all Indians and foreigners residing in India only

CALL WELCOMNET
Welcomgroup Hotels' Instant Reservation Network.

Delhi	3014127, 3010849	Hyderabad	825428	Baroda	323232
Bombay	221121, 220923, 2042286	Bangalore	258030	Ahmedabad	409367
Madras	473691, 479460	Coimbatore	22629	Kanpur	66512
Calcutta	299567, 299659	Pune	65719

Or any Welcomgroup hotel or your travel agent.

WELCOMGROUP
Palaces, hotels, resorts, indovillas

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

In May, Biharidas successfully organised a mammoth three-day yagna at his Chapka ashram. The event amply demonstrated the godman's hold over the tribals, his political clout as well as his fund-gathering capacity.

Tribal yagna: mass participation

Congress(I) was able to reverse the situation in the next election. It won 10 out of 12 seats in the district.

Biharidas' meteoric rise to fame and fortune started in 1968 when he drifted into Bastar two years after Bhanjdeo's death. Though on the surface, there was little resemblance between the unknown mendicant and the Oxford-educated king, the baba started projecting himself as Bhanjdeo's reincarnation, acquiring legitimacy with the help of a few tribal leaders. Their message was that the king had returned—as a saviour for the tribals—in the guise of a sadhu for fear of being killed by the Government. The ploy worked.

Not long thereafter, the tribals started flooding his ashram at Chapka for his darshan and made generous offerings in cash and kind. In 1969, while touring the district, the baba held courts in the villages and collected fines. He collected Rs 500 as his personal 'tax' from every village he visited. Moreover, Biharidas also charged large sums for the 'tulsi kanthi' necklaces which he distributes, claiming these have the power to ward off all evils. Such was his influence among the tribals that at his bidding, they abandoned meat and liquor and sold off their livestock.

Resistance, however, has come from unexpected quarters. Despite his enormous political power, the district administration has been engaged in a running battle with Biharidas in a bid to expose the Bastar baba as a fraud. The former collector of Bastar, B.D. Sharma, had even recommended his externment from the region. At this, Biharidas approached the then chief minister, Shyama Charan Shukla, who agreed to drop all proceedings against him on the latter's assurance of support to the Congress(I). Sharma, who had tried to dare the baba, was then summarily transferred.

The Congress(I) won the next election and Biharidas' influence—as well as his wealth—increased. He invented ingenious methods for making money. Once, he earned lakhs of rupees by selling water from a nearby nullah as holy water. At another time, he asked the tribals to wear yellow clothes and shave their heads, charging a fee for the ceremony. At the peak of his popularity and influence, he appointed his own 'manjhis' (tribal headmen) all over the district.

But his extraordinary career suffered during the Emergency when he was jailed under the Maintenance of Internal Security Act. Since then, Biharidas has been incarcerated on several occasions. At one time he was charged with hurting the religious sentiments of the tribals. At another time, he was held for allegedly inciting the adivasis to violence and setting up parallel governments in the villages. He was externed from the region during the Janata rule, but he managed to stage a come-back armed with a court order.

The Income Tax Department has claimed arrears of Rs 25 lakh from Biharidas. Different government agencies have raided his Chapka ashram several times, and the district administration has slapped a number of cases on him, including one for encroachment on government land by the ashram. "Much of my time goes in making rounds of the various courts," complains an obviously annoyed Biharidas.

Biharidas faced the worst threat to his godmanship in 1981. The Bastar district administration not only stopped his 'vanaspati yagna' (another fund-gathering device which would have netted him a cool Rs 40 lakh) but also initiated a campaign to 'expose' him. They traced his antecedents to a Harijan family in Orissa and discovered a deserted wife in the village. Pamphlets in tribal dialect printed by the administration also highlighted the fact that the holy man had three wives, one of them a minor, and five children.

But Biharidas' hold over the tribals is still intact. Groups of villagers still visit his ashram, prostrating themselves on the ground, their heads touching the baba's feet. Often they sit all day, gazing at him with awe and child-like devotion. "When these people come to me for help how can I deny them?" asks the baba. The daily durbar continues at Chapka with Biharidas flanked by the symbols of his dubious success—a cash box and a desert cooler—while a two-in-one blares film music in the background.

—N.K. SINGH in Bastar

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

QUIET.

Precision engineering gives GEC fans a silent advantage

Everyone knows GEC make quiet fans. But what makes them so quiet?

GEC's concept of total engineering. Because GEC are designers and manufacturers. Specialists in aerodynamics. And not merely 'assemblers'.

Meticulous care is taken to ensure that every nut, every bolt, every component that goes into a GEC fan, is acquired from suppliers who are leaders in their own fields.

So whether it is the mini marvel Ventilair, a ceiling fan, or a giant fan for core industries — you can rest assured it is manufactured with the same precision engineering that GEC are known for.

Simply because no one understnds fan technology better than GEC.

GEC Exhaust Fans
Choose from 16 types — ranging from 305 mm to 915 mm. For all domestic, commercial and industrial applications.

GEC Ceiling Fans
Goldline, Whispair, Classic. Available in ten sizes and a choice of two colours. Backed by 70 years of international experience.

GEC Air Circulators
Pedestal or brackets — a choice of six types.

New GEC Ventilair
Clears your kitchen or bathroom of stuffy air in 3 minutes flat. Available in two sizes: 230 mm and 305 mm.

New GEC Cooler Fan
510 mm. Specially designed for desert coolers.

New GEC Table Fan
400 mm. Oscillating type.

GEC Centrifugal and Axial Flow Fans
For ventilation. And process applications in power, steel, fertilizer, marine, mining and off-shore installations.

GEC

GEC Fans. All you hear is the sound of silence

Trade Mark GEC Permitted User — The General Electric Company of India Limited

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Our best sellers

can turn your plans into a success story

Gujarat's superbly equipped location and generous incentives have become best sellers over the years. And the industries that tapped their potential too have become runaway successes. Today, Gujarat is announcing yet again, an improved version of its earlier incentive schemes. This is your big break . . . your chance to be part of a success story.

With a wider base for the scheme, you can really look forward to some chunky benefits. What's more, the scheme has been simplified, to speed up disbursement.

Besides, Gujarat's definition of fixed capital investment is the widest. That's an additional bonus!

The entire state has been divided into four categories and incentives have been graded on this basis. The incentives also vary with the size of the unit and whether it is a new unit or an existing unit going for expansion or diversification. These four categories cover developing areas spread over the entire state. Giving you a wider choice of locations.

Power cut exemption for five years

If your unit is located in specified backward areas, it will be exempt from power cuts for five years.

And now take a look at this generous incentive scheme . . .

Highlights

Subsidy	Sales Tax Incentives	Pioneer Units
Subsidy up to 35% of fixed capital investment with a ceiling of Rs.30 lakhs.	Sales tax exemption up to 100% or sales tax deferment up to 90% of fixed capital investment without any ceiling – up to 9 years	Special sales tax incentives for a longer period and on a higher scale.

That gives you something to think about. Doesn't it? This array of unmatched incentives, together with the industrial climate make Gujarat the right location for that project you're planning. Because Gujarat is the only state to offer such generous incentives, rail and road links, communication lines and a complete absence of red tape. With that, your site selection decisions are really simplified! Just call up iNDEXTb and watch your project take off.

For further information, contact :

iNDEXTb
Industrial Extension Bureau
(A Govt. of Gujarat Organisation)
Nanalal Chambers, Ashram Road,
Ahmedabad 380 009.
Phone :402390, 402397/8/9.
Telex : 0121-229

If you are in Bombay, contact :

The Chief Development Officer/
Development Officer

Gujarat Corporations
Khetan Bhawan, 1st Floor,198 J.Tata Road,
Churchgate, Bombay 400 020.
Phone : 222474, 222165, 222087,
222146.
Telex : 011-4329

Shilpi 2 GC 10/87

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

KARNATAKA

Tribal Trouble

SHORTLY before 2 a.m. on the night of May 23, five masked men clad in coloured vests and khaki shorts stormed into the Avlahalli farm house of Madappas, located 18 km from Bangalore. Indra Madappa, 56, who instinctively jumped up in terror, was clubbed on the head. Her husband's cousin Sidappa, 70, and son Guruswamy were battered by two other dacoits. The dacoits then swept through the house smashing, ransacking and looting. Less than 10 minutes later they had departed with cash and jewellery worth nearly Rs 1 lakh.

On the same night, at about the same time, dacoits clad in khaki shorts invaded Gangadharan Sheth's house in Dharwad, 426 km from Bangalore. After assaulting his family members with clubs and sickles, the dacoits, who seemed to be in a tearing hurry, escaped with cash and jewellery worth nearly Rs 10,000.

Three more dacoities were reported in the same week, one each from Bijapur, Mysore and Belgaum districts, taking the total number of dacoities committed in the state in the first five months of 1987 to 34. And in each case the violence was equally mindless and frightening.

Ever since 1982 the dacoity graph has been rising menacingly in the state. As against 37 dacoities in 1982, 45 dacoities were committed in 1983, 57 in 1984, 53 in 1985 and 75 in 1986. Officials fear this number to be even higher.

Police believe that these dacoities are the handiwork of roving bands of "criminal tribes", both local and outstation. Among the outstation tribes they list Kepmaris and Irkulas of Andhra Pradesh and Tamil Nadu, Bawarias of Rajasthan and Sansis of Uttar Pradesh and Delhi. Even local tribes like Gollars and Raj Paradis are involved in the dacoities.

In most of these cases the dacoits have killed brutally in order to steal piffling amounts. Says the Special Inspector General of Police A.R. Sridharan: "It seems to be some sort of atavistic savagery, perhaps punishing society for forcing them into a life of crime." For, though the tag of "criminal tribes", slapped on some tribes by the British was removed soon after Independence precious little has been done to rehabilitate them. Faced with unemployment sections of these tribes have continued to thieve.

Invariably each of the tribes has a modus operandi. The Irkulas are "stone specialists" and a pile of stones is often left by them at the scene of crime. The Kepmaris specialise in depriving members of their valuables by engaging their attention elsewhere.

Most of these tribals settle next to railway tracks so that they can make good their escape at the first hint of trouble. But things are changing. The Bawarias, brazenly rented a house on the outskirts of Bangalore for Rs 1,500 a month, and stayed in it for three months.

The dacoities are well planned and well executed. The tribals usually select houses in the outlying areas. The women first reconnoitre the area by selling brooms and bamboo baskets. Contact is established with a local for garnering information and support. Sentries are posted at the entry and exit points of the victims' house during an actual dacoity.

However, the police response to these dacoities has been poor. They blame the declassification of "criminal tribes" by the Government as responsible for their lack of knowledge about the size, headquarters or movement of these tribes.

No less demoralising is the typical police refrain that "policing has to be done against tremendous odds". Police patrolling, which was stepped up after the Bawaria gang went on rampage last year, became lax later, leading to a fresh spurt in dacoities. Police officials point out that 75 per cent of the police outposts in the state have neither telephone nor wireless. The constables are expected to trudge a 15-mile beat daily; the sub-inspectors are not even given a motorcycle.

But the masses won't listen. Says Indra Madappa's 24-year-old son Kumar: "The police is good only at giving excuses and covering up." His elder brother Guruswamy now plans to buy a weapon to protect his family. And last fortnight, unnerved by the dacoities, the Home Minister Jalappa Reddy announced that the Government was thinking of introducing shoot-at-sight orders against people found moving suspiciously after 1 a.m. The state Government has obviously decided to fight fire with fire.

—ANITA PRATAP

(From left) Chadha and Rampal of Bawaria gang; and Birju of Sansi gang: frightening violence

Room ransacked by dacoits: spreading terror

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

The more important the meeting, the more important the airline.

Flying on Lufthansa means reaching your business appointment on time.

Lufthansa

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

3685-3 DEL

Digitized by Arya Sa

There's more to pa

They are stain-proof to Take a second look and you'll discover Spartek Floors are also...

• Absolutely scratch-resistant • Safe a anti-slip • Fire and heat resistant • Eas maintain and clean • Simple to lay ever existing floors and ready for live-in us

48 H
× 305
× 203 eam s is plus ly inco ek Flo
ing an e to partek Floors than just good looks...

India's largest selling ceramic floor tiles

of to scover n 48 hours • Various size options — × 305mm, 305 × 203mm,

• Safe a × 203mm, 203 × 101.5mm, in a range
nt • Eas eam shades.
ay ever is plus the breathtaking beauty that's ve-in usly incomparable.
tek Floors — Good-looking, harding and a lot of good sense.

SPARTEK

TAS SCL P-12 2741

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

A heart-winning gesture!

A range of exclusive new designs,
in a smart new fit and style – shirts from Snowhite.

Shirts for those casual overtures

From

snowhite

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

NEW DELHI: 8-D, Connaught Place, Tel : 352762; South Extension, Part-I, Tel : 624009;

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MEDICAL EQUIPMENT

The Hi-tech Invasion

TEN years after the All India Institute of Medical Sciences, New Delhi, received a brain scanner as a gift from Sweden, medical electronics is revolutionising diagnosis, therapy and surgery in the country. The equipment, which includes expensive scanners of various kinds, nuclear gamma cameras and cath labs, and the comparatively cheaper blood gas analysers, helps in treatment in a wide range of situations, ranging from cardiac abnormalities in children to cancer detection and cure. It has not only improved medical monitoring but has also helped to make surgery safer than it ever was.

Evidence of the crucial role that the new machines have come to play lies in the fact that although equipment costs are very high, imports are rising quickly. In 1980, hi-tech medical equipment worth less than Rs 20 crore was brought into India, but this year the figure is already at least Rs 65 crore. What is more, the figure is expected to rise at the rate of about 20 per cent annually over the next three years. There are already more than 60 scanners in the country and most of them are with private hospitals.

A number of factors have gone into the making of the current trend of imports in gadgetry. For one, the country produces little beyond the basic X-ray equipment. Indeed, of the 35,000 X-ray machines in India, at least half are 30 years old or more, and are potent radiation hazards. The use of silicon storage tubes in the new scanners, however, reduces radiation dosage to as little as 10 per cent to 20 per cent of that in the older machines.

A recent relaxation in government policy has also made a marked difference. Import duty on hi-tech equipment has recently been slashed from 107 per cent to 40 per cent and total duty exemption has been granted to all hospitals and diagnostic centres willing to treat 40 per cent of the patients free of cost. In projects sponsored by expatriate Indians, free treatment to 25 per cent of the patients enables duty-free imported equipment. This has resulted in the mushroom growth of private hospitals with these facilities and at least 10 major hospitals are to come up nation-wide in the next 15 months.

Helping the growth in imports along are leasing companies that have sprung up suddenly to loan money exclusively to buy medical equipment. Manufacturers and suppliers are also doing their bit to lure buyers with attractive offers of deferred pay back schemes. For instance, a whole body scanner, costing Rs 1 crore, is available on an initial payment of only Rs 10 lakh: the rest can be paid in six instalments ranging over five years. "The emerging trend is the holistic approach for a one-time buy to create a facility costing Rs 2 crore to Rs 4 crore instead of a machine at a time," says A.R. Vishwanath, managing director of Standard Medical Leasing. The company has already put up a one-stop diagnostic centre in Hyderabad and has similar centres in mind for Bangalore, Pune and Calcutta by next June.

(Right and below) A CAT scan at work: vast change

While X-ray pictures will continue to provide basic and cheap information, "the switch from X-rays to the use of scanners is like the jump from still photography to the motion picture," says S.D. Vakil, vice-president (Medical Electronics), International General Electric (India), which is among the top five hi-tech equipment dealers in the country.

It is easy to understand why Vakil waxes eloquent about the new machines. The first generation of computerised axial tomography (CAT) devices—the brain scanner—takes highly accurate pictures of the brain as though it has been sliced up. It owes its magical potential to computers, X-ray tubes, superconducting magnets, radio-wave generators and a broad base of supporting hi-tech gadgets.

All but one of the 60-odd scanners in India today are the first generation CAT scan systems. Most of these are whole body scanners, which can scan the whole body in less than a minute. The CAT scan gives pictures of a one millimetre slice of any part of the body within two seconds.

Neurologists believe that the death rate due to cerebral thrombosis (blocking of vessels carrying blood to the brain) and cerebral haemorrhage (bursting of blood vessels in the brain) has come down with the use of the scanner. But its greatest advantage is in detecting cancer, not only in pinpointing the disease but also in improving the accuracy of radiation treatment and monitoring a patient's recovery.

The most sophisticated equipment in India currently is the nuclear magnetic resonance (NMR) scanner (cost: Rs 7.5 crore), installed at Delhi's Institute of Nuclear Medicine and Applied Sciences (INMAS), and the capacity of which is truly astounding. It can not only take moving pictures of organs such as the beating of the heart but can also help classify mental retardation and illness, identify the focus of epilepsy, determine the appropriate time for brain surgery and monitor the treatment of neurological diseases. These are some of the innumerable functions this versatile machine can perform.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Another effective tool for which demand is growing is the nuclear gamma camera, the most modern model costing about Rs 30 lakh. With an estimated half a million dying of cancer a year, the use of this camera to detect cancerous areas can enable early radiation therapy and help check malignant growth. There are already about 140 cobalt therapy units and more are in the offing.

Conducting an angiography and (below) the blood gas analyser

Even cath labs—cardiac cathetrisation laboratories—most of which are located in Bombay, will be installed in other cities as a sequel to the improvement of diagnostic facilities. Using angiography, the equipment helps locate the blocks in blood vessels leading to the heart and peripheral vascular vessels. This enables cardiologists to decide on the procedure to save the patient from a potential heart attack. Microprocessor technology also permits more effective monitoring of blood and oxygen flow without the need to enter the body. Explains Subba Rao, director of the Nizam's Institute of Medical Sciences, Hyderabad (NIMS): "Even the otherwise skeptical Chinese who had only a few scanners in July 1984, got nearly 2,000 scanners by the end of that year. These are now being used alongside traditional medicine and acupuncture."

But there is also another side to the actual use of all this equipment. In the context of the inflow of scanners, Subba Rao admits: "The new scanners are only as good as the technicians who can operate them and the doctors who can interpret the results." He says that unless medical students in 110 colleges nationwide get a chance to get used to modern medical equipment, they can never hope for international recognition.

Last year, Rao succeeded in persuading the Andhra Pradesh Government to invest in ultra-sound scanners—commonly used in obstetrics cases—for each of the district hospital, as "a firm first step" to introduce modern equipment. Abdominal, obstetric and gynaecological examinations using the ultra-sound scanner have become fairly routine in most cities and towns—about 30 per cent of pregnant women in urban areas have at least one such scan. Physicians use the more sophisticated ultra-sound scanners to measure the velocity of blood flow in high risk pregnancies, examine the brains of new born babies, take moving pictures of the heart, detect cancerous tumours and plaques in blood vessels that cause arteriosclerosis.

Clearly, the import of the new tools and techniques will add substantially to the nation's health tab. If each of the teaching hospitals is equipped with a nuclear gamma camera, the whole body CAT scanner, a cath lab, an ultra-sound scanner and a modest X-ray unit, the Government will have to spend about Rs 2 crore on each such facility. However Subba Rao claims: "At a teaching hospital, this equipment will pay back the full investment in about three years even if the fee is lower than that charged by private diagnostic centres."

But the Government is yet to work out a policy on this score. Major-general N. Lakshmipathi, director, INMAS, emphasises that, "Though it costs about Rs 10,000 to look at a patient's brain with the NMR scanner, we do not charge a fee. But this national facility can be opened only to those who have been vetted by the other scanner systems. So, it is inevitable that all teaching hospitals must be equipped, despite the high costs, if diagnosis and medical research is to improve."

For government hospitals, the vexatious problem, even if money is found to buy the equipment, will be high patient fees. But whatever the solution, the new hi-tech methods of treatment mean that the future patient will play a more decisive role in his own treatment, and will allow the physician to serve only as a gatekeeper controlling access to the medical machines.

—AMARNATH K. MENON

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

MINICOMP's TRIBUTE TO PIONEERING ACHIEVEMENTS.....

When Orville Wright flew 120 feet, he made the world a smaller place.

Orville Wright made the first controlled and sustained power driven flight on 17th Dec. 1903, at Kitty Hawk, North Carolina U.S.A. He flew the 12 hp chain driven Flyer 1 for about 12 seconds covering 120 feet.

MINICOMP's computers bridged the technology gap by bringing IBM compatible PC's into India.

he world always remembers and knowledges pioneers.

hose who chose to lead. To give mething new that would contribute nificantly and positively to the velopment of society.

linicomp salutes these pioneers.

INICOMP was the company that oneered new technology into India.

INICOMP was the first to troduce the IBM compatible rsonal computers in India, and rrently have an installed base of 00 systems all over India. These include the Neptune PC/XT/AT, compatible to the IBM PC/XT/AT. All best-sellers providing invaluable service to thousands of satisfied users all over the country. Backed by a service network in every major city in India.

And MINICOMP is not just personal computers. The MINICOMP Series 32, a 32 Bit, 68020 based Super microcomputer that uses industry-standard systems and state-of-the-art technology for perfect adaptability everywhere.

The Multiuser AT, CAD/CAM, the Neptune Projection system and the Neptune Slidemaker.

All from the Company that first introduced IBM technology in personal computers into India.

After all, very few people remember who made the second controlled power driven flight.

To get our useful literature and have a demonstration of the Minicomp range of products contact:

MINICOMP
PRIVATE LTD.

Unit No. A-1, Udyog Sadan 3, Marol M.I.D.C., Andheri (E) Bombay-400 093.
Tel: 636 7273/636 7274/636 7275/636 7276
Telex: 11 72183 NEPN IN. Grams: NEPNOASIS.

402 Dalamal House, Jamnalal Bajaj Marg, Nariman Point, Bombay 400 021.
Ph: 2227602/2278302/310113.

Pioneers are one of a kind.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Canco/MC/4/87

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Titan Quartz, the internationat

Now keep your dollars, pound di

Rs.398

Rs.440

Rs.755

Rs.600

Rs.579

Rs.569

Rs.755

Rs.579

Rs.595

Rs.579

Rs.600

Rs.579

Rs.512

Rs.569

Rs.579

Prices indicated are exclusive of sales tax and local levies.

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

...atch you can pay for in rupees.

...d dirhams in your pocket.

Rs.579 Rs.579 Rs.579 Rs.409 Rs.507 Rs.579

find watches like these, you no longer have to go to Dubai, Japan or a duty-free shop.
r risk buying the 'imported' variety from your 'reliable' nd doubt the genuineness of the watch.
ke a closer look at the new collection of Titan Quartz from TATA. You'll realise they are as good as the best crafted, porary watches from around the world.

An international range

ere's a Titan Quartz just right for you.
u can make your selection from over 150 thoughtfully d and carefully crafted watches.
oose from either the classic elegance of gold with leather. lamour and glitter of only gold. Or the businesslike look of even a trendy casual!

Rugged, reliable jewellery

e high-precision Titan Quartz is designed to withstand noisture, heat and dust.
like ordinary quartz watches, Titan Quartz is equipped vatch movement built to survive years of use.
e movement features metal parts, not plastic; jewels ally positioned to ensure long life and, above all, cated electronics.
e electronic module in Titan Quartz is d to extend the life of the battery. The battery, ou need to replace it, will be available pany approved price.
hat's more, every Titan Quartz carries ar guarantee.

Guaranteed accuracy

Titan Quartz is 60 times more accurate than the best comparable hand-wound or automatic watch.

From now on, you won't settle for anything less than the guaranteed accuracy of a Titan Quartz.

Wide sales network

Titan Quartz will be sold through more than 1200 sales outlets in 245 towns all over India.

These outlets will handle any service requirements you may have.

Titan from TATA

Titan Quartz is a product of the TATA commitment to bring you world class watches in India.

These watches are made in the finest all-electronic watch making facility in the country. This facility has the latest technology from a leading European manufacturer and the best in Swiss watch-manufacturing equipment.

Every Titan Quartz has the TATA guarantee of quality and reliability.

TITAN
QUARTZ

Visit any leading watch shop in your city. Choose a Titan Quartz you'd really like to own, or gift.

You owe it to yourself

Titan Watches Limited Sona Towers, 71 Miller Road, Bangalore 560 052

OBM/9880 R

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Apna Sangeet: coming home

◆ Sandwiched between the breasts and bottoms in next month's Penthouse magazine will be none other than Rajiv Gandhi. The latest issue of the soft-porn men's magazine, which is banned in India, has announced that the interview of the month in their next issue will be with Indian Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi.

Howe: political pose

How Rajiv found his embarrassing way into Penthouse, which features not just frontal nudity but outdoes Playboy in daring exposure, is a story in itself. The interview is by Russel Warren Howe, who occasionally features in The Statesman. The prime minister's office says indignantly that Rajiv would never have agreed to an interview with Penthouse and claims that Howe interviewed Rajiv two months ago for a book he claimed he was writing on political leaders of the 20th century. Howe says he interviewed Henry Kissinger for Penthouse, after which he was approached by the Indian Embassy in Washington and asked to do a similar interview with Rajiv. The embassy denies this and legal moves are afoot to stop publication. Kissinger, however, failed in a similar attempt. Rajiv's press adviser, H.Y. Sharada Prasad, insists: "If Howe has given the interview to Penthouse it reflects on his professional integrity". But the damage has been done. The last thing Rajiv needs is the embarrassment of appearing in a magazine that often makes the Kama Sutra look like Looney Tunes. The Government can now complain about much more than a foreign hand.

Protesting housewives

◆ They had the beat, and the lyrics, but not the packaging. Now, the throbbing of the dholak, in tandem with keyboards and congos, has been getting balle balles out of gyrating London audiences. Says Himmat Singh, manager of the Punjabi Pop group Apna Sangeet—in India to record an album for CBS and perform in Delhi and Bombay—their music "is luring third-generation Punjabis" into the homeland's fold. Punjabi Pop is coming to town.

◆ The moving camera sees, and having seen, it shows. After India Hotel was aired on BBC's 40 Minutes, Bombay's glitterati are wishing they had opted for 40 winks instead. Film maker Mahesh Bhatt, heard wondering why the poor didn't blow the Taj up, claims he answered "a question about the common man's perception of the Taj. I am very comfortable with the Taj". Is the Taj comfortable with him?

◆ Aadmi ko bhagwan kahe; Bane huye kaam ko khoya; Chchote ko bade kahe; Dekh Kabira roya

The man-or-god controversy would only have prompted the saint to sigh and come out with such a couplet, perhaps, at the ways of the world. Kabirpanthis from Gujarat—who have gone to court against the screening of the new TV serial Kabir—ha Doordarshan in a bind. Sa Director Anil Chowdhur "They claim Kabir is a god, we can't portray him as normal being. We say he i historical character." Th saint would have been stoic

Kabir: man of god

RATHIJIT GHATAK

Bhatt: out of context

◆ Her actions had all th ferocity of a tigress protecting her cubs. Dr Pushpa Prabhoo wife of Bombay's Shiv Sena Mayor Dr Ramesh Prabhoo led 300 housewives to the Bombay TV Centre last fort-night to protest against late-night films on Doordarshan's bill of fare—because of their sex content and the unearthly hour. Says the mayoress: "A mention that these films are not meant for those below 18 will not prevent children from watching them." Can cinema halls and videos be far behind

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

गुरुकुल कांगड़ी
028-615
पुस्तकालय हरिद्वार

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

Corrected
10-10-2000

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized by Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri

CC-0. In Public Domain. Gurukul Kangri Collection, Haridwar

Digitized By Arya Samaj Foundation Chennai and eGangotri